tion of the sale, did not entitle him to recover for commissions where it was not shown that he was the procuring cause of the sale. Ware v. Dos Passos, 4 App. Div. 32, 35.

Lincoln v. McClatchie, 36 Conn. 136; Weinhouse v. Cronin, 68 Conn. 252; Schlegel v. Allerton, 65 Conn. 260.

If a broker employed to sell a piece of land finds a purchaser, but has the business taken out of his hands, he is entitled to his commission.

Gottschalk v. Jennings, 1 La. Ann. 5, 45 Am. Dec. 70.

The defendant is estopped from denying that the plaintiff brought about this sale, if its officers requested the plaintiff to use his influence with Mr. Bishop to induce him to purchase the property, and, knowing that he was so using his influence, Mr. Bacon, later on, took up the matter directly with the plon of the sale, did not entitle him to recover for commissions where it was not shown that he was the procuring cause of the sale. Ware v. Dos Passos, 4 App. Div. 32, 35.

And if he does not show that he made or negotiated the sale according to his authority he is not the procuring cause. Hurd v. Nelson, 100 Iowa, 555, 557.

If the compensation of the broker is dependent upon his consummating the sale, he can ask nothing unless he is the procuring cause of the sale made. Hill v. Jebb, 55 Ark. 574, 576.

If the evidence does not show that the broker in some way influenced the sale he cannot recover commissions, and a verdict in his favor will be set aside. Commercial Nat. Bank v. Hawkins, 35 Ill. App. 463.

So, the mere naked fact of the broker's introducing the purchaser to the seller or disclosing names by which they came together is not enough to entitle him to commissions. Keener v. Harrod, 2 Md. 63, 56 Am. Rep. 706, 708; Wilkinson v. Martin, 8 Car. & P. 1.

And a mere conjecture that the broker is the efficient or procuring cause of the sale will not be sufficient to prove such fact. Marius v. Kenneally, 19 Misc. 517.

If the negotiations between the broker and the intending purchaser had not proceeded far enough to authorize the broker to make any definite offer for the land which the principal was required to accept, or with which the purchaser would have been required to comply or respond in damages for noncompliance, the broker does not become the procuring cause, and there can be no recovery of commissions. Hammond v. Mitchell, 61 Ill. App. 144, 147.

It is not sufficient that the agent's or broker's acts are one of a chain of causes leading to the contract, as such acts must be the procuring or inducing cause, or, in other words, the causa causans. Ramsey v. West, 31 Mo. App. 676, 678.

And the mere fact that the broker's act is merely a cause of causes some of which are neither the necessary nor probable result of what he did will not entitle him to commissions. Baumgartl v. Hoyme, 54 Ill. App. 496, 502.

Merely being instrumental in putting a purchaser on the track of the property is not of itself sufficient. Sievers v. Griffin, 14 Ill. App. 63, 66.

If a broker has not the exclusive sale, merely bringing the property to the attention of the person who finally buys is not enough. Whitcomb v. Bacon, 170 Mass. 479; Dowling v. Morrill, 165 Mass. 491; Crowninshield v. Foster, 169 Mass. 237.

And the mere fact that the broker's act may plaintiff's client, and closed the transaction without notice to the plaintiff that he was in negotiation with the purchaser.

Winsted Hosiery Co. v. New Britain Knitting Co. 69 Conn. 574.

This letter was between the parties to the cause, respecting the subject-matter of the controversy, and is admissible as part of the res gestæ.

13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 258, 263.

It was not the intention of the legislature in passing the acts of 1893, 1895, and 1897, allowing evidence in a case to be brought to this court, to make this a tribunal to review questions of fact in any case where a litigant had the inclination and the means to needlessly prolong a controversy.

Meriden Sav. Bank v. Wellington, 64 Conn. 553; Styles v. Tyler, 64 Conn. 432; C. & C. Electric Motor Co. v. D. Frisbie & Co.

have contributed to or made the actual agreement entered into by the principal easier is not alone enough to make him the procuring cause of the sale. Alden v. Earle, 121 N. Y. 688.

Again, the mere fact that the broker has created impressions, which, under later and more favorable circumstances, naturally lead to, and materially assist in, the consummation of a sale, will give him no claim for brokerage although he may have planted the very seeds from which the others reap the harvest. Markus v. Kenneally, 19 Misc. 517; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co. 83 N. Y. 383, 22 Am. Rep. 441.

So, if the purchaser, though spoken to by the broker, has abandoned all idea of the purchase, and the broker has no influence at all in bringing it about, he cannot be said to be the procuring cause of the sale. Doonan v. Ives, 73 Ga. 296, 301.

A mere intervention in the negotiations commenced by the principal and consummated without the agent's assistance will not affect the sale, even though his conversation with third persons may have, in some degree, contributed to such consummation,—especially where he is to sell at a fixed price, and there is no interference with his dealings by the principal. Briggs v. Rowe, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 189, 195.

And under a contract to pay commission to the broker selling, the broker is not the procuring cause of the sale so as to be entitled to commissions where he does not find the purchaser but merely brings parties together who have previously met. Ludlow v. Carman, 2 Hilt. 107, 112.

And the Maryland courts have held that in the absence of usage the mere fact that the agent introduces the purchaser to the seller or discloses names by which the parties come together to treat, will not entitle him to compensation. Beale v. Creswell, 3 Md. 196, 201; Keener v. Harrod, 2 Md. 63, 56 Am. Dec. 706.

Under a contract for commission "if he finds a purchaser" he has not found a purchaser unless he produces such purchaser to his principal. Baars v. Hyland, 65 Minn. 150.

And the mere securing of one who will take the property on different terms than those fixed by the owner does not amount to procuring a purchaser so as to entitle the broker to commissions. Darrow v. Harlow, 21 Wis. 303, 94 Am. Dec. 541.

And an instruction to the jury that, as a matter of law, the mere fact that the broker was instrumental in securing the location of a factory on the principal's land did not make the principal liable to the broker for commission, nor entitle the broker to recover, was held to 44 L. R. A.

66 Conn. 74; Ryan v. Chelsea Paper Mfg. Co. 69 Conn. 454; Thresher v. Dyer, 69 Conn. 404.

Hamersley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The letter of the plaintiff to the president of the defendant corporation was not admitted as a declaration in support of the truth of the statements it contained, but as a fact relating to the conduct of the parties in respect to the transaction in dispute prior to the consummation of the sale. For that purpose it was admissible. The admission of the latter part of Osborne's deposition upon rebuttal was within the discretion of the court. The other claims of the defendant are included under four heads: (1) The alleged insufficiency of the facts found to support the judgment rendered; (2) the al-be correct. Chicago Heights Land Assn. v. Butler, 55 Ill. App. 461, 462.

If, notwithstanding the efforts of the broker, the purchaser buys solely upon his own information and negotiations with the principal, uninfluenced by the broker, the broker is not the procuring cause. Brown v. Shelton (Tex. Civ. App.) 23 S. W. 483.

And although the broker may be employed to sell, yet if the purchaser and the principal are brought together through information received by the purchaser from persons other than the broker, and not through the latter's instrumentality, and he does not effect the sale or exchange, he is not the procuring cause. Burkholder v. Fonner, 34 Neb. 1.

So, where the parties were brought together, and negotiations were had through a relative of the principals in no way connected with the broker, the latter is not the procuring cause. Wyckoff v. Bissell, 24 App. Div. 66, 67.

Where the broker relinquished his efforts to sell to a certain person, and he requested him to send a customer to him, and such purchaser mentioned the property to another, who dealt directly with and purchased of the principal at a lower sum than that given to the broker, the broker's commissions were not allowed. Warren v. Cram, 71 Mo. App. 638.

The fact that the broker merely talked with different persons, and one of them of his own accord, not acting in behalf of the broker, mentioned the property to another, who looked into the matter, and finally became a purchaser, does not make the agency of the broker sufficiently direct to entitle him to a commission as the procuring cause. Gleason v. Nelson, 162 Mass. 245.

And the broker is not shown to be the procuring cause by the fact that after an unsuccessful auction sale he merely stated the terms on which the property could be bought to one who was an intending buyer at such auction, when it did not appear that these terms were communicated to the person who afterwards purchased. Chilton v. Butler, 1 E. D. Smith. 150, 151.

Again, where the principal sells to one who professes to be, and is by the principal believed to be, the purchaser, the mere fact that he buys for the benefit of one to whom the broker sought to sell is not sufficient to render the principal liable to such broker for commission upon the ground that he was the procuring cause of the sale, even though the broker intimated his belief that such party would purchase,—especially where there is no collusion between the principal and the person purchasing.

leged insufficiency of the testimony given to support the facts found; (3) the alleged omission from the finding of facts material to present the questions of law decided by the court; (4) the alleged finding of material facts without any evidence to support them.

1. Where an owner places land with a real-estate broker for sale, he agrees, in the absence of any special contract, to pay the customary commission or brokerage in case a sale is consummated with a purchaser who was led to begin the negotiation through the intervention of the broker. It is immaterial that the purchaser at some prior time had been engaged in a bootless negotiation with the owner in respect to the same property, or that the owner after the broker has interested the purchaser, secretly pursues the negotiation, and himself completes the sale, or that the owner of his own accord effects a sale at a less price than that he gave the broker. If any act of the broker in pursuance of his authority to find a purchaser is the initiatory step that leads to the sale consummated, the owner must pay the commission. Lincoln v. McClatchie, 36 Conn. 136, 141; Schlegel v. Allerton, 65 Conn. 260, 264. Applying this well-settled law to the facts found, judgment for the plaintiff must follow.

Whether or not a particular person is the "procuring cause" of a sale is a question of fact for the jury; but the defendant claims that, upon a trial to the court, the conclusion of the judge is erroneous if he violates any rule or principle of law in drawing that conclusion from the subordinate facts found, and that, if his conclusion from the subordinate facts is in plain conflict with the setand the principal has no notice of anything that can apprise him of the fact that there is a secret purchaser, but that fact is studiously concealed from him. Goldstein v. Walters, 15 Daly, 397. In this case a motion for reargument, and for leave to go to the court of appeals, was refused by the court. 29 N. Y. S. R. 323.

And the fact that a broker simply told a friend or acquaintance who the owner was, and such friend gave the owner's name to an intending purchaser, who thereupon went directly to the owner and bought without ever seeing or communicating with the broker, will not constitute the broker the procuring cause. Colwell v. Tompkins, 6 App. Div. 93, 94. In this case, however, there was a dissenting opinion by Justice Hatch, in which he considered that under such circumstances the broker might be considered the procuring cause of the sale.

So, where the broker called a party's attention to the property, who in turn brought it to the attention of another with a view to a joint purchase, the consummation of which fell through owing to the first party withdrawing, the broker was not the procuring cause of the sale to the other with whom he had no negotiations with respect to a separate purchase. Armstrong v. Wann, 29 Minn. 126.

Again, a mere statement by the broker to his principal that he thought he had a trust company as a customer, the recollection of which statement induced the principal, some two years afterwards, to apply directly to the officers of such company, and to tell them that if they wanted the property they must speak at once or it would be sold to someone else, is not sufficient to make the broker the procuring cause of such sale. Hay v. Platt, 66 Hun. 488.

And the broker was not the procuring cause of the sale when all that he did was to call the purchaser's attention to the fact that the property was for sale, without directing his attention to the character or value of it, or to bringing the buyer and seller together, or carrying on negotiations between them, and he was not even present when the terms were agreed upon or the sale consummated. Greene v. Owings, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 580.

And one who is not a real-estate broker does not become entitled to commissions as the procuring cause of the sale where he merely notifies his principal that he has a proposition for the purchase and has secured a bona fide purchaser, when the offer is not accepted, and on the following day the owners notify him that they decline to negotiate further and subsequently sell to other parties,—especially where the party found by the broker was in treaty 44 L. R. A.

with the owners themselves for several months prior to the transaction, at different prices, and his last offer was made upon the same day as the broker's proposition, but varied somewhat in its terms, and the broker obtained his information about the purchaser from another party who did not give him the purchaser's name. Hartley v. Anderson, 150 Pa. 391.

And he is not the procuring cause of the sale where he sends to his principal one with whom, without the broker's knowledge, the principal is already negotiating, and the principal, in ignorance of the fact that the broker and customer had any communication, deals with the customer, who is not influenced by the broker's acts. Neufeld v. Oren, 60 Ill. App. 350.

Nor where all he does is to drive the purchaser past the property and point it out to him while he is showing him other properties, and he goes down in front of the property, but does not afterwards take the parties to it. Lawrence v. Weir, 3 Colo. App. 401.

So, a broker not employed as agent, who is told the net price of the property for a limited time, does not become entitled to compensation as the procuring cause of the sale when he merely procures an offer of such price within such time, without the execution of a binding contract, and without producing a purchaser ready to pay the purchase price within the time limited, which the owner refuses to extend. Castner v. Richardson, 18 Colo. 496.

And the broker does not become entitled to recover as the procuring cause of a sale negotiated by the principal at an advanced price to a person from whom he procured an offer for the property which he advised his principal not to accept. White v. Twitchings, 26 Hun. 503, 504.

So, if after he has presented a person willing to take the property in part payment of property of his own, and the principal rejects the offer, after which nothing is done for a year and a half, when the principal and the intending purchaser become intimate and visit each other and finally effect a purchase and sale, the broker is not the procuring cause of the sale. Harris v. Burtnett, 2 Daly, 189.

And he is not the procuring cause of the sale where all that he does is to introduce a purchaser, who makes no binding contract and subsequently declines to take the property, and the sale actually made is the outcome of an agreement between the principal and such purchaser, to put the property up at auction, at which it brings a larger price than such purchaser has agreed to pay. Tombs v. Alexander, 101 Mass. 255, 256, 3 Am. Rep. 349.

tled rules of logic and sound reasoning, he does violate a principle of law, and his conclusion is reviewable by this court as an error in law. This claim is correct. Nolan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 70 Conn. 159, 173, 183, 43 L. R. A. 305. Testing the judgment in view of this claim, the court below finds that the plaintiff interviewed Bishop (the purchaser), called his attention to the property, and urged upon him considerations that should induce him to renew his negotiation for its purchase; that, in pursuance of this, Bishop applied to the plaintiff for permission to examine the property, and obtained entrance to the building through information given him by the plaintiff, and examined the property; and that, shortly after his mind had been so directed by the plaintiff to a purchase, the defendant, through its president, Bacon, without the knowledge of the plaintiff, took up the negotiation with Bishop which resulted in a sale. There are no other facts which essentially affect the force of these upon the question of "procuring cause." We cannot say that the inference drawn by the court from these facts is unreasonable. The procuring cause of sale is such intervention of the broker for that purpose as constitutes the foundation on which the negotiation is begun. The court might reasonably infer that the efforts of the plaintiff to induce Bishop to renew his attempt to purchase were the origin of the negotiation and resulting sale. If so, the plaintiff was the procuring cause.

2. The facts adjudicated by the trial court cannot be retried here upon the certified testimony. This is too firmly settled by re-

So, he cannot be said to be the procuring cause when he only produces a party who declines to purchase but who subsequently informs another party that he has so declined, although the property is worth the money and he advises such party to purchase, where the latter party is not simply to step into the shoes of the former to take the property off his hands and comply with the previous contract made between the principal and such party. Johnson v. Seidel, 150 Pa. 396. In this case the purchaser never knew the broker, and was in no way influenced by him, and there was no evidence that the plaintiff was the immediate and efficient cause of effecting the sale or of bringing the parties together.

Again, the broker does not establish his claim when he merely shows that prior to the contract made by the principal he had unsuccessful interviews with the purchaser, and that the party who purchased did so on behalf of himself and another, and that the contract was drawn up by such party, who neither saw nor talked with the broker in connection therewith, or the conveyance made in pursuance of it. Freedman v. Havemeyer, 37 App. Div. 518.

And the broker is not the procuring cause of a sale made by his principal where he only shows that he corresponded with the purchaser, called his attention to the property, and received encouragement from him, and obtained a general promise to buy if a reasonable reduction was made in the price; when the negotiations proceeded no further, and no definite proposition was made by the purchaser, who repudiated his agency and refused to have anything more to do with him. Cullen v. Bell, 43 Minn. 226, 227.

Where some time after the purchaser found by the broker had declined to purchase a portion of the principal's property the latter exchanged the house he lived in for property previously offered him by the purchaser, but the title was taken in the name of another and not in that of the purchaser originally introduced, and of this transaction the broker made no memorandum, the fact of his original introduction of the party is not sufficient to entitle him to commissions as the procuring cause, even if his influence endured until the date of the sale, as it was not extended to the particular property in compliance with any request upon the part of the principal, or in the course of the employment. Randrup v. Schroeder, 21 Misc. 52, 22 Misc. 365.

And he is not entitled to recover full commissions where, after the principal has declined an offer, he afterwards tells the broker to go on and make a noise about the property which must be sold before a given date; and the broker continues his efforts, and a sale is made, at a lower price, by the principal to the purchaser found by the broker. Hungerford v. Hicks, 39 Conn. 259. In this case the court intimated that he might recover upon a claim for work and labor done and services rendered.

So, where the only result of the agent's efforts to find a purchaser was that there was a radical difference in the language used in the original contracts signed by the parties in duplicate, and each absolutely refused to carry out the contract except according to the literal terms of the one he held, and it was almost impossible to reconcile the manifest facts of the case with any theory other than bad faith somewhere, it was held that the broker had not rendered such services as produced a purchaser or a result entitling him to commissions. Pierce v. Truitt (Pa.) 12 Atl. 661.

And the court refused to reverse a verdict given against the broker where the conflicting evidence disclosed the fact that the broker procured a purchaser at a certain price per acre, but the principal refused to sell at that price, and claimed that the land was worth more. Stuart v. Stumph, 126 Ind. 580.

And the broker did not procure a purchaser where he delivered the contract signed by his principal to the purchaser, but before the latter signed it he received a letter from the principal impeaching the transaction upon the ground of objectionable dealings with regard to the commission, in consequence of which the deal fell through. Smith v. Nicoll, 91 Hun. 173, 174.

In McCarthy v. Cavers, 86 Iowa, 342, the broker's claim was not allowed as he produced no positive acceptance by the purchaser found by him under his agreement "to consummate the sale to persons with whom he was then negotiating," by a given date, where the principal, who had another offer for the lands at substantially the same price, prepared a deed leaving the name of the grantee blank, which he sent to another agent with instructions to present it to the above-named broker after a given date and receive the money if he effected the sale, and the broker objected to the deed upon the ground that the grantee's name was not filled in, and the acknowledgment was not in legal form, and declined to pay the money, after which the deed was delivered to the person who had made an offer direct to the principal.

And the broker's claim was refused where he did not claim that he procured a purchaser to take the land at the price or on the terms given, or to recover on that ground, but for inducing the purchaser to enter into negotiations with the principal, which resulted in a sale of the peated decisions to admit of discussion. A record should not be cumbered with such futile assignments of error.

3. The defendant claims that the fact that the sale was made by the defendant, through its president, to Bishop, and the fact that the exclusive sale of the property was not given to the plaintiff, were improperly omitted from the finding of the court. The facts seem to be substantially included in the finding; but, however that may be, an inspection of the evidence certified shows that they were admitted or undisputed facts, and we have treated them as included in the finding. The omission of such facts is not an error that affects the judgment, unless, by correcting the record, and including them in the finding, it appears that the court erred in its ruling on some question of law material to the judgment. The correctness of the rulings of the court below is not affected by including these facts in the finding. The defendant further claims that the fact that the defendant, through its president, told the plaintiff, before the property was sold, that, if the defendant was compelled to sell the property for $25,000, no broker's commissions would be paid by the defendant, is improperly omitted from the finding. This fact might be material to present a question of law raised by the defendant on the trial, and, if it were an admitted or undisputed fact, its omission would be an error which, if material, we should correct. An inspection of the evidence certified does not sustain the defendant's claim. If we were to treat this fact as included in the finding, the defendant's claim of law could not be sustained. After a broker has rendered the services which make him the procuring property, while his contract was to sell the land at a price and on the terms designated, and not merely to furnish a customer to whom the principal might sell if he was able to come to such an agreement. The difference between what he contracted to do and what he really did was very apparent and material. Blodgett v. Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. 63 Iowa, 606, 609. In this case, however, the court stated that if what he did was accepted by the principal as a performance of his undertaking, the broker would clearly be entitled to the commissions provided for in the contract, but there would be no such acceptance unless the principal knew, when he was negotiating with the purchaser, that he was dealing with the customer produced by the broker.

Under an agreement for a sale at a specified price with an understanding that the principal may withdraw if he desires, and that if he sells the property himself and the broker has not worked up a sale the latter is not to have any commission, and that if the principal works up a purchaser and puts it in the broker's hands then he is to pay him half commissions, if the broker makes no sale and the principal withdraws the property from his hands and pays his expenses of advertising, on which the broker asks for instructions if he has an inquiry as to price, to which the principal replies that if he finds a person willing to give the net price he will let it go, the broker is not entitled to recover upon a sale finally made by the principal to the purchaser at a less price. Mallonee v. Young, 119 N. C. 549.

And the claim to commissions as against the original owners was totally denied in a case where the exclusive option of buying or selling the property on or before a certain date at a given price was given to a party who in turn gave another person (the plaintiff) an option to purchase on or before such date at a higher price, and agreed to give him a certain sum if he did so, and the latter person paid such party the last-mentioned option, and also performed services for him in procuring purchasers for the land, but the sales were not completed on the day upon which the options were to be fulfilled, in consequence of which the land was sold by the original owner direct to the purchasers. Cummings v. Town of Lake Realty Co. 86 Wis. 382.

And the broker's right to recover as a purchaser on the ground that he did procure a syndicate to whom the principal did not sell was denied where the syndicate was not full, and the persons who were to make the purchase were not then all known and the whole matter appeared to be incomplete, nebulous, and uncertain, when the principal sold the property to another and ended the relations between the broker and himself. Gerding v. Haskin, 141 N. Y. 514, 519.

So, evidence that the principal's agent employed a broker who only brought the subject to the notice of a party who offered a certain price, which was not accepted; and that, after other offers made to the principal through his agent, the matter rested for a year, when the agent obtained the name of the proposed purchaser, and interviewed him, when another broker who was authorized to find a purchaser at a further increased price finally succeeded in effecting the sale to such purchaser,—is not sufficient to establish the plaintiff broker as the procuring cause of the sale. Johnson v. Lord, 35 App. Div. 325.

So, evidence that the sale or exchange is really brought about by the principal himself, and that but for his exertions it would probably not have been effected, does not establish a sufficient procuring cause in the broker, even though it also establishes the fact that, after the negotiations are started by the principal, the broker at his request gives him advice and assistance in conducting the same. Campbell v. Vanstone, 73 Mo. App. 84, 87.

Again, testimony of a mere introduction by the broker without any meeting of the parties' minds and a sale two months or more thereafter with no further acts on the broker's part, without any continued negotiations after the introduction and failure of the parties to agree if tending to disclose a cause of action in any event, presents but a scintilla of evidence and is unavailing against a motion for a nonsuit. Baker v. Thomas, 12 Misc. 432, Reversing 11 Misc. 112.

And evidence which merely shows that the broker wrote the supposed owner of the principal's property that he had property to exchange; and such letter was sent to the plaintiff broker, who forwarded it to the principal with a suggestion that he should see the writer of it, which he did; and through an arrangement with him, for which he received a commission, the property was exchanged,—is not sufficient to establish the broker's claim as the efficient procuring cause of the sale. Hamilton v. Gillender, 26 App. Div. 156.

II. When several brokers are employed.

The owner of real estate, by the general employment of a real-estate agent or broker to effect a sale, does not thereby preclude himself from employing other agents for the same purpose, or from effecting a sale himself, provided that in making the latter sale he acts in good cause of a sale, the owner cannot escape liability by telling the broker that he will pay no commission if he decides to sell at a certain sum. The alleged remark of Mr. Bacon, to have any force, must have been made prior to the rendition of the plaintiff's services. This does not appear. The law is clear that a broker does not forfeit his commission because the owner avails himself of the services rendered to sell at a price less than that limited (Schlegel v. Allerton, supra); and the owner's position is not improved if he seeks to fortify his evasion of liability by telling the broker, after the rendition of the services, that he will pay no commission if he (the owner) sells at such price. The other exceptions to the finding do not call for special notice.

4. The claim that the court has found material facts without any evidence to support such finding is baseless. On the contrary, it is apparent from the record—and the more apparent the closer the record is studied—that any judge, hearing this evidence, weighing the conflicting testimony, and passing on the credit of the witnesses as they appeared upon the stand, might reasonably reach the conclusion of the trial court. In Thresher v. Dyer, 69 Conn. 404, 408, we stated the legal effect of recent legislation, since consolidated in the act of 1897 (Pub. Acts 1897, pp. 888-895), relative to procedure on appeals to this court. The peculiar construction of this appeal suggests the advisability of a more particular statement. A finding by the trial judge is unnecessary, when the record of the court, including the judgment file, discloses the al-faith. Cook v. Forst, 116 Ala. 395; Levy v. Rothe, 17 Misc. 402; Chilton v. Butler, 1 E. D. Smith, 150; Goldsmith v. Cook, 39 N. Y. S. R. 57; Dole v. Sherwood, 41 Minn. 535, 5 L. R. A. 720; Freedman v. Havemeyer, 37 App. Div. 518.

In such cases the general rule is that the principal is only liable for compensation to the one who effects the sale. Sussdorf v. Schmidt, 55 N. Y. 319, 321; Ahern v. Baker, 34 Minn. 98; McGuire v. Carlson, 61 Ill. App. 295, 297; Henderson v. Vincent, 84 Ala. 99; Martin v. Rillings, 2 N. Y. City Ct. Rep. 86.

And the employment of more than one broker is a matter of the principal's own choosing, and, until he revokes the authority given, each broker has the right to find purchasers, and earn his commission. Fox v. Rouse, 47 Mich. 558.

And if two or more brokers are employed there is no implied contract to pay more than one commission. Whitcomb v. Bacon, 170 Mass. 479.

And the one effects the sale who brings the minds of the parties to meet. Feldman v. O'Brien, 23 Misc. 341, 344; Smith v. McGovern, 65 N. Y. 575.

So, where the several brokers act independently and with knowledge of the fact, the one who first completes the sale is entitled to the commissions. Glascock v. Vanfleet, 100 Tenn. 608; Freedman v. Havemeyer, 37 App. Div. 518.

And no express contract to that effect is required to give the one who first sells that right. Tinsley v. Scott, 69 Ill. App. 352, 355.

The right of the broker who is the efficient cause of the sale to commissions is not affected by the fact that such broker sells to one whose attention has before been called to the property by another broker. McGuire v. Carlson, 61 Ill. App. 295, 297.

In Gibson's Estate, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 147, 148, it is said that as between several brokers the one entitled to the commissions is the one who introduces the buyer and seller.

So, the commissions are earned by the broker whose exertions are the procuring cause of the sale, and not by the broker who first consummates the sale, unless there is a distinct contract to the contrary. Brennan v. Roach, 47 Mo. App. 290, 297; Dreyer v. Rauch, 3 Daly, 434, 439, 42 How. Pr. 22, 29, 10 Abb. Pr. N. S. 343; Wright v. Brown, 68 Mo. App. 577; Briggs v. Rowe, 4 Keyes, 424; McGuire v. Carlson, 61 Ill. App. 295; Martin v. Billings, 2 N. Y. City Ct. Rep. 86.

The broker who introduces the purchaser, and who is instrumental in finding him, is the procuring cause. Sherwood v. Kerfoot, 9 Ill. App. 553, 556.

44 L. R. A.

In Brennan v. Roach, 47 Mo. App. 290, 297. It is said that after one broker has shaken the tree, another cannot be permitted to run up and carry off the fruit; and if the owner allows this to be done he is responsible to the first agent.

And the one who negotiates a contract on his principal's terms, and no other, is entitled to commissions, as the broker entitled must be the procuring cause of the contract finally made. Martin v. Rillings, 2 N. Y. City Ct. Rep. 86.

And a broker who first calls the attention of the purchaser to the property, and negotiates with him for a sale, is prima facie the procuring cause of the subsequent sale, unless the parties in good faith withdraw from the negotiations and abandon the proposed purchase and sale prior to a subsequent renewal of negotiations or unless the party sells by another broker in good faith. Hendricks v. Daniels, 46 N. Y. S. R. 384.

In Goldstein v. Walters, 15 Daly, 397, the court stated that the opinion entertained by some of the justices of the district court, that the broker who first brings the property to the notice of the purchaser is entitled to the commissions, even though the broker fails to obtain the price named by the seller, and though that price is afterwards obtained by the seller through the independent efforts of another broker, was erroneous.

And if the purchaser produced was first in negotiation with another broker, he continues to sustain that relation to him until it is expressly broken up, or the matter of the purchase has ceased to be held by him under consideration. Tinsley v. Scott, 69 Ill. App. 352.

The employer, with notice of the pendency of negotiations with one broker, cannot escape liability to him by selling to the customer through another broker, even though he first discharges the former broker, unless he gives him a reasonable time to effect a sale. Ibid.; Day v. Porter, 60 Ill. App. 386, 161 Ill. 235.

And a broker employed to sell lands, with notice that the property is also in the hands of other brokers on the same terms, though not thereby authorized to execute a deed or to receive the price, does "sell" the land in the sense of such employment when he produces a party able, willing, and ready to take it on the terms given, if no other such purchaser has been previously produced. Tinsley v. Scott, 69 Ill. App. 352, 355.

If, however, a broker introduces a purchaser who declines to purchase there must be some period of time at which the principal may deal with another broker who may himself be able to sell to such purchaser. Mears v. Stone, 44 Ill. App. 444, 447.

leged errors; that is, it is unnecessary when the appeal is used as a substitute for the former motion in error, but the ultimate and subordinate facts on which the judgment is founded must, on request of counsel, be stated in the judgment. When the appeal is used as a substitute for the former motion for a new trial, or for such motion as well as for a motion in error, a finding by the trial judge is necessary, and may serve a triple purpose: First, it may contain a statement of the facts on which the judgment is founded. Strictly, these facts should appear in the judgment, as when the appeal serves the purpose only of a motion in error; but the practice is (authorized, inferentially, by the statute), to include these facts in the finding, when one is necessary. No error can be assigned in respect to weighing the evidence from which these conclusions are drawn. They are adjudicated facts, which this court cannot retry. Where the ultimate facts are mere conclusions from subordinate facts found from the evidence, a party is entitled to have the subordinate facts stated; for such conclusions may be reviewable. But these subordinate facts must be facts found from the evidence, and not a mere recital of the testimony. Second. The finding may contain a statement of facts found which are necessary to present a question of law, and the question of law must be one made at the trial and decided by the judge. Such facts, whether affirmative or negative, are adjudicated facts, which this court cannot retry; but they may not be included in the statement of facts on which the judgment is founded, because the question of law which made them material has been decided adversely by the judge. It is

Where each broker contributed something from which the result could have been reached. as if one found a customer who otherwise would not have been found, but who refused to conclude the bargain through his agency, and another succeeded after the first failed, in the absence of any express contract, that one only was entitled to commission who showed that his services were the really effective means of bringing about the sale, or were the predominating efficient cause. Whitcomb v. Bacon, 170 Mass. 479.

In the above case the court said that although there may be another broker whose services are equally meritorious and essential in producing the result, yet in such a case it is not enough to show that one of several causes stood in such a relation to the result that without it the result would not have happened, and that it was one cause among others which assisted or contributed in producing it, as it is necessary to discriminate what the causes are, and to ascertain which was the particular cause which could be called the efficient or effective one.

If one broker places the property before the purchaser, and opens negotiations with him, and at his instance with the principal, and the other broker merely hears incidentally of the negotiations, and urges the purchaser to close the transaction, the second broker cannot recover commissions as he is not the procuring cause of the sale. Briggs v. Rowe, 4 Keyes, 424.

And if the broker is the procuring or proximate cause of the sale, the fact that the final transfer of the property may have been conducted by another broker will not affect his right to commissions, even if the terms of the first negotiations may have been varied. Wright v. Brown, 68 Mo. App. 577.

Where a broker introduces a purchaser, the point of time at which the principal may deal with another broker is when such purchaser surrenders his position, and declines to have anything further to do with the matter. Mears v. Stone, 44 Ill. App. 444, 447.

If the property is openly put in the hands of more than one broker, each is aware that he is subject to the arts and chances of competition, and if he finds a person who is likely to buy, and quits him without having effected a sale, he is aware that he runs the risk of such person falling under the influence of his competitors, and that in such case he may lose his labor, since such is a part of the inevitable risk of the business he undertakes. Scott v. Lloyd, 19 Colo. 401; Vreeland v. Vetterlein, 33 N. J. L. 247.

And if a broker who has procured a purchaser reports his offer to his principal without identifying the person from whom it comes, he cannot recover commissions in case of a subsequent sale through another broker at the same price to the same purchaser, unless it appears that the principal knew these facts, or that notice was given him by the broker before the completion of the contract, and payment of commissions to the second broker. Tinges v. Moale, 25 Md. 480, 90 Am. Dec. 73, 76.

A broker who is unsuccessful in effecting a sale does not become entitled to a commission upon the success of another broker. Ward v. Fletcher, 124 Mass. 224; Dowling v. Morrill, 165 Mass. 491.

If the broker does not have the exclusive sale of the property, and before the deeds are passed another broker intervenes through whom the bargain is closed, a verdict in the broker's favor for commissions cannot be sustained, unless the evidence goes further than merely to justify a finding that the purchaser was one to whose attention the property was brought by the broker's services. Dowling v. Morrill, 165 Mass. 491; Gillespie v. Wilder, 99 Mass. 170; Loud v. Hall, 106 Mass. 404, 407; Ward v. Fletcher, 124 Mass. 224.

And if the causal connection between the introducing broker and the procurement of the sale be broken off the first broker is not entitled to any commission. Platt v. Johr, 9 Ind. App. 58.

So, a broker will not be entitled to commissions on a sale made by another broker after the termination of his agency. Green v. Wright, 36 Mo. App. 298.

And the mere fact that one of several brokers may have called the purchaser's attention to the property, and may have conferred with him upon it, and furnished information respecting the same, is not sufficient to make him the efficient cause,—especially where he has not made such facts known to his principal or to the other brokers. Glascok v. Vanfleet, 100 Tenn. 603.

Again, the mere fact that a broker hazards a prophecy that the person he is trying to induce to buy will at some future time accede to his principal's terms cannot aid him in an action against his principal where the sale is actually brought about by another broker. Goldstein v. Walters, 15 Daly, 397.

Where several brokers are employed they are free to act independently of each other, and the owner cannot interfere, and is under no obligation to decide between their conflicting claims, but only to remain neutral between them, and for the purpose of securing the statement in the finding of such facts that the process provided in §§ 9 and 10 of the act of 1897 is chiefly efficacious. If such facts are omitted, the appellant may file exceptions to the finding, and have the evidence relevant to the question certified, for the purpose of making it appear by the record that it was an admitted or undisputed fact; or, if this course is not followed, the appellant may, under §§ 11 and 12 of the act, apply to this court to rectify the appeal. But in either case it must appear that the omitted fact was an admitted or undisputed fact, and that its statement in the finding is necessary to properly present a question of law decided adversely to the appellant. If it so appear, then the finding will be corrected by treating it as containing the fact, and the question of law will be considered in view of the corrected finding. This process is well adapted to prevent the omission from the finding of material facts found by the trial court, but it is an abuse to use the process for the mere purpose of asking the statement of a fact in the language of the counsel, rather than of the judge, or of loading the record with insignificant facts. Third. The finding may contain a recital of what actually took place at the trial, for the purpose of presenting for review rulings of the trial court upon questions of evidence, or other rulings not directly affecting the judgment. Such recital is made from the notes of the judge, which were formerly the only authentic source from which such facts could be made between them and the purchaser. Glascock v. Vanfleet, 100 Tenn. 603.

And the principal performs his duty when he remains neutral between them, and he has a right to sell to a purchaser produced by any of them without deciding which of them was the primary cause of the purchase. Vreeland v. Vetterlein, 33 N. J. L. 247, 24; Farrar v. Brodt, 35 Ill. App. 617.

And in such cases he may immediately convey to the purchaser brought to him by one of such brokers and pay the broker without any inquiry as to whether one of the other brokers may or may not have had something to do in effecting the sale. Eggleston v. Austin, 27 Kan. 245, 247; McGuire v. Carlson, 61 Ill. App. 295.

So, under an agreement to pay a commission to the one actually making the sale, the principal's duty is discharged when he pays the commissions to the one who actually closes the sale. Daniel v. Columbia Heights Land Co. 9 App. D. C. 483.

Yet an instruction to the jury to the effect that the entire duty of the seller is performed by remaining neutral, and that he had a right to make the sale to a buyer produced by either or any of them without being called upon to decide which of them is the primary cause of the purchase, although good law in the majority of cases, cannot be taken as the law applicable to all cases, and therefore a refusal of the court to so instruct the jury in particular cases may not be error. Eggleston v. Austin, 27 Kan. 245, 247. In this case the broker claimed to be the first person to bring the parties together, and to have procured the assistance of a friend of the purchasers in making the sale with the principal's knowledge, and also to have given him notice before the papers were executed that he claimed to be the person who effected the sale, and that he was the primary, efficient, and procuring cause of the sale, but that the principal, after stating he would ascertain who made the sale before he paid commissions, immediately afterwards paid the other broker.

If nothing is said as to the time within which the sale is to be made, and a reasonable time has elapsed, the principal may effect a sale through one of such brokers without incurring liability to the others, where good faith exists, and they have not succeeded in procuring a purchaser. Feldman v. O'Brien, 23 Misc. 341, 344.

Upon the question of time of performance of broker's contract, see note to Lunney v. Healey (Neb.) — L. R. A. —

And in such a case the principal is not bound to investigate the respective claims of each agent, and to decide between them at his peril. Daniel v. Columbia Heights Land Co. 9 App. D. C. 483.

44 L. R. A.

Where each broker claims commissions, the principal may compel them to interplead, and in such a case he should pay the money into court, and leave the brokers to try the question as to who was the procuring cause between themselves. Dreyer v. Rauch, 42 How. Pr. 22, 29.

But the Illinois courts hold that the principal must make his defense at law, and cannot compel them to interplead. Sachsel v. Farrar, 35 Ill. App. 277.

It is competent for the principal to adduce evidence showing that the sale was brought about, and a purchaser procured, through another agent. Newton v. Ritchie, 75 Iowa, 91, 93.

But evidence which shows that the principal had employed several agents for the sale of the property, and what he agreed to pay them for finding a purchaser, is wrongly admitted, where such agents are not concerned in what has been done, as the compensation agreed to be paid them is wholly immaterial. Goin v. Hess, 102 Iowa, 140, 143.

The fact that one broker has notice of a change of purpose in the principal will not affect the other, and a broker will not be chargeable with notice by reason of the principal's improving the property in a manner inconsistent with a design to sell, where the agency has not been revoked, as such an act does not of itself revoke the agency. Lloyd v. Matthews, 51 N. Y. 124.

But by consenting to his principal's proposal to put the property in the hands of another agent also at the same prices, the commission to go to whoever sells, the broker incurs a risk of competition, and the chance of losing the commission, even after the trouble and expense of advertising has been incurred by him, no matter what his previous understanding may have been. Daniel v. Columbia Heights Land Co. 9 App. D. C. 483.

In a case where the purchaser first called upon the plaintiff to inquire after another estate, and the plaintiff called his attention to his principal's estate, of which the purchaser took particulars but finally negotiated the sale through the other agent, the question whether the plaintiff found the purchaser was held to be one for the jury, who were not bound to give him the full amount of the commissions, though the fact that commissions were usually paid was some evidence to guide them in their decision. Murray v. Currie, 7 Car. & P. 584.

And the court refused to disturb the verdict of the jury denying commissions where each broker had negotiations with the person who purchased, and the terms first offered through the plaintiff broker were not accepted, and there to appear, but now the notes of the official stenographer furnish another authentic source. And, if necessary, under the provisions of §§ 11 and 12 of the act, such notes may be made to appear in the finding, so that this court may review the rulings complained of, in connection with the state of facts existing at the trial as shown by the recital of the judge, read in the light of the certified evidence. The addition of long extracts from the stenographer's notes is, however, rarely necessary. A brief statement by the judge is clearer, and usually sufficient.

The process authorized by the statute is intended primarily to facilitate the fullest possible exercise of jurisdiction by this court in correcting errors in law, and we have given the statute a very broad construction to give effect to this purpose. If an appeal is properly prepared by the appellant, it is difficult, if not impossible, for a trial court to so frame a finding that this court cannot get at the substantial errors in law involved. So far, however, as the language of the statute may imply a determination by this court, upon the evidence certified, of facts lawfully adjudicated by the trial court, it was decided in Atwater v. Morning News Co. 67 Conn. 504, and in subsequent cases, that we are prevented from giving it effect by the paramount authority of the Constitution.

There is no error in the judgment of the Superior Court.

The other Judges concur.

was an entire abandonment of the idea of investment until the negotiations were renewed by the instrumentality of the other broker, who sold the property on the same terms as originally offered, with a modification on account of a certain lease, as the question involved was properly submitted to the jury. Livezy v. Miller, 61 Md. 336, 343.

And where a broker who obtains two different offers, both of which are rejected by the principal, suspends his efforts, and another broker, in ignorance that the first broker has treated with such party, procures from him another and different offer, which is accepted by the principal, instructions to the jury which do not sufficiently point out the difference between two offers, and which are calculated to mislead them so as to cause them to find for the broker, are erroneous. Dowling v. Morrill, 165 Mass. 491.

But the mere fact that the sale is concluded by another broker to whom the principal has paid a commission will not affect the first broker's right to commissions where he has introduced a purchaser, and the negotiations of the sale have continued with such purchaser until the sale is consummated; or if the negotiations are renewed by the broker at the instance of the principal, and the sale is consummated by the parties through another broker, the first broker will still be entitled to recover. Peckham v. Ashhurst, 18 R. I. 376.

And the broker who enters into a written contract with, and receives part payment of the purchase price from, a party financially responsible, is entitled to compensation for making the sale notwithstanding another broker may have procured a conveyance from the owner in compliance with a verbal agreement made by such owner with the grantee named in such conveyance. Stewart v. Woodward (Kan. App.) 53 Pac. 148.

A broker who introduced an intending purchaser without inducing him to do anything at that time more than to view the premises, and later brought the parties together again and effected a sale upon the terms previously declined, can recover commissions as against another broker, who, in the interval, had brought the same parties together, with no result except an offer that was refused. Ludlow v. Carman, 2 Hilt. 107, 112.

A writing which places property in the broker's hands for a period of three months, and until withdrawn by written notice, at a certain price, the broker's commission or compensation to be the amount obtained over and above such price, and 5 per cent commissions if the property is sold by the brokers, and one third of the above compensation in case the property is sold or exchanged in the meantime without their agency, is sufficient to establish the liability for the one-third compensation upon a sale made within such period of three months by another broker. Long v. Herr, 10 Colo. 380.

Where the evidence justifies the finding that the first broker's services are the efficient or effective means of bringing about the actual sale, and that his work has in fact caused the purchaser to buy, he has in fact procured a customer to purchase the estate. Dowling v. Morrill, 165 Mass. 491; Gleason v. Nelson, 162 Mass. 245.

And where a broker has started negotiations between the parties, which have continued without interruption, the mere fact that the property is placed in the hands of other brokers, who put a bill upon the premises, and with whom, as well as with the principal himself, subsequent negotiations are continued, is not sufficient ground for the court to infer a revocation of the employment of the first broker so as to bar his right to commission, where it does not appear to have been at any time between the inception of the negotiations and the final consummation of the sale, when the negotiations were broken off. Gibson's Estate, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 147, 148.

Brokers recovered their commissions upon a sale made by the principal through another broker where about the day of the expiration of the time named in their contract the principal requested them to write a purchaser who had declined to purchase at the price named, offering to take less, and upon their request for another contract the principal stated that he had one, and that if the purchasers wanted to come down and trade with him the brokers could stand aside and he could make the trade and pay their commissions, no matter who made the sale or at what price. Holland v. Howard, 105 Ala. 538.

Under conditions which showed that the purchaser was not quite satisfied with the terms of the contract he had entered into, and stated to the broker that he could take it that he wished "to back out" of the contract if he liked, and another agent of the principal drew up a second contract so modified as to conform to his wishes, which the principal agreed to and which was accepted and executed, the first broker was held to be the procuring cause of the sale. Wright v. Brown, 68 Mo. App. 577.

And where one of several agents found a purchaser and negotiated with him to sell at a certain price, on terms different from those specified in the authority to sell, and when the sale was about to be consummated, another agent with full knowledge of such negotiations sold the property for a less price to the same person on the same terms as to cash down, and time for deferred payment, while the owner was ignorant of the negotiations with the first broker, but ratified the second sale on the terms proposed by the first, the first was held the procuring cause of the sale. Reynolds v. Tompkins, 23 W. Va. 229, 235.

And where there was a special agency and the first agent effected a sale which was consummated by a conveyance, and the second agent subsequently contracted to sell without notice of the previous sale, as the agency was special and there was nothing to show that the principal would be estopped from setting up a revocation of the agency prior to the sale by the second broker, the first broker recovered his commissions, since a revocation may be shown by the death of the principal, the destruction of the subject-matter, or the determination of his estate by a sale, as well as by express notice. Ahern v. Baker, 34 Minn. 98.

So, the court refused to dismiss the first broker's claim where he showed the property to one who at the time would only pay a much smaller amount as the difference on an exchange, which sum the principal refused, and such party told another broker that he would increase his offer, on which the latter broker effected an exchange and got a commission from both parties, the principal knowing at the time that the first broker claimed it, as the evidence was sufficient to go to the jury upon the question whether the plaintiff was the procuring cause of the exchange. Smith v. McGovern, 65 N. Y. 574, 575.

And the plaintiff broker recovered as the procuring cause where the purchasers were his customers and their full acceptance of the offer was merely delayed for a time to hear from a partner, but the bargain was immediately closed on hearing from him, although before full acceptance the principal intimated that unless they sold by a given date the field would be open to anyone to sell, and the deal was closed at the office of another broker, to which the partner went in order to find the principal, because the first broker was out of town. Jenks v. Nobles, 42 Ill. App. 33.

In Atwater v. Wilson, 13 Misc. 117, 119, affirming 10 Misc. 777, the broker was held to be the procuring cause of the sale where he first called the attention of the purchaser to the property, and for many months continued the negotiations, although the sale was finally closed by another broker whom the purchaser had asked to buy upon a promise of a certain amount, while the principal knew that the purchaser was the party introduced to him by the first broker.

The above case is distinguishable from that of Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co. 83 N. Y. 382, 22 Am. Rep. 441, as in the latter case the broker's agency was terminated by the principal in good faith, and for a good cause, while here there was no evidence of a termination.

So, a broker recovered a verdict where he referred his principals to certain houses and lots, and gave them the names of the owner and his agent under their promise that if they exchanged for them they would pay him a commission, but they, ignoring him, conducted their own negotiations for the exchange. Gillen v. Wise, 14 Daly, 480.

And the first broker recovered as the procuring cause of the sale, where it appeared that the purchase made by another broker was really made on behalf of the person whose attention was first called to the property by the first 44 L. R. A.

broker, and that the principal objected to the conveyance to him and suggested that commissions might be claimed by the first broker, but was assured that no such claims would be made. Winans v. Jacques, 10 Daly, 487.

And where the evidence showed that the broker brought the property and its price to the attention of the purchaser, and had several interviews with his agent in which prices were discussed, but, in consequence of what the broker said to the agent, the latter was not willing to negotiate through him, and upon his suggestion another broker was employed by the principal and the sale was closed with the purchaser, the court held that it could not be said that the evidence did not justify a finding that the purchasers had determined to buy when the agent went to the second broker, and that the services rendered by the first broker up to that time did not in fact procure the purchaser. Dowling v. Morrill, 165 Mass. 491.

Evidence which tends to show that another broker did some work in effecting a trade with the purchaser, and that the contract made with the purchaser was the result in whole or in part of services rendered by him, and that he was authorized to act for the principal in effecting the sale, may be admitted in an action by a broker to recover commissions. Goin v. Hess, 102 Iowa, 140, 143.

In the following cases the commission or compensation was not allowed the first broker engaged by the principal as he was not considered the procuring or efficient cause of the sale effected.

A broker employed to sell real estate at a given price was refused commissions where he produced a purchaser to whom the property was afterwards sold by another agent at a lower price, since he was only entitled to compensation if such purchaser was accepted by his principal at his hands, and when the principal has availed himself of his services. Wolff v. Rosenberg, 67 Mo. App. 403.

When property is put into the hands of two independent brokers, the fact that one of them by advertising finds a purchaser, and induces him to purchase by seeing him, and holding interviews with him, will not entitle him to commissions, if the sale is actually closed by the other broker. Daniel v. Columbia Heights Land Co. 9 App. D. C. 483.

And if there is no agreement between the buyer and the seller introduced through a broker, and no mutual assent to the terms, but the sale is finally brought about after the completion of negotiations through another broker, the former's right to commissions will be denied. Baker v. Thomas, 12 Misc. 432, 433, Reversing 11 Misc. 112.

So, if the principal refuses to take the offer of the purchaser procured by a broker unless the latter will take less commissions, and the matter thereby terminates, the broker cannot recover as the procuring cause of a sale which is made by another broker. Powell v. Lamb, 1 N. Y. Supp. 431, 432.

And where all that a broker did was to call the attention of a purchaser to the property without any agreement resulting from what he did, but the negotiations fell through, and some time afterwards another broker, without any knowledge of the former's efforts, sold the property to the same purchaser, it was held that the first broker was not entitled to commissions as the procuring cause of the sale. Dreyer v. Rauch, 42 How. Pr. 22, 29, 3 Daly, 434, 439, 10 Abb. Pr. N. S. 843.

And if the negotiations he has set on foot are completely broken off by disagreement as to the price, and the property is afterwards sold to the same party by another broker on the same terms as originally offered, except a modification somewhat less favorable to the owner, the first broker is not entitled to commissions as the procuring cause. Armes v. Cameron, 8 Mackey, 485, 436.

And this is especially so where there is no evidence that he induced such purchaser to change his mind. Mears v. Stone, 44 Ill. App. 444; Earp v. Cummins, 54 Pa. 394, 93 Am. Dec. 718; Chandler v. Sutton, 5 Daly, 112; Wylle v. Marine Nat. Bank, 61 N. Y. 415; Liipe v. Ludewick, 14 Ill. App. 372; Sievers v. Griffin, 14 Ill. App. 63; Davis v. Gassette, 30 Ill. App. 41, 45.

So, where the proposed purchaser introduced by the broker, who had refused the property, subsequently mentioned it to the real purchaser, and the latter sale was completed by another broker, the first broker was not allowed commissions. Thuner v. Kanter, 102 Mich. 59.

And where the contract with such first agent has terminated before the employment of the plaintiff broker, and the efforts of the first broker are unsuccessful in effecting a sale to the purchaser, the mere fact that another agent has been employed by the principal is not material. Stinde v. Blesch, 42 Mo. App. 578.

So, if the agency has been revoked before the broker becomes entitled to his commissions, and the property is placed in the hands of another broker who employs the first broker to assist him in the sale, the principal is not liable for commissions to the latter. Schwartz v. Yearly, 31 Md. 270, 276.

And if a broker introduces another broker to the principal as a customer, and the negotiations between them are unsuccessful, and afterwards the principal in good faith employs the latter to procure a purchaser, and he does so, and is the proximate, efficient, and procuring cause of the sale and exchange of the property, he is entitled to the commission rather than the broker originally employed, who introduced him to the principal. Latashaw v. Moore, 53 Kan. 234.

In Davis v. Gassette, 30 Ill. App. 41, 45, the court refused the broker's commissions as it was shown that a year before the trade was made the purchaser had absolutely declined to have anything to do with the property on the terms upon which the broker was authorized to offer it, and no negotiations of any kind between the principal and the purchaser resulted from the meeting brought about by the broker, but the exchange subsequently made was brought about by another broker on a proposition to trade, not to sell, the property. In this case, however, the court intimated that if the principal put the property into the hands of other brokers when he had given it to one under an agreement that he should have the exclusive agency a question as to whether he could escape liability for commissions under such circumstances might arise.

If a broker, who has the exclusive agency up to a given date, merely approaches an intending purchaser without doing anything definite, and after such date a mere conditional offer never complied with is made by such purchaser, and later the property is sold through another broker without the assistance or help of the first broker, and the principal remains perfectly neutral between them, a verdict denying the broker's right to commissions will not be interfered with. Farrar v. Brodt, 35 Ill. App. 617.

And where there was a special contract whereby, in consideration of special efforts, the broker was to have a certain percentage in case the sale was made by either of them, and a less percentage in case the sale was effected by another broker, the broker's claim for commissions was refused, upon a sale made by another broker which appeared to be the eventual acceptance by the principal of a standing offer made through the second broker some months previous to the making of the special contract. Powell v. Anderson, 15 Daly, 219.
44 L. R. A.

So, a broker was refused commissions upon a sale by a second broker engaged by his principal with notice to the former where he merely brought the purchaser in view of the house, and, seeing that he was pleased with it, looked up the owner and procured the privilege of selling it on certain net terms, which he never carried out, without any agreement about commissions, or anything over and above the net amount mentioned by the principal. Crowley v. Somerville, 70 Mo. App. 376, 379.

Where, at the instigation of a real-estate broker, the principal's son telegraphed his father for the lowest price, and such telegram was answered, but no sale was effected by the broker to the purchaser he had in view at the time owing to encumbrances upon the property, and this was all that the broker did, commissions were refused him upon a sale, after the removal of the encumbrances, through another broker. Chandler v. Sutton, 5 Daly, 112.

So, the broker was not the procuring cause where neither his efforts nor his influence continued until the date of the sale made by another broker to a purchaser originally found by him. Randrup v. Schroeder, 21 Misc. 54, 22 Misc. 365.

So, where the broker found and introduced a person, who at the time was not ready and willing to buy, and did not offer to do so until he was again introduced to the principal by another broker, through whose efforts, some five or six weeks afterwards, he became the purchaser, the claim of the first broker for commissions was disallowed as he was not the efficient agent or procuring cause of the sale. Platt v. Jahr, 9 Ind. App. 58.

In Walton v. New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. 23 La. Ann. 398, the broker's claim for making a sale was disallowed when other brokers negotiated the sale, although the former claimed that the matter was taken out of their hands without their consent or knowledge.

And the claim of a broker who had not the exclusive agency was disallowed where another broker was employed in good faith after every offer ever made by the first brokers for any prospective buyer had been rejected, and was paid without any knowledge on the part of the principal that the first broker had ever communicated with the second broker in relation to the sale of the property, although there had been negotiations between the two brokers which had ended. Douville v. Comstock, 110 Mich. 693, 701.

Again, where it was not even shown that the broker was the first to put the purchaser on the track of the property, since he already knew of the intended sale, and that it was listed with another broker with whom he had some negotiations, and the first broker never made any offer which the purchaser accepted, or, so far as it appears, ever would accept, but the efforts of another broker were the immediate procuring cause of the sale, the first broker's claim was disallowed in the absence of evidence of unfair means on the part of the other broker, as the purchaser was merely experimenting to see where he could get the best terms. Francis v. Eddy, 49 Minn. 447.

And a broker's claim was disallowed in Maracella v. Odell, 3 Daly, 123, upon a sale by another broker, where the former's bill had been torn down from the house and that of the other broker, posted thereon, first attracted the attention of the purchaser, who learned from the tenant that the first broker collected the rent, and went to his office to inquire "about the rents," when he was informed of the price and shown the house, but he did not disclose to the vendor his previous interview with this broker, who was never heard of in the matter.

In Henderson v. Vincent, 84 Ala. 99, the court also disallowed commissions to brokers, who only submitted an offer which was declined without any attempt to bring the parties to terms, although no abandonment of their expectation to sell was shown, and the sale made was to one purchasing for the first broker's customer at a less sum, of which fact, however, the principal had no knowledge or information.

And where unsuccessful attempts were made by a broker to close a deal on terms which he was authorized to make, he was not allowed commissions for a sale made after the expiration of his contract, by other brokers. Montgomery v. Blering (Tex. Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 508.

In a case in which the principal's husband, acting as her agent, put the houses in the hands of real-estate brokers for sale, and afterwards, also as her agent, put them in the hands of the plaintiff broker, and each broker knew that the property was in the other's hands and that the principal's agent told them that he would give the commissions to the one who obtained the best price, and a purchaser testified that she told both of the brokers that she would buy from the one which could get the house for her, and the evidence further disclosed that such purchaser was first introduced by the plaintiff broker, but it was not shown that he was the procuring cause of the sale, or that he brought the minds of the parties together, and the property was subsequently bought by the other broker in the hope that he would be able to transfer the property to such intending purchaser at an advanced price, it was held the principal was not liable to the other broker for commissions. Feldman v. O'Brien, 23 Misc. 341.

The case of Clarkson v. Howard, 47 N. Y. S. R. 935, was one in which the plaintiff claimed to be the procuring cause of the sale, and in which the court found that the sale was really effected by another broker, and declined to interfere with the ruling of the court below in defendant's favor.

The testimony of a broker that he offered the lots to the purchaser, and was the procuring cause of the sale, is not sufficient to establish his claim for commissions, where, inter alia, the purchaser testifies that the property was offered to him by another broker, and that he was introduced to the principal by that broker before a given date, and also that the property was offered to him by at least two other brokers without success, and that he afterwards bought for a less sum, and the principal proves, inter alia, that he told the first broker that if his party would not take, the matter was off, to which the broker assented. Woods v. Burton, 21 Misc. 326.

If the employment is denied, and the owner avers that he previously placed the property in the hands of other brokers who obtained an offer which he accepted before the plaintiff produced his customer, evidence of the fact of the employment of such other brokers is competent. Goldsmith v. Cook, 39 N. Y. S. R. 56, Reversing 34 N. Y. S. R. 688.

III. In case of a sale by his principal.

a. General rule governing.

It is a general rule in cases where real estate is placed in a broker's hands for sale in the ordinary way, and without any agreement stipulating to the contrary, or specifying any exact period of time within which the broker is to have the exclusive right to sell, that the fact that the property is given to the broker for sale, or for the purpose of finding or procuring a purchaser therefor, does not deprive the principal of the right to sell the same himself when he acts in good faith toward the broker; and in all such cases there is an implied reservation of the right to the principal, free from any charge or liability for commissions. Cook v. Forst, 116 Ala. 395; Blood v. Shannon, 29 Cal. 393; Dolan v. Scanlan, 57 Cal. 261, 263; Owl Canon Gypsum Co. v. Ferguson, 2 Colo. App. 219; Wray v. Carpenter, 16 Colo. 271; Hungerford v. Hicks, 39 Conn. 259; Bryan v. Abert, 8 App. D. C. 180, 186; Doonan v. Ives, 73 Ga. 295, 301; Gilbert v. Coons, 37 Ill. App. 448; Metzen v. Wyatt, 41 Ill. App. 487; Clifford v. Meyer, 6 Ind. App. 633; Cullen v. Bell, 43 Minn. 226, 227; Dole v. Sherwood, 41 Minn. 535, 5 L. R. A. 720; Armstrong v. Wann, 29 Minn. 126; Putnam v. How, 39 Minn. 363; Baars v. Hyland, 65 Minn. 150; Wylie v. Marine Nat. Bank, 61 N. Y. 415, 416; Satterthwaite v. Vreeland, 3 Hun. 152; Levy v. Rothe, 17 Misc. 402; Goldsmith v. Cook, 39 N. Y. S. R. 56, Reversing 34 N. Y. S. R. 688; McClave v. Paine, 49 N. Y. 561, 10 Am. Rep. 431, 432; Chilton v. Butler, 1 E. D. Smith, 150, 151; Sussdorf v. Schmidt, 55 N. Y. 319, 321; Stringfellow v. Elsea (Tex. Civ. App.) 45 S. W. 418, 421; Burns v. Hill, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) § 523, p. 468; Darrow v. Harlow, 21 Wis. 303, 94 Am. Dec. 541; McArthur v. Slauson, 53 Wis. 41.

And therefore where the action for commissions is not based upon the ground that the broker found the purchaser, or in fact did anything with respect to the agency, but solely upon the sale of the land by the principal soon after the broker's employment, without his consent, and without any reservation of the principal's right to do so, the claim for commissions must fail. Stewart v. Murray, 92 Ind. 543, 545, 47 Am. Rep. 167.

So, if the principal has reserved to himself a right to sell it makes no matter that after an independent sale by the principal the broker, without notice thereof, finds a purchaser, as his agency has expired by the terms of its creation, and, as he accepts the terms, he cannot complain of the result. Hill v. Jebb, 55 Ark. 574; Ahern v. Baker, 34 Minn. 98; Dole v. Sherwood, 41 Minn. 535, 5 L. R. A. 720; Lane v. Albright, 49 Ind. 275; Dolan v. Scanlan, 57 Cal. 261.

And the reservation of the right to make a sale in person, independently of the broker, imports a notice to the latter, and an agreement by him that the proprietor may make a sale without the agency of the broker, and thereby terminate it. Hill v. Jebb, 55 Ark. 574, 576.

Where the principal has reserved the right to make a sale himself there is no implication that he may not accept a lower price than that specified as a minimum in the agreement with the broker. Burns v. Hill, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) § 523, p. 468.

So, an instruction to the jury that a man has the right to sell or trade his own property, and that if the principal acts for himself in the matter, and does not employ the broker as his agent to procure him a customer, the broker cannot recover for the alleged services, correctly states the law. Strawbridge v. Swan, 43 Neb. 781.

And the rule especially applies after a reasonable opportunity has been given the broker to effect a sale. Feldman v. O'Brien, 23 Misc. 341, 344; Henderson v. Vincent, 84 Ala. 99, 100.

But in such cases the principal will be bound to pay the broker for services for which he promised to pay, and which are rendered by the broker pursuant to such agreement. Stringfellow v. Elsea (Tex. Civ. App.) 45 S. W. 418, 421.

So, if a broker is entitled to compensation for services rendered during his agency, to be paid out of the proceeds of a sale, his right accrues when the land is sold, and the principals cannot deprive him of that right by selling the property themselves. Ibid.

And whenever the broker is authorized to sell, and he finds a purchaser before any sale is completed by the principal, the latter must account for the promised commission, unless there be something in the contract which relieves him from liability. Owl Canon Gypsum Co. v. Ferguson, 2 Colo. App. 219, 221; Wray v. Carpenter, 16 Colo. 271.

Although the fact that the principal has authorized the broker to sell does not deprive him of the power of selling the property himself, yet he cannot thereby avoid his liability to the broker where the broker has found a purchaser within a reasonable time under his contract. Lane v. Albright, 49 Ind. 275, 279.

And in such a case there is an implied undertaking that the broker is to have his commission if he, within a reasonable time before the principal sells, finds a customer who will make the purchase, and notifies the principal thereof. Darrow v. Harlow, 21 Wis. 303, 94 Am. Dec. 541.

In a case in which the principal sold the property on the same day that he placed it in the hands of the broker, without any notice to the latter, the principal was held liable for commissions on a sale made by the broker within three or four days after, and by a special effort. Woodall v. Foster, 91 Tenn. 195, 197.

So, the owner has no right to take negotiations out of the hands of his agent, especially where he reduces the price of the property, and completes the sale himself, and then escape payment of commission; and in such a case the broker will be treated as the procuring cause of the sale, although by the acts of his principal he was prevented from actually closing the bargain between the parties. Clifford v. Meyer, 6 Ind. App. 633.

The owner may sell the property while the agent is engaged in trying to do so, and if he does so before the agent has found a purchaser he will not be liable to him for commissions, unless he has sold to a purchaser procured by the agent. Armstrong v. Wann, 29 Minn. 126.

In a case in which a clerical agent was to receive a commission upon the amount of the purchase money upon the sale of an advowson through his agency where the principal sold without communicating with the agent, in the absence of expense or liability incurred by the agent he was not entitled to recover anything. Simpson v. Lamb, 17 C. B. 603, 25 L. J. C. P. N. S. 113, 2 Jur. N. S. 91.

And in a case where the broker found a purchaser on a given date, who was able, ready, and willing to purchase all the property at an increased rate, and wrote the principal informing him of the fact, and enclosed his letter in one to the postmaster with a request to deliver it, which letter never reached the principal until after he had sold the property, as no exclusive right to sell was given, and the principal reserved the right to sell the property himself, the broker's claim for commissions failed. De Cordova v. Bahn, 74 Tex. 643, 645.

Under a condition that if the land is sold 44 L. R. A.

without the intervention or assistance of the broker he is not to be entitled to commissions, he is not entitled to them upon a sale made by the principal with the knowledge of the broker, where before that is effected the broker procures a purchaser, but it is agreed that he should wait five days, for another person's acceptance of the principal's offer, which is accepted within the time. Robinson v. Kindley, 36 Kan. 157.

b. Negotiations by principal.

And if the principal finds a purchaser through information furnished by a broker never actually employed by him, although there may be a moral obligation to give a reasonable compensation for his services, yet the obligation is not of such a character as to be enforceable at law. Rees v. Spruance, 45 Ill. 308, 310.

The question of a sale negotiated by the principal with a purchaser introduced to him by the broker will be found treated of in note to Lunney v. Healey (Neb.) — L. R. A. —, wherein the question of performance of the contract between the principal and the broker is considered.

c. Before broker has reasonable opportunity to reap result of his efforts.

When an agent is employed to perform an act involving the expenditure of labor and money, and has in good faith incurred expense and expended time and labor before he has a reasonable opportunity to avail himself of the results of such preliminary effort, the principal cannot be permitted to determine the agency and take advantage of the agent's services without payment of compensation. Glover v. Henderson, 120 Mo. 367, 376, citing Meachem, Agency, § 620.

And although the broker is not given the exclusive right to sell, if the principal sells on the very day on which he places the property in the broker's hands without notice to the broker, who has made a vigorous and special effort to sell, and finds a purchaser within three or four days without notice of the prior sale, he is entitled to his full commissions. Woodall v. Foster, 91 Tenn. 195, 197.

Upon the question of the principal's interference with the broker in his performance of his contract, see note to Brackenridge v. Claridge (Tex.) 43 L. R. A. 593.

d. Pending broker's negotiations with purchaser.

The principal cannot, by any arbitrary act of his, prevent the performance of the contract on the broker's part, as by selling to a purchaser with whom the broker is in negotiation, and thus escape liability for commissions, especially if he has knowledge of the fact that the broker is negotiating with such purchaser.

This doctrine is supported by the case of Reynolds v. Tompkins, 23 W. Va. 229, 235, which states that if an agent, with authority to sell on a certain commission, in the event of a sale, procures a purchaser at the price and on the terms authorized, who would have taken the property at the price, and the owner of the property steps in, ignores the agent, and sells to the purchaser so secured at the same price and on the same terms, or for a less price and on the terms proposed to the purchaser by the agent, even if they are different from the terms stipulated in the authority to sell, the owner is liable to pay to the agent the amount of commissions stipulated to be paid.

So, if the broker's work has been fulfilled, not only in directing a purchaser's attention to the property, but in affording him information as to encumbrances, etc., and as to the price at which the property can be obtained, and the probability is that the broker within the scope of a few hours will consummate the sale, the principal cannot surreptitiously step in and take the case out of the broker's hands and complete it himself, for the purpose of avoiding commissions, as in such a case the principal will not be allowed to intervene and interfere with the prosecution of the employment on the part of the broker to his own advantage. Carroll v. Pettit, 67 Hun, 418; Doonan v. Ives, 73 Ga. 295, 301.

The above doctrine is further supported by the following cases: Hartley v. Anderson, 150 Pa. 391; Chilton v. Butler, 1 E. D. Smith, 150, 151; Dalley v. Young, 37 N. Y. S. R. 903; Keys v. Johnson, 68 Pa. 42; Gibson's Estate, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 147, 148; Bryan v. Abert, 3 App. D. C. 180, 186; Schuster v. Martin, 45 Ill. App. 481; Tinsley v. Scott, 69 Ill. App. 352; Clifford v. Meyer, 6 Ind. App. 633; Wilson v. Dyer, 12 Ind. App. 320; Gillett v. Corum, 7 Kan. 156; Lunch v. McKenna, 58 How. Pr. 42, 43; Geery v. Pollock, 16 App. Div. 321; Wyckoff v. Taylor, 13 Daly, 564; Royster v. Magevney, 9 Lea, 148; Reynolds v. Tompkins, 23 W. Va. 229, 235; Byrd v. Frost (Tex. Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 46; Glascok v. Vanfleet, 100 Tenn. 603; Arrington v. Cary, 5 Baxt. 609.

If the principal does use the broker's labor, and "puts in to take" the contract out of his hands, so as to escape paying commissions, then, ex æquo et bono, the principal owes him commissions, and must pay what the broker could have made by the contract if he had not prevented it. Doonan v. Ives, 73 Ga. 295, 301.

In Ford v. Easley, 88 Iowa, 603, the broker recovered his commissions upon finding a purchaser for real estate ready and willing to complete the purchase, even though such sale was not consummated owing to a sale of the property by the principal,—especially as he testified that his principals were informed that he was about to make the sale, and they directed him to complete it if possible.

And even assuming that the principal may have obtained the name of the purchaser entirely independent of the broker, yet if, on a given date, the principal obtains from the broker knowledge that the person whom the broker has secured as a proposed purchaser is the same person of whom he has otherwise learned, he owes some duty to the broker, either to terminate the agency, or notify him that he intends personally to conduct further negotiations. Carroll v. Pettit, 67 Hun, 418.

And if the broker has procured a purchaser, and has commenced negotiations which are afterwards finally consummated by his principal, and his services as agent have brought about the sale and are the efficient cause of it, the fact that it does not appear that the purchaser had informed the principal of the negotiations he had had with the broker is immaterial, as it is not essential that he should know it in order to entitle the broker to commissions; and any change made between the principal and the purchaser in the terms of the sale will not affect the broker's right. Graves v. Bains, 78 Tex. 92, 95.

When the broker's contract is to find a purchaser at a specific price in cash, with a first mortgage for the balance payable at a given date, and the broker procures a written contract with a purchaser at such price, with a sufficient amount in cash, and the balance on or before a certain day with interest, the deed to be delivered within thirty days, under which no money is paid at the time but a check for a smaller amount is given to the broker, of which contract the principal has notice at the time, he cannot sell the property on the following date and thus defeat the agent's right to commissions. Goss v. Broom, 31 Minn. 484.

e. After suspension of negotiations.

In some cases the question has arisen as to whether or not the broker is entitled to his commissions, as upon a performance of his contract, where the negotiations with the purchaser found or introduced by him, although abandoned, have been subsequently renewed and a sale effected.

In Peckham v. Ashhurst, 18 R. I. 376, it is said that although the earlier negotiations between the purchaser and the broker's principal terminate without a sale, yet, if they are resumed, and the principal recognizes the broker's agency as continuing by employing him as the medium for such reopening, his right to commission on the consummation of the sale is complete; and in such a case the principal is not at liberty to avail himself of the broker's services, and then decline to pay for them. Van Doren v. Jelliffe, 1 Misc. 354, to the same effect.

The fact that the negotiations cease for a time between the parties, and are again renewed, does not necessarily determine the question of the broker's right to commissions, as his right depends upon the continuance of his employment or relation to the transaction, and the introduction of the parties as the means by which the sale is finally consummated. Goodwin v. Brennecke, 21 App. Div. 138.

The fact that the principal after making a contract for the broker to effect a sale or exchange of his property, and to pay him a commission for doing so, gave the property to his son, will not incontrovertibly prove that an exchange, while in the hands of the son, was not such as was contemplated by the contract of employment, as it might have been within the intention of the principal, besides giving the property to his son, to procure for him through the efforts of the plaintiff the additional advantage of having an opportunity of making a profitable exchange, and such fact will not necessarily release the principal from payment of the commissions where an exchange follows, even though the negotiations were not successful in the first instance, and were declared off by the principal, but were afterwards continued by him, and proved successful. Fox v. Byrnes, 20 Jones & S. 150, 152.

And the court refused to disturb a verdict in the broker's favor, where there was a conflict in the testimony, but the written evidence corroborated the oral testimony given in favor of the broker, and showed that the broker had not waived claim for commissions on a subsequent sale of the property. Granger v. Griffin, 43 Ill. App. 421.

There must, however, be a period of time within which, after a party introduced by an agent has declined to purchase, the owner, or another broker, may treat the negotiation as at an end, and entirely new and independent solicitations may begin. Watts v. Howard, 51 Ill. App. 243, 246; Mears v. Stone, 44 Ill. App. 444; Carlson v. Nathan, 43 Ill. App. 364; Tombs v. Alexander, 101 Mass. 255, 3 Am. Rep. 349; Earp v. Cummins, 54 Pa. 394, 93 Am. Dec. 718.

So, although the broker may have been the means of first bringing the parties together, and of opening negotiations between them, yet if the negotiations are unproductive and the parties in good faith withdraw therefrom, and abandon the proposed sale and purchase, a subsequent renewal of negotiations for sale upon the same or different terms does not entitle the broker to the commissions, and he cannot in such a case be said to have performed his contract. Briggs v. Rowe, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 189; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co. 83 N. Y. 378, 22 Am. Rep. 441; Levy v. Coogan, 16 Daly, 137.

And if the broker abandons the trade or relinquishes his efforts the principal is not precluded from negotiating with any person whom the broker has introduced, and in such a case the broker is not entitled to commissions. Ronscher v. Larkins, 84 Hun, 288, 289; Wylie v. Marine Nat. Bank, 61 N. Y. 415; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co. 83 N. Y. 378, 22 Am. Rep. 441; Hay v. Platt, 66 Hun, 488; Lipe v. Ludewick, 14 Ill. App. 372, 375; Singer & T. Stone Co. v. Hutchinson, 61 Ill. App. 308.

So, if the principal has revoked the authority after the broker has procured a party to inspect the property, and has made every effort to induce him to buy, and after such party has notified the broker that he will not purchase, the principal incurs no liability for commissions by subsequently selling to such purchaser upon terms less advantageous to himself without any suspicion of collusion between the principal and such purchaser, and without any intention to defraud. Bailey v. Smith, 103 Ala. 641.

And where all that the proposed purchaser did was to offer to buy if he could trade a lot for the property in question at a certain price in part payment, which was declined by the principal, and the parties then considered the negotiations at an end, and the failure was reported to the broker, who did not negotiate further, but later a deal was made between the parties themselves, the sale was not made through the efforts of the broker to procure a purchaser. Putnam v. How, 39 Minn. 363.

f. After withdrawal or termination of agency, etc.

After the expiration of the time mentioned in the contract and any extension thereof the principal has the right to sell either to a purchaser to whom his attention may have been called by the broker, if the sale is made in good faith, or to anyone else, as the contract has then spent its force. Fultz v. Wimer, 34 Kan. 576, 580; Coleman v. Meade, 13 Bush, 358; Charlton v. Wood, 11 Helsk. 19.

And the same rule holds in cases where the broker fails to find a purchaser within the time named in his contract, and the principal in good faith terminates the same and sells to the purchaser with whom the broker has been unsuccessfully negotiating, provided the sale is made by him in good faith. McKnight v. Thayer, 48 N. Y. S. R. 620, 622; Carroll v. Pettit, 67 Hun, 418.

So, if the broker fails to effect a sale within a reasonable time, and his agency is terminated in good faith by his principal, who afterwards consummates the sale, he will not be entitled to commissions on such sale, even though the broker may have originally introduced such purchaser, or may in some way have aided the sale; but this rule only applies to cases wherein the proposed purchaser fails to accept the terms named in the contract with the broker, and not to cases in which the purchaser is able, ready, and willing to carry out such terms. Gaty v. Foster, 18 Mo. App. 639, 644; Buehler v. Weiffenbach, 21 Misc. 80.

And if no specified time is mentioned for the continuation of the agency, and the same is revoked by the principal pending negotiations by the agent for a sale, the broker will be entitled to his compensation or commission if the sale is afterwards continued and consummated by the owner. Knox v. Parker, 2 Wash. 34, 37. To 44 L. R. A.

the same effect, Lapsley v. Holridge, 71 Ill. App. 662; Schuster v. Martin, 45 Ill. App. 481; McConaughy v. Mahannah, 28 Ill. App. 169.

If the broker's services inure to the benefit of the principal he cannot be deprived of his right to compensation by the withdrawal of the property from his hands by his principal and the consummation of the sale by other means. Gottschalk v. Jennings, 1 La. Adm. 5, 7, 45 Am. Dec. 70.

Where the broker employed to find a purchaser introduces a probable buyer to his principal, and advertises the property, and takes every means to sell the same, and he is subsequently notified by the principal that he does not desire to sell, and the principal withdraws the authority from the broker, and subsequently sells to the very person to whom the broker had introduced him, it is a fair inference that the object of the revocation is to deprive the broker of his commissions. Smith v. Anderson, 2 Idaho, 495.

But if there is an abandonment and withdrawal from the negotiations between the parties, and they act in good faith, a subsequent renewal of the negotiations upon the same or different terms does not entitle the broker to his commissions. Levy v. Coogan, 16 Daly, 137; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co. 83 N. Y. 378, 22 Am. Rep. 441; Briggs v. Rowe, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 189.

And if the principal notifies the broker that the sale must be made by a given date, and that thereafter the authority will be revoked, the broker cannot recover commissions on a sale made by the principal after that date. Neal v. Lehman, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 461, 462.

In Kelly v. Marshall, 172 Pa. 396, 399, the price of an oil-producing property was reduced several times, and upon the last reduction there was an understanding that if not sold by a given day it would be withdrawn and the agency ended, and finally the principal sold for a much less price to the party who had made the offer through the broker, but the court refused commissions. In this case the plaintiff was not a real-estate broker, and did not have the charge of the property, and his agency was not coupled with an interest or founded upon a consideration, but he had solicited the privilege of offering the property for sale, and it appeared that the salable value of the property was being injured by its repeated offers in a limited market, and was certain to be affected by the other enterprises in the locality.

In a case in which the agreement was to pay commissions upon condition that a sale was made upon the terms prescribed, and the principal revoked the agency after the broker had procured a party to inspect the property and had made every effort to induce such party to buy, and the party had notified the broker that he would not buy, but subsequently purchased from the principal upon terms much less favorable to the latter without any suspicion of collusion or intent to defraud, the broker's commissions were denied. Bailey v. Smith, 103 Ala. 641.

So, if the property is withdrawn from the market and the broker's retainer is canceled a subsequent bona fide sale made by the principal without any intent to defraud will not inure to the broker's advantage. Ames v. McNally, 6 Misc. 93, 94.

And if the negotiations of the sale conducted by the broker are broken off before any binding agreement is entered into between the principal and the purchaser, but a new contract is executed by them without any agency or intervention on the part of the broker, for a portion of the property, which contract varies in its terms essentially from that offered by the broker, he cannot recover commissions. Barnard v. Monnot, 34 Barb. 90, 93.

So, if the broker makes no effort to find a purchaser, or if he abandons his efforts, his conduct may be treated by his principal as an abandonment of the contract, and in that case he cannot recover commissions where the property is sold to another purchaser, even though it may be sold to a party to whom he had mentioned it,—especially where the principal had no notice of such fact. Singer & T. Stone Co. v. Hutchinson, 61 Ill. App. 308.

And if the purchase is brought about by other outside influence, after an abandonment of the business, the broker cannot recover. Carlson v. Nathan, 43 Ill. App. 364; Davis v. Gassette, 30 Ill. App. 41.

Where, while he was negotiating with a purchaser, at the principal's request the broker agreed to deliver up his written contract and to close the agency, upon condition that the principal would pay what he had agreed to do in case the sale was subsequently made to such purchaser, the broker recovered commission upon a sale subsequently made to such purchaser, as there was a sufficient consideration for the agreement to give up such contract, and to support the oral agreement made for the payment of commissions. Roush v. Loeffler, 3 Ohio Dec. 628, 629.

g. After broker has failed to secure purchaser or to close negotiations.

In cases wherein the broker has opened negotiations with a purchaser, but has failed to bring him to the specific terms fixed by his principal, and has then abandoned his efforts, the general rule is that the principal may sell to such purchaser at the price fixed by him, or at a less price, without incurring any liability to the broker, provided he acts in good faith, and the sale is the result of his independent negotiations. Clark v. Nessler, 50 Ill. App. 550, 551; Markus v. Kenneally, 19 Misc. 517; Wyllie v. Marine Nat. Bank, 61 N. Y. 416; Bouscher v. Larkins, 84 Hun, 288, 289; Hay v. Platt, 66 Hun, 488, 490; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co. 83 N. Y. 878, 22 Am. Rep. 441; White v. Twitchings, 26 Hun, 503.

The principal has a right to fix a net value on his property and the terms of the sale, and if the agent cannot effect a sale so that the owner may realize such net value, or upon the terms fixed, the owner has the power to dispose of the property at such price and on such terms. Cook v. Forst, 116 Ala. 395.

The fact that a sale or exchange of property is finally brought about by the efforts of the principal or another broker with a person with whom the first broker has previously negotiated without success will not furnish a legal basis for a claim for commissions by the first broker,—especially when such broker has for a long time ceased negotiations and abandoned all efforts. Davis v. Gassette, 30 Ill. App. 41, 45; Liye v. Ludewick, 14 Ill. App. 372; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co. 83 N. Y. 878, 22 Am. Rep. 441; Carlson v. Nathan, 43 Ill. App. 364; Singer & T. Stone Co. v. Hutchinson, 61 Ill. App. 308.

So, the mere fact that the broker has brought the parties together, when considered with the further fact that his full contract time has expired without results, will not debar the principal from disposing of the property himself, even to the parties found or originally introduced to him by the broker. Page v. Griffin, 71 Mo. App. 624.

And the broker cannot claim commissions upon 44 L. R. A.

on a subsequent sale made by his principal, even to the identical individual introduced by him if he cannot show that he brought the parties to an agreement. Baker v. Thomas, 12 Misc. 432, 438.

In such cases the principal violates no right of the broker in negotiating directly with the proposed customer after the broker has failed to bring such customer to the specified terms, and has abandoned his efforts in that direction: neither is he liable for commissions under such circumstances if his independent negotiations result in a sale, provided he acts in good faith. Hay v. Platt, 66 Hun, 488.

But the negotiations of the broker with the purchaser must be fairly terminated before the principal can resume them with the customer and not be liable to the broker. Woolley v. Loew, 50 Hun, 294, 295.

After negotiations have been broken off with a customer introduced by the broker, or if such customer has ceased to consider the question of purchase, he does not hold the position of a customer introduced by the broker so as to entitle the broker to recover commissions on a subsequent sale made without fraud or collusion. Tinsley v. Scott, 69 Ill. App. 352.

And if the services of the broker, whatever they may be, have failed to accomplish a sale, and some time after the proposed purchaser has decided not to buy he is induced by others to reconsider his decision, and then makes a purchase as a consequence of such second or supervening influence, the broker has no right to commissions, although it may be true that the purchase was in consequence of the broker's advertisement, and had it not been for that, the purchaser might never have looked at the property or entertained a thought of buying it. Earp v. Cummins, 54 Pa. 394, 93 Am. Dec. 718, 719.

Again, if the principal knows that the purchaser wishes to purchase without the broker's procuring him as a purchaser, and the principal derives the knowledge from nothing that the broker has done in his employment, and he sells to such purchaser as an original customer or buyer, the broker cannot recover. Doonan v. Ives, 73 Ga. 295, 301.

And the rule is the same in cases in which the broker has had a reasonable opportunity to find a purchaser at the price mentioned by the principal, and has failed to do so. Feldman v. O'Brien, 23 Misc. 341, 344.

If by the contract between the principal and the broker no time is specified in which the broker is authorized to sell, all that he is entitled to is a reasonable opportunity to find a purchaser at the price, and if he has failed to do so, and proved unable to sell even for a smaller sum mentioned by his principal during the period specified for that purpose, his principal is at liberty to sell for even less than any sums given to the broker without becoming liable for commissions. Satterthwaite v. Vreeland, 3 Hun, 152.

So, if a broker so employed fails to find a purchaser he cannot recover commissions where the principal, in order to bring about a sale, negotiates with his adjoining owner, and effects a sale at less. Buhl v. Noe, 51 Ill. App. 622.

Yet the fact that a sale is finally made by the owner directly to the purchaser is not alone effectual to defeat the broker's right to commissions. Atwater v. Wilson, 13 Misc. 117, 119. Affirming 10 Misc. 777; Lloyd v. Matthews, 51 N. Y. 124; Martin v. Stillman, 53 N. Y. 615; Hanford v. Shapter, 4 Daly, 243.

And if the broker has rendered any efficient service in bringing about the sale of the property afterwards made by the owner himself, or by any other agent or broker of his employed by him for the sale of it he is entitled, not to the commissions upon such sale as agent in the sale of it, but to such just and reasonable compensation for his services as the jury may consider them worth according to the evidence. Hawkins v. Chandler, 8 Houst. (Del.) 484.

But the broker was not entitled to recover where he agreed to consummate an exchange by a given date and failed, and afterwards, as a separate undertaking, the principal and the purchaser themselves made the exchange. Page v. Griffin, 71 Mo. App. 524, 529.

In a case in which the purchaser's agent saw a broker's advertisement and had an interview with him, but did not disclose the purchaser, and the interview was not communicated to the owner, and another agent of the purchaser, after learning from other sources who was the owner, negotiated with him direct, and bought the property, the broker was not allowed commissions. Slevens v. Griffin, 14 Ill. App. 63, 66.

So, where the purchaser was introduced to the principal by an agent, who was unable to effect a sale or even to procure an offer, and the principal subsequently sold the property to such purchaser at the lower of two rates at which the broker was authorized to sell, clear of commissions, the broker's claim for commissions was disallowed. Babcock v. Merritt, 1 Colo. App. 84.

And the principal violated no rights in selling to the person with whom the broker had been negotiating, where the broker made unsuccessful efforts to sell at his principal's price, and finally regarded the consummation of the contract as hopeless, and practically abandoned it. Wylie v. Marine Nat. Bank, 61 N. Y. 415.

Where a broker told his principal that he thought he had a certain company as a customer and the recollection of this may have induced the principal two years later to tell the officers of such company that if they wanted the property they must speak or it would be sold, the broker had no right to commissions on a sale then made. Hay v. Platt, 66 Hun, 488, 490.

So, in Meyer v. Strauss, 58 N. Y. Supp. 904, where the purchaser declined the broker's offer, and bought from the principal two years later.

And the broker's claim was refused where, after negotiations were ended, the party found by him made a conveyance of his property to his brother, who made an exchange with the principal upon different terms in which the broker took no part, especially when there was nothing to show that the conveyance to the broker was made to defraud the broker of commissions. Hamm v. Weber, 19 Misc. 485.

So, the broker failed to recover where his negotiations for a sale at a given sum did not bring about a sale, and the property was burnt down, and afterwards sold by the principal to the same purchaser at a much reduced price. Cox v. Bowling, 54 Mo. App. 289.

Where the broker found a purchaser who offered an increased price with immediate possession, which the principal as well as the broker refused, and subsequently the principal moved away and the negotiations ceased, the court refused his claim for commissions upon a sale some half a year later to the proposed purchaser, who met the principal when inspecting other property and renewed negotiations at a greater sum than previously offered, on account of improvements, as the principal was justified in looking upon his negotiations as abandoned, and in making the sale either to such purchaser or to any other, as no specified time was mentioned in the contract, and it was revocable at 44 L. R. A.

any time before it was acted upon. Lipe v. Ludewick, 14 Ill. App. 372, 375.

h. Within time limited by contract.

If, by the terms of the contract between the principal and the broker, the latter is given a specific time within which he is to effect a sale, the principal will still be liable for his commissions if he himself sells the property within the time named in such contract, as he cannot by his action prevent the performance of the contract by the broker, and escape liability for commissions.

So, where he has found a purchaser ready and willing to accept the principal's terms within the time specified he has performed his contract, and the principal's sale within the time cannot affect him. Schultz v. Griffin, 5 Misc. 499, 500.

And if the broker is given the contract and sole agency to sell for a stated period, the principal cannot sell during such period to a purchaser not found by the broker. Levy v. Rothe, 17 Misc. 402.

Under a contract which is construed as giving the broker the exclusive right to sell between certain dates, and as entitling him to commission on any sale made between those dates, by his efforts to find a purchaser, the broker performs his part of the contract whether he is instrumental in procuring a person to purchase or not, and if a sale is made by the principal within the time mentioned the broker is entitled to his commissions thereon. Metcalf v. Kent, 104 Iowa, 487.

And the broker was entitled to an immediate right of action under a similar contract upon a sale by the principal to a purchaser through another broker within the time specified. Dobinson v. McDonald, 92 Cal. 33, 37.

So, he recovered his commissions upon a sale made by his principal to a third person within the time granted by the principal to the purchaser introduced by the broker to decide upon the terms made by him. Reed v. Reed, 82 Pa. 420.

And under a contract by which he was to be paid commissions if the principal withdrew the property from sale or sold the same in any way during the time specified, the broker recovered his commission where the principal effected an exchange of such property within the time. Crane v. McCormick, 92 Cal. 178.

In this case the court stated that the principal could not escape liability by showing that the time clause was left in the contract by mistake, and that it was his intention to erase the same therefrom, in the absence of proof that the broker knew of such intention, or that there was a mutual mistake, as no relation of trust and confidence existed, as a mere intention not communicated cannot control the plain provisions of a contract.

A similar question arose in the case of Shainwald v. Cady, 92 Cal. 83, wherein the broker's contract called for a percentage upon a sale made by the principal within the time, and the principal contracted a sale within the time, and let the purchaser, who paid part of the purchase money, into possession with a right to sell any portion of the premises, even though the purchaser surrendered his contract.

And the broker recovered under an agreement giving him the exclusive right to sell for one year at not less than a given amount, any amount realized over and above such amount to be received by him as his compensation, where he found a purchaser able and willing to pay the amount and a large sum in excess thereof, but the same had been previously sold by the defendant. Van Gorder v. Sherman, 81 Iowa, 403.

And the fact that the principal makes a sale within the time limited by the contract with the broker cannot diminish the extent of the broker's claim for damages; and in such a case the proper measure of damages will be the profit, if any, which the evidence shows would have resulted to the broker had he been allowed to complete the contract and the land had been sold by him under it. Green v. Cole, 127 Mo. 587.

And the owner of real estate who, before the end of the broker's term, exchanges the property for another receiving a cash sum to boot must pay the broker the usual commissions, although it does not appear that the latter has done anything to promote the sale, and the terms of the contract would have expired in a few days, and under such circumstances the commission is computed, not upon the sum paid to boot, but upon the total value. Carle v. Parent, Mont. L. Rep. 5 Q. B. 451.

And the principal's liability was upheld where he agreed to pay the broker a given sum if he could within a reasonable time find a purchaser, and the broker accepted the proposition and advertised the property for sale and induced persons to purchase at the price and upon the terms named within a reasonable time, but the principal himself sold the property to another purchaser. Lane v. Albright, 49 Ind. 275, 279.

And where the broker has an option and sole agency for a stated period the principal can only sell to purchasers found by the broker during such period, and he becomes liable to the broker upon a sale made by himself if during such time he finds a purchaser able, ready, and willing to buy upon the principal's terms. Levy v. Rothe, 17 Misc. 402.

And where the principal gave the person, who verbally agreed to purchase at a given price, a written memorandum to sell the property for the price named, and to give him a certain time to complete the search, and the purchaser tendered a performance within the time and in accordance with the terms fixed, when the principal informed him that the land had been sold, the broker recovered his commissions. Phelan v. Gardner, 43 Cal. 306, 311.

But, although a broker has the exclusive right to sell for a certain period, during which the principal himself effects a sale, he cannot recover his commissions unless he has produced a purchaser ready and willing to buy. Waterman v. Boltinghouse, 82 Cal. 659; Moses v. Bierling, 31 N. Y. 462.

And where the broker finds a purchaser, who is not then ready to buy, and the principal notifies him that the sale must be effected by a certain date, or the authority will be revoked, he is not entitled to his commissions on a sale made by his principal after that date, even to the same purchaser, when the limitation of time is reasonable and bona fide. Neal v. Lehman, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 461, 462.

His commissions were also refused in the absence of fraud or fault on his principal's part. In Fultz v. Wimer, 34 Kan. 576, where, if the property was sold within the time named, either by the broker or by his principal or by others, he was to receive a certain commission, but to receive nothing unless within the time specified a purchaser was produced ready and willing to take the property and pay the money, and a purchaser was introduced to whom the principal granted one extension of time, but nothing further, although after the time had expired the contract with another purchaser was drawn up and signed for which the principal paid the broker at the time.

Upon the question of time in general, see note to Lunney v. Healey (Neb.) — L. R. A., 44 L. R. A.

The question of the principal's interference with the broker in his performance of his contract will be found discussed in note to Brackenridge v. Claridge (Tex.) 43 L. R. A. 593.

1. When broker has option or sole agency.

If the principal employs a broker upon the understanding that his agency shall be exclusive, the principal will be liable for breach of contract if he negotiates or avails himself of the aid of another for the purposes of the agency. Levy v. Rothe, 17 Misc. 402; Moses v. Bierling, 31 N. Y. 462.

And in such a case the broker is entitled to reasonable compensation for the services he has rendered as agent,—especially where there is no evidence showing that his right to compensation was made dependent upon a sale of the property. Harrell v. Zimbleman, 66 Tex. 292, 294.

The principal is liable under an agreement giving the broker the sole and exclusive control, management, and charge of the sale and disposition of the premises upon a sale to a purchaser introduced by the broker, made under negotiations assumed by the principal, and in such a case the court commits no error in refusing an instruction that the broker could not recover unless the jury were satisfied from the evidence that the principal gave him the exclusive right to sell the property, and in submitting to them the question whether the broker was the procuring cause of the sale. Wyckoff v. Taylor, 13 Daly, 564.

Yet, an agreement to give a broker "the exclusive agency for thirty days from and after that date for the sale" of real estate on specified terms at a certain commission if a sale is made does not give the broker the exclusive right to sell, but it merely prohibits the placing of the property for sale in the hands of another agent; and therefore where the broker, after commencing the expenditure of time and labor in finding a purchaser, is informed that the principal himself has sold the property, and is requested to take it off the list, which he does, and ceases his efforts to find a purchaser, and the principal has not in fact made a sale of the property, but has made a verbal agreement of sale for which the proposed purchaser has paid some earnest, but the purchase is never completed, the broker is not entitled to commission upon such sale. Dole v. Sherwood, 41 Minn. 535, 5 L. R. A. 720.

But an agreement by the owner of real estate to sell at a certain price, and take part payment in money and the balance in other real estate at a certain valuation, together with his conveyance of the premises, is a sale within the meaning of a contract under which he agrees to forfeit a certain sum if he should sell the land himself. Goward v. Waters, 98 Mass. 596.

See also Levy v. Rothe, 17 Misc. 402. III. h. supra.

1. Effect of modification of terms.

The weight of authority supports the rule that if the broker is employed to find or procure a purchaser, and he secures one who is able, ready, and willing to purchase upon the terms named by the principal, and who is accepted by the principal, he has, in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, performed his contract, even though the terms and conditions of sale as given by the principal to the broker are modified or varied by the principal in his negotiations with such purchaser,—especially when such negotiations continue without interruption.

The following authorities fully support this rule upon the ground that the broker is in such a case really the moving cause of the sale, as he has brought the parties together and thereby procured a purchaser and performed his contract which was contingent upon his success. Schlegel v. Allerton, 65 Conn. 260; Knowles v. Harvey, 10 Colo. App. 9; Bryan v. Abert, 3 App. D. C. 180, 186; Doonan v. Ives, 78 Ga. 295, 301; McConaughy v. Mahannah, 28 Ill. App. 169, 173; Lawrence v. Atwood, 1 Ill. App. 217, 223; Rees v. Spruance, 45 Ill. 308, 310; Mears v. Stone, 44 Ill. App. 444, 447; Clark v. Nessler, 50 Ill. App. 550, 551; Lapsley v. Holridge, 71 Ill. App. 652; Hafner v. Herron, 165 Ill. 242, Affirming 60 Ill. App. 592; Adams v. Decker, 34 Ill. App. 17, 20; Lane v. Albright, 49 Ind. 275, 279; Clifford v. Meyer, 6 Ind. App. 633; Corbel v. Beard, 92 Iowa, 360; Coleman v. Meade, 13 Bush, 358, 363; Haug v. Haugan, 51 Minn. 558; Wright v. Brown, 68 Mo. App. 577; Stinde v. Blesch, 42 Mo. App. 578, 581; Bell v. Kaiser, 50 Mo. 150; Tyler v. Parr, 52 Mo. 249; Timberman v. Craddock, 70 Mo. 638; Goffe v. Gibson, 18 Mo. App. 1; Gaty v. Foster, 18 Mo. App. 639; Blackwell v. Adams, 28 Mo. App. 61; Jones v. Berry, 37 Mo. App. 125; Wetzell v. Wagoner, 41 Mo. App. 509, 516; Millan v. Porter, 31 Mo. App. 563; Henderson v. Mace, 64 Mo. App. 393, 396; Beauchamp v. Higgins, 20 Mo. App. 514, 517; Nicholas v. Jones, 23 Neb. 813, 816; Potvin v. Curran, 13 Neb. 392, 395; Atwater v. Wilson, 13 Misc. 117, 119, Affirming 63 N. Y. S. R. 868; Chilton v. Butler, 1 E. D. Smith, 150, 151; Gold v. Serrell, 6 Misc. 126; Levy v. Coogan, 16 Daly, 137; Baker v. Thomas, 12 Misc. 432, 433, Reversing 11 Misc. 112; Jones v. Henry, 15 Misc. 151, 152; McKnight v. Thayer, 48 N. Y. S. R. 620; Morgan v. Mason, 4 E. D. Smith, 636, 638; Ames v. McNally, 6 Misc. 93, 94; Lloyd v. Matthews, 51 N. Y. 124; Sussdorff v. Schmidt, 55 N. Y. 319; Hartley v. Anderson, 150 Pa. 391; Keys v. Johnson, 68 Pa. 42; Stringfellow v. Powers, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 199; Byrd v. Frost (Tex. Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 46; Graves v. Bains, 78 Tex. 92, 95; Reynolds v. Tompkins, 23 W. Va. 229, 235; Stewart v. Mater, 32 Wis. 344; Mansell v. Clements, L. R. 9 C. P. 139, 8 Moak, Eng. Rep. 449.

In the case of Adams v. Decker, 34 Ill. App. 17, the above rule is thus expressed: "When the purchaser is brought or sent to him by the agent, he may or may not, as he likes, insist on the terms he gave his agent, and may refuse to sell on any other terms, and if he does so refuse then the agent can claim no commission; but if the seller waives the terms proposed through the agent, and accepts the purchaser under different terms, prices, or conditions, then he is liable for the commission to his agent."

Almost the same language is used by the court in the case of Levy v. Coogan, 16 Daly, 137, in which the court stated that if the principal accepted the purchaser upon different terms than those given to the broker he ratified the broker's departure from his instructions. Glider v. Davis, 137 N. Y. 504, 20 L. R. A. 398, to the same effect.

And in Hamm v. Weber, 10 Misc. 485, the court intimated that if the broker had unceasingly continued his negotiations down to the time the exchange was actually effected, and had made it appear that the consummation of the sale was the result of his agency, the mere fact that the original terms were modified by the contracting parties would not impair the broker's right to commissions, and in support of such contention cited the cases of Levy v. Coogan, 16 Daly, 137, and Glider v. Davis, 137 N. Y. 504, 20 L. R. A. 398.

The rule as above expressed has full support in the principle expressed in some cases, to the 44 L. R. A.

effect that the principal cannot have the benefit of the broker's services and then seek to avoid his liability for commissions. Wilson v. Sturgis, 71 Cal. 226, 229; Phelan v. Gardner, 43 Cal. 306; Blood v. Shannon, 29 Cal. 343; Plant v. Thompson, 42 Kan. 664.

It is not essential to entitle the broker to his commissions that he should have procured a purchaser upon the precise terms named by the principal at the time of the employment, where the principal chooses to alter such terms in his contract with the purchaser. Jones v. Henry, 15 Misc. 151, 152.

The principal will not escape all liability for commissions because he has sold the land for a less sum than the price given to the broker, where the deduction is made of his own accord. Plant v. Thompson, 42 Kan. 664.

In such a case there is no equitable ground in support of the claim that the broker has not been the procuring cause of the sale. Levy v. Coogan, 16 Daly, 137.

The fact that the principal let off one purchaser, and sold to another on different terms has been held not to defeat the broker's claim. Leviston v. Landraux, 6 La. Ann. 26.

In a case wherein the purchaser, who was negotiating with the broker at the latter's instance, viewed the property and concluded a sale with the principal at a less price, and in which the evidence did not show that the purchaser was procured through any other source, the broker's commissions were allowed. Byrd v. Frost (Tex. Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 46.

And the broker will be entitled to compensation for his services, although it might be less than the full commission he would be entitled to if he sold at the price demanded by the owner, as the broker has rendered a service in finding a purchaser accepted by the owner, and must therefore receive a reasonable compensation unless precluded by the terms of the contract of employment. Rees v. Spruance, 45 Ill. 308, 310.

And if, under an agreement between the principal and the agent, which does not prescribe how and when the consideration is to be paid, the broker produces an acceptable purchaser, it belongs to the principal and the purchaser to arrange the terms and manner in which the consideration is to be paid, and it is none the less a sale and purchase because other real estate forms part of the consideration. Dreisback v. Rollins, 39 Kan. 268.

The mere fact that the principal effects a sale at a larger sum than that given to the broker, whereby the purchaser procures a larger amount upon mortgage, does not affect the broker's right to commissions where the sale is procured by him. Shipman v. Frech, 1 N. Y. Supp. 67, 68.

And if the sale as made is more favorable to the principal, he cannot resist the broker's claim for commissions and restrict him to a recovery upon a quantum meruit. McFarland v. Lillard, 2 Ind. App. 160.

In a case where the negotiations continue without interruption, and the broker is actively instrumental in causing the principal and the purchaser to arrive at the price which they both eventually agree upon, the mere fact that the price for which the sale is made deviates from that which the broker was originally instructed to secure is not sufficient to establish a non-performance by the broker of his contract of employment. Gold v. Serrell, 6 Misc. 124, 126; Levy v. Coogan, 16 Daly, 137.

And in a case where the purchaser introduced by the broker hesitated to buy upon the original terms named by the principal, but subsequently negotiated a sale with the principal upon via tually the same terms, the broker's claim was allowed upon the ground that the sale was the fruit of his labor. Ames v. McNally, 6 Misc. 93, 94.

Again, the broker's claim was allowed in a case where the principal accepted substantially the same offer upon terms more favorable to the purchaser, even though the sale was finally consummated by another broker. Wood v. Wells, 103 Mich. 320.

And where the broker showed the principal's property to the purchaser, introduced him to the principal, and by his direction offered the purchaser the property at a price named, and subsequently the principal met the purchaser and modified the proposition which he had made through the broker so as to make it acceptable to the purchaser, the broker was held entitled to recover. Wetzell v. Wagoner, 41 Mo. App. 509, 516.

The mere fact of a misunderstanding between the broker and the purchaser as to the amount of the latter's offer for the property, which offer the broker reported to his principal as larger than really made, is immaterial where the minds of the principal and the purchaser meet in the agreement for the sale of the land for the less sum as a result of the negotiations entered into by the broker on behalf of the principal. Peckham v. Ashhurst, 18 R. I. 376.

And the mere fact that the principal sees fit to make a sale upon a certain credit with no security for the price except a certain sum paid down when the contract is signed will not excuse him from liability where the sale is effected within the meaning of a contract whereby the broker is to have commissions when he effects a sale, when the terms of the sale are apparently satisfactory and are accepted by the principal. Ward v. Cobb, 148 Mass. 518.

So, the broker is entitled to recover for finding a purchaser, although the party he finds objects to the price, and the principal refuses to reduce it, if the principal does not terminate the agency, but afterwards himself negotiates with the purchaser for a smaller sum, stating that "as long as he was doing the business himself he would not have to pay any commissions,"—especially when the principal promises to pay, and offers a sum to the broker after the sale is made. Dalley v. Young, 37 N. Y. S. R. 903.

In Blester v. Evans, 59 Ill. App. 181, the broker recovered reasonable compensation under an agreement to give the agent all he could get above a certain price, where the principal refused to take an increased price or to negotiate a sale with a purchaser sent by the broker upon the ground that he was not satisfactory, but later sold to him for a much less sum and concealed the fact, and the broker found a purchaser at an increased price before he was informed of the first sale.

So, the broker was allowed commissions in a case where a special contract gave him an exclusive right to sell for a certain period, and all he could receive over a given amount by way of commissions, where the principal deprived him of his rights by making a sale at a lower price, and the broker was entitled to recover any amount over and above the price that was to be netted to the principal, which he proved he could have sold the land for but for the breach of such contract. Stringfellow v. Powers, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 190.

In Hoefling v. Hambleton, 84 Tex. 517, the broker recovered his commissions upon a sale made by the principal to a purchaser really procured by the broker, although made at a reduced price on account of a mistake in the quantity of land.

If, however, the principal should sell at a less price than that mentioned by the broker, to a party who purchases direct from the principal although sent to him by an intending purchaser with whom the broker has failed to make a sale, the broker cannot recover, especially where his evidence does not show what the lower price was or the time at which it was made by the principal. Warren v. Cram, 71 Mo. App. 638.

In Childs v. Ptomey, 17 Mont. 502, 509, a nonsuit was ordered as the broker set forth a special contract to find a purchaser at a specific price and at fixed commissions, but proved a sale negotiated by the principal to a purchaser introduced to him at a less price, as it was not shown that such purchaser was a party ready and willing to purchase at the original price, and as it did not appear that the failure to do so was excusable by reason of a fault on the principal's part.

And where the broker is to have a certain sum if he produces a purchaser for the property at a specified price, he must produce one who is able and willing to pay such price before he is entitled to his commissions, and the principal's stipulation as to price is not waived by the fact that he sells the property himself for a less price, even to a person produced by the broker in the absence of knowledge on his part that such purchaser is willing to pay the price at which he has given the property to the broker for sale. McArthur v. Slauson, 53 Wis. 41, 43.

This case is distinguishable from that of Stewart v. Mather, 32 Wis. 344, 347, et supra, in that the latter case was an action upon a quantum meruit, and the principal was to give a certain percentage as commission upon any sale which might be made, and reserved the right to fix the price, and the broker found a purchaser. The court stated that where the price or other terms of the sale are fixed by the seller, in accordance with which the broker undertakes to find a purchaser, yet if, upon procurement of the broker, a purchaser comes with whom the seller negotiates, and thereupon voluntarily reduces the price of the thing to be sold, or the quantity, or otherwise changes the terms of sale as proposed by the broker, so that a sale is consummated, or terms or conditions offered which the party proposing to buy is ready and agrees to accept, then, and in either of these cases, the broker will be entitled to his commissions at the rate specified in his agreement with his principal.

In the case of McArthur v. Slauson, 53 Wis. 41, 43, the principal claimed a special contract by which the broker undertook to furnish a purchaser willing and ready to purchase for the full amount specified, for which he was to receive a certain sum as commission, and therefore in that case, and under such a contract, it was incumbent upon the broker to produce such a purchaser before he was entitled to the stipulated commissions.

So, the broker's commissions were denied upon a sale made by the principal at a reduced rate in good faith and without any intention to defraud, to one who had negotiated with the broker where the original price was reduced to a given sum by a written option for ten days, and later the option was revived and extended in writing for a period of thirty days, and these were the only changes shown to have been made in the agreement between the principal and the agent, and no sale was agreed upon, and no purchaser was procured who was willing to purchase at either of those prices, and the broker had no authority at any time to contract for the sale at a less price, and his right to sell at even the lesser price given to him was extinguished by the expiration of the thirty days for which the option was extended. Satterthwaite v. Vreeland, 3 Hun, 152.

E. W.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

LITTLE ROCK & FORT SMITH RAILWAY et al., Appts.,
v.

OPPENHEIMER & COMPANY.

(64 Ark. 271.)

1. Discrimination between localities in facilities for transportation, such as a better supply of cars at a terminus of the road than at some other point on the road, when there are not cars enough to supply all, does not make the railroad company liable to an action for a penalty under act March 24, 1887, providing that "all individuals, associations, and corporations shall have equal rights to have persons and property transported, . . . and no unjust or undue discrimination shall be made . . . in facilities for transportation," and that "no discrimination in . . . facilities for transportation shall be made between transportation companies and individuals, or . . . any preferences in furnishing cars." The act does not apply to discrimination in facilities at different localities.

On rehearing.

2. A statutory penalty will not be imposed except when the case is brought within the strict letter of the law.

(Wood and Hughes, JJ., dissent.)

(October 2, 1897.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Conway County in favor of plaintiffs in a suit brought to recover the statutory penalty for discriminating between shippers in the transportation of cotton. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. Dodge & Johnson, for appellants:

No "unjust or undue discrimination" of any character was shown to have been committed by defendants against plaintiffs.

All there is in this case is the result of a slight delay in the movement of plaintiffs' cotton, not after shipment, but before shipment and before any contractual relation existed between plaintiffs and defendants, and there is no proof in this record to show "any unjust or undue" discrimination as against plaintiffs or as against the stations from which they shipped.

Queen v. Railway Comrs. L. R. 22 Q. B. Div. 642.

All discriminations are not undue, that is, unreasonable; nor are they unjust, that is, illegal or improper.

Houston & T. O. R. Co. v. Rust, 58 Tex. 98; Ragan v. Aiken, 9 Lea, 609, 42 Am. Rep. 684.

A delay is not a discrimination. Neither is it necessarily undue, unreasonable, or unjust.

Wibert v. New York & E. R. Co. 12 N. Y. 245; Parsons v. Hardy, 14 Wend. 215, 28 Am. Dec. 521; Ballentine v. North Missouri R. Co. 40 Mo. 491, 93 Am. Dec. 315; Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. Ragsdale, 46 Miss. 408; Beckwith v. Frisbie, 32 Vt. 559; Conger v. Hudson River R. Co. 6 Duer, 376; Livingston v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 5 Hun, 562; Taylor v. Great Northern R. Co. L. R. 1 C. P. 385; Crosby v. Fitch, 12 Conn. 410, 31 Am. Dec. 745; Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. §§ 114, 115; Peet v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 20 Wis. 595, 91 Am. Dec. 446; Lovett v. Hobbs, 2 Show. 127; Riley v. Horne, 5 Bing. 217; Dawson v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 79 Mo. 296; Faulkner v. South Pacific R. Co. 51 Mo. 311; Hellipwell v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 10 Biss. 170; Geismer v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 102 N. Y. 570, 55 Am. Rep. 837; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Smith, 63 Tex. 322.

The statute of this state in nowise varies the common law, but simply is a crystallization of it into a statutory enactment.

Johnson v. Pensacola & P. R. Co. 16 Fla. 623, 26 Am. Rep. 737; Root v. Long Island R. Co. 114 N. Y. 300, 4 L. R. A. 331, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 576; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Denver & N. O. R. Co. 110 U. S. 667, 28 L. ed. 291.

A penal statute cannot be extended by implication or construction.

Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 350; Hall v. State, 20 Ohio, 8; Foster v. Rhoads, 19 Johns. 191; State v. Graham, 38 Ark. 521.

All penal laws which impose, by way of punishment, any pecuniary mulct or damage beyond compensation for the benefit of the injured party, or recoverable by the informer, or which, for like purpose, impose any special burden, or take away or impair any privilege or right, are to be classed as penal statutes, and must be strictly construed.

Allen v. Stevens, 29 N. J. L. 509; Cole v. Groves, 134 Mass. 471; Camden & A. R. & Transp. Co. v. Briggs, 22 N. J. L. 623; Read v. Stewart, 129 Mass. 407; Breitung v. Lindauer, 37 Mich. 217; Cumberland & O. Canal Corp. v. Hitchings, 57 Me. 146; Bayard v. Smith, 17 Wend. 88; Henderson v. Sherborne, 2 Mees. & W. 236; Titusville's Appeal, 108 Pa. 600; Reed v. Davis, 8 Pick. 514; Ordway v. Central Nat. Bank, 47 Md. 217, 28 Am. Rep. 455; Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 470; Stevens v. Jacocke, 11 Q. B. 731; Sedgw. Stat. & Const. L. p. 76; Barden v. Crocker, 10 Pick. 383.

Messrs. A. S. McKennon, R. J. White, and Carmichael & Seawell for appellees.

Battle, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was instituted under an act

NOTE.—The Arkansas statute construed in the above case differs materially, as will be readily seen, from the Act of Congress to Regulate Commerce, under which undue discrimination between localities is prohibited, as to which see Texas & P. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce 44 L. R. A.

Commission, 162 U. S. 197, 40 L. ed. 940, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 405.

For another recent state statute regulating carrier's rates, see Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Com. (Ky.) 43 L. R. A. 541.

entitled "An Act to Prevent Unjust Discrimination, . . . and to Prevent Discrimination between Transportation Companies and Individuals in Furnishing Cars or Motive Power," and approved March 24, 1887, for the purpose of collecting a penalty. The plaintiffs recovered a verdict, and a judgment thereon, against the defendants for the sum of $1,500.

The basis of the action was the failure of appellants to furnish the same facilities for transporting cotton from Altus (the shipping station for Roseville) as were furnished at Van Buren. This, it was insisted, was an undue and unjust discrimination in favor of the shippers at Van Buren against the appellees. The important facts are undisputed, and are substantially as follows: The cotton crop of 1891 was unusually large. In Arkansas it exceeded anticipation, and was 100,000 bales larger than the preceding crop. The weather favoring, it was rapidly gathered and hurried to the railroads for transportation to market. The railroad companies were not prepared to ship it at many stations as rapidly as it was offered for shipment. At these stations it soon filled their platforms, after which they refused to receive more until room for it was made by the shipment of that already received. At Roseville, where the appellants had established a receiving station for freight to be shipped at Altus over their road, the platforms were covered with it, and appellants were unable to ship it for many days, because they did not have cars sufficient to meet the demands for transportation upon their road.

During the months of October, November, and December of that year (1891) appellees hauled to Roseville several hundred bales of cotton, to be shipped at Altus over appellants' road and tendered them to their agent, and he refused to receive them, giving as his reason for so doing that the station platform at Altus was filled, and he had no room to store or care for it. This cotton lay at Roseville several days awaiting transportation. At Van Buren, a town on appellants' road, however, cotton was promptly shipped. The facilities there for shipping were greater than at any other place on the road, except at Little Rock. This was owing to the fact that there are several roads running to that town called the Kansas & Arkansas Valley Railway, the St. Louis & San Francisco, the Greenwood Branch of the St. Louis, Iron Mountain, & Southern Railway, and appellants' railway, the two roads first mentioned competing with the last, and to the fact that appellants proportionately furnished more cars at that place than at others.

The reason more cars were used at Van Buren, in proportion to freight shipped, than were furnished by appellants to other stations or depots, was, it is at one of the termini of their road; and another was, there were wholesale merchants at Van Buren, who shipped goods there by the car load, and thereby caused many cars to be unloaded at that town. Being a terminal point, many empty cars necessarily accumulated there.

44 L. R. A.

In such cases it was the duty and custom of the agent at the terminals to use as many of the cars as were needed there, and to report the remainder to the transportation department for distribution.

The statute upon which this action is based (act March 24, 1887) is as follows:

"Sec. 1. All individuals, associations, and corporations shall have equal rights to have persons and property transported over railroads in this state, and no unjust or undue discrimination shall be made in charges for, or in facilities for, transportation of freight or passengers within the state," etc.

"Sec. 4. No discrimination in charges or facilities for transportation shall be made between transportation companies and individuals, or in favor of either, by abatement, drawback, or otherwise, and no railroad, or any lessee, manager, or employee thereof shall make any preferences in furnishing cars or motive power," etc.

"Sec. 12. That any railroad corporation that shall violate the 1st, 4th, . . . sections of this act, . . . shall forfeit and pay for every such offense any sum not less than $50 nor exceeding $1,000 and costs of suit, to be recovered by civil action by the party aggrieved, in any court having jurisdiction thereof," etc.

The only parties this act declares shall have equal rights to have persons and property transported over railroads in this state are individuals, associations, and corporations. Having declared that they are entitled to these rights, it further declares that "no unjust or undue discrimination shall be made in charges for, or in facilities for, transportation of freight or passengers." Against whom is this discrimination prohibited? Manifestly, those the act declares are entitled to equal rights. If it meant that it shall not be made against any party without regard to those named, the first clause would be entirely superfluous. Having declared who are entitled to equal rights, it follows that the refusal to them of the same rights allowed to others would be a discrimination. Hence the act forbids unjust or undue discrimination against them in the transportation of persons or property, and imposes a penalty upon any railroad company who shall be guilty of the forbidden act.

Appellees sued for the penalty on account of a discrimination against them as an association,—as a partnership. Are they entitled to it?

The act makes no changes in the common law as to the rights of the parties named therein to equal facilities for shipping, or as to unjust discrimination. At common law it was the duty of the common carrier to receive and carry all goods offered for transportation upon receiving a reasonable hire, and every one had equal rights to transportation by them. Yet under this rule different facilities, furnished under circumstances essentially different, did not constitute an unjust or undue discrimination, when the difference was in accordance with the difference in circumstances, and the difference was not intended to injure another shipper, or give, or did not tend to give, the favored shipper material advantages over him in their competition in business. The observance of this rule accomplished the design and object of the law in prohibiting discrimination, which was to prevent common carriers from favoring one shipper to the injury of another in the same business, from suppressing or diminishing competition, and from creating monopolies. Hays v. Pennsylvania Co. 12 Fed. Rep. 309; Samuels v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 31 Fed. Rep. 57, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 420; Messenger v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 36 N. J. L. 410, 13 Am. Rep. 457; Phipps v. London & N. W. R. Co. [1892] 2 Q. B. 229, 50 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 497; Hutchinson, Carr. § 302; 1 Wood, Railroads, §§ 197, 198; 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1676.

Was there any unjust or undue discrimination by appellants against appellees? Superior facilities for shipping were furnished at Van Buren. If this was a discrimination, it was not against any particular individual or association, nor against the shippers at any particular station, but against the shippers collectively at every station on the railroad, except at Van Buren; that is to say, in favor of one locality against all others. They furnished the same shipping facilities to all persons, associations, and corporations at Van Buren which they refused to all parties at other stations. Hence there was no discrimination against individuals or associations, they being treated alike under the same circumstances.

There was no intention to injure appellees by discrimination. The facilities furnished at Van Buren in the months of October, November, and December of 1891 were no greater than those furnished in previous years. The evidence does not show that a sufficient number of cars were not furnished at all the stations on the road prior to the fall and winter of 1891. Previous to that time Van Buren had enjoyed the same facilities as it did then, by reason of its being one of the terminals of the railroad, and the same distribution of cars was made. The complaint of unjust discrimination grew out of the unusually large cotton crop of 1891. Sufficient transportation was not furnished then, because appellants had not anticipated it.

In the months of October, November, and December of 1891 appellees were merchandising at Paris, in Logan county, and were not injured by reason of advantages gained, through superior facilities for shipping, by those engaged in the same business. If they suffered, their competitors suffered in like manner. All were treated alike, and suffered in the same manner.

It follows there was no unjust or undue discrimination against appellees, and that they are not entitled to a penalty.

Judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed, and final judgment is rendered here in favor of appellants.

Bunn and Biddick, JJ., concur.

44 L. R. A.

Wood, J., dissenting:

Necessarily, under the construction given the act by the court, there could be no discrimination between individuals at different stations. So long as all the individuals at any given station are treated alike, there can be no discrimination between these and the individuals at some other station, although at the one station all facilities desired or required are furnished, while at the other they are wholly denied. This, in our opinion, was not the intention of the legislature, and such construction is not justified by the language of the act. There is nothing in the act limiting the discrimination to individuals of the same station, and, without some such restrictive words in the act itself, we can find no authority for so limiting it. The legislature evidently intended to prevent any undue or unjust discrimination between "individuals, associations, and corporations" anywhere in the state, whether shipping from the same or from different stations. If the construction of the court be correct, any railroad in the state may arbitrarily furnish shipping facilities to one station, and withhold all facilities from another rival station, similarly situated, without being subject to the penalties of the act. (When we speak of place or station, we mean the individuals, associations, or corporations, as the case may be, shipping from said place or station; for the abstract thing called the "station" or "locality" makes no shipments, and has no commercial or financial life, apart from the individuals, etc., residing and doing business there.) It is manifest that the exercise of such absolute power upon the part of railway corporations would be disastrous to the business prosperity of the individuals so discriminated against at any given station. Nor can it be denied that oftentimes the most powerful incentives exist for these corporations to make such discriminations. For instance, they may own little property at one station, and have large possessions at another and rival business point, and it may be to their interest to destroy the town where they have little in order to build up the place where they have much. In what more effectual way could this be done than by denying transportation facilities to the one while furnishing them to the other. Again, at one station on their road there may be competing lines, while at another, and maybe its commercial rival, there are none. Now, to meet the competition at the one station, and to do it with the least expense possible, they may take away from the other station, where there is no competition, all, or nearly all, its facilities for transportation, in order to furnish to the station where there is competition. Can it be said that there would be no discrimination in cases of this kind, under the act, or that a discrimination based upon such considerations as these, alone, would not be undue and unjust? We think not. Doubtless, to prevent just such acts of discrimination as these, and all others, between individuals, etc., shipping from different stations, as well as acts of undue and unjust discrimination between individuals, etc., shipping from the same station, the act under consideration was passed. The supreme court of Illinois, in speaking of a case where there had been a discrimination in freights between individuals at different stations, used this pertinent language: "The discrimination, in such a case, is as much a discrimination between individuals as it would be in reference to two persons living in the same locality, and shipping at the same station, unless, as before stated, a satisfactory reason can be given for discrimination between the points of shipment;" and, further: "So, too, in the case before us. The resident of Bloomington, who sends to Chicago for a car of lumber, is charged by the company at the rate of $5 per thousand feet for transportation. The resident of Lexington, who orders the same lumber at the same time, is charged $5.65 per thousand feet for transportation 16 miles less in distance. Is there not here, unless an explanation can be furnished by the company, an unjust discrimination between individuals, quite as much within the prohibition of the principles of the common law as would be an unjust discrimination between individuals of the same town?" And the court holds that the fact of there being a competing line of road at the station where the individual lived in whose favor the discrimination was made would not be a sufficient explanation. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. People, Koerner, 67 Ill. 11, 16 Am. Rep. 599. Precisely the same principle would apply whether the acts of discrimination were in the matter of freight charges or facilities of transportation.

The act under consideration is: "All Individuals, Associations, and Corporations shall Have Equal Rights to Have Persons and Property Transported over Railroads in This State, and no Unjust or Undue Discrimination shall be Made in Charges for, or in Facilities for, Transportation of Freight or Passengers within the State," etc. There are no terms of limitation as to locality, except "within the state" (and, of course, the legislature had no power to legislate beyond the state). The restrictive words as to the discrimination are that it shall not be "unjust or undue." The use of these terms "unjust or undue" shows that the legislature knew that there would be, necessarily, some discrimination, but that it was only such as was "unjust or undue" that was inhibited. Section 6193, Sand. & H. Dig., makes it the duty of railroads to furnish sufficient accommodations for the transportation of all such passengers and property as shall, within a reasonable time previous thereto, offer, or be offered, for transportation at the place of starting and junctions of other railroads, and at sidings and stopping places established for receiving and discharging way passengers and freights, and shall take, transport, and discharge such passengers and property at, from, and to such places on the due payment of tolls, freight, or fare legally authorized therefor. The next section provides "that the railroad shall pay to the party aggrieved all damages sustained by reason of a violation of this act, with costs of suit." See § 6194, Sand. & H. Dig. The statute prohibiting unjust discrimination, supra, furnishes an additional remedy to the statutes just quoted, by way of penalty, against those coming within its terms. All these statutes are but declaratory of the common law, which makes it the duty of common carriers to furnish facilities for and to transport all goods offered in the ordinary course of business, and to prohibit any unjust and undue discrimination in furnishing such facilities of transportation. 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1467, and authorities cited in note; 1 Wood, Railroads, § 195. "It is," says Judge Elliott, "safe to say that the rule is that a railroad carrier, so far as concerns the receipt and transportation of goods, however it may be as to rates of freight, must, where the conditions and circumstances are identical, treat all shippers alike. It cannot furnish facilities to some shippers, and deny them to other shippers, unless there is a difference in condition or circumstances such as makes the discrimination a just one." 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1468. A common carrier, for such goods as he undertakes to carry, is bound to provide reasonable facilities of transportation to all shippers at every station who, in the regular and expected course of business, offer their goods for transportation. The carrier is not required to provide in advance for any unprecedented and unexpected rush of business, and therefore will be excused for delay in shipping, or even in receiving goods for shipment, until such emergency can, in the regular and usual course of business, be removed. Id. § 1470; Hutchinson, Carr. § 292. The supreme court of Wisconsin voices our opinion of the duty of railroads to distribute cars at different stations as follows: "The company owes the same duty to shippers at any one station as it does to the shippers at any other station of the same business importance. The rights of all shippers applying for such cars, under the same circumstances, are necessarily equal. No one station, much less any one shipper, has the right to command the entire resources of the company to the exclusion or prejudice of other stations and other shippers. Most of such suitable cars must necessarily be scattered along and upon . . . [the company's] different lines of railroad, loaded or unloaded. Many will necessarily be at the larger centers of trade. The conditions of the market are not always the same, but are liable to fluctuations, and may be such as to create a great demand for such cars upon one or more of such lines and very little upon others. Such cars should be distributed along the different lines of road, and the several stations on each, as near as may be in proportion to the ordinary business requirements at the time, in order that shipments may be made with reasonable celerity. . . . It is the extent of such business ordinarily done on a particular line, or at a particular station, which properly measures the carrier's obligation to furnish such transportation. But it is not the duty of such carrier to discriminate in favor of the business of one station to the prejudice and injury of the business of another station of the same importance." Ayres v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 71 Wis. 372. In Riddle v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 787, 1 Inters. Com. Com. 594, Walker, C., said: "It is the duty of a common carrier to provide adequate equipment for the business of his line; if in time of special pressure someone must wait, the annoyance must be distributed with all possible equality." Again: "A common carrier is under obligation to serve the public equally and justly. It is unlawful for him to make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality." True, this was said under the interstate commerce act expressly naming locality; but, under the construction we give the act before us, it is equally applicable to the case in hand. See also Hutchinson, Carr. § 297; 1 Wood, Railroads, § 195.

The statute seeks to enforce equality of treatment to all shippers under like circumstances. As we have seen, not every act of discrimination is unlawful. But there is always a presumption against it. It devolves upon the shipper in the first instance to show the discrimination, and then the burden is upon the railroad to show circumstances that would justify or excuse it; i. e., to show that the discrimination is just. 1 Wood, Railroads, § 198; 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1477. The statute does not define what is unjust or undue discrimination. The Supreme Court of the United States in Texas & P. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 182 U. S. 219, 40 L. ed. 947, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 405, says that "such questions are questions, not of law, but of fact." But we agree with Judge Elliott that this can only be so in a loose sense, and that, "in strict accuracy, it is a question in which the elements of law and fact are component parts." 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1679. As was said by the supreme court of Texas: "It is a question of law and fact in the given case, and whether the discrimination be or not unlawful must be ascertained by applying to the facts of the case the principles of the common law," since, as we have shown, our statute is but declaratory of the common law. Houston & T. O. R. Co. v. Rust, 58 Tex. 98, 9 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 126. Whether there has been a discrimination undue or unjust in any case depends upon the situation and circumstances of both the shipper and carrier, and is generally a question for the jury, under proper instructions. So far as the shipper is concerned, the relation or situation of one shipper towards the railroad is the same as that of any other shipper having the same class of goods to ship, although they may be at different stations. For example, the merchant at one station having 100 bales of cotton ready, and which has been offered for transportation, is in the same relation or situation to the railroad as a merchant at some other station, who has the same quantity and quality of cotton ready for shipment. Both are alike desiring and are entitled to prompt transportation and to equal facilities. But the relation of the railroad company to each of these shippers may be very different. For instance, one station may be the end of a division,—a distributing point for cars; may have commission merchants shipping goods by the car load; or at the one station there may be an unprecedented rush of business. These circumstances of the railroad company existing at the one station, and absent at the other, may enable the railroad to ship promptly for the shipper at the one while denying it to the shipper at the other. Here would be a discrimination, but no reasonable man could say it would be unjust or undue. But if it should turn out that there was no unexpected rush of business at the one station that did not exist at the other; that the demand for transportation for cotton was about the same at both stations; but that at the station where the favored shipper lived there was a competing line of road, and that the cars which accumulated there (on account of its being a distributing point and on account of large shipments by commission merchants) were held there, and not distributed to the other station pro rata, in order that the railroad might be able at all times to meet the competition, and to control the business of shipping cotton,—if there was testimony to justify a conclusion of this kind, a verdict against the railroad for unjust or undue discrimination could not be disturbed. There was evidence upon which the jury might have reached this conclusion. The foregoing principles of law are applicable to cases of the kind under consideration. We have not closely scrutinized the instructions, to see whether they conform to our views of the law as above set forth, since the opinion of the court makes a reversal inevitable in any event. Assuming, however, that the directions to the jury are in accord with the views we have expressed, the judgment of the court should be affirmed.

Hughes, J., concurs.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Riddick, J., on November 20, 1897, handed down the following response:

We held in a former opinion in this case that a shipper at Altus, a station on appellant's railway, could not recover a penalty against the railway company because it furnished to shippers at Van Buren, another station on its line, facilities superior to those furnished at Altus. We did not hold, nor was it necessary to hold, that the laws of this state do not forbid railroad companies from making unjust discrimination between different localities along their line; but we did hold that, under the facts of this case, appellees were not entitled to a penalty, and that their remedy for the wrongful failure of the company to furnish adequate facilities at Altus was an action for damages. Learned counsel for appellees, in this and other cases in which the same questions are involved, have favored us with able and elaborate printed arguments in support of the motion to rehear, but, after giving such arguments careful consideration, our conclusions announced in the former opinion remain unchanged, and the motion must be overruled. As the question determined is important, and as there is division among the judges of the court, I will endeavor to give some further reasons for our judgment in addition to those stated by Mr. Justice Battle in the former opinion. The facts are fully stated in that opinion, and I will only briefly refer to them again.

The crop of cotton raised along the line of appellant's railway in 1891 was unusually large. The appellant company furnished sufficient cars at Van Buren and Little Rock, where there were competing lines and superior advantages for shipment, to carry all cotton offered, but at Altus and other intermediate points, where there were no competing lines, it failed during the months of November and December of that year to furnish cars sufficient to ship cotton as fast as it was offered, and there was delay in shipping cotton offered by appellees and other shippers at those stations. The contention is that it was an unjust discrimination, within the meaning of our penal statutes, for the company to furnish a sufficient number of cars to carry all cotton offered at Van Buren, when not enough cars were furnished at Altus. Now, we do not deny that if the appellant company wrongfully failed to furnish sufficient cars to carry cotton of appellees offered for shipment it became liable to said shippers for all damages suffered in consequence of the failure to furnish cars. Not only our statute (Sand. & H. Dig. § 6193), but the common law, fully covers a case of that kind, and appellees have already, in another action, recovered a judgment against the appellant company for a large amount to compensate them for all damages suffered by reason of the delay in shipment complained of here, and that judgment has been affirmed by this court. But the mere fact that the company has wrongfully failed to furnish cars to appellees does not necessarily entitle them to a penalty in addition to their damages. To justify the court in awarding them a penalty, they must bring their case within the strict letter of the law affixing the penalty. Hawkins v. Taylor, 56 Ark. 45; 2 Elliott, Railroads, § 710. The statute under which the penalty is claimed in this case provides that "all individuals, associations, and corporations shall have equal rights to have persons and property transported over railroads in this state, and no unjust or undue discrimination shall be made in charges for, or in facilities for, transportation of freight or passengers within the state." Act March 24, 1887, § 1. And again, in another section, it provides that "no discrimination in charges or facilities for transportation shall be made between transportation companies and individuals, or in favor of either, by abatement, drawback, or otherwise, and no railroad, or any lessee, manager, or employee thereof shall make any preferences in furnishing cars or motive power." Id. § 4. The punishment provided for violation of the above provisions is a penalty of not less than $50 nor more than $1,000, for each offense, to be recovered by the party aggrieved in a civil action. Now, the rule at common law, as 44 L. R. A.

stated by a recent writer, is that a railroad carrier, so far as concerns the receipt and transportation of goods, must, where the conditions and circumstances are identical, treat all shippers alike, but there is no requirement to furnish the same facilities where conditions and circumstances are essentially different. 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1468. There is nothing in the language of the statute above quoted that expressly says that railway companies shall furnish the same facilities to different localities, or that they shall furnish the same facilities to different individuals, unless they are demanded under similar circumstances. But another clause of the 1st section of the act above referred to does refer to localities by providing that "persons and property transported over any railroad shall be delivered at any station at charges not exceeding the charges for transportation of persons and property of the same class in the same direction to any more distant station." It will be noticed that the portion of the statute which mentions localities has reference to overcharges in the transportation of passengers and freight, and not to discriminations in the matter of facilities. The fact that stations are mentioned in the clause referring to overcharges, and not mentioned in the clause in which discrimination in facilities for transportation is condemned, seems to indicate that the legislature recognized that it was impracticable to regulate the facilities furnished at one town by a comparison with those furnished at another, where the conditions and circumstances might be altogether different. It is doubtless true that a railway company should so distribute its cars as to give adequate transportation facilities to the different stations along its line, and if, by reason of a neglect to properly distribute its cars, it wrongfully fails to furnish shippers at any station adequate transportation facilities, it must respond in damages to the party injured; but we deny that every such shipper is entitled to a penalty in addition to his damages. We do not believe that the legislature intended that this penal statute should apply in such a case, for it would be utterly impossible to distribute the cars of a large railway so as to give each station its exact proportion. But, if the construction contended for is correct, the railroad company would have to furnish, not only a proportional number of cars, but cars of the same kind, drawn by engines of the same speed. A fast through train is a great facility in the transportation of both passengers and freight. The railroads of the state have for years run fast trains, which stop only at certain stations, selected by the company. If the contention of appellees is correct, that the intention of this act was to prohibit and punish discriminations as to facilities in transportation between different localities, it is not easy to see why this is not an unjust discrimination which subjects the company to a penalty in favor of every person who is prevented from riding upon a fast train, or from shipping his fruit or other products upon it, by reason of its failure to stop at his station. Certainly under our view of this statute, which is that it forbids and punishes favoritism between passengers or shippers, if the company should permit certain persons to ride upon or ship property upon its fast train, and deny the use of such train to other persons who offered themselves as passengers at the same station, and under the same circumstances, it would become liable to a penalty. If this be true, and if it be also true, as counsel contend, that it makes no difference at what station the passenger offers himself for passage or his property for shipment, he is still, under this statute, entitled to like facilities, then it necessarily follows that the company must stop its fast trains at every station at which a passengers offers, or incur a heavy penalty, whether that station be a great city or a side track in the swamp. Of course, if such trains were compelled to stop at every station, they would cease to be fast trains, and the result would be not only a great inconvenience to the people of the state, but a heavy loss to the railroads of the state; for, under such a restrictive law, the railroads of this state would be utterly unable to compete for the through traffic, and the competing lines of railway which pass around the state would carry such traffic, both freight and passenger.

But cars and trains are not the only facilities within the meaning of this act. A depot, a house for freight, or a waiting room for passengers is a facility for the transportation of passengers and freight, within the meaning of this statute. If a railway company should at one of its stations permit the use of its depot, yard pen, or other station facility to one shipper, and refuse them to other shippers, under the same conditions and circumstances, I think there could be no doubt that it would become liable for a penalty; for the object of the statute was to prevent favoritism,—in other words, to prevent discrimination in facilities between passengers or shippers when demanded under like conditions and circumstances. Along the railways of this state are depots, both old and new, in different stages of repair, and there are flag stations without a depot or station house of any kind. If the construction contended for is correct, why is this not a discrimination? But under that construction it would be hazardous for a railway company to make any decided improvement in this respect at one of its stations that it did not at once repeat at every other station.

Again, it is necessary for the company to keep at certain stations along its lines a telegraph operator on duty during the night to send despatches in regard to the movement of its trains. At such stations it is usual to keep the depot open during the night for the convenience of the patrons of the road. Under our construction of this statute, the company must in this respect treat all alike, and cannot allow the use of its depot or station house to one passenger or shipper after night, and refuse it to others who apply for it under like circumstances. But, under the broad construction contended for here, that this statute was intended to prevent and punish discrimination in facilities between different stations, if the company kept its depot open at night for the reception of freight or passengers at one station it would have to furnish like facilities to passengers and shippers at all other stations, or subject itself to an action for a penalty in favor of each passenger or shipper denied the use of a depot during such hours. The company would thus be compelled to close the depots at all stations to avoid incurring penalties for discrimination. It would, of course, be absurd to suppose that the legislature intended that railway companies should furnish to way stations and small villages facilities the same or equal to those furnished to cities and larger towns, for this would deny to such towns and cities the legitimate advantages due to different circumstances and conditions. But, if we say that the intention was to compel the railroad company to furnish proportional facilities to each station, then it would follow that the legislature intended that the railway company in furnishing such facilities should exercise its judgment as to what were proportional facilities. It would be a difficult matter to determine the dimensions and size of depots, the quality and quantity of train service, and other facilities to be furnished to the different towns and villages of the state, differing, as they do, in size and commercial importance, so as to make their facilities proportional to those furnished other towns and cities of the state. But, under the construction contended for, if the company erred in this matter, however honestly, it would at once become liable, not only for one penalty, but probably for hundreds of them. As it is not usual to inflict penalties for mere errors of judgment, this should incite the court to adopt a different construction from that contended for.

From these and other reasons it can, I think, be seen that the construction contended for by appellees, that the word "locality" should be read in the statute so as to make it a penal offense for a railway company to furnish passengers or shippers at one locality facilities not furnished to all other stations along its line, would necessarily result in great embarrassment to railway companies. It would cast upon the courts for decision many difficult questions as to what were proportional facilities and what were not; for the courts would, in effect, be discharging the duties of a board of railroad commissioners, without any discretion whatever to relieve against the hardships of the statute. The ingenious answer to these objections is, in effect, that the court need not consider such difficulties seriously, for they would be questions for the jury. And that is true. If the construction contended for by appellees is correct, then, whether the failure to stop a fast train at a certain station, or whether the failure to furnish a depot as good as some other on the line, or to keep it open during the same hours, whether these and other matters were unjust discriminations, would, indeed, be a question for the jury. A passenger desiring to recover the penalty pronounced by the statute ($50 to $1,000) would naturally ask himself whether the depot at which he was compelled to wait was as commodious as that at some other station, or whether the train upon which he rode was as superb and elegant in its appointments and as convenient in its time schedules as the fast passenger that stopped only at larger towns. As most people are not disposed to underestimate the importance of their own town or village, it would be easy for him to conclude that the company was unjustly discriminating against himself and his town. As the question might be answered differently by different persons, it can be seen that such a construction would open up a rich field of litigation. If not satisfied with one lawsuit, the passenger could return the next day, and suffer the same inconveniences, and obtain another cause of action. Every man could have his own lawsuit and one for each member of his family.

Now, while the people of this country are not unduly prone to litigation, still the records show that they do not hesitate to appeal to the courts when they believe their rights to be invaded. But the remarkable fact in connection with this statute, if the construction contended for by appellees be correct, is that, although there are similar statutes in other states, learned counsel, as I shall presently attempt to show, have not been able to produce a single reported case of this kind,—a case where, under a statute like this, a plaintiff has demanded a penalty of a railroad company for failing to furnish him the facilities it furnished to shippers at another and different station. I do not say that this shows that the construction they contend for is correct, but I do say that when we consider the great diversity in the facilities furnished to different towns and stations, and the frequent complaints made against railways on account of defective train service and facilities,—that considering these things, the fact that, so far as we can ascertain from the Reports, no one has heretofore brought such an action, is conclusive proof that the construction contended for by appellees is not the construction usually placed upon this statute. It shows that the language of the statute does not plainly express what appellees say it means. But this is a penal statute, and cannot be extended by implication. "The rigid rules of the common law with reference to the liability of common carriers should not," says Judge Elliott, quoting the language of the supreme court of North Carolina, "be applied in cases involving the violation of a penal statute." 2 Elliott, Railroads, § 710. The statute should not, of course, be defeated by a forced or overstrict construction, but the intention of the legislature must be gathered from the words, and they "must be such as to leave no reasonable doubt upon the subject." United States v. Hartwell, 6 Wall. 385, 18 L. ed. 830; Whitehead v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 87 N. C. 255; Dwyer v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. (Tex.) 23 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 654; Hawkins v. Taylor, 56 Ark. 45. Following this well-settled rule, the supreme court of Iowa held that a statute of that state against railway discriminations did not include the failure to furnish cars, because, as stated by the court, the statute was penal, and could not be extended by implication. The court pointed out in that case, as we have in this, that the plaintiff had a clear remedy by an action for damages, but that did not include a penalty. Bond v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 67 Iowa, 712, 23 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 608. And so the supreme court of Texas, declining to apply a penal statute in a case against a railway company not clearly within its meaning, said that it could not award a penalty in any case not expressly denounced by the act. To do so, said the court, "would be judicial legislation of the most reprehensible character." Dwyer v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. (Tex.) 23 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 654.

Let us now, for a moment, consider the character of the act of which the appellant company was guilty. On account of a rush of cotton to market, it was unable, during two months, to carry promptly all cotton delivered at stations between Little Rock and Van Buren. Now, admitting that the company by the use of due care and foresight might have foreseen this accumulation of freight, and have guarded against it by providing sufficient cars to carry it, still it must be admitted that there was no intention or desire to injure Altus or any other station. The company, taking the worst view against it possible under the evidence, had but negligently failed to supply itself with sufficient cars to handle the increased business, and when the rush came it endeavored to avoid injury to itself by carrying first the freight offered at points where there were competing lines, and, after that, the freight from the other stations. The wrong was not in furnishing sufficient cars to Van Buren and Little Rock, for this its duty required it to do, but in failing to furnish sufficient cars to Altus and other intermediate points. The failure to furnish cars brought the company squarely within the scope of another statute (Sand. & H. Dig. § 6193), under which it has been compelled to respond in damages. Appellees are not now asking for compensation, but for a penalty, and they must stand upon the strict letter of the law. Now, as was stated by Mr. Justice Battle in his opinion, if there was a discrimination against appellees, within the meaning of this statute, there was a discrimination against every shipper who offered cotton or other freight at any station between Van Buren and Little Rock during the months of November and December, 1891. More than that, every separate offer of cotton or other freight, and failure to carry, was under the statute a separate offense. Under such construction, the aggregate amount of the penalties for which the company became liable during those two months would be simply stupendous. When asked to adopt a construction that, in addition to compensatory damages, visits such severe punishment for an act of mere negligence, I recall to mind the words of a distinguished English judge, who, speaking of an action brought against a railway company under the railway and canal traffic act of England, said: Very extensive powers are conferred upon the court by this act,—“powers which may be exercised for the benefit of the public, but which may be also exercised to the wrong and detriment of persons carrying on a great trade; and we ought, therefore, to be very cautious to ascertain that there is reasonable ground for believing that the act has been infringed before we interfere.” Cresswell, J., in Caterham R. Co. v. London, B. & S. C. R. Co. 1 Ry. & Canal Traffic Cas. p. 34. But if it was proper to exercise caution in the application of a remedial statute which inflicted no penalty, and was administered under a board of commissioners with large discretionary powers, how much more necessary is it to do so in construing an unbending penal act, against the punishment of which no tribunal has power to relieve. The construction of the act contended for here is far-reaching. To adopt it would be to change the statute from a simple and easily understood law to a very complex one, difficult either to understand or obey. It would be certain to subject railway companies to heavy penalties in many cases in which they were guilty of no intentional wrong. It is not called for by the language of the act itself, nor included within the plain meaning of the legislature. We cannot, therefore, adopt it without violating what we conceive to be fundamental rules regarding the construction of penal acts.

I will now briefly notice some of the cases which counsel for appellees have cited in support of their views: First, they refer to certain decisions of the Federal courts under the Interstate Commerce Act, and to decisions of the English courts under the railway and canal act of England. It is sufficient to say of those cases that the acts which they construe are neither of them penal, but are remedial acts, and are therefore to be construed liberally, to advance the remedy. The most hasty examination of those acts will show that they are altogether different from the one under consideration. Not only is the language of the acts different, but those acts are enforced under the supervision of a board of commissioners with discretionary powers to relieve special hardships imposed by the letter of the law. No railroad company under those acts becomes liable for a penalty unless for disobedience of an order of the court after the discrimination has been adjudged and pointed out. The shipper, under those acts, recovers only his actual damages, and the usual relief granted is not even a judgment for damages, but an order that the railway company in future refrain from such discrimination. It is evident, therefore, that a much broader construction can properly be given those statutes than the one we have under consideration. If, in construing a highly penal act, we undertake to follow the decisions under those statutes, we shall inevitably be led into the grossest and most inexcusable errors. This is sufficient to dispose of those cases, but, if it were necessary to go further, it could be shown that the reasoning of those cases, instead of opposing, tends strongly to support, the conclusions at which we have arrived. I will next notice the cases of Chicago & A. R. Co. v. People, Koerner, 67 Ill. 11, 16 Am. Rep. 599, and the case of Ayres v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 71 Wis. 372. I call special attention to these two cases, not only because they are cited by counsel for appellees, but because they are extensively quoted in the dissenting opinion delivered by my two learned associates. The Illinois case, supra, was for discrimination in freights. The company made a greater charge for freight from Chicago to Lexington than it did from Chicago to Bloomington, a more distant station on the same line, the freight being of the same kind, and being hauled in the same direction. The case came within the words of a statute similar to our own, to the effect that persons and property transported over any railroad shall be delivered at any station at charges not exceeding the charges for transportation of persons and property of the same class, in the same direction, to a more distant station. The judge who delivered the opinion said something about discrimination between localities, but he was speaking of discrimination in freights. He had no reference to discrimination in facilities, and to suppose that he referred to a case of the kind we have here would be altogether misleading. It must also be noticed that, after discussing discriminations to a considerable extent, he concluded by giving judgment in favor of the company, for the reason that the statute upon which the prosecution was based was void. We are unable to understand how that decision can be considered as in conflict with our decision here. The Wisconsin case (Ayres v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 71 Wis. 372) was an action, not for a penalty, but for damages for wrongfully failing to furnish cars to carry freight. We fully agree with the judgment of the court in that case, but it was unnecessary for counsel to go so far to cite a decision on that point. Only a few months ago this court affirmed a judgment against appellant in favor of appellee for damages for failing to furnish cars in which exactly the same question was involved as that determined by the Wisconsin court. We felt so little doubt about the law of the case that it was disposed of by an oral opinion. Appellees knew of the case, as it was in their favor, and they might just as well have cited it as the case from Wisconsin, although we are not able to see that either case has any bearing upon the question here. In the Wisconsin opinion, as well as that from Illinois, there are expressions which might mislead, if you disregard entirely the facts of the case, and suppose the judge to be discussing the law as applied to the facts of this case; but to get at the meaning of an opinion you must, of course, consider the language of the judge as referring to the facts of the case before him, and not to an altogether different state of facts. The next and last case that I shall notice will be a case from the Supreme Court of the United States: Union P. R. Co. v. Goodridge, 149 U. S. 680, 31 L. ed. 896. The case arose under a Colorado statute, and was a prosecution for an overcharge in freights. Counsel say that both the statute and case are similar to those before us. There is some similarity in the two statutes, but little between the two cases. The Colorado statute is a much more comprehensive act than our act. It provided, among other things, that railway companies should keep posted schedules of their rates, and that, while such schedules were in force, no rebate or drawback therefrom should be allowed one shipper, unless the same was open and allowed to all persons alike, except in a special case, where the approval of the railroad commissioner was procured in writing. The evidence in the case showed that there were two rival coal companies, one owning a mine at Erie, and the other at Marshall, these places being stations upon lines of the defendant's railway, and each place about the same distance from Denver, to which place the two companies shipped their coal. The railway company posted a schedule of rates, showing that the charges on coal from both Erie and Marshall were $1 per ton. In other words, the railway company's schedule showed that the rate to Denver on coal was the same from both places, but it made a secret agreement with the Marshall company by which it allowed it a rebate of 40 cents on the ton, and this was done without the written consent of the commissioner. These facts brought the case clearly within the express language of the act, and the company was held guilty. The judge, in speaking in that case of discriminations between localities, had reference to discriminations in charges of the kind forbidden by the act, and not to discrimination as to facilities. I have now noticed the cases upon which counsel for appellees seem to place most reliance, and, in my opinion, none of them furnish authority for holding the company liable for a penalty for a discrimination in facilities between different localities, much less between localities where the conditions and circumstances are widely different, as we find them here. Van Buren has competing lines of railway. It is the end of a division of appellant's railway. It is a much larger town than Altus, and has not only a much larger retail business, but has several wholesale houses. These and other advantages which Altus does not possess cause empty cars to accumulate at Van Buren, which are used in the shipment of cotton from that point. Conceding that the statute was intended to punish discriminations between different localities, it could not apply to a case such as this, where the conditions and circumstances surrounding the two localities are altogether different; and this is the ground on which, as I understand it, rests the opinion of Mr. Justice Battle, ordering a dismissal in this case. But it seems plain to me that the purpose of this act, so far as it forbids discrimination in facilities for transportation, was to require the railroad company to treat all shippers alike who ship from the same place and under the same conditions, and to forbid and punish favoritism on the part of the company under such circumstances. It has, in my opinion, no application to discrimination in facilities when furnished at different localities: for that is covered by another statute, and the common law, which require railway companies to furnish reasonable and adequate facilities for transportation at every station, and provide an ample remedy for any failure in this respect by means of an action for damages. Sand. & H. Dig. § 6193; 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1419. For these reasons I adhere to the decision made in this case.

44 L. R. A.

The motion to rehear is overruled.

Bunn, Ch. J., and Battle, J., concur in the conclusion that the motion to rehear should, under the facts of this case, be overruled.

Wood, J., dissenting:

The railway and canal traffic act of England, passed in 1854, provides: "Every railway company," etc., "shall, according to their respective powers, afford all reasonable facilities for receiving and forwarding and delivering traffic upon and from the several railways," etc., "belonging to such companies," etc. "And no such company shall make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to or in favor of any particular person or company, or any particular description of traffic, in any respect whatsoever, nor shall any such company subject any particular person or company," etc., "to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage, in any respect whatsoever." Section 2, chap. 31, 17 & 18 Vict. See 27 Am. & Eng. R. Cas., Append. p. 22. State legislation upon this subject has, in all salient features, followed this English statute. 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 178. Our statute (Sand. & H. Dig. § 6301), like the English act, in naming the objects protected against discrimination, does not mention "locality." In Vahlberg v. Keaton, 51 Ark. 534, 4 L. R. A. 462, the court, through Judge Hemingway, in speaking of a statute modeled after an English statute, said: "As the American states have adopted the English statute as a model, so the American courts have adopted the construction given it by English courts." Bank of Newport v. Cook, 60 Ark. 288, 29 L. R. A. 761; McDonald v. Hovey, 110 U. S. 619, 28 L. ed. 269. In Richardson v. Midland Railway Co. 4 Ry. & Canal Traffic Cas. 1, upon a complaint by two firms at Newark that their traffic was unduly prejudiced by the railway company, by not being carried on as favorable terms as to rates and in other respects as Burton traffic, the court said: "It is not contended on the part of the railway company that it is any answer to a complaint of inequality of charge that the traffic favored and the traffic prejudiced are not in the same locality; and assuming that there is a competition of interests, and that circumstances in other respects are not dissimilar, the traffic of two localities, both on the same system of railway, but it may be at a distance from each other (and Newark is 40 miles distant from Burton), is as much within the traffic act of 1854 as the traffic of two or more individuals in the same locality is;" citing and quoting the earlier cases of Ransome v. Eastern Counties Railway Co. 1 Ry. & Canal Traffic Cas. 63, and Nicholson v. Grant Western Railway Co. 1 Ry. & Canal Traffic Cas.

121. See also Newry Comrs. v. Great Northern R. Co. 7 Ry. & Canal Traffic Cas. 184; Gerard v. Railway Co. 4 Ry. & Canal Traffic Cas. 291. There is nothing in the railway and traffic act as to freight rates, etc., between different localities. Nor was the act of 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. chap. 48), providing for commissioners for the better enforcing the railway and traffic act, passed until long after the earlier of the above cases were decided. The case of Richardson v. Midland Railway Co. 4 Ry. & Canal Traffic Cas. 1, although decided after the passage of the act of 1873, as we have seen, distinctly approved the construction given the railway and canal traffic act by the earlier cases. It thus appears that the English courts construe the railway and canal traffic act as applying to acts of undue and unreasonable discrimination between shippers of different localities; otherwise they would not have enforced it in such cases. But localities are not mentioned. Our statute is modeled after this act. Therefore, upon the authority of Vahlberg v. Keaton, 51 Ark. 534, 4 L. R. A. 462, and Bank of Newport v. Cook, 60 Ark. 288, 29 L. R. A. 761, the same construction should be given the act under consideration as was given the railway and canal traffic act by the English courts. But this is also the construction of the Supreme Court of the United States. The Constitution of Colorado provides: "All individuals, associations, and corporations shall have equal rights to have persons and property transported over any railroad in this state, and no undue or unreasonable discrimination shall be made in charges, or in facilities for transportation of freight or passengers within the state." Art. 15, § 496, § 6. This is the identical language of the statute under consideration. Sand. & H. Dig. § 6301, § 1. An act of the legislature of Colorado provided: "No railroad corporation shall charge, demand, or receive from any person, company, or corporation, for the transportation of persons or property, or for any other service, a greater sum than it shall . . . charge, demand, or receive from any other person, company, or corporation for a like service from the same place, or upon like conditions and under similar circumstances, and all concessions of rates, drawbacks, and contracts for special rates shall be open to, and allowed all persons," etc., "alike at the same rate per ton per mile, upon like conditions, and under similar circumstances." An action was instituted by G. & M. coal merchants at Erie, and selling coal at Denver, against the railroad to recover triple damages, under the statute, for unjust discrimination in freights for coal from Erie to Denver, and in favor of the town of Marshall, which was 2 miles further from Denver than the town of Erie. The rates from the two places to Denver were the same. Mr. Justice Brown, speaking for the court, said: "This act was intended to apply to intrastate traffic the same wholesome rules and regulations which Congress two years thereafter applied to commerce between the states, and to cut up by the roots the entire system of rebates and discriminations in favor of particular localities, special enterprises, or favored corporations, and to put all shippers on an absolute equality. . . . It is bound to deal fairly with the public, to extend them reasonable facilities for the transportation of their persons and property, and to put all its patrons upon absolute equality." Union P. R. Co. v. Goodridge, 149 U. S. 680, 37 L. ed. 896. The Colorado statute was highly penal, the railroad being subject to a forfeiture of "three times the actual damage sustained by the party aggrieved." Yet this was not deemed by the Supreme Court of the United States as any reason why the statute and the constitutional provision should not be enforced. It will be observed that the Colorado statute quoted above says, "for a like service from the same place,"—just what is decided in effect by the majority opinion is the meaning of our statute. But the Supreme Court of the United States, construing it in connection with the provision of the Colorado Constitution exactly like our statute, enforced it as between individuals of different localities; showing clearly that the provision of the Colorado Constitution embraced acts of discrimination between individuals of different localities, and was intended, like our act, to protect the parties named therein against all acts of "undue or unjust discrimination within the state." And, although Erie and Marshall were different stations or localities, shippers there were treated, for the purpose of the Colorado Constitution and statute preventing unjust discrimination, as being in like condition and under similar circumstances with reference to the railway company in shipments of coal. The fact of shippers being at different stations or localities does not necessarily make their condition or circumstances unlike in relation to the railroad company, as we have shown. In the opinion of the court first announced it is said: "Was there any unjust or undue discrimination by appellants against appellee? Superior facilities for shipping were furnished at Van Buren. If this was a discrimination, it was not against any particular individual or association, nor against the shippers at any particular station, but against the shippers collectively at every station on the railroad except at Van Buren; that is to say, in favor of one locality against all others. They furnished the same shipping facilities to all persons, associations, and corporations at Van Buren which they refused to all parties at other stations. Hence there was no discrimination against individuals or associations, they being treated alike under the same circumstances." It appears from this, as well as the opinion just delivered, that the court holds that, where shippers are at different stations or localities, there can be no undue or unjust discrimination between them. In other words, where the locality of shippers is not the same, there is such a difference in circumstances as to justify the discrimination in failing to furnish facilities, however great or unreasonable the difference might be. We are not concerned, therefore, about the discussion of the facts of this particular case, as it is conceded that Van Buren and Altus are different stations, which, upon the doctrine announced by the court, must work a reversal and dismissal of this cause. It might be said, however, with reference to the facts, that the station agent at Van Buren, when asked the following question, to wit, "It mattered not how much they needed them [the cars] down there [at Altus], you were going to keep enough for your people?" replied, "That was about the size of it." This would tend to show that the competition of another road at Van Buren was the real cause of the cars being kept there, and not distributed to other points along the road, where there was no competition. At any rate, this, in connection with all the other facts and circumstances, was sufficient to require the submission of the question of undue or unjust discrimination to the jury upon proper instructions. We do not join issue with much that is said in the able opinion just rendered by Judge Riddick. The opinion we have already delivered shows that. We cannot consent that this statute should not be enforced because another remedy, by way of damages for failing to furnish transportation facilities, is provided for the party aggrieved. The legislature, of course, was familiar with our constitutional provision preventing discrimination. Const. 1874, art. 17, § 3. Also with the statute passed in 1868 (Sand. & H. Dig. § 6193), requiring railroads to furnish sufficient accommodations for the transportation of passengers and property. This act was in obedience to the constitutional provision, and in harmony with the prior statute, and was intended as an additional or cumulative remedy. It is said in the last opinion that the "appellees have already, in another action, recovered a judgment against the appellant company for a large amount, to compensate them for all damages suffered by reason of the delay in shipment complained of here, and that judgment has been affirmed by this court. But the mere fact that the company has wrongfully failed to furnish cars to appellees does not necessarily entitle them to a penalty in addition to their damages." If our contention, that the statute under consideration was intended as a cumulative remedy, be correct, it is obvious that the above could only be considered as a mere "begging of the question." This question must be decided, and the truth is it was decided in the first instance, without regard to whether or not the appellees had recovered judgment by way of damages for failing to furnish cars in another action; for, when the judges passed upon and decided the present cause, it was unknown to them that another case was pending here on appeal from a judgment for damages for failing to furnish cars. The object of the statute is not to enforce the same facilities, or equality in facilities, but to prohibit unjust or undue inequality. We think these qualifying words "undue or unjust" have either been overlooked, or have not been given the significance which their use in the statute requires. Many of the instances mentioned, as showing the impracticability of giving effect to the statute under the construction we contend for, would be recognized at once by any man of good common sense, whether judge or juror, as not an unjust or undue discrimination. These words "unjust or undue" allow for all differences in the situation and circumstances of shippers and railway companies, whether at the same or different stations. They furnish a wholesome restriction and safe limitation to the passion or caprice of jurors; and, within these bounds, it would not be difficult, much less impracticable, for trial judges, with proper directions, to hold jury verdicts. At any rate, the question of whether there has been an unjust or undue discrimination, like thousands of other mixed questions of fact and law, must be left to the jury, under proper instructions from the trial court. The fact of shippers being at different stations or localities is to be submitted to the jury along with every other fact in the determination of this question. But we insist that this fact being conceded or undisputed does not, of itself, justify the court in declaring, as a matter of law, that, in such a case, there can be no such thing as an undue or unjust discrimination. The statute is plain. "No unjust or undue discrimination shall be made in charges for, or in facilities for, transportation of freight or passengers within the state." No amount of subtle reasoning or lengthy argumentation can either obscure or make clearer the legislative intent to prohibit acts of undue or unjust discrimination between the parties named "within the state." Under the construction given it by the court, the act is shorn of the very force and power which the legislature doubtless most designed it should have.

Hughes, J., concurring.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

Re Estate of Herman ROYER, Deceased.

(.....Cal.....)

1. The University of California, created by the act of 1868, and continued and declared to be a public trust by the state Constitution of 1879, is an entity capable of taking by bequest, although the regents are, by law, made the governing body under a separate incorporation, and the organic act, providing in terms that grants and gifts may be made to the regents of the state, does not in terms provide that they may be made to the university.

NOTE.—As to nature of incorporated institutions belonging to the state, see note to State, Little, v. Regents of University (Kan.) 29 L. R. A. 378; also Lane v. Minnesota State Agri. Soc. (Minn.) 29 L. R. A. 708; Lund v. Chipewewa County (Wia.) 34 L. R. A. 131; Sterling 44 L. R. A.

v. Regents of the University (Mich.) 34 L. R. A. 150; Oklahoma Agri. & Mechanical College v. Willis (Okla.) 40 L. R. A. 677; Gross v. Kentucky Board of Managers of World's Columbian Exposition (Ky.) 43 L. R. A. 703.

See also 45 L. R. A. 675.

2. A bequest to the state university is subject to Civil Code, § 1313, limiting charitable gifts to one third of the distributable estate.

(March 3, 1899.)

APPEAL by the University of California from a decree of the Superior Court for the City and County of San Francisco distributing the residue of the estate of Herman Royer, deceased, to his heirs and next of kin notwithstanding a clause in his will bequeathing such residue to the University of the State of California. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Mr. John B. Mhoon, for appellant, University of California:

The University of California is a quasi corporation.

Const. art. 9, § 9.

Two entities are provided for by the organic act, to wit: "The University of California," with its president (Kellogg) and its treasurer (Sloss), and its design to provide a complete education for citizens of the state, and the other entity, the Board of Regents, etc., a corporation under the laws of the state, having its president (the governor) and its secretary (E. W. Davis), and its design is to manage and control the property and administer the business of the university.

Thus we have the University of California created by statute, organized under a president, treasurer, and land agent, receiving appropriations from the state, and donations from private persons and corporations in that name, and performing its functions for more than twenty-five years. This certainly constitutes a de facto quasi corporation or governmental agency.

People v. LaRue, 67 Cal. 526; Dean v. Davis, 51 Cal. 406; People v. Montecito Water Co. 97 Cal. 276; Re Madera Irrig. Dist. Bonds, 92 Cal. 316, 14 L. R. A. 755.

The University of California is not a public chartered corporation like a city or city and county (Civil Code, § 284). It is in principle more like a county, and is therefore within the definition of a quasi corporation.

People v. Sacramento County Supers. 45 Cal. 692; Barnett v. Contra Costa County, 67 Cal. 77; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 10; Potter, Corp. § 420; Boone, Corp. §§ 8, 314.

A state university is a quasi corporation and body politic.

University of Alabama v. Winston, 5 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 17; Tulane Education Fund v. New Orleans Bd. of Assessors, 38 La. Ann. 292; Regents of the University v. Detroit Bd. of Education, 4 Mich. 213; Regents of the University v. McConnell, 5 Neb. 426; State, Robinson, v. Carr, 111 Ind. 337; State Bd. of Edu. v. Bakewell, 122 Ill. 344; University of North Carolina v. Maulsby, 43 N. C. (8 Irid. Eq.) 257; Dunn v. University of Oregon, 9 Or. 357; State, Atty. Gen., v. Knowles, 16 Fla. 577; Liggett v. Ladd, 23 Or. 26; State, 44 L. R. A.

Little, v. Regents of University, 29 L. R. A. 378, 55 Kan. 389.

The property of the university is exempt from taxation on the ground that it belongs to the state.

Aplin v. Regents of the University, 10 L. R. A. 376, 83 Mich. 467; Hollister v. Sherman, 63 Cal. 38; People, Johnson, v. San Francisco City & County Supers. 77 Cal. 130.

The term "person" applies to natural persons and also to artificial persons,—bodies politic deriving their existence and powers for legislation,—but cannot be so extended as to include within its meaning the Federal government, and the term "corporation" in the statutes applies only to such corporations as are enacted under the laws of the state.

United States v. Fox, 94 U. S. 321, 24 L. ed. 193; Dickson v. United States, 125 Mass. 315, 28 Am. Rep. 230; 1 Kent, Com. p. 460.

Prima facie the statute will be interpreted not to bind the sovereign or the sovereign state.

Bishop, Written Laws, § 142; Sedgw. Stat. & Const. L. p. 337; United States v. Hoar, 2 Mason, 311; Mayrhofer v. San Diego Bd. of Edu. 89 Cal. 110.

If this court shall believe that the testator did intend to endow a professorship of political economy, that intention should control, notwithstanding the fact that the legatee is called the University of California instead of the Regents of the University of California or the State of California for the University of California.

Re Gibson, 75 Cal. 329.

This court will distribute the estate as bequeathed, provided the bequests are lawful.

Bispham, Eq. § 126; Blythe's Estate, 1 Coffey, Prob. Dec. 459.

Mr. Joseph Leggett for respondents.

Mr. W. F. Williamson for executors.

Chipman, C., filed the following opinion:

The controversy arises upon conflicting petitions for distribution filed by the heirs at law of deceased and by the Regents of the University of California, and involves the right to the residue of the estate of deceased under the provisions of his will. After making certain specific bequests, the testator, in the sixth clause of his will, declared as follows: "Sixth. All the rest and residue of my property and estate I do hereby give, devise, and bequeath unto the University of the State of California, for the sole purpose of founding a professorship of political economy, and for no other purpose whatever. If the said gift and devise shall for any reason fail, the same shall revert to my next of kin." The court found that neither the University of the State of California, nor the University of California, is now, or ever has been, a corporation under the laws of this state, and is not a person, and that each is an entity distinct from the Regents of the University of California, which latter are a corporation duly organized under the laws of the state. The court also found that the residue of the estate is insufficient for the purpose of the founding a professorship of political economy, and that the gift has failed, and has, by the express provisions of the will, reverted to the next of kin of the testator. The court denied the petition of the Regents of the University of California, and granted that of the heirs at law, and ordered distribution accordingly, from which this appeal was taken.

But little evidence was submitted at the hearing. In addition to the introduction of the will, it appeared that on October 12, 1897, appellant adopted a resolution "that the funds devised to the university by Herman Royer, deceased, together with such other funds as are now available for that purpose, or may become available hereafter, in aid of founding a professorship of political economy, be invested so as to produce an income, and that no part of the principal funds so invested shall ever be expended." It was admitted that the Regents of the University of California are now, and have been since 1868, a duly incorporated and existing corporation under an act of the legislature approved March 23, 1868, and that a chair of political economy of said university was established in 1878, and is now existing. It also appeared that the residue of the estate of deceased amounts to $5,467.10. This was all the evidence. The findings of fact are obviously drawn, not only from this evidence, but also to some extent from the statutes, and are practically findings of mixed law and fact. They are attacked as against both the law and the evidence. It seems to be admitted that the "University of California" and the "University of the State of California" mean the same entity, whatever that entity may be. We shall therefore disregard any distinction between the two designations, and for brevity will refer to the University of California as the "university," and the Regents of the University of California as the "regents." The questions involved are of much importance, as they concern, not only the bequest in issue, but previous gifts and grants, as well as the legal status of the university. This must be our apology for entering somewhat fully into the consideration of the matter.

1. The Constitution of 1849 (art. 9, § 4) directed the legislature to take measures for the disposition of such lands as had then been, or might thereafter be, granted by the United States, or any person or persons, to this state, "for the use of a university," pursuant to which provision the act of March 23, 1868, was passed. Stat. 1867-68, p. 248. Section 1 of the act reads: "A state university is hereby created. . . . The said university shall be called the University of California. . . . The said university shall be under the charge and control of a board of directors, to be known and styled 'The Regents of the University of California.' The university shall have for its design, to provide instruction and complete education in all the departments of science, literature, art, industrial and professional pursuits and general education," and also various special courses of instruction named in the act. The act provides for the establishment of different colleges of which the university is to consist. Section 11 provides: "The general government and superintendence of the university shall vest in a board of regents, to be denominated the 'Regents of the University of California;' who shall become incorporated under the general laws of the state of California by that corporate name and style.

. . . Section 12 provides: "That said board of regents, when so incorporated, shall have the custody of the books, records, buildings and all other property of the university." This section also provides for vesting the title of certain property in the state, where donated for the purpose of the university, and also provides how the regents shall dispose of property donated or conveyed to them, and also for the affiliation of certain colleges with the university, in which case the regents are to have no right of property in or over the same, but "such college so affiliated may retain its own property," etc. Section 13 gives the regents, when incorporated, power "to enact laws for the government of the university, to elect a president of the university, and the requisite number of professors, instructors, officers, and employees, and to fix their salaries, also the term of office of each, and to determine the moral and educational qualification of applicants for admission to the various courses of instruction." Section 14 speaks of the income of the university, and when the regents may provide for free tuition. Section 15 makes the president of the university "the president of the several faculties and the executive head of the institution in all its departments, except as herein otherwise provided." This section also provides for the selection of a secretary and a treasurer of the university. Section 20 provides "for the endowment and support of the university and its buildings and improvements." Then follows a designation of the various funds or income arising out of the sales of lands granted to the state by Congress. Some of these funds are to be paid over to the regents; in other cases to the state treasury, "and paid over to the treasurer of the university, for the use and behoof of the said university and expended by said board," etc. The section also appropriates contributions to the endowment appropriated by the state "or from public or private bounty." The income of these funds is placed at the disposal of the regents "for the support of the university and of the several colleges and schools thereof," etc. The section also gives the regents authority to appoint persons "to solicit and collect private contributions for the endowment of the university," etc. Section 21 provides "for the current expenditures of the university, and payment is to be made by warrants of the president of the board drawn upon the treasurer of the university." Section 23 refers to the buildings of the university, and § 24 provides that "the collections by the state geological survey shall belong to the university," and directs that they be arranged in a building denominated the "Museum of the University." Section 25 directs the regents to construct "such buildings as shall be needed for the immediate use of the university," and to take steps for the improvement of its grounds, etc. The general appropriation act of March 30, 1868 (Stat. 1867-68, p. 583), appropriated $200,000 of the moneys derived from the sale of overflowed or tide lands, "which shall be paid into the university fund, and paid out therefrom to the regents of the university upon their order, to be by them expended for university purposes as provided by law." The various land grants of the government in aid of the university made necessary a "land agent of the university," and such officer is frequently mentioned in the acts of the legislature (Pol. Code, § 3534; Act March 13, 1875; Stat. 1873-74, p. 356); who is authorized to select state land, and "issue certificates of purchase and patents." When the act of 1868 was codified and brought into the Political Code (§§ 1385 et seq.) the university was treated as an institution of the state, having its location in Alameda county. The "endowment" is to the university. Id. § 1415. An academic senate of the university is created. Id. § 1461. By the act of March 19, 1878, certain funds were consolidated, to be known as the "Consolidated Perpetual Endowment Fund of the University of California," and all interest, etc., arising out of the same "shall be placed in the general fund of the university and subject to disbursement to meet the current annual expenses of the University of California." Throughout the entire legislation of the state the university is spoken of as having some sort of an existence, a part of which, rather than distinct from it, are the regents. The latter seem to be a corporation formed in aid of the objects and purposes of the university, but not to displace nor destroy nor to absorb its entity. Acts are found "for the endowment of the university" (Stat. 1869-70, p. 668); "for the support of the university" (Stat. 1871-72, p. 554); "concerning university lands" (Stat. 1873-74, p. 356). General appropriations run in the same way: "For the aid of the State University, $80,000" (Id. p. 902); "to reimburse the University of California" (Stat. 1881, p. 50).

The Constitution of 1879 (art. 9, § 9) declares: "The University of California shall constitute a public trust, and its organization and government shall be perpetually continued in the form and character prescribed by the organic act creating the same, passed March 23, 1868 (and the several acts amendatory thereof)," etc. It is the university organized by the act of 1868, and not the regents—one of its constituent parts—which the Constitution declares to be a public trust. In Foltz v. Hoge, 54 Cal. 28, and People, Hastings, v. Kewen, 69 Cal. 215, where the status of the Hastings College of Law as an affiliated college of the university was considered, this court seems to have treated the university as a state institution to which a college might be attached under the organic act of 1868. Looking to the origin and purposes of the university, and the constitution and legislation respecting it, we cannot doubt its existence as an entity capable of taking by bequest. It is a governmental agency created by the lawmaking power, and endowed with very important functions, 4 L. R. A.

which it has been exercising for a long period of years. It may be unique, but it is nevertheless an instrumentality of the state, created by the legislature acting within its just powers. That the regents are by law made the governing body of the university, and are required to incorporate under the laws of the state, is by no means inconsistent with the continued existence of the university as a public corporation; and the fact that the organic act in terms provides that grants and gifts may be made to the regents and to the state, and does not provide in terms that grants and gifts may be made to the university, does not, in our opinion, indicate that it was intended that the university was to be incapable of taking by gift, grant, or bequest. The organic act leaves the property of the university with it, and only gives to the regents the custody and control of it. Mr. Justice Story, in the Dartmouth College Case, 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629, said: "Public corporations are generally esteemed such as exist for public political purposes only, such as towns, cities, parishes, and counties, and in many respects they are so, although they involve some private interests; but, strictly speaking, public corporations are such only as are founded by the government for public purposes, where the whole interests belong also to the government. . . . For instance, a bank created by the government for its own uses, whose stock is exclusively owned by the government, is, in the strictest sense, a public corporation; so, an hospital created and endowed by the government for general charity." And he adds that the reasoning by which private and public corporations are distinguished applies in its full force to eleemosynary corporations such as colleges and hospitals. Mr. Morawetz describes the difference between private and public corporations as radical, the former being associations formed by voluntary agreement of their members, while of the latter he says they "are not voluntary associations at all, and there is no contractual relation between the corporators who compose them; they are merely government institutions, created by law, for the administration of the public affairs of the community." Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. § 3. To corporations proper, authors and courts have added a species called "quasi corporations," or "corporations sub modo"; i. e., associations and government institutions possessing only a portion of the attributes which distinguish ordinary public or private corporations. Id. § 6, 2 Kent, Com. p. 274. These quasi corporations may be either public or private, and are to be distinguished upon the same principle as ordinary corporations. It would seem clear enough that the university comes plainly within the commonly accepted definition of a "public corporation." It was founded by the state. Its original and primary endowment was by the United States, by grant to the state for this special purpose. All its property is property of the state. It was created by the state, and is subject to the laws of the state, as a state institution, within the limits of the new Constitution, which has declared it to be a public trust, and that its organization and government shall be perpetually continued in the form and character prescribed by the organic act. This latter act is the charter of the university. In many respects it is modeled after the Dartmouth College charter. But in the Dartmouth College charter all doubt was removed as to what constituted the corporate body, by the terms of the charter itself, in which the trustees were made the body corporate "by the name of the Trustees of Dartmouth College," and the letters patent were to the trustees. 4 Wheat., supra. In the present case the law created the university, and, while it provided for a governing body called "regents," it did not create or designate them as the body corporate, as the charter created the trustees of Dartmouth College. The university was created first, and the trustees became incorporated afterwards, as was directed in the organic act. But the act nowhere provides, in terms or by implication, that when incorporated the regents should become, and thereafter be, the university.

Respondents' counsel seems to think it an absurdity to suppose that it was intended by the legislature to give any sort of corporate existence to an institution officered only by a president, treasurer, secretary, and land agent. It is altogether too narrow a view of the university to say that it is composed only of these officers. The organic act declares that it shall consist of various colleges of arts, letters, and such other professional and other colleges as may be added thereto or connected therewith. Included in these are colleges of agriculture, mechanic arts, mines, civil engineering, medicine, and law. The property previously belonging to the College of California, now the site of the university, was conveyed to the state "for the benefit of the State University," and said college was to go out of existence "as soon as the state shall organize the university." The regents are in fact a part of the university, with specifically defined powers in their custody and control of the property and the management of university affairs. The act designates them "The Regents of the University of California." It may seem anomalous that the law should require the regents to incorporate, or that we should have apparently a corporation within a corporation; but the legislature created the university upon that plan, and, however novel it may be, the power existed in the legislature, not only to create the university, but to prescribe the mode and manner of the exercise of its functions. I can conceive of no imperative necessity for the requirement that the regents should incorporate, but that it was so required did not change their relation to the university. It only endowed the regents with certain corporate powers, and prescribed the mode and manner by which they were to exercise the control given them over the affairs of the university. They have no duties or powers beyond the purpose of their creation, which was to take the custody and control of the university property, and to perform certain prescribed duties in the 44 L. R. A.

management of the university. The law intrusts "the immediate government and discipline of the several colleges" to their respective faculties, "to consist of the president and the resident professors of the same." These faculties are part of the university, and not of the regents. All endowments are to the university, and all funds, whether coming directly to the regents, to the state, or to the university, are for the benefit of the university. Indeed, the central idea of the law was to create and organize a state university, upon broad lines of expanding usefulness. How this university, when created, was to be managed and controlled—the machinery to be provided in its organization for the purpose of practically carrying out the design—was for the legislature to determine. I cannot regard the regents as a legal corporate entity, except as a part of, and ancillary to, the parent and principal institution,—the public corporation created by law as such, and entitled "The University of California." It cannot be doubted that a legislative appropriation to the university would be a legal appropriation available and enforceable; and, if it is capable of taking by appropriation in that name, it is capable of taking by grant or bequest. A recent and important appropriation to the university is found in the act of February 27, 1897 (Stat. 1897, p. 44). It provides that, "in addition to all other sources and means of support . . . of the University of California, there is hereby levied, annually, . . . an 'ad valorem' tax of one cent on each $100 of value of the taxable property of the state . . . for the use and support of the University of California." Section 1. This money must be paid into the state treasury, and "converted into the State University fund" (§ 3), and "must be applied only for the uses and purposes of the University of California" (§ 5). This money may be drawn out upon the order of the board of regents, but, when paid out by the state treasurer, it must be made "payable to the order of the treasurer of the University of California, out of said 'State University fund.'" Section 4. This is clearly an appropriation of money to and for the uses of the university, and it goes from the state into the hands of the treasurer of the university, and to our minds is an unmistakable legislative recognition of the public corporation created by the act of 1868, called "The University of California."

I have examined the reported cases decided by several states and territories of the Union where the congressional grant has been taken advantage of, and institutions similar to the University of California have been created. These institutions differ in some respects from each other in the machinery of their organization, and in none of them do I find an exact parallel with the university of this state. But everywhere the courts have held them to be public corporations. University of Alabama v. Winston, 5 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 17; University of North Carolina v. Maultsby, 55 N. C. (2 Jones, Eq.) 241; State, Atty. Gen., v. Knowles, 16 Fla. 577; State, Little, v. Regents of University, 55 Kan. 389, 29 L. R. A. 378; Oklahoma Agri. & Mechanical College v. Willis, 6 Okla. 593, 40 L. R. A. 677; Dunn v. University of Oregon, 9 Or. 357. The Oklahoma court said: "It seemingly needs no argument to show that the public educational institutions of a state are as much a part of its sovereignty as are its counties." In speaking of the university of that state, the Oregon court said: "It is true, the legislature has not declared it to be a corporation in express terms, but this was not essential;" and so the Kansas court spoke of the university as a public corporation created to carry on special work for the benefit of the state or the public interest.

2. Respondents contend (1) that the university not being expressly authorized by § 1275, Civil Code, it cannot take by will; and, (2) even if it could take, the bequest, being in its nature charitable, must not exceed one third of the distributable estate, under § 1313, Id. The university, as we have seen, is a public corporation "formed for scientific, literary, or solely educational purposes," and, if the statute includes such a corporation at all, it is by its terms capable of taking by will. Bulmer's Estate, 59 Cal. 131. Appellant contends that § 1313, Id., does not apply, because it is a general rule in the interpretation of statutes limiting rights and interests not to construe them to embrace the sovereign power or government, unless the same be expressly named therein, or intended by necessary implication; citing 1 Kent, Com. p. 460; United States v. Hoar, 2 Mason, 311; Mayrhofer v. San Diego Bd. of Edu. 89 Cal. 110; Bishop, Written Laws, §§ 103, 142; Sedgw. Stat. & Const. L. p. 395. There is nothing in the record from which we can determine whether the residue of the estate "exceeds one third of the estate of the testator." There is no finding on this question of fact. As it will arise hereafter, however, the law governing the point should be stated. We do not think the principle upon which appellant relies should govern in this case. The university, while a governmental institution, and an instrumentality of the state, is not clothed with the sovereignty of the state, and is not the sovereign. As we understand the rule, it is only the sovereign that is exempt from the operation of statutes affecting its interest or rights. We think the statute applies to the university as a public corporation.

3. Respondents contend that the bequest has failed because the fund is inadequate to carry out the testator's original intent, and that the court has so found the fact upon sufficient evidence. The only evidence claimed by respondents to support this finding is the resolution of the regents. We cannot see that this resolution, which directs the investment of the fund, bequeathed by deceased, indicates its insufficiency. It was admitted that there was a chair of political economy of the university established in 1878, and now existing. Nor can we say that the residue ($5,467.10) is necessarily insufficient for the purpose intended by the testator. Section 1317, Civil Code, provides that, where the intention of the testator "cannot have effect to its full extent, it must have effect as far as possible." Conceding that the probate court could nullify the bequest on the ground of inadequacy alone, there is no evidence to justify a finding that the gift has failed for this reason. The decree should be reversed.

We concur: Haynes, C.; Gray, C.

Per Curiam:

For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the decree is reversed.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

Charity HEARD et al., Pliffs. in Err.,
v.

W. R. PHILLIPS, Jr., et al.

(101 Ga. 691.)

*1. In computing the number of days preceding the term of court in which a petition must be filed to make it returnable to that term, the Sundays intervening between the date of filing and the commencement of the term are to be counted; and this is true even if the twentieth or last day before the commencement of the term falls on Sunday.

*Headnotes by LITTLE, J.

NOTE.—The above case holding that possession of a vendee is adverse within the meaning of a statute restricting the sale by an administrator of property held adversely, although it is not adverse for the purpose of prescription, presents a distinction that seems to be novel.

For the character of such possession, see also cases in note to Erck v. Church (Tenn.) 4 L. R. A. 645.

44 L. R. A.

2. Where a transferee of a bond for titles has taken a deed from the obligor of the bond, and brings a suit to recover the possession of the premises so conveyed to him from one who acquired possession under the original obligee, he being dead at the time of the trial, the defendant does not fall within any of the classes of persons excluded as witnesses by the terms of § 1 of § 5260 of the Civil Code.

3. The possession of one who has been admitted under a bond for titles to land is not adverse to the obligor of the bond, or the representatives upon his estate, in the sense that such possession may be the foundation of a prescription; but where, in pursuance of such a bond, the obligee has been admitted into possession, and the obligor dies, the possession so obtained is adverse in the sense that a sale of such property by the administrator upon the latter's estate pending such possession is void, and one who takes a conveyance at such sale cannot in his own name, by force of such conveyance, maintain an action against the person so holding possession.

4. So far as the assignments of error upon rulings made in the court below are properly presented for consideration, there was no error of law committed, except upon the questions dealt with in the second and third headnotes.

(July 9, 1897.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Fulton County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiffs in an action to recover possession of certain real estate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Robert L. Rodgers, for plaintiffs in error:

Exchange of lands and possession taken give perfect equity.

Temples v. Temples, 70 Ga. 480.

Emma Jones took this land in possession by an exchange; her equity is perfect, and a due administration on this property as the property of Emma Jones, and a sale of it by the administrator after due and legal notice, and no claim having been interposed by Phillips, would operate in such case as a legal and complete estoppel against Phillips.

Code, § 3753 (2906); Hill v. Williams, 33 Ga. 39; Lynch v. Lively, 32 Ga. 575; Tompkins v. Philips, 12 Ga. 52; Means v. Sanders, 14 Ga. 113; Burkhalter v. Edwards, 16 Ga. 593, 60 Am. Dec. 744; Goodson v. Beacham, 24 Ga. 150; Roe v. Doe, 31 Ga. 544.

When Wash Holland, as administrator of Emma Jones Woodley, sold the land, it was bought in by Allen Holland, and Phillips did not interpose any claim. He had notice from the several citations as prescribed by law, in Code, §§ 2559, 2560, 2561.

Emma Jones Woodley held the land adversely to Swift & Lamar, and against Burkhalter as administrator of Swift, and was holding adversely to Phillips at time of her death, and it was necessary for Burkhalter to have recovered the possession before he could make his deed as administrator of C. T. Swift, to Mrs. Lena B. Swift, the property being then held adversely to the estate by a third person.

Code, § 2564.

Messrs. Arnold & Broyles, for defendants in error:

Phillips & Co. were not parties to administration of Wash Holland on Emma Jones Woodley, and were not bound nor estopped by anything that might have been done by Wash Holland. Emma Jones Woodley never had any title, and her administrator could give none.

The bond for title, after having been assigned to Phillips, conveyed whatever interest the obligees had, and was properly admitted as against the obligees or those claiming under them.

Little, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The present suit was filed on August 14, 1894, and made returnable to the September term of Fulton superior court, which by law met on the first Monday in September, which Monday was the 3d day of that month. The cause coming on for a hearing, defendants' counsel moved to dismiss the 44 L. R. A.

same, on the ground that the suit had not been filed for the length of time required by law—that is, twenty days—before the sitting of the court for the September term. This motion was overruled, and is made a ground of exception in the motion for a new trial. The contention is that the Sunday preceding the sitting of the court on Monday cannot legally be counted in computing the number of days intervening between the filing of the petition and the commencement of the term of the court. This court has heretofore made a ruling directly on this point, which is adverse to the contention of the defendants' counsel. See the case of Merritt v. Gate City Nat. Bank, 100 Ga. 147, 38 L. R. A. 749, wherein it was ruled that, “under an act providing that all cases brought in a designated city court should be ‘returnable to and triable at the term next ensuing after twenty days have elapsed from the filing,’ a case in that court, the declaration in which was filed on the 12th day of June, 1894, was ripe for trial at the ensuing July term, which began on the first Monday of that month. This is true although the last of the twenty days prescribed by the statute in this instance fell upon the Sabbath day.” The effect of this ruling is that the Sundays intervening between the date of filing and the commencement of the term are to be counted.

2. Phillips brought an equitable petition involving a complaint in the nature of an action of ejectment against the defendants to recover possession of a house and lot in the city of Atlanta, and prayed, also, therein for other relief. Both plaintiff and defendants claimed title under C. T. Swift and H. J. Lamar, Jr. Phillips claimed under a bond for titles, executed by the last-named parties to one John Wright, conditioned to make title to him upon the payment of an aggregate sum in monthly instalments of given amounts. Upon this bond appears a transfer and assignment of the same by Wright to James M. Jones, who in turn transferred and assigned the same and all his rights thereunder to the plaintiff. He also relied for recovery on a deed from Burkhalter, as administrator of C. T. Swift, to Mrs. Lena B. Swift, under an order from the court of ordinary, conveying to her a half undivided interest in the land in dispute; and a deed from Mrs. Lena B. Swift and H. J. Lamar, Jr., conveying the land in question to himself. The defendants founded their claim upon the contention that during the lifetime of James Jones his wife, Emma, a daughter of Allen Holland, was the owner of another lot, and with the same, or its proceeds, traded with John Wright for the lot in controversy, and the bond for titles ought to have been transferred by Wright to her, as her money paid for it; that, after the death of James Jones, his wife, Emma, remained in possession of the lot in controversy until her death, she having in the meantime married defendant Woodley; and that after her death the land was administered upon as her estate, and regularly sold at administrator's sale to Allen Holland, under whom Charity Heard was in possession when the suit was brought. It was further contended that the transfer of the bond for title by James Jones to plaintiff was made only as security for a loan of $18, or some such sum of money. It appears that John Wright, the original obligee in, and James Jones, the intermediate transferee of, the bond for titles introduced in evidence by the plaintiff, were both dead at the time of the trial. During the progress of the trial Charity Heard and Allen Holland, defendants, were introduced as witnesses, and, among other things undertook to testify, respectively, as to certain transactions occurring between them and James Jones and John Wright during their lifetime, whereupon plaintiff's counsel objected to their testifying to anything that transpired between them and the deceased parties, for the reason, as urged, that plaintiff was claiming under said deceased parties, and Charity Heard and Allen Holland were parties to the suit, and therefore incompetent to testify concerning such transactions, under the provisions of the evidence act of 1889, as amended by subsequent acts; the provisions of all of which acts will be found codified in § 5269 of the Civil Code. The court below sustained the objection as made, and, we presume, rested his judgment upon the provisions of paragraph 1 of said section, the full text of which is as follows: "Where any suit is instituted or defended by a person insane at time of trial, or by an indorsee, assignee, transferee, or by the personal representative of a deceased person, the opposite party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor against the insane or deceased person, as to transactions or communications with such insane or deceased person." It will be noted that the plaintiff presented the bond for titles which had been transferred to him to Mrs. Lena B. Swift and H. J. Lamar, Jr., and upon payment by plaintiff of $225 as the balance due upon the purchase price to Swift and Lamar they executed to plaintiff a deed conveying the land in dispute, and it was this deed which formed the foundation of the present action. Phillips was claiming under and suing upon this deed. True enough, the bond for titles constituted a link in the chain of title exhibited to the court, and upon which Phillips's claim rested. It served, however, merely to show the channel through which the plaintiff derived the title upon which his claim was finally based. His suit was not founded upon the transfer or assignment of the bond for titles, nor was he suing as an assignee or transferee thereof, within the meaning of the statute. Although the bond and transfers were needful in showing his chain of title, and were, with respect to the gravamen of the action, collaterally involved, yet the suit was directly upon the deed from Swift and Lamar to the plaintiff. We think the provisions of the statute apply only in cases where the action is instituted or defended directly by an indorsee, assignee, or transferee; that is to say, where the indorsement, assignment, or transfer is directly sued upon or defended. We conclude, therefore, that the court erred in sustaining the objection to the competency of the witnesses heretofore referred to.

3. John Wright made a contract of purchase of the property in dispute from C. T. Swift and H. J. Lamar, Jr., taking their bond for titles, conditioned to make a conveyance of the property to him upon payment of the purchase price. Under this contract of purchase and bond for titles he was admitted by Swift and Lamar into possession of the premises. Wright afterwards transferred and assigned the bond to Jones, who in turn transferred and assigned the same to the plaintiff. Pending the outstanding of this bond for titles, and before its conditions had been complied with and title made, C. T. Swift, one of the joint obligors, died. Administration was regularly taken on his estate by one Burkhart, and, it appearing that his intestate and H. J. Lamar, Jr., were tenants in common of the property in controversy, Burkhart, as administrator, under an order of the court of ordinary, conveyed a half undivided interest in the land in dispute to Mrs. Lena B. Swift, who then, as has been shown, joined Lamar in a deed to the plaintiff in pursuance of the terms and conditions of the bond for titles previously executed by C. T. Swift and H. J. Lamar, Jr., and held by plaintiff in the manner heretofore pointed out. It does not appear that the administrator made any effort whatever to recover possession of this property from the obligee in the outstanding bond before making administrator's deed to Mrs. Lena B. Swift. Our Civil Code (§ 3457) provides that "an administrator cannot sell property held adversely to the estate by a third person; he must first recover possession." It has several times been ruled by this court that the possession of one holding under a bond for titles to land is not adverse to the obligor of the bond, or the representatives upon his estate, in the sense that such possession may be the foundation of a prescription as against such obligor or his estate. Hines v. Rutherford, 67 Ga. 606; Allen v. Napier, 75 Ga. 275; Hawkins v. Dearing, 93 Ga. 108. Indeed, a vendee under a bond or contract for conveyance, though placed in possession by the vendor, does not hold adversely to the latter. By the very fact of taking under a bond or contract for a deed to be thereafter executed by the vendor, a purchaser recognizes the title of the vendor, and acknowledges himself as holding in subordination, and not in antagonism, to it. 1 Warvelle, Vendors, 201. It must be understood, however, that the obligor or his personal representative is not at liberty to treat the obligee as holding in subordination to the title of the obligor for all purposes. The doctrine is well settled, and has been announced in strong terms by the Federal courts, that, while the vendor without deed is a trustee of the vendee for the conveyance of the title, and the vendee in turn a trustee for the payment of the purchase money, yet that the vendee is in no sense a trustee of the vendor as to the possession of the property sold; that the vendee claims and holds it in his own right, for his own benefit, subject to no right of the vendor save the terms which the contract imposes; and that his possession is therefore adverse as to the property, but friendly as to the performance of the conditions of the purchase. Id. 202; Hobart v. Drogan, 10 Pet. 108, 9 L. ed. 363. We are clearly of the opinion, therefore, that while the obligee in the bond from Swift and Lamar had, as to the latter, no such adverse possession of the premises as would enable him to acquire a prescriptive title thereunder, yet such possession was, within the meaning of our statute, adverse in the sense that a sale of any portion of the property by the administrator upon the estate of one of the obligors, pending such possession, and without first having recovered the possession as required by the statute, was void. It follows, therefore, so far as this record shows, that the legal title to an undivided half interest in the premises in dispute still remains in the estate of C. T. Swift, the administrator's deed to Mrs. Lena B. Swift being void, and consequently ineffectual to pass the title out of said estate. It being incumbent upon the plaintiff to recover upon the strength of his own title, and he having failed to exhibit title covering the undivided interest in the property belonging to the estate of C. T. Swift, the court erred in directing a verdict for the plaintiff covering the entire premises.

4. In addition to the questions above considered, the motion for new trial contains several assignments of error upon rulings made in the court below; but, in so far as these assignments of error are properly presented for consideration, there was no error of law committed except as herein pointed out.

Judgment reversed.

EXCHANGE BANK OF MACON, Plff. in Err.,
v.

Edward LOH, Admr., etc., of John D. Hudgins, Deceased, et al.

(104 Ga. 446.)

*1. A creditor has, for the purpose of indemnifying himself against loss, but for no other, an insurable interest in the life of his debtor.

2. This interest cannot exceed in amount that of the indebtedness to be secured. (a) Such indebtedness may, however, include the cost of taking out and keeping up the insurance, if made a charge against the debtor or his estate, or upon the proceeds of the policy when collected.

3. Courts should not concern themselves with the disposition of the proceeds of "wagering" policies.

*Headnotes by LUMPKIN, P. J.

NOTE.—As to insurable interest in debtor's life, see also Rittler v. Smith (Md.) 2 L. R. A. 844, and note; Ulrich v. Reinhoehl (Pa.) 13 L. R. A. 433, and note; Hays v. Lapeyre (La.) 35 L. R. A. 647, also Fisher v. Donovan (Neb.) post, 383.

As to right to take life insurance for benefit of a stranger, see Heinlein v. Imperial L. Ins. Co. (Mich.) 25 L. R. A. 627, and note. 44 L. R. A.

4. The evidence in the present case warranted a finding that the policy in question was not of this character, but that it was in good faith taken out by the insured himself, and by him assigned to his creditor as collateral security merely; and the judgment rendered was not contrary to law.

(July 18, 1898.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Bibb County to review a judgment refusing to adopt the suggestion of the Exchange Bank of Macon as to the method of marshaling securities held by it for a debt of Hudgins in a proceeding by Hudgins, administrator against creditors of the estate to marshal the assets. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Bacon, Miller, & Brunson, for plaintiff in error:

Life insurance is not a contract of indemnity, even when taken out by a creditor upon his debtor's life.

Rawls v. American Mut. L. Ins. Co. 27 N. Y. 282, 84 Am. Dec. 280; Ferguson v. Massachusetts Mut. L. Ins. Co. 32 Hun, 306; Olmsted v. Keyes, 85 N. Y. 593; Scott v. Northampton [1892] A. C. 1; Trenton Mut. L. & F. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 24 N. J. L. 576; Scott v. Dickson, 108 Pa. 6, 56 Am. Rep. 192.

The creditor has an insurable interest in the debtor's life as soon as the relation arises, and can take out insurance on such life to secure his debt, provided the amount of insurance bears a reasonable relation to the amount of the debt.

Olmsted v. Keyes, 85 N. Y. 593; Hearing's Succession, 26 La. Ann. 326; Grant v. Kline, 115 Pa. 618. See also Dalby v. India & L. Life Assur. Co. 15 C. B. 365; Morrell v. Trenton Mut. L. & F. Ins. Co. 10 Cush. 282, 57 Am. Dec. 92.

The relation of debtor and creditor need only exist at the time the insurance is taken out, and the contract is not affected by the subsequent payment of the debt by the debtor prior to his death.

Rawls v. American Mut. L. Ins. Co. 27 N. Y. 282, 84 Am. Dec. 280; Wright v. Mutual Ben. Life Asso. of America, 118 N. Y. 237, 6 L. R. A. 731; Mowry v. Home L. Ins. Co. 9 R. I. 346.

Where the creditor himself insures the life of his debtor in a reasonable amount for the purpose of securing his debt, and the debtor is not liable either to the creditor or the company for the premiums, the creditor is entitled to the entire fund upon the death of the debtor.

Amick v. Butler, 111 Ind. 578, 60 Am. Rep. 722; Rittler v. Smith, 70 Md. 261, 2 L. R. A. 844; Corson's Appeal, 113 Pa. 438, 57 Am. Rep. 479; Ulrich v. Reinhoehl, 143 Pa. 238, 13 L. R. A. 433; Grant v. Kline, 115 Pa. 618; Morland v. Isaac, 20 Beav. 389; Fremer v. Brade, 2 DeG. & J. 582; Levy v. Taylor, 66 Tex. 654; Lewis v. King, 44 L. J. Ch. N. S. 259; Bruce v. Garden, L. R. 5 Ch. 32; Central Nat. Bank v. Hume, 128 U. S. 204, 32 L. ed. 375.

Messrs. Hardeman, Davis, & Turner, for defendants in error:

Originally at common law the contract of life insurance might be supported without any insurable interest in the life of the insured.

1 May, Ins. 3d ed. §§ 116, 374.

The courts of the United States refused to adopt this principle of the common law. Insurance upon the life of another by one who has no interest in the life of the assured is prohibited, and such policies are void.

Code, §§ 2090-2114; 1 May, Ins. 3d ed. §§ 74, 75b, 117.

Such a policy is void because it is contrary to public policy.

1 May, Ins. 3d ed. §§ 74, 75.

Authorities are conflicting as to whether a person without interest in the life of the assured can legally hold by assignment a policy legally issued. The better authority, however, seems to be that for the same reason why one cannot take out a policy upon the life of one in whom he had no interest he cannot legally hold said policy by assignment.

Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 775, 26 L. ed. 924; Equitable L. Ins. Co. v. Hazlewood, 75 Tex. 338, 7 L. R. A. 217.

A creditor has an interest in the life of his debtor, but his interest extends only to the amount of his debt; hence as between the creditor and his debtor he is entitled to insurance only for indemnity.

Knox v. Turner, 21 L. T. N. S. 701, L. R. 9 Eq. 155; 1 May, Ins. 3d ed. §§ 2, 7, 8; Cammack v. Lewis, 15 Wall. 643, 21 L. ed. 244.

When the insurance contracted for is legal at its inception, it ought not to become void by the cessation of the assured party's interest in the life of the insured, for the reason that, the company having received its premiums with full notice of the facts it ought to be compelled to comply with its contract.

Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U. S. 457, 24 L. ed. 251; Equitable L. Ins. Co. v. Hazlewood, 75 Tex. 338, 7 L. R. A. 217.

But when the insured's interest in the life has ceased, as, for instance, a creditor whose debt has been paid, he cannot recover for himself upon the policy, for that would be allowing him to do by indirection what public policy forbids him to do directly, to wit, carrying insurance upon the life of a person in whom he has no interest.

1 May, Ins. 3d ed. §§ 100-100a; Crotty v. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. 144 U. S. 621, 36 L. ed. 566.

When the interest of the insured in the life of the assured ceases, what should become of the policy? It being legal and valid in its inception the law will, presuming that there was no intention to defraud the insurance company, cast the policy upon the assignee as trustee for the estate of the assured, and will require said trustee, after reimbursing himself for all expenses, to pay the balance to the estate of the insured, on the principle that it is merely carrying out 44 L. R. A.

what was the real intention of the parties at the time of making the contract.

2 May, Ins. 3d ed. § 459a; Cheeves v. Anders, 87 Tex. 287; Cammack v. Lewis, 15 Wall. 643, 21 L. ed. 244; Page v. Burnstine, 102 U. S. 664, 26 L. ed. 268; Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 775, 26 L. ed. 924; Equitable L. Ins. Co. v. Hazlewood, 75 Tex. 338, 7 L. R. A. 217.

This rule is true justice.

Seigrist v. Schmoltz, 113 Pa. 326.

We have found no decision that would allow the creditor to do as the Exchange Bank insists it has the right to do,—to hold the amount collected upon the policy and to make the estate pay the debt in addition.

Lea v. Hinton, 5 DeG. M. & G. 823; Es parte Andrews, 1 Madd. 573.

If a creditor has that right he would have a double temptation to the commission of a crime,—to collect his debt twice, and surely this would be against the policy of the law.

1 May, Ins. 3d ed. § 100a.

Messrs. Ryals & Stone, Hill, Harris, & Birch, Steed & Wimberly, A. W. Lane, Guerry & Hall, Dessau, Bartlett, & Ellis, Dasher, Park, & Gerdine, Morcock & Warren, and L. D. Moore also for defendants in error.

Lumpkin, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is provided in § 2114 of our Civil Code that a policy of life insurance may lawfully be taken out only upon the life "of the assured, or of another in whose continuance the assured has an interest." It is well settled that a creditor has an insurable interest in the life of his debtor, but the nature and extent of this interest have become a seriously complicated question. Much of the confusion now surrounding this subject is, we think, attributable to two erroneous views which have been entertained and announced by quite a number of the most respectable courts and judges in this country. The first is that a contract effecting insurance upon the life of a debtor for the benefit of a creditor is not a contract of indemnity; and the second is that the creditor's insurable interest in the debtor's life is not confined strictly to the amount of the indebtedness to be secured. Before proceeding further, it may be remarked that the form in which the transaction is clothed is utterly immaterial. It makes not a particle of difference whether the policy be payable to the insured, or his estate, with an assignment to the creditor, or payable directly to the creditor as the nominated beneficiary. The real thing to be ascertained in any given instance is, what was the actual object of the parties, for by this test alone is the legality of what they did to be determined.

1. Our first proposition is that effecting insurance for the purpose of securing an indebtedness is a contract of indemnity, and nothing else. We have the utmost confidence in the correctness of this assertion. Indemnity is the only logical end to be attained by a transaction of this kind. What possible right has a creditor to be the beneficiary of such insurance except to protect himself against loss? And what is such protection, if not indemnity? Notwithstanding the fact that eminent jurists have held otherwise than as above laid down we cannot help thinking that this is a very plain proposition, and one as to which there ought to be no serious difference of opinion. We will cite a few of the great array of authorities which we could produce in support of our position, making, as we proceed, such comments as may seem appropriate.

In Godsall v. Boldero, 9 East, 72, we find the following: "A creditor may insure the life of his debtor to the extent of his debt, but such a contract is substantially a contract of indemnity against the loss of the debt." Lord Ellenborough said: "This assurance . . . is, in its nature, a contract of indemnity, as distinguished from a contract by way of gaming or wagering"; and, in this connection, he quoted a pertinent extract from Lord Mansfield's opinion in Hamilton v. Mendes, 2 Burr. 1210. It is true that in the latter case Lord Mansfield was dealing with a case of marine insurance, and it is also true that the Godsall Case was subsequently overruled; but it is apparent that Lord Ellenborough thought the doctrine of the marine insurance case was applicable to the life insurance case which he had under consideration; and in this view we concur. Whenever it is admitted that a contract of life insurance made for the benefit of a creditor is not one having indemnity for its object, we necessarily stamp it as a purely wagering contract. There is much reason for the position that even ordinary contracts of life insurance, whereby a man insures his own life for the benefit of those dependent upon him, are contracts for indemnity merely; but we do not care to enter upon a discussion of this question, or assail the great current of authority tending to establish the contrary, this being a matter not involved in the case now before us. Accordingly, we will adhere strictly to our text, which is that life insurance effected to secure a debt is, and can be, for nothing else but indemnity against loss. A creditor secured by a policy of marine or fire insurance can collect thereon, for his own benefit, so much only as will save him from actual loss; the precise amount of which is easy of ascertainment. The interest of a creditor holding as security a life policy can be as readily computed in dollars and cents, being properly measured by the amount of the debt, which, as we shall, before concluding, endeavor to show, constitutes the sole basis of his insurable interest. How, then, can it be said that it would be against public policy to allow a creditor to speculate upon the mere chance of property being destroyed by the dangers of the sea or by fire, and not equally repugnant to public policy for him to speculate upon the life of a fellow creature? And if the creditor protected by the life policy can lawfully stipulate for anything more than indemnity, what prevents the transaction from being a speculation, pure and simple? We are at a loss to perceive any rational distinction between life and marine or fire insurance in so far as the 44 L. R. A.

supposed right of a creditor to effect insurance beyond the extent of his insurable interest is concerned. Surely, in view of § 2117 of our Civil Code, which declares that the principles governing "fire insurance, wherever applicable, are equally the law of life insurance," this court would not be justified in giving recognition to any such intangible and specious distinction.

In Porter, Ins. 2d ed. p. 13, it is said that a creditor who insures his debtor's life "obtains a contract of indemnity against the loss of his debt by the death of the debtor before it has been paid," and that "in such a case the debt is not a mere excuse for the policy, but the securing of the debt, or indemnification against its possible loss, is the reason for the insurance being effected." This author says that Lords Mansfield and Ellenborough "both undoubtedly considered that insurance sur autre vie was a contract of indemnity," and that the case in 9 East was decided upon this view. He then refers to the fact that this case was overruled in Dalby v. India & L. Life Assur. Co. 24 L. J. C. P. N. S. 2, 15 C. B. 365, and Law v. London Indisputable Life Policy Co. 24 L. J. Ch. N. S. 196, 1 Kay & J. 223, and asserts that the decision in the first of these two latter cases was based upon a misinterpretation of the English "gambling act," and divers misconceptions of the real nature of a contract of life insurance effected for securing a creditor. See Porter, Ins. 2d ed. pp. 14, 15. On page 17 he states that a policy of insurance taken out by a man on his own life has been settled not to be a contract of indemnity, "but to be a contract by the insurer to pay a certain sum on the happening of a given event,—usually the death of the assured, or his attaining a certain age,—and the sum will not vary with reference to the greatness or smallness of the loss to the family of the assured." This alleged distinction between ordinary life insurance which a man takes out for the benefit of his family and that taken out for, or assigned to, a creditor for his protection, was recognized as correct by the Supreme Court of the United States in Central Nat. Bank v. Hume, 128 U. S. 195, 32 L. ed. 370, but it was therein distinctly laid down that the latter was a contract of indemnity. Mr. Chief Justice Fuller said (page 205, 128 U. S. 32 L. ed. 375); "Marine and fire insurance is considered as strictly an indemnity; but while this is not so as to life insurance, which is simply a contract, so far as the company is concerned, to pay a certain sum of money upon the occurrence of an event which is sure at some time to happen, in consideration of the payment of the premiums stipulated, nevertheless the contract is also a contract of indemnity. If the creditor insures the life of his debtor, he is thereby indemnified against the loss of his debt by the death of the debtor before payment." This high court had previously, in at least one case, recognized the correctness of the doctrine that life insurance for a creditor's benefit was a contract for his indemnity. "In cases where the insurance is effected merely by way of indemnity,—as where a creditor insures the life of his debtor for the purpose of securing his debt,—the amount of insurable interest is the amount of the debt.” Mr. Justice Bradley, in Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U. S. 461, 462, 24 L. ed. 254. An assignment of a life insurance policy for the purpose of securing a creditor is “for his indemnity.” 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 648. “A creditor’s claim upon the proceeds of insurance intended to secure the debt should go no further than indemnity, and all beyond the debt, premiums, and expenses should go to the debtor and his representative, or remain with the company, according as the insurance is upon life or on property.” 2 May, Ins. 3d ed. § 459a.

In view of the foregoing authorities and of the sound sense and reason of the rule they lay down on this subject, it is difficult to understand how there can be any doubt that an insurance policy upon a debtor’s life, held by a creditor as security for a debt, is simply and merely, so far as the latter is concerned, a contract for indemnifying him against loss. To our minds, no other view of this matter can be accepted as sound. We could, as already intimated, produce many citations to the same effect as those appearing above, but we do not think this is necessary, for we are satisfied that, if our first proposition really required demonstration, it stands proved.

2. A single step carries us easily and naturally to the next proposition we are to consider, which is that the insurable interest which a creditor has in the life of his debtor cannot exceed in amount that of the indebtedness to be secured. Before proceeding with this discussion, we will briefly explain the meaning of the word “indebtedness,” as here used. We wish to be understood as employing it in a liberal sense, and, accordingly, as holding that it may embrace, not only a debt or debts actually existing when the insurance is taken out by the debtor, or is thereafter assigned to the creditor, but also additional indebtedness to arise upon the making of further loans or advances by the creditor to the debtor; such, for instance, as cash for premiums to be paid in obtaining the policy, or in keeping it alive. Manifestly, if expenses thus incurred by the creditor are made a charge against the debtor or his estate, the creditor may, by agreement, hold the policy as security therefor, and look to its proceeds for his reimbursement. The same is also true if such expenses, though not made a debt generally against the debtor or his estate, are made a charge upon the money to be realized from the policy; for this, in effect, is making the cost of the insurance ultimately payable out of a fund which in law primarily belongs to the debtor’s estate subject to the creditor’s right to so much thereof as he is entitled to receive upon his secured claim or claims against the deceased. A creditor cannot, however, rightfully appropriate the proceeds of a policy held by him as a collateral security to the repayment to himself of sums voluntarily paid by him for premiums for which the debtor was in no way liable, and 44 L. R. A.

which could not lawfully be made a demand against his estate or its assets. If a creditor desired protection by way of insurance upon his debtor’s life, and chose to pay for it himself, this would be proper enough; but the insurance would be available to the creditor to no greater extent than the amount of his insurable interest at the time the insurance was effected, viz., the amount of the then existing indebtedness.

We will now undertake to show that, whenever it is attempted to give to a creditor any greater insurable interest in a debtor’s life, the transaction becomes a wagering contract. If one cannot, for his own benefit, insure a life in which he has no interest at all, why does not insurance for a creditor’s benefit, when effected for anything beyond indemnity,—the right to which gives the creditor his insurable interest,—stand upon the same footing? Whenever a creditor undertakes to stipulate for more than the amount of his just demands, what distinguishes the transaction from a wagering contract, pure and simple, having for its object speculative gain? If he can lawfully take one dollar more than the amount of his debt, why can he not take any number of dollars within the limits of the policy? Where, and upon what principle, is the line to be drawn? An examination of scores of cases bearing upon every conceivable phase of these questions has satisfied us that it has become a difficult, if not an impossible, task to make the daylight of truth shine so clearly upon the complicated and conflicting mass of decisions as to bring into clear view the correct rule relating to this class of insurance. A hurried examination of the cases cited in this opinion would disclose that the courts of this country have indulged in quite a variety of holdings thereon. An exhaustive list of all the cases touching upon the subject, with even a brief comment upon each, would unduly expand this opinion, if, indeed, it did not make it fill a volume of our reports. The language quoted supra from the opinion of Mr. Justice Bradley in the case cited from 94 U. S. shows that he thought the amount of the creditor’s insurable interest was to be measured by the amount of the debt. In Roller v. Moore, 86 Va. 517, 518, 6 L. R. A. 136, Lacy, J., said: “To the extent in which the assignee stipulates for the proceeds of the policy beyond the sums advanced by him, he stands in the position of one holding a wager policy.” The supreme court of Tennessee, in Rison v. Wilkerson, 3 Sneed, 565, held that a creditor to whom had been assigned a policy issued to his debtor could retain of its proceeds no more than the amount of the original debt and certain premiums paid by the creditor to keep the policy alive. Coon v. Swan, 30 Vt. 6, is a case supporting the doctrine that a creditor cannot lawfully keep any more of the proceeds of a policy insuring a debtor’s life, and collected by the former, than the amount actually due by the debtor, although the policy was payable to the creditor, and the contract between the parties undoubtedly contemplated that the creditor might make a profit by the transaction. In Cheeves

v. Anders, 37 Tex. 287, it was held that "the limit of interest of a creditor in a policy upon the life of his debtor is the amount of such debt and interest, plus amount expended to preserve the policy, with interest thereon." The following are extracts from 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law: "Where the assignment is for the purpose of securing a creditor, although he is entitled to recover the face of the policy, he cannot hold what is not necessary for his indemnity. The legal representatives of the debtor will be entitled to the balance." Page 648. "Where insurance is effected on the life of a debtor in favor of a creditor, whether by the debtor himself or the creditor, and whether the premiums are paid by the debtor or the creditor, the latter, on the death of the former, is entitled to the amount of his debt and premiums, and the representatives of the debtor to the balance of the proceeds of the policy." Page 653. Bacon, in his work on Benefit Societies and Life Insurance, vol. 1, 2d ed. § 250a, says: "A creditor has an insurable interest in the life of his debtor, and can insure the life of the debtor without his consent, but such interest is limited to the amount of the debt." And see, in this connection, 2 May, Ins. 3d ed. § 459a, cited supra.

Giving to the word "indebtedness" the comprehensiveness above indicated, the following cases all to some extent sustain the rule for which we are contending,—that the creditor's insurable interest in the debtor's life cannot exceed the amount of the secured indebtedness: American Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Robertshaw, 26 Pa. 189; Downey v. Hoffer, 110 Pa. 109; Ruth v. Katterman, 112 Pa. 251; Seigrist v. Schmoltz, 113 Pa. 326; Schonfeld v. Turner, 75 Tex. 324, 7 L. R. A. 189; Equitable L. Ins. Co. v. Hazlewood, 75 Tex. 338, 7 L. R. A. 217; Cawthon v. Perry, 76 Tex. 383; Lewy v. Gilliard, 76 Tex. 400; Goldbaum v. Blum, 79 Tex. 638; Helmetag v. Miller, 76 Ala. 183, 52 Am. Rep. 316; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. O'Brien, 92 Mich. 584; Cammaek v. Lewis, 15 Wall. 643, 21 L. ed. 244; Page v. Burnstine, 102 U. S. 664, 26 L. ed. 268; Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 775, 26 L. ed. 924. We do not, however, wish to be understood as asserting that these cases are closely in point, or as concurring in all of the rulings therein made,—certainly not in those whereby the courts undertook the distribution of funds arising from the collection of wagering policies. It is not essential to our present purpose to analyze these cases, discuss the various questions dealt with therein, or point out specifically the conclusions to which we do not assent. Without undertaking to do this, we simply cite them as containing decisions and dicta which, to a greater or less extent, recognize the correctness of our present contention. In the highest courts of at least two states—Maryland and Pennsylvania—efforts have been made to establish the proposition that a creditor may lawfully have insurance upon the life of his debtor in an amount greater than that of the debt secured, provided there is not a "gross disproportion" between these two amounts. The 44 L. R. A.

case of Rittler v. Smith, 70 Md. 261, 2 L. R. A. 844, was a suit by the administratrix of the insured to recover of a creditor the excess remaining in his hands after satisfying all his demands against the insured. It appears that the creditor, of his own motion, insured the life of his debtor, and paid all premiums. The debt was $1,000. The policies, on their face, amounted to $6,500, but, owing to certain stipulations therein, only $2,124.82 was collected. The surplus amounted to $474.53. The policies were issued in the name of the creditor, and, so far as appears, there was no understanding, express or implied, between him and his debtor, that the latter was, in any event, to have any interest in the policies or their proceeds. The court held that the creditor was entitled to the surplus. The decision was based on the ground that the creditor had a right to procure a policy on the life of his debtor, provided there was not "such a gross disproportion between the debt and the amount of the policy as to stamp the transaction with want of good faith, and as a mere speculation or wager," and that, accordingly, the entire proceeds of the policy belonged to the creditor. Such a "rule" would seem entirely too loose, and itself too "speculative," to admit of anything like a reasonable and practical application, even if it is to be considered as resting upon sound doctrine, rather than as repugnant to the spirit, if not directly opposed to the letter, of the law in regard to wagering contracts. The supreme court of Pennsylvania, in the case of Cooper v. Shaeffer, 11 Atl. 548 [9 Cent. Rep. 601, 20 W. N. C. 123,] held that, "where the disproportion between the amount of a policy taken out by a creditor on the life of his debtor and the debt thereby secured is very great,—as where the insurance is $3,000 and the debt $100,—it is the duty of the court to declare the transaction a wager, as matter of law." This case does not appear in the Pennsylvania state reports. In the opinion, Sterrett, J., characterizes as "a just and practical rule" a suggestion which Paxson, J., speaking for himself, had made in Grant v. Kline, 115 Pa. 618, to the effect that a policy taken out by a creditor on the life of his debtor ought to be limited to the amount of the debt, with interest, and the amount of premiums, with interest thereon, during the expectancy of the life of the insured, according to the Carlisle Tables. In the subsequent case of Ulrich v. Reinoehl, 143 Pa. 238, 13 L. R. A. 433, a policy for $3,000 was assigned to a creditor, absolutely, to secure a debt of $110.02. The creditor at the trial offered evidence to show the expectancy of the deceased according to the Carlisle Tables, and expert testimony going to prove that, had deceased lived up to such expectancy, the total amount invested in the policy would have been $4,336.31. In the opinion, which was delivered by the learned jurist last mentioned, he having in the meantime become chief justice, he undertakes to prove the correctness of the above-mentioned "rule"; it being thus stated: "A creditor may lawfully take out a policy of insurance on the life of his debtor in an amount sufficient to cover the debt, with interest, and the cost of such insurance with interest thereon, during the period of the debtor's expectancy of life according to the Carlisle Tables; but, if such amount be exceeded, the policy may be a wagering transaction." The substance of the argument embodied in the opinion is that, if the principal and interest of the debt secured, the aggregate sum of the premiums which would have to be paid during the entire period of the expectancy of the insured, in case he lived out the same, and the interest on such premiums, would, all together, amount to a sum greater than the face of the policy, it would not be a wagering contract, but would be one if the chances were that the insured would not live out his expectancy, and there would be a consequent probability that the proceeds of the policy would exceed a sum representing the total cost of the policy and the amount of the debt. Among other things urged in support of the views above outlined, Chief Justice Paxson says: "It seems clear upon reason that the creditor may take out a policy in excess of his debt. But to what excess? The answer to this question obviously depends upon circumstances. An important element in the consideration of this question is the age of the assured. The difference between a policy on the life of a man twenty-five years of age and one of seventy-five is clear to the dullest understanding. The assured was only forty-two years of age, and his expectancy of life was twenty-six years. The chances were greatly in favor of his living out his expectancy. The Carlisle Tables were prepared with care by competent experts, and are the result of actual experience. I am therefore justified in saying that the chances were in favor of the assured living out his expectancy, in which case there would be the loss of interest on the debt for twenty-six years, added to the dues and assessments, with interest thereon for the same period. The evidence shows that, in such event, the defendants would have been losers by a considerable sum. In fact I infer from the tables furnished that after about seventeen years the defendants would have carried this policy at a loss. The defendants assumed this risk when they took out the policy. They also had the chance of the assured not living out his expectancy. This is a risk which an insurance company assumes upon every policy which it issues. In a particular instance the assured may live many years beyond his expectancy which is a large gain to the company. But this gain is equalized by the loss in instances where the assured dies before the expiration of his expectancy, so that, in the vast volume of business of such corporations, the average result is reasonably uniform. But the holder of a single policy can have no average result. He takes the risks with the chances fairly balanced." With the utmost respect we think this is fallacious reasoning. As stated by the distinguished chief justice, "All life insurance is, in one sense, speculative," and this remark applies to every policy. It is radically erroneous to say that one average man has a greater or a less chance to live out his expectancy than another. The man of forty-two is no more apt to live out his expectancy of twenty-six years than the man of seventy-five is to live out his expectancy of seven years. Life insurance premiums are fixed relatively to the different ages and expectancies of the persons insured, and every company whose business is conducted on sound principles proceeds upon the theory that it must be the gainer in every risk where the insured lives out his expectancy and all the premiums are paid. Some live longer and others shorter periods, but the company looks to the average, and on the average basis it must take in more than it pays out, or else ultimately fail. Clearly, therefore, in every instance of life insurance there is a chance for the insured, or the person paying the premiums, to pay in more than the policy will bring back; and, as a consequence, there can, under the doctrine announced in Pennsylvania, be no such thing as a wagering policy. The test that the amount of a policy taken out to secure a debt must not be out of proportion to the amount of the debt with added premiums and interest thereon will not stand scrutiny, for everyone carrying the burden of keeping up a life policy may, whether a debt be thereby secured or not, suffer loss by paying out more than is finally received on the policy. In the case of a man who insured his life for the benefit of his wife, and paid out in premiums more than the insurance company paid to her after his death, the loss would be the difference between the sum of the premiums, with interest, and the proceeds of the policy. If a creditor who held as collateral security a policy of life insurance, and paid the premiums under a contract with the debtor to be reimbursed therefor out of the fund to be realized by the payment of the policy, paid to the company more than it returned when the debtor died, which would inevitably be the case in the event the latter lived out his expectancy, and all premiums up to that time were duly met, this creditor, if the collateral was the only source to which he could look for satisfaction, would lose the difference between the amount received on the policy and the amount resulting from adding the sums representing the premiums, the interest thereon, and the debt; and this would be true whether the debt was great or small. If, for instance, one man loaned to another $10, and insured the latter's life in the sum of $50,000 to secure the debt, the creditor undertaking to pay the premiums, and the debtor (whether young or old) lived out his expectancy, and died, leaving no assets but the insurance money, the creditor would certainly lose the difference between the face of the policy and the sum of the premiums and the interest thereon, and would lose also the $10 and the interest on that sum. If the debt thus created was $25,000, the creditor's loss would, in that case, be greater by $24,990 and interest than in the other. There would be no difference in principle between the two cases. It is therefore to be regretted that the Pennsylvania court, while declaring that there should be

"a fixed rule" for determining when a creditor was and when he was not obtaining an "excess of insurance," did not succeed in evolving a more satisfactory one. The truth is, there can be no sound rule on the subject which does not recognize the truth of the proposition that whenever a creditor stipulates for receiving more than indemnity upon a policy insuring his debtor's life he is engaged in a speculative venture, the gain from which, if successful, would be represented by the excess of a sum derived from the policy over the amount of the "indebtedness" thereby secured.

Enough has been said to make it clear that, with our views of the question under discussion, we cannot follow as sound the decision rendered by the supreme court of Indiana in Amick v. Butler, 111 Ind. 578, 60 Am. Rep. 722, which was strongly relied on by the able counsel for the plaintiff in error. In that case the facts were as follows: "Frazee was indebted to Amick in the sum of about $600." It was agreed between them that the creditor should take out a policy for $2,000 in an assessment benefit association upon the life of the debtor, paying all expenses and premiums. This was done, the policy as issued naming the creditor, his heirs and assigns, as beneficiaries. "At the time the policy was issued it was orally agreed that if Frazee should at any time thereafter pay his indebtedness, and reimburse Amick for the cost of obtaining the policy and carrying the insurance, the latter would turn over the policy to the former." It did not appear, however, that there was any express understanding between them as to the disposition of the surplus (if any) after the death of the insured, in the event he had not paid off such demands. The creditor having collected the entire sum due upon the policy upon the death of his debtor, the latter's administrator brought an action to recover the surplus, which amounted to $1,259.58." The court took the position that no intention to enter into a wagering contract was shown; that the policy belonged absolutely to the creditor, the stipulation as to paying off the debt not having been complied with by the debtor prior to his death; and therefore no part of the proceeds thereof could be claimed by the administrator upon the theory that the creditor held the same as trustee. It would seem that without any great strain the court might have construed the contract to be for indemnity merely, for it was not necessary that there should be any express stipulation as to the distribution of the proceeds. On the contrary, nothing as to this having been specifically agreed to, the law would raise a constructive trust, rather than treat the contract as a wager. That, as construed by the court, it was a wager, pure and simple, seems evident. By the early death of the debtor the creditor won a clean stake of over $1,250; whereas, had the debtor continued to live insolvent to a ripe old age, the creditor would doubtless have lost a part or the whole of his entire debt, because forced to abandon his policy, or pay in assessments and premiums an amount equal to the whole face of the policy, which was only $2,000, and consequently could not, according to the rule as to "gross disproportion," be considered as evidencing an attempt and intent to gamble. For a just criticism on the decision, see, again, 2 May. Ins. p. 1055, § 459a.

44 L. R. A.

3. As already intimated, there are numerous cases in which the courts have dealt with life insurance policies as valid which ought, in our judgment, to have been treated as mere nullities. Some of these cases were actions against insurance companies upon what we regard as wagering policies, and others of them involved controversies over the proceeds of such policies which the insurance companies had voluntarily paid. No argument is required to show that, in cases of either character, the courts ought not to afford any relief whatever but should, in every instance, leave the parties exactly as they were before the litigation began. No court can properly concern itself with the enforcement of a contract which is contrary to public policy, and for that reason void, nor with the adjustment of alleged rights or equities growing out of such a contract. This doctrine is so thoroughly established and so universally recognized that it will not, we apprehend, be questioned; but it has evidently been too often overlooked by the courts in their efforts to do what they conceived to be "justice." Our Civil Code (§ 3668) declares that "a contract which is against the policy of the law cannot be enforced," and that "wagering contracts" are of this character. Whenever, therefore, it appears that a particular contract of life insurance falls within the prohibited class, no court of this state should have anything to do either with its enforcement or the distribution of its proceeds.

4. We will now apply the foregoing to the facts of the present case, a fair and accurate statement of which we find in the brief of counsel for the plaintiff in error, as follows: "John D. Hudgins was a merchant, residing in Macon, who had been carrying on there for many years a wholesale and retail liquor business. The Exchange Bank, plaintiff in error, had advanced him, at various times, large sums of money. In December, 1892, this indebtedness amounted to something over $10,000, for which the bank held Hudgins's notes. To secure the payment of this indebtedness, Hudgins had given to the bank certain mortgages on both his real and personal property, including his stock of liquors. To further secure the bank, he had also taken out a policy of insurance on his life for $1,000 in the Manhattan Life Insurance Company, and a policy for $5,000 in the New York Life Insurance Company, both of which policies were duly assigned by him to the bank; and upon both of these policies Hudgins himself paid the premiums. These policies were recognized by both parties as being the property of Hudgins, transferred by him to the bank as collateral security for his indebtedness. In the latter part of 1892 Hudgins applied to one Winship, who was the general agent in Georgia for the Equitable Life Insurance Company of New York, for a policy of $5,000. His application was duly forwarded to the home office, and upon the request or instruction of Winship, and without the request, or even the knowledge, of Hudgins, the company sent out to Winship two policies of $5,000 each on Hudgins's life. Upon the reception of the policies Winship endeavored to persuade Hudgins to take them both. Hudgins, however, would only accept the one for $5,000 for which he had applied, and declined to take or accept the second or additional policy for $5,000, and refused to pay the premiums due thereon, saying that the rate was so high he was not able to carry it. Upon this, Winship, knowing that Hudgins was indebted to the Exchange Bank, carried the second policy to J. W. Cabaniss, the cashier of the bank, stated to him the facts, and requested him to take the policy for the bank as a creditor of Hudgins, and pay the premiums thereon. This Cabaniss finally consented to do, provided Hudgins would execute the necessary assignment. This was done by Hudgins, Winship delivering the policy to the bank, and receiving from the bank the premium due thereon. Cabaniss had no conference or consultation with Hudgins about the transaction, either personally, by letter, or by messenger; and it was distinctly understood between Cabaniss, representing the bank, and Winship, representing the Equitable Life Insurance Company, that the policy was taken out by the bank for its own protection as a creditor of Hudgins, and that in no event was Hudgins to be liable for that premium, or any future premiums, either to the bank or to the insurance company. The demands for the subsequent premiums were made by the insurance company directly on the bank, and not against Hudgins, and they were paid by the bank, and were not charged against Hudgins upon the books of the bank, nor has any claim or demand ever been made by the bank for the payment of such premiums, either against Hudgins in his lifetime or against his estate. On the 12th day of March, 1894, Hudgins died intestate, and Edward Loh was appointed his administrator. Upon examination by the administrator, Hudgins's estate was found to be hopelessly insolvent, and on August 3, 1895, the administrator filed his equitable petition in Bibb superior court against the Exchange Bank and the various other creditors of Hudgins to marshal the assets of the estate, and to obtain the direction of the court as to the administration of the same. To this petition the Exchange Bank duly filed its answer, setting up the facts recited above. The case came on for trial on March 22, 1897, and by consent of all parties was heard by the presiding judge without the intervention of a jury. Upon the trial it appeared from the evidence that the debt of the Exchange Bank at that time amounted, principal and interest, to $12,228.94. It was also shown that the proceeds of the policies collected by the bank from the New York Life and the Manhattan Companies, with interest thereon to the date of the trial from the date of collection, amounted to $7,032.02, which left a 44 L. R. A.

balance due to the bank upon its claim of $5,196.92. Upon this balance of $5,196.92 the bank proposed to credit the net proceeds of the fund arising from the sale of the real and personal property, upon which it was admitted by all parties that the bank held the highest and best lien, and which fund amounted to $4,537.78. This would have left a balance still due to the bank from the Hudgins estate of $658.74, upon which final balance the bank proposed to credit a sufficiency of the net proceeds derived from the Equitable insurance policy to pay the same, and that it should retain as its own property the entire balance of the fund derived from such policy in the Equitable Company. The court refused, however, to allow the Exchange Bank to apply upon its claim any portion of the fund derived from the sale of the mortgaged properties until the bank had first applied as a credit upon its claim the entire proceeds of the fund derived from the Equitable policy; the court finding in its decree that, after making such credit of the Equitable fund, the estate would still be indebted to the Exchange Bank $280.46, which the court decreed to be the highest and best lien to that extent, and no more, upon the fund of $4,537.78, derived from the sale of the mortgaged properties. To be entirely clear, the exact ruling of the court on this point is given in the following language, quoted verbatim from the decree: "The court holding, finding, and decreeing that the proceeds of such Equitable insurance policy, after first reimbursing the bank for the premiums paid by it, with interest thereon, is the property of said intestate, Hudgins, and not the property of said Exchange Bank, and must, therefore, be credited upon the bank claim as above directed." It is only necessary to add that the insurance policy in question was payable to the estate of Hudgins, and that Cabaniss, the cashier, testified as follows: "What induced me to take out this third policy was the fact that the bank was practically carrying Mr. Hudgins's business, and had been for two or three years, probably longer, and his business had been getting worse, and I wanted all the protection that I could get in the carrying of his business, and I took this as additional protection." In answer to the question, "To what extent were you influenced in the taking out of that policy as an investment?" he said: "I regarded it as a good investment. He was quite an old man, and, in the ordinary course of life, would probably not live very long; and I thought, even as an investment, it would do to take."

From the foregoing it appears that there can be no dispute as to the following facts: (1) Hudgins was largely indebted to the bank, and, prior to the issuing of this policy, had assigned to it, as collateral security for his indebtedness, two other policies. (2) After this policy had been issued, he refused to accept it, when first tendered to him by the agent of the company. (3) Subsequently, he did accept it, for he could not have assigned it to the bank without so doing. (4) He made an absolute assignment of the policy to the bank. (5) The bank paid the first premium, and took the policy for its protection as a creditor of Hudgins, the cashier also having in mind at the time that the policy was a good investment. (6) The bank paid all the premiums which accrued upon the policy before the death of Hudgins. They were not charged to him upon its books, nor was any demand ever made upon him or his estate for the payment of these premiums. If the assignment of the policy was made and accepted simply to place the bank in the same attitude as it would have occupied had it upon its own responsibility, at its own expense, and for its own benefit, applied for and obtained a policy upon the life of Hudgins, payable to itself, and in which neither he nor his estate was to have any interest or concern, it was a wagering contract. But if Hudgins assigned the policy to the bank, and it accepted the same as a collateral security for his existing indebtedness, and for the further purpose of securing the repayment to the bank out of the proceeds of the policy of all sums advanced for premiums, the transaction was a lawful and proper one. The form in which the transaction was clothed is, as above stated, immaterial, the question at last being, what was the real intent and purpose of the parties? This case belongs to one or the other of the two classes just indicated. If to the former, the judgment under review was wrong for two reasons: (1) The estate of Hudgins had no interest in the proceeds of the disputed policy, because there was no privity of contract between him and the insurance company, or between him and the bank; and (2) the court should not have undertaken to dispose of or distribute the proceeds of a wagering or gaming contract. If, on the other hand, this case falls within the latter class, the judgment excepted to should be sustained.

In view of the facts as stated, did the evidence warrant the judge in finding that the transaction was lawful and valid? Or, to put the question in different form, did the evidence demand a finding that it was a wagering contract? The policy, being payable to the estate of Hudgins, purported to evidence a contract of insurance between himself and the insurance company; and the assignment of the policy to his creditor, the bank, could certainly have been made for a legitimate purpose. The writings, therefore, on their face, are perfectly consistent with the idea that the transaction which the parties had in mind was a lawful one, and the presumption of law would be that such was the fact. Does the parol evidence sustain or overcome this presumption? So far as relates to Hudgins, it is easy to conclude that he simply intended to supplement the security of like kind which he had already given to the bank, and that, being unable himself to pay the premiums, he was willing for the bank to do so, and get its reimbursement out of the proceeds of the policy. There is nothing in the testimony which expressly negatives such a purpose on the part of Hudgins, and there are many circumstances from which its existence may be inferred.

The next inquiry is, What was the bank's purpose in taking the assigned policy? Mr. Cabaniss explicitly testified that he was seeking to obtain "additional protection,"—that is, security; and, though he did regard the policy somewhat in the light of an investment, his testimony did not require a finding that he deliberately sought to have the contract so disguised that it would not, upon its face, show what was the real truth of the matter, or that his purpose was to evade the law against gaming by any concealment or artifice. On the contrary, it would seem that he accepted the assignment of the policy for no improper purpose, but may have been mistaken as to what legal rights would thereby be secured to the bank. Neither any private understanding between the insurance agent and the cashier nor the latter's opinion (if he entertained it) that the proceeds of the policy would belong exclusively to the bank, could affect Hudgins or his estate. A secret purpose entertained by one party to a contract but not disclosed to the other, does not bind the latter, for, obviously, as to this particular matter there was no "meeting of minds." Harris v. Amoskeag Lumber Co. 97 Ga. 465 (opinion, point 2), 469, 470, and authorities cited. It was certainly not shown that Hudgins made any agreement with the bank that he would claim no interest in the policy. Nor can it be said that by mere silence he assented that the assignment should vest an absolute and unconditional ownership of the policy in the bank, for it nowhere appears that any such idea on the part of the bank's representative was communicated to Hudgins, or that he had any direct dealings with the bank in regard to this particular insurance. If this purpose was that which, as we have attempted to show, could, under the evidence, be attributed to him, viz., to give additional collateral security to the bank, it is very reasonable to conclude that he might have understood that the cashier's purpose in procuring him to accept the last policy and assign the same to the bank was simply to increase its security by taking and holding this policy in the same way it did the others, the bank being willing to advance the premiums, and look for reimbursement solely to the proceeds of the policy, since he was unable himself to carry it. At any rate, the trial judge was warranted in reaching the conclusion that these parties did not enter into a scheme to furnish a cloak to a purely colorable transaction; and it follows that the rights of the parties are to be measured according to the terms of the contract as written, which evidences what purports to be a bona fide and entirely lawful transaction. Thus treated, the policy is without taint of illegality, and it was proper to limit the assignment to the object really intended to be thereby accomplished.
44 L. R. A.

In this immediate connection the case of Morland v. Isaac, 20 Beav. 389, is quite pertinent. In that case it appeared that Isaac, a tradesman, insured the life of his debtor, Walker, the policy being payable to the former. He charged the premiums to Walker, but the latter never paid them, nor does it appear that he ever expressly agreed to do so. Upon his death the court held "that his representatives were entitled to the produce of the policy after payment of the debt and premiums." Isaac himself "denied that any express agreement had ever been made between him and Walker either as to the amount to be insured (which was to be entirely at defendant's [Isaac's] discretion), or the ownership of the policy, or payment of the premiums; but it was clearly understood by the defendant [Isaac], and, he believed, also by Walker, that the policy was the defendant's [Isaac's], and, with respect to the payment of the premiums, that it should, in the first instance, be made by the defendant's [Isaac's] own absolute property." His "understanding and intention was, as he alleged, that if Walker should, in his lifetime, pay off the debt and premiums and expenses of insurance, he should be at liberty to do so, and in that case the defendant [Isaac] would either have dropped the insurance or transferred the policy to Walker." Isaac also stated that an entry of a charge in his account against Walker "for insurance was a mistake." The master of the rolls, taking into consideration the foregoing, and also the facts that Walker knew the insurance was to be effected, that he had attended the insurance office for this purpose, and that when Isaac's account with the item for insurance charged therein was delivered to him he did not complain, was of the opinion that, though Walker had never, in express terms, agreed to pay or become liable for the premiums, nor admitted liability therefor, the circumstances warranted the inference that he was so liable. Observed the master: "This matter depends on the contract between the parties. This, however, may either be expressed in writing or by parol, or it may be inferred from the acts and dealings between the parties, from which a contract between them may appear." It was accordingly held that the policy was simply a security for the debt and the premiums, and that the creditor was entitled to payment of these, and no more. It will be seen that this case in many respects resembles the one at bar, and is direct authority for the correctness of Judge Felton's judgment, if, as we think is true, he was warranted in finding, as matter of fact, that Hudgins, in assigning to the bank the policy in controversy, really intended merely to secure his existing indebtedness, and the premiums to be paid on the policy, expecting his estate to get the benefit of the surplus, if any. If this was what he intended, and the bank took the policy for the purpose of securing these claims, the mere opinion of its cashier (like that of Isaac in the case supra), that it would absolutely own the policy and its proceeds, would not alter the legal status of the matter.

As somewhat applicable to this branch of the discussion, we again refer to Helmetag v. Miller, 76 Ala. 183, 52 Am. Rep. 316, and Roller v. Moore, 86 Va. 512, 6 L. R. A. 136, cited supra. The following is extracted from the synopsis of the points decided in the latter case: "Assured made assignee an assignment absolute on its face of a policy of insurance on his life. The evidence, however, showed that in former transactions about the same matter the policy was held by assignee as security for advancements made by him for premiums and assessments on the policy. Held, the assignment was not a new contract between the parties and an absolute assignment, but it bore the impress of the original transactions, and stood merely as a security for the advances made by assignee." In our case, the previous dealings between Hudgins and the bank, in the course of which he had assigned to it policies of insurance as collateral security for his indebtedness to it, greatly strengthens the conclusion that he intended no more at the time of the last transaction, but that, being unable to pay the premium upon the policy then assigned, he expected the bank to advance the necessary amount, and look for reimbursement to the proceeds of this policy when collected. As all inferences in favor of the legality of a transaction are to be indulged, and as the conclusions of the judge below are sufficiently supported by evidence, the judgment rendered by him should be allowed to stand, especially as it is in direct accord with the justice and the equity of the case.

Judgment affirmed.

All concur, Little, J., specially.

NOTE.—In addition to the authorities cited in the foregoing opinion, see the following, which are more or less in point on several questions discussed: Gilman v. Curtis, 66 Cal. 116; Curtis v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 90 Cal. 245; Franklin L. Ins. Co. v. Hazard, 41 Ind. 116, 13 Am. Rep. 313; Hight v. Taylor, 97 Ind. 392; Walker v. Larkins, 127 Ind. 100; Missouri Valley L. Ins. Co. v. Sturges, 18 Kan. 93, 26 Am. Rep. 761; Tatum v. Ross, 150 Mass. 440; Ferguson v. Massachusetts Mut. L. Ins. Co. 32 Hun. 306; Racile v. American Mut. L. Ins. Co. 27 N. Y. 282, 84 Am. Dec. 280; Mattheus v. Sheehan, 69 N. Y. 585; Olmsted v. Keyes, 85 N. Y. 593; Wright v. Mutual Ben. Life Assn. of America, 118 N. Y. 237, 6 L. R. A. 731; Gilbert v. Moose, 104 Pa. 74, 49 Am. Rep. 570; Scott v. Dickson, 108 Pa. 6, 56 Am. Rep. 192; Clark v. Allen, 11 R. I. 439, 23 Am. Rep. 496; Rivers v. Gregg, 5 Rich. Eq. 274; Price v. Supreme Lodge K. of H. 68 Tex. 861; Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Williams, 79 Tex. 633; Crotty v. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. 144 U. S. 621, 36 L. ed. 566; 35 Am. L. Reg. 65-87, 161-183, and cases cited.

Little, J. (concurring specially):

I agree to the judgment of the court as being sound, and properly interpreting the rights of the parties, but I arrive at this conclusion for reasons different from those stated in the very able opinion rendered by Presiding Justice Lumpkin. It is not my purpose to enter into a discussion of the case. It has, from time to time, been considered by each of us with a great deal of care, and the authorities, which are numerous and conflicting, have been carefully examined. It will be seen by reference to the opinion of the majority of the court, that there are two propositions of law which form the basis for the conclusions reached. The first is that a contract effecting assurance upon the life of a debtor for the benefit of a creditor is a contract of indemnity. The second is that the creditor's insurable interest, in the debtor's life is confined to the amount of the indebtedness to be secured. I think that neither of these is a correct conclusion of law. Neither of these questions, in my judgment, properly arises under the circumstances of the case; but, meeting the proposition so broadly laid down that insurance (life) for the purpose of securing an indebtedness is a contract of indemnity, and nothing else, I have this to say: By our Civil Code (§ 2089) a contract of fire insurance is clearly made a contract of indemnity. And by § 2120 of our Civil Code a contract of marine insurance is, in terms, classed as a contract of indemnity. The definition of the contract of life insurance which is made by the Civil Code (§ 2114) is that it is a contract by which the insurer, for a stipulated sum, engages to pay a certain amount of money if another dies within the time limited by the policy. If such contracts derive any of the incidents which attach to contracts of indemnity, they must arise under principles of law which are not enunciated in our Code. It is true that § 2117 of the Civil Code declares that the principles stated in the Code in relation to fire insurance apply equally to the law of life insurance. Manifestly, however, reference is had to those legal principles which pertain generally to fire insurance, which can be made applicable to a contract of life insurance, and this provision in no way affects the definition or meaning of these two contracts. It is provided in the Code (§ 2114), in reference to contracts of life insurance, that the assured must have an interest in the continuation of the life insured, and both by text writers and adjudicated cases creditors have an insurable interest in the life of a debtor. Mr. Joyce, in his work on Insurance (vol. 1, § 26), says that "although the question of indemnity as related to life insurance has been prolific of much discussion by both text writers and the courts, yet the weight of authority is that life insurance is not a contract of indemnity." And this author then proceeds to discuss the question, referring to a large number of adjudicated cases to support the text. As a matter of law, numerous courts have held them to be contracts of this character, while a great many other courts of final resort have held the contrary of the proposition; and it seems to me that the latter are more in accordance with principle. A life is not, and cannot of itself be, a subject of valuation. Mr. Bunyon, in his work on Life Insurance (p. 7), says that such insurances are independent of the value of the subject-matter; and in the case of Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U. S. 457, 24 L. ed. 251, it is declared that "in life insurance the loss can seldom be measured by pecuniary values." The doctrine of indemnity contemplates that the insured shall be indemnified, but shall never be more than fully indemnified, for a loss. For instance, the contract of fire insurance only indemnifies the assured against any loss which he may sustain within an amount named by the policy. This affects property. The value of the property destroyed can be ascertained, and the contract is a pure and simple indemnification for the value of the property destroyed. The same applies to a contract of marine insurance; property is there also the subject-matter of the contract; and hence our Code treats these two contracts as contracts of indemnity. But a life is not property. It cannot be valued so as to afford indemnity. The following authorities collected by Mr. Joyce rule that a contract of life insurance is not a contract of indemnity. [Dalbly v. India & L. Life-Assur. Co.] 15 C. B. 365; Nye v. Grand Lodge, A. O. of U. W. 9 Ind. App. 139; [Law v. London Indisputable Life Policy Co.] 1 Kay & J. 228; [Whiting v. Independent Mut. Ins. Co.] 15 Md. 297; [Trenton Mut. L. & F. Ins. Co. v. Johnson], 24 N. J. L. 585; [Rauels v. American Mut. L. Ins. Co.] 27 N. Y. 282, 84 Am. Dec. 280; [Ferguson v. Massachusetts Mut. L. Ins. Co.] 32 Hun, 311, 102 N. Y. 647; [Mowry v. Home L. Ins. Co.] 9 R. I. 346; [Scott v. Dickson, 108 Pa. 6, 56 Am. Rep. 192; [Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Allen], 138 Mass. 27, 52 Am. Rep. 245; [Emerick v. Coakley], 35 Md. 188. For the doctrine that such contracts are not strictly contracts of indemnity, yet are in the nature of indemnity, where a creditor insures his debtor's life, the author refers to Bacon, Ben. Soc. § 163; Miller v. Eagle Life & Health Ins. Co. 2 E. D. Smith, 294. That they are not contracts of indemnity, such as fire and marine insurance contracts, he refers to Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Bailey, 13 Wall. 616, 20 L. ed. 501.

As to the second proposition, the majority of the court rules that, while a creditor, for the purpose of indemnifying himself against loss, has an insurable interest in the life of his debtor, this interest cannot exceed in amount that of the indebtedness to be insured against, although it may include the cost of taking out and keeping up the insurance. While I do not dissent from this ruling, the conclusion of the court, in my opinion, is put upon a wrong doctrine, which very many of the cases cited by Presiding Justice Lumpkin will prove. A creditor has an insurable interest in the life of his debtor, and the amount of the debt and the expense of taking out and keeping up the insurance must be the basis of the insurance; yet it is neither practicable nor essential to the validity of such a contract that the amount insured must exactly equal these sums. Indeed, it is impossible that it can be so. If one owes another $1,000, and the latter takes out a policy of insurance on the life of his debtor, while he is entitled to fix the amount at $1,000, and the interest thereon, and the cost of paying the premium and keeping up such insurance, yet, from the nature of things, it is impossible for the parties to agree on an exact amount which will represent these items. The insurer may have to pay premiums for a quarter of a century; he may not pay but one premium. The interest may run on the principal indebtedness for a year; it may run for twenty years. So that it is practically impossible to settle in advance on an amount which represents the principal and interest of the indebtedness and the cost of the insurance which will be due at the time of the death of the assured. It must be remembered that a contract of insurance must specify a given amount, must be made anterior to death, and, being so, the amount necessarily has to be fixed at a time when the pecuniary interest of the creditor in the life of his debtor cannot be ascertained. At the same time, in order to render the contract valid, it must not be a wagering policy. Therefore a contract is valid, and not subject to be attacked as a wagering policy, if the creditor insures for such a sum as, under all the circumstances, considering the amount of the debt, the expectancy of the debtor, the cost per annum of the insurance, which in good faith and by the exercise of reasonable judgment is estimated to cover the debt and the outlay. If it should so happen that by reason of the early death of the debtor the creditor receives a sum which actually exceeds the amount of the debt and expenses, that sum belongs to him; and, if not disproportionate originally, taking the debt as a basis, it is not a wagering contract, and the insurer would be held to perform it. I make no attempt to collect authorities which support this proposition. They are very numerous, and are to be found in all books on insurance which treat the subject.

A distinction must be drawn between a contract of insurance on his own life, made by one who is indebted to another, and who transfers the policy to his creditor for the security of his debt, and a contract which is made directly by the creditor with the insurer to insure the life of his debtor. In the first instance the contracting parties are the person whose life is insured and the insurer. In that case the creditor has no rights except such as may be given to him by the assignment of the policy. The object of the transfer is to secure the payment of the debt due the creditor. The assignment accomplishes nothing else; and if, by any means, the debt be paid prior to the decease of the debtor, the assignment has no force or effect, and the original contract is in force, and the beneficiaries named in the contract will take the proceeds of the policy. But where a creditor contracts directly with the insurance company for a policy on the life of his debtor, neither the debtor nor his representatives will at any time thereafter have any interest in that contract, nor, under any circumstances, would either of them be entitled to the proceeds of such contract, because the contractual relations exist between the creditor and the insurer independent of the debtor. In this case the Equitable Company issued a policy payable to the representatives of Hudgins, and the contract entered into, and upon which the money in question was collected, was that on the death of Hudgins the company agreed to pay to his representatives the amount named in the policy. The policy, under the usual rules, was assignable. Hudgins, according to the testimony, declined to enter into this contract; but the Exchange Bank, which was the creditor of Hudgins, agreed that it would pay the premiums if it could have the benefits. To this Hudgins agreed, and transferred the policy. As a creditor, while the bank had a right to make a direct contract with the company to insure the life of Hudgins, it did not do so, but it received the policy, which was payable to the representatives of Hudgins, by assignment. Under the law the bank was not entitled to receive out of the assigned policy more than the amount of its debt and the expenses of keeping up the insurance. This being the limited right of the creditor, when, after the death of Hudgins, the money was paid to it as the holder of the policy, what direction should be given to the remainder of the fund? The answer is had by reference to the original contract. That contract was an agreement to pay to the representative of Hudgins. It can make no difference who paid the premiums, except as to determine what amount the creditor should receive. That a creditor paid the premiums did not affect the contract. That contract required the company to pay the amount of the policy to the representative of Hudgins and by a legal assignment the company was directed to pay to the bank the amount of the policy. Under the law the only amount that the bank was entitled to retain when it so collected the sum agreed to be paid was its debt, interest, and the expense of maintaining the insurance, and by virtue of the terms of the contract the balance which remained after such payment must go to the representative of Hudgins's estate. As stated, I have not attempted to collect the numerous authorities which support the proposition here laid down, but have contented myself in giving the line of reasoning which brings me to the conclusion at which a majority of the court has arrived, and, differing as to the reasoning of the case, I concur in the judgment.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

Levi L. FISHER et al., Appts.,

v.
Lillian DONOVAN.

(.....Neb.....)

*1. To create a trust fund out of which

*Headnotes by SULLIVAN, J.

NOTE.—For creditors' insurable interest in life policies, see Exchange Bank v. Loh (Ga.) ante, 372, and footnote thereto.
44 L. R. A.

a trustee may make disbursements, the trustor must have some present or future right to, or interest in, the fund directed to be set apart.

2. A member of a fraternal beneficiary society has no such interest or property in the proceeds of a certificate therein that he can impress such proceeds with a trust in favor of his creditors.

3. A certificate in a fraternal beneficiary society is a mere expectancy, and the beneficiary has no vested right therein.

4. A member holding a certificate in a fraternal beneficiary society may, at his option, change the beneficiary therein, so long as he complies with the laws of such society and keeps within its limitations, and those of the statute under which it is organized.
5. Upon the death of a member holding a certificate in a fraternal beneficiary society, the money arising from such certificate vests absolutely in the beneficiary properly designated by the member.
6. Creditors have no right to, or interest in, a certificate in a fraternal beneficiary society, either before or after the death of the member, and they cannot participate in the fund derived therefrom.
7. The contrary not appearing, the statute of a sister state will be presumed to be similar to our own.
8. The rules and regulations of fraternal beneficiary societies for the creation and payment of their funds to the properly designated beneficiaries should receive such liberal construction as to carry out the benevolent purposes sought to be accomplished.
9. The promise of one party to pay the debt of another cannot be enforced unless such promise be in writing, signed by the party to be charged.

(January 5, 1899.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a decree of the District Court for Fillmore County in favor of defendants in an action brought to reach, for the benefit of creditors, certain moneys received as life insurance upon the life of Jere Donovan, deceased. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John D. Carson, for appellants:

A trust of personal property may be created by parol, and this being a trust of money the same rule will apply.

Allen v. Withrow, 110 U. S. 119, 28 L. ed. 90; Gilman v. McArdle, 99 N. Y. 451, 52 Am. Rep. 41; Ellis v. Secor, 31 Mich. 185, 18 Am. Rep. 178; Bostwick v. Mahaffy, 48 Mich. 342; 4 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. p. 3412.

Any language or words which show that the property or money shall be held for a purpose, or on behalf of another, will constitute a parol trust of personal property.

4 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. pp. 3409, 3410; Foot v. Foote, 58 Barb. 258; Chase v. Perley, 148 Mass. 289.

A verbal trust partially performed will be enforced in a court of equity.

Robbins v. Robbins, 89 N. Y. 251; 4 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. p. 3377.

A trustee who accepts a fund impressed with a trust is estopped to assert that she has not formally accepted the same, in an action brought to enforce the trust.

McBride v. McIntyre, 91 Mich. 406.

The money received by the defendant Lillian Donovan, on the policies of insurance carried upon the life of her husband is impressed with a trust, and should be applied by her for the payment of the debts enumerated by the deceased to be paid out of that fund.

Cobb v. Knight, 74 Me. 255; 4 Lawson, 44 L. R. A.

Rights, Rem. & Pr. p. 3414; Phipard v. Phipard, 55 Hun, 433.

Money due on a beneficiary certificate made payable to another person for the purpose, and with the understanding, that it will be applied in the payment of debts and funeral expenses, is impressed with a trust, which equity will enforce.

Boasburg v. Cronan, 24 N. Y. S. R. 930; Hirsh v. Auer, 146 N. Y. 13.

Where one has procured a policy of insurance on his own life, for the benefit of another, and has paid the premiums thereon, he may dispose of his insurance by will or otherwise to the exclusion of the beneficiary named in the policy, and the fact that the change was made during the lifetime of the beneficiary does not affect the rule.

Clark v. Durand, 12 Wis. 224; Breitung's Estate, 78 Wis. 33.

If the assured allows the policy to remain in the possession of the holder under a promise, either expressed or implied, to pay the debts of the assured out of the avails of the policy when collected, his doing so is a valid consideration for the promise, and a creditor for whose benefit the agreement was made, although without his knowledge or consent at the time, can affirm and enforce it against the holder of the policy.

Hutchings v. Miner, 48 N. Y. 456, 7 Am. Rep. 369; Kelley v. Mann, 56 Iowa, 625. Griswold v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 1 Mo. App. 99.

A policy of insurance may be made or changed by parol.

Westchester F. Ins. Co. v. Earle, 33 Mich. 143.

A policy upon the life of a husband, for the benefit of the wife, may be assigned or pledged by her for the payment of her husband's debts.

Collins v. Dawley, 4 Colo. 138, 34 Am. Rep. 72.

There is a marked distinction between an ordinary policy of life insurance, and a certificate issued by a mutual benefit society. Under the latter there is no vested right, and the assured may during his lifetime either allow the policy to lapse without the knowledge or consent of the beneficiary, or change the name, or may impose upon it such conditions as he may see fit touching the disposition of the money, and that, too, by parol.

Holland v. Taylor, 111 Ind. 126; Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. v. Noll, 90 Mich. 37, 15 L. R. A. 350.

The Modern Woodmen of America is a mutual benefit society incorporated under the laws of the state of Illinois, and nowhere under the statutes of Illinois are creditors prohibited from becoming beneficiaries under a policy of insurance issued by a mutual benefit society.

Bloomington Mut. Ben. Asso. v. Blue, 120 Ill. 121, 60 Am. Rep. 558.

Mr. Charles H. Sloan, for appellee:

If a trust could be created under circumstances similar to the ones surrounding this case, the terms of the trust and the evidence concerning the same should be absolutely clear and convincing, not doubtful, uncertain, and contradictory; nor may it consist of loose declarations.

Roddy v. Roddy, 3 Neb. 96; Allen v. Withrow, 110 U. S. 119, 28 L. ed. 90; Young v. Young, 80 N. Y. 438, 36 Am. Rep. 634; Martin v. Funk, 75 N. Y. 134, 31 Am. Rep. 446; 4 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. p. 3412.

The appellee upon being made beneficiary had a vested right therein in the nature of an executed gift which she could be divested of in but one of two ways: (1) Absolute and unequivocal waiver upon sufficient consideration; (2) by the deceased observing the rules of the A. O. U. W. and Modern Woodmen of America, which are mutual benefit societies.

Holland v. Taylor, 111 Ind. 126; Hellenberg v. District No. 1, I. O. of B. B. 94 N. Y. 582; Thomas v. Thomas, 131 N. Y. 205.

The gift could not be revoked by Donovan alone, and certainly not without the consent of the company.

Central Nat. Bank v. Hume, 128 U. S. 195, 32 L. ed. 370; Brockhaus v. Kemna, 7 Fed. Rep. 609; Timayenis v. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. 21 Fed. Rep. 223; Re King, L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 179; Re Richardson, 47 L. T. N. S. 514; Ex parte Dever, L. R. 18 Q. B. Div. 664; Glanz v. Gloeckler, 104 Ill. 573, 44 Am. Rep. 94; Pence v. Makepeace, 65 Ind. 345; Wilburn v. Wilburn, 83 Ind. 55; Harley v. Heist, 86 Ind. 106, 44 Am. Rep. 285; Allis v. Ware, 28 Minn. 166; McClure v. Johnson, 56 Iowa, 620; Olmstead v. Masonic Mut. Ben. Soc. 37 Kan. 93; Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Smith, 44 Ohio St. 156, 58 Am. Rep. 806; Robinson v. Duvall, 79 Ky. 83, 42 Am. Rep. 208; Vollman's Appeal, 92 Pa. 50; Gosling v. Caldwell, 1 Lea, 454, 27 Am. Rep. 774; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Ryan, 8 Mo. App. 535; Crittenden v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 41 Mich. 442; Fowler v. Butterly, 78 N. Y. 68, 34 Am. Rep. 507.

Sullivan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought to restrain the defendant Lillian Donovan, widow of Jere Donovan, deceased, from converting to her own use the proceeds of two certificates of life insurance issued to her late husband by fraternal beneficiary societies, and to impress such proceeds with a trust in favor of the plaintiffs as creditors of the insured. From a decree in favor of defendants, the plaintiffs have appealed.

Jere Donovan was postmaster at Geneva, in Fillmore county. He was indebted to the plaintiffs and others for borrowed money. He represented to his creditors that in case of his death they would be paid out of the moneys to be derived from insurance upon his life. The insurance carried by him was as follows: In the Knights of Pythias, $1,000, payable to his two infant children; in the Ancient Order of United Workmen, $2,000, of which sum $1,000 was payable to his widow and $500 to each of his children; in the Modern Woodmen of America, $2,000, of which half was payable to his widow and half to his children. September 4, 1894, Mr. Donovan was taken sick. His sickness continued until October 25 of that year, when he died. At times during his illness he was troubled and anxious about his debts, and expressed a desire that, in case he did not recover, they be paid out of his life insurance. On one occasion he asked Mr. Carson, an attorney, to call, and to him he gave a list of his liabilities. On another occasion, while his physician was present, he called his wife into the sick room, and said to her: "I want you to pay my debts. Will you do it?" to which she responded, "Yes." He also said, "Doctor, you hear this, don't you?" to which the doctor replied, "Yes." Nothing else was said or done. It is asserted by appellants that these facts and circumstances constituted Lillian Donovan a trustee of the fund afterwards received by her in satisfaction of the benefit certificates, and that she should be now compelled to execute the trust. Mrs. Donovan was appointed administratrix of her deceased husband's estate. After setting off to her the exemptions provided by law for the widow, there remained nothing for distribution among creditors. However, she voluntarily paid several claims against the estate, and the appellants, asserting that she did this in partial execution of the trust, earnestly insist that she be now required to carry out completely the wishes expressed by her husband in his last illness. To create a trust fund out of which a trustee may make disbursements, the trustor must have some present or future right to, or interest in, the property directed to be set apart; in other words, to constitute a valid trust there must be (1) a competent trustor, (2) a transfer to a competent person, (3) a fund or object capable of being transferred, and (4) a cestui que trust capable of taking or participating in the fund. Sinking Fund Comrs. v. Walker, 6 How. (Miss.) 143. Had Jere Donovan such a right or interest in the certificates in question, and have his creditors, the appellants here, the right to participate in the fund? We think not. The purposes and objects of these beneficiary organizations are vastly different from those of ordinary life insurance companies. The so-called "old line" life insurance companies immediately on the issuance of a policy confer on the beneficiary a valuable right which cannot be divested without the consent of such beneficiary. Such policies may be pledged or assigned by the beneficiary as security for debts of the insured. These policies often by law have a marketable or cash surrender value, making them a form of property. But not so with certificates in fraternal beneficiary societies. They are mere expectancies. The beneficiary has no vested rights in them, and the insured may at any time, at his option, change the beneficiary, provided only he keeps within the limitations established by the rules of the society, and complies with the laws respecting a change of beneficiary. Neither have these certificates a cash surrender value. The supreme court of Pennsylvania, in construing a certificate similar to those in question here, says: "The testator had no property in the fund. . . . The fund in fact was never his property. He had a power of appointment only and such power did not create any property in him. . . . The purpose of these certificates excludes the claim that there was any property in him." Northwestern Masonic Aid Asso. v. Jones, 154 Pa. 99. The insured member of such societies has himself no interest in the fund. He possesses only a mere power of appointment. Rollins v. McHatton, 16 Colo. 203; Hellenberg v. District No. 1, I. O. of B. B. 94 N. Y. 580. Jere Donovan had no property in the certificates. He had no right or interest therein upon which he could impress a trust. Upon his death the money arising from the certificates became absolutely the property of the beneficiaries, to do with as they saw fit. The widow could use the money to pay such of her husband's debts as she wished to pay, or she might retain it all for her individual use. The societies paying the money were organized to "issue certificates of indemnity calling for the payment of a certain sum, known and defined, in case of the death, . . . to the wife, widow, orphan, or orphans, or other persons dependent upon such members." Comp. Stat. 1895, chap. 16, § 198. The Constitution of the Ancient Order of United Workmen provides that "each member shall designate the person or persons to whom the beneficiary fund due at his death shall be paid, who shall, in every instance, be one or more members of his family, or someone related to him by blood, or who shall be dependent upon him." Const. A. O. U. W. art. 6, § 4. The by-laws of the Modern Woodmen of America provide that "the objects of this fraternity are to promote true neighborly regard and fraternal love, to bestow substantial benefits upon the family, widow, heirs, blood relations, affianced wife, or person dependent upon the member, and such others as may be permitted by the laws of the state of Illinois." By-Laws M. W. A. div. 1, § B. None of these designations include creditors, so that the insured did not have the right, even, to make a formal change designating his creditors as beneficiaries. The laws of this state governing such societies preclude creditors of a member from participation in the fund so created. The statutes of the states in which these societies were organized not being pleaded, we presume they are similar to our own. The statute or charter of the order designating beneficiaries controls. Britton v. Supreme Council of R. A. 46 N. J. Eq. 102; National Mut. Aid Asso. v. Gonser, 43 Ohio St. 1; Caudell v. Woodward, 96 Ky. 646. A person not of the class for whose benefit a mutual benefit association is organized cannot be a beneficiary. Wolf v. District Grand Lodge No. 6, I. O. B. B. 102 Mich. 23; Britton v. Supreme Council of R. A. 46 N. J. Eq. 102; Alexander v. Parker, 144 Ill. 355, 19 L. R. A. 187; Norwegian Old People's Home Soc. v. Wilson, 176 Ill. 94. The beneficiaries which may be designated are but few, and creditors of the member are not among them. Even though Jere Donovan had complied with all the provisions and forms required by the societies respecting a change of beneficiary, plaintiffs could not have been named, since creditors are not within the limitations either of the statute or of the by-laws of either society. Either the statutes of the state or the charter or by-laws of mutual benefit societies usually provide that the fund is established for the benefit of the widow, children, orphans, relatives, or dependents of the deceased member; and, where such provision is made, the beneficiary designated must be in one of the classes mentioned. Elsay v. Odd Fellows Mut. Relief Asso. 142 Mass. 224; Presbyterian Mut. Assur. Fund v. Allen, 106 Ind. 593; Supreme Council A. L. of H. v. Perry, 140 Mass. 580; Skillings v. Massachusetts Ben. Asso. 146 Mass. 217. In Skillings v. Massachusetts Ben. Asso. the court says: "A person whose only relation to the deceased member is that of a creditor is not a person dependent upon him within the meaning of these statutes, and the promise to pay the plaintiff is void. Such a promise is beyond the powers of the association, and contravenes the intention of the statutes under which the association was organized. The plaintiff cannot, therefore, maintain an action on this promise, either for his own use, or for that of any other person." These fraternal beneficiary societies, in their present form, are comparatively recent creations. They respond to a popular demand for protection to dependents at reasonable cost. They provide what is often called the "poor man's insurance." In most, if not all, the primary object is to provide substantial benefits, in case of the death of the member, to the widow, orphans, or dependents of such member; to provide means for the family when the main support is gone. Their purposes are laudable. They provide means to maintain the widow, and feed, clothe, and educate the orphans, and thereby relieve the state of burdens which otherwise might fall upon it. The provisions for the creation and payment of these sacred funds to the properly designated beneficiaries should receive such liberal construction that the widow, the orphan, or other dependent may receive the intended benefit.

44 L. R. A.

In determining who is entitled to receive the benefits of the provisions of societies of this kind, it is the duty of the court to construe the statute and their rules and regulations liberally, and in such manner as to carry out the beneficent purposes sought to be accomplished. Ballou v. Gile, 50 Wis. 614; Supreme Council A. L. of H. v. Perry, 140 Mass. 580. It is true, Mrs. Donovan did assent to her husband's request to pay his creditors, but, since he failed to provide the trust fund out of which payment might be made, the plaintiffs cannot recover from her as trustee. After her husband's death, there being no proper change of beneficiary, half the proceeds of the certificates in question became absolutely the money of Mrs. Donovan, and the promise she made was at most but a promise to pay her husband's debts out of her own property. There is no claim that the promise was in writing, and it is a familiar doctrine that a promise to answer for the debt, default, or misdoings of another is within the statute of frauds, and, to be binding, must be in writing, signed by the party to be charged therewith. Comp. Stat. chap. 32, § 8. Mrs. Donovan cannot be held in this action, either as trustee or individually, for plaintiff's demands.

The decree of the trial court is therefore affirmed.

BLOOMFIELD STATE BANK, Appt.,

v.

H. N. MILLER et al.

(.....Neb.....)

- *1. A mortgage by the deposit of title deeds, without writing is not effective in this state.
2. While such a mortgage is recognized in England, and while the law of England has been adopted by statute in this state, the statute does not extend to those rules of the English law which contravene the object and purpose of our own statutes.
3. A mortgage by the deposit of title deeds violates the statute of frauds, and is contrary to the policy of the recording acts.
4. The exception of the statute of frauds with regard to estates arising by act or operation of law does not embrace cases where the creation of the estate depends solely on the intention of parties to a contract.
5. A court of equity cannot give effect to an oral contract declared void by the statute of frauds, under pretense of aiding an imperfect attempt to execute a contract.
6. Nor can such a court enforce a mortgage by deposit of title deeds because the loan which the deposit was made to secure has been actually received by the depositor.

(May 19, 1898.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Knox County in favor of defendants in a proceeding instituted to enforce a mortgage alleged to have been effected by deposit of title deeds. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Mr. A. A. Welch, for appellant:

The indorsement by the grantee of his name on the back of the contract and its delivery to another for the purpose and with the intent thereby to secure the payment of money loaned to the grantee by the person to whom the same is delivered created an equitable lien on the grantee's interest in said contract and land.

An equitable mortgage may arise from nonpayment of purchase money, deposit of title deeds, or an unsuccessful attempt to make a valid mortgage deed.

Gale v. Morris, 29 N. J. Eq. 222; Griffin v. Griffin, 18 N. J. Eq. 104; Hackett v. Reynolds, 4 R. I. 512; Jackson, Lowell, v. Parkhurst, 4 Wend. 369; Chase v. Peck, 21 N. Y. 584; Rockwell v. Hobby, 2 Sandf. Ch. 9; Carpenter v. Black Hawk Gold Min. Co. 65 N. Y.

*Headnotes by IRVINE, C.

NOTE.—The American law as to mortgages by deposit of title deeds rarely gets embodied in a direct decision, but it is presented with unusual fullness in the above case.
44 L. R. A.

51; Jarvis v. Dutcher, 16 Wis. 308; Hutzler Bros. v. Phillips, 26 S. C. 136.

An equitable mortgage may be created by an unsuccessful attempt to make a valid mortgage deed or to appropriate specific property to the discharge of a particular debt.

Gale v. Morris, 29 N. J. Eq. 222; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1020; Peckham v. Haddock, 36 Ill. 38; McClurg v. Phillips, 49 Mo. 315; White & T. Lead. Cas. in Eq. 4th Am. ed. 954; Abbott v. Godfrey, 1 Mich. 178.

A mortgage defectively executed, or an imperfect attempt to create a mortgage upon specific property for the purpose of securing a debt, will create a specific lien upon the property so intended to be mortgaged.

Daggett v. Rankin, 31 Cal. 327; Love v. Sierra Nevada Lake Water & Min. Co. 32 Cal. 630, 91 Am. Dec. 602; Peers v. McLaughlin, 88 Cal. 294; Remington v. Higgins, 54 Cal. 620.

By a court of equity parties may be relieved from a mistake of law as well as fact, in the execution of powers and conveyance of real estate, and the real intention of parties carried out.

Remington v. Higgins, 54 Cal. 620; Love v. Sierra Nevada Lake Water & Min. Co. 32 Cal. 639, 91 Am. Dec. 602.

Parol agreement may be made to execute a mortgage in the future where the agreement is supported by a valuable consideration, and the agreement itself will be treated as a mortgage in the court of equity.

McCarty v. Brackenridge, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 170; Hicks v. Morris, 57 Tex. 658.

Blanks in a deed or conveyance may be filled to carry out the intention of the parties when authority therefor is express or implied, and this authority to fill the blanks may be implied from the facts attending the signature and delivery.

Garland v. Wells, 15 Neb. 298; Reed v. Morton, 24 Neb. 760, 1 L. R. A. 736; Van Etta v. Evenson, 28 Wis. 33, 9 Am. Rep. 486; Swartz v. Ballou, 47 Iowa, 188, 29 Am. Rep. 470; Field v. Stagg, 52 Mo. 534, 14 Am. Rep. 435; Brury v. Foster, 2 Wall. 24, 17 L. ed. 780; Curtis v. Buckley, 14 Kan. 449; Cribben v. Deal, 21 Or. 211; South Berwick v. Huntress, 53 Me. 89, 87 Am. Dec. 535; State v. Young, 23 Minn. 551; Nelson v. McDonald, 80 Wis. 605; Burnside v. Wayman, 49 Mo. 356; Chauncey v. Arnold, 24 N. Y. 330; McNab v. Young, 81 Ill. 11; Putnam v. Sullivan, 4 Mass. 45, 3 Am. Dec. 206.

The lien was not created merely by parol. It resulted by operation of law from the whole transaction between the parties.

Curtis v. Buckley, 14 Kan. 449; Browne, Stat. Fr. chap. 5, entitled Conveyance by Operation of Law.

French is in no position to question, deny, or make any objection to the form of plaintiff's acquiring the interest of defendant Miller.

McNab v. Young, 81 Ill. 11.

Where there are equal equities the first in order of time shall prevail.

1 Story, Eq. Jur. 12th ed. § 64d; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 12th ed. § 1502; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 413-415; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 678-683; Vat- tier v. Hinde, 7 Pet. 252, 8 L. ed. 675; Oraig v. Leiper, 2 Yerg. 193, 24 Am. Dec. 479; Polk v. Gallant, 22 N. C. (2 Dev. & B. Eq.) 395, 34 Am. Dec. 410.

If there was any agreement to transfer between Miller and French it was as much within the statute of frauds as plaintiff's.

The court will not decide the claim of plaintiff in this case void under the statute of frauds if the claim or interest of the party attacking the same is also void under the statute of frauds.

Smith v. Clark, 7 Wis. 551.

One who accepts a quitclaim deed from his grantor is bound at his peril to ascertain what equities, if any, exist against his title.

Bowman v. Griffith, 35 Neb. 361; Pleasants v. Blodgett, 39 Neb. 741; Griffin v. Griffin, 18 N. J. Eq. 104.

A bona fide purchaser must be one who purchases not only without notice, but with money actually paid; and if he acquires notice at any time before he pays he is not protected as a purchaser in good faith.

Veith v. McMurtry, 26 Neb. 341; Garmire v. Willy, 36 Neb. 340; Savage v. Hazard, 11 Neb. 323; Warner v. Trow, 36 Wis. 195.

Messrs. Carter & Brown, for appellees: The attempted transfer by Miller to plaintiff, if any there was, is within the statute of frauds, and is void.

Folsom v. McCague, 29 Neb. 124; Smith v. Clark, 7 Wis. 551; Caulkins v. Whisler, 29 Iowa, 495, 4 Am. Rep. 236.

The doctrine of authority to fill blanks is applicable to cases where the substance or essentials of the instrument are written out, showing the intention of the parties, with some minor portion left blank, and not where a party procures another party to write his name upon a piece of paper, and then deliberately writes over that name whatever he wants.

2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law. p. 423; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 518, 519.

The rule of mortgage by delivery of title deed should not be recognized in this state where the doctrine of vendor's lien even is repudiated.

3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1265; Bicknell v. Bicknell, 31 Vt. 498; Shitz v. Dieffenbach, 3 Pa. St. 233; Thomas's Appeal, 30 Pa. 378; Edwards v. Trumbull, 50 Pa. 509; Bower v. Oyster, 3 Penn. & W. 239; Probasco v. Johnson, 2 Disney (Ohio) 96; Bloom v. Noggle, 4 Ohio St. 45; Vanmeter v. McFaddin, 8 B. Mon. 435; Meador v. Meador, 3 Heisk. 562; Gothard v. Flynn, 25 Miss. 58; Lehman v. Collins, 69 Ala. 127; 2 Washb. Real Prop. *502, 503; Jones, Mortg. § 185; 15 Cent. L. J. 46; Browne, Stat. Fr. 4th ed. § 64; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 683; Williams v. Hill, 19 How. 246, 15 L. ed. 570.

A court of equity is as much bound by the statute of frauds as is the law court.

Bishop, Contr. § 1237; Watson v. Erb, 33 Ohio St. 35; Abell v. Calderwood, 4 Cal. 90; Patterson v. Yeaton, 47 Me. 308; Beaman v. Buck, 9 Smedes & M. 207; Skipwith v. Dodd, 24 Miss. 487.

The surrender of a security for an indebtedness due from the grantor to the grantee 44 L. R. A.

is sufficient to make the grantee a purchaser for value as against a third party.

Seymour v. Harrison, 20 Iowa, 592; Alden v. Trubee, 44 Conn. 455; Spicer v. Waters, 65 Barb. 227; Kimball v. Hutchins, 3 Conn. 450; Jackson, Saunders, v. Cadwell, 1 Cow. 622; Root v. French, 13 Wend. 570, 28 Am. Dec. 482; Perry, Tr. p. 218.

Possession of land is notice to all the world, not only of the possession itself, but of the right, title, and interest, whatever it may be, of the possessor.

Uhl v. May, 5 Neb. 157; Conlee v. McDowell, 15 Neb. 184.

Even if the appellee French had had notice of the delivery of the contract in question to the plaintiff, with simply the signature of Miller on the back of it, he still might purchase the premises and rely upon defeating plaintiff's title to the premises.

Thompson v. Morgan, 6 Minn. 292; Bloom v. Noggle, 4 Ohio St. 46.

Irvine, C., delivered the opinion of the court:

D. C. Main held a contract with the state for the purchase of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of sec. 32. T. 32 N., of range 3 W., in Knox county, said land being state educational land. He also held a number of leases of other educational land in the vicinity. In 1892 he entered into contracts with H. N. Miller which had for their effect the transfer to Miller of Main's rights to the land, payment of the consideration or a part thereof being deferred. The contract first referred to, and out of which this action arises, was assigned to Miller by a separate instrument. January 20, 1893, Miller made his note to the Bloomfield State Bank for \$500, representing in part an overdraft, and in part a loan made at that time by the bank to Miller. At the same time, Miller wrote his name on the back of the assignment from Main to himself, and delivered the assignment in that condition to the bank, intending thereby to have it operate as security for the note. Prior thereto, he had, by formal written assignments, transferred his rights to the other lands to French, to secure a debt he owed the latter. In April or May, 1893, finding that he would be unable to meet the payments to Main, Miller negotiated for the sale of his rights to Sexton, Comstock, & Co. Sexton, Comstock, & Co. not being prepared, or not desiring to make immediate payment to Main, an arrangement was made among Miller, Main, French, and Sexton, Comstock, & Co., evidenced by a preliminary memorandum agreement, two formal contracts, and certain letters. No single contract was joined in by all the parties to the transaction, but the nature of the arrangement is made plain by a comparison of the different documents. Its precise nature is not material. Its general object was to procure contracts of purchase, in lieu of the leases, to pass all rights eventually to Sexton, Comstock, & Co., and, to this end, that French should pay to Main all moneys accruing to him under his contracts with Miller, obtain the assigned contracts from Main, and hold them until Sexton, Comstock, & Co. should repay French his advances to Miller and to Main, when he should assign them to Sexton, Comstock, & Co. Accordingly, French paid Main what was due him, including the money due on the contract first mentioned. Down to this point, neither Main, French, nor Sexton, Comstock, & Co. knew of the transactions between Miller and the bank. Learning thereof, Main refused to transfer the contract with the state to French. The bank, on its part, learning of the other transactions, wrote, above Miller's signature on the assignment, an assignment thereof to itself. Then it began this action against Miller, Main, and French, alleging in its petition the debt to the bank, and that, to secure the payment thereof, Miller agreed to assign the contract with Main; that he wrote his name on the back thereof, and delivered it to the bank with authority to fill in above the signature a formal assignment. It prayed a foreclosure. Miller made default. French answered, denying all the material averments of the petition, and alleging that for the purpose of securing title and conveying to Sexton, Comstock, & Co., in accordance with his contract obligations, he had bought the land of Main, and paid him therefor, all in ignorance of any claim by plaintiff. By way of cross petition, he prayed that Main be required to assign the contract to him. Main, in his answer, pleaded his good faith, and offered to assign to whomever the court might determine, and to refund to French what he had paid, if the court should so order. The findings were against the plaintiff, and the court ordered a conveyance by Main to French. Plaintiff alone appeals.

By comparing the statement of facts with the issues, it will be seen that neither of the contesting parties succeeded in establishing the facts precisely as he pleaded them. The bank wholly failed to show that it had any authority to write the assignment over Miller's signature, or that the signature was placed there for such a purpose. Even if there had been such authority, the assignment was not written until after French's rights had accrued, in his ignorance of the bank's. The bank therefore can claim nothing under the written assignment. On the other hand, French pleaded only an assignment from Main. Main had already assigned to Miller, so that, under that pleading French could claim only a subrogation to Main's rights to the unpaid purchase money, provided the bank had any right derived from Miller, although, under the evidence, French or Sexton, Comstock, & Co., whom he represented, was shown to have acquired Miller's rights also. If the bank obtained no right, then it cannot complain of the decree between the other parties. If it did obtain any right from Miller, then the decree must, at least, be modified. The proof showing that the written assignment to the bank was unavailing, but also showing that the contract between Main and Miller was by the latter deposited with the bank with the clear intention on the part of both that it should stand as security for a debt in part then contracted, we have thus distinctly presented for the first time in this state the question whether the doctrine of an equitable mortgage by a deposit of title deeds is sound.

It is unnecessary to review the English cases. When the doctrine was there first announced, it provoked much opposition, being justly considered a further invasion of the statute of frauds. Lord Eldon expressed his emphatic disapproval of it, but considered the rule too well fixed in his time to justify its overthrow. It must therefore be accepted as the established doctrine of the English courts, and as a part of the law of England. The common law is not with us an estate by inheritance, but one by purchase. It is here in force by virtue of statute, which provides: "So much of the common law of England as is applicable and not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, with the organic law of this territory, or with any law passed or to be passed by the legislature of this territory, is adopted, and declared to be law within said territory." Comp. Stat. chap. 15, § 1. No one would assert that the phrase "common law" was there used in contradistinction to the rules of equity. It undoubtedly includes the law derived from the English court of chancery. On the other hand, it was not the whole body of the English law which was adopted, but only so much thereof as is applicable (to the nature of our institutions), and is not inconsistent with the Constitutions or statutes, past or future. There is certainly nothing in the Constitution which conflicts with the doctrine of parol mortgages, but when we examine the statutes the question assumes a different aspect. We have a statute of frauds in the main following the outline of the famous statute of 29 Car. II. chap. 3. By this, "no estate or interest in lands other than leases for a term not exceeding one year, nor any trust or power over or concerning lands, or in any manner relating thereto, shall hereafter be created, granted, assigned, or surrendered or declared, unless by act or operation of law, or by a deed or conveyance in writing, subscribed by the party creating, granting, assigning, surrendering, or declaring the same." Comp. Stat. chap. 32, § 3. By § 4 of the same chapter, § 3 shall not be construed "to prevent any trust from arising or being extinguished by implication or operation of law." By § 5, every contract for the sale of lands or any interest in lands shall be void, unless the contract or some note or memorandum be in writing, and signed by the party by whom the sale is made. By § 22, the term "estate and interest in lands" shall be construed to embrace every estate and interest, freehold and chattel, legal and equitable, present and future, vested and contingent. The language of these sections is so clear that it would be immediately conclusive against the theory of parol liens were it not for the fact that much of the language is taken from the English statute, which, in spite of its plain provisions, the English courts straightway set themselves to evade and fritter away, by a process of misconstruction as systematic as it was ingenious. For years the mischief of that policy has been realized, and the danger of further pursuings it has been by most courts carefully avoided. The spirit of the statute should certainly be preserved so far as possible. Its purpose and policy, no doubt, is to prevent the creation or transfer of estates in or liens upon lands, except by writing, definite and complete in its terms. To enforce a mortgage created by the mere deposit of title deeds is in the plainest violation of such purpose and policy. It directly offends the very letter of the law.

Again, in this state we have created by statute a system whereby conveyances, including mortgages, must be registered in a public office. The purpose of this system is to afford security to titles by a public record which parties dealing with land may, and for their own protection must, examine, and on which they may rely. Secret transfers and liens are sought thereby to be prevented. A mortgage by deposit of title deeds tends to defeat this purpose. The recording acts have another bearing on the question. In England title deeds followed the land. The evidence of title lay, not only in the delivery of a deed, but in its continued possession by the grantee. When, therefore, the owner parted with his muniments of title, he parted with the means of disposing of the land. When the deposit was by way of pledge, the pledgee, by his manual possession of the deeds, had the effective power to prevent an untoward disposition of the land, either such as would defraud him, or such as would defraud others ignorant of his rights. But, under our system, it is not usual to consult or even to inquire about the original conveyances. They have performed their chief office when they have been recorded. Thenceforth the records become the practical evidence of title. By deposit of the deeds, the pledgee does not obtain that effective control over the thing pledged which is essential to such a security when not evidenced by writing, whether that thing be real or personal.

For the reasons above stated, this court has held that the vendor of land, who delivers to his vendee a deed absolute, does not retain a lien thereon for the unpaid purchase money. Edminster v. Higgins, 6 Neb. 265; Ansley v. Pasahro, 22 Neb. 662. In Folsom v. McCague, 29 Neb. 124, Judge Norval, speaking of an assignment of a land contract where the place for the vendee's name was left blank, said: "To make a valid assignment of these contracts, it was as necessary to have an assignee as it was the signature of the assignor. Until someone's name was filled in these blanks as assignee the appellees appeared to be, and were, the real owners. . . . These assignments of the contracts in blank were in violation of the statute of frauds, and void." While none of these cases are decisive of that before us, they all recognize the principles already stated. We would, in the absence of authority elsewhere, say without hesitation that the doctrine of equitable mortgages by the deposit of title deeds, although a part of the law of England, is not here applicable, is contrary to our statutes, and was therefore not adopted by the legislature of the territory. This conclusion is re-enforced by an examination of the decisions in other states, where by custom or by statute the common law has been acquired. For some or all of the reasons suggested, the doctrine has been repudiated in the following cases: Probasco v. Johnson, 2 Disney (Ohio) 96; Lehman v. Collins, 69 Ala. 127; Bower v. Oyster, 3 Penn. & W. 239; Shitz v. Dieffenbach, 3 Pa. St. 233; Vanmeter v. McFaddin, 8 B. Mon. 435; Bicknell v. Bicknell, 31 Vt. 498; Meador v. Meador, 3 Heisk. 562; Gothard v. Flynn, 25 Miss. 58.

44 L. R. A.

While the courts of many states have to some extent intimated an adherence to the English rule, it has always been on a citation of the English cases, without any discussion on principle of the objections to the enforcement of that rule in this country. Moreover, these cases are by no means so formidable as their bare citation in digests and text-books would indicate. New York invariably leads the list of states in these compilations, and the first case cited is Jackson, M'Crea, v. Dunlap, 1 Johns. Cas. 114, 1 Am. Dec. 100. There land had been sold. The deed had not been delivered, but was retained by the grantor as security for the purchase money. Four judges held that there had been no delivery, and that title had never passed. Kent alone thought that title had passed, but that an equitable mortgage had been created. He does not discuss the question, and his opinion was a dissent; but the case is cited as upholding the English rule. Jackson, Lovell, v. Parkhurst, 4 Wend. 369, merely holds that an equitable mortgage is not available as a defense in ejectment. The validity of such a mortgage for other purposes was not involved in the case. Rockwell v. Hobby, 2 Sandf. Ch. 10, was a case where a son had paid his mother's mortgage, and retained an unrecorded deed to her. It was there held that the retention of the deed made an equitable mortgage, but the case loses force from the further holding that, independently of the deed, the son was subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee whom he had paid. Chase v. Peck, 21 N. Y. 581, was a case of a deed absolute. The remarks about deposits of title deeds were obiter. In New Jersey a very peculiar thing has occurred. Griffin v. Griffin, 18 N. J. Eq. 104, was a bill to compel the defendant to surrender to plaintiff deeds to plaintiff's ancestor of land in New York. It appeared that they had been deposited as security. The court, citing the New York cases we have mentioned, took them as indicating that such a deposit operated in New York as a mortgage, and therefore very properly refused to decree their surrender, without any reference to the New Jersey law on the subject. But in Gale v. Morris, 29 N. J. Eq. 222, the court announced the English rule as in force in New Jersey, and cited Griffin v. Griffin, and also Brewer v. Marshall, 19 N. J. Eq. 537, 97 Am. Dec. 679, a case where the doctrine was not involved, but mentioned by way of remote illustration of a general equitable principle. Moreover, even Gale v. Morris did not require a decision of the question. That was a suit to reform a mortgage on a life estate, so as to embrace the fee. The mistake as between the parties was admitted, and the issue was whether a subsequent mortgagee was charged with notice, so that the reformation could cut him out as to the reversion. Hackett v. Reynolds, 4 R. I. 512, enforces such a mortgage in a hard case, with the preliminary observation that the fraudulent design of the debtors was so transparent "that a court of equity would be disposed to find or to make a way to thwart them." From a peculiarly apologetic tone in the opinion it is evident that the court realized that it was making a way. Hutzler Bros. v. Phillips, 26 S. C. 136, often cited as sustaining the rule, holds distinctly that the case was not within it. There was a dissent to the intimation that the rule might be in force.

The following cases, frequently cited, will be found on investigation to involve no such question, and the remarks of the judges on the subject either to be obiter or made for the purpose of excluding the question from the case: Mowry v. Wood, 12 Wis. 414; Jarvis v. Dutcher, 16 Wis. 308; Abbott v. Godfrey, 1 Mich. 179; Peckham v. Haddock, 36 Ill. 38; Roberts v. Richards, 36 Ill. 339; Carpenter v. Black Hawk Gold Min. Co. 65 N. Y. 43; Hall v. McDuff, 24 Me. 311; Wright v. Troutman, 81 Ill. 374. Williams v. Stratton, 10 Smedes & M. 418, says: "Such a mortgage is in direct opposition to the statute of frauds, in regard to which we have said that we will create no exceptions not found in the statute." Mandeville v. Welch, 5 Wheat. 277, 5 L. ed. 87, does not sustain the doctrine. Judge Story merely says in that case: "It may be admitted that according to the course of the authorities in England, and as applicable to the state of land titles there," a deposit of title deeds creates a mortgage. Whatever inference might be drawn from that language as to the position of the Supreme Court of the United States is dispelled by the emphatic words of Justice Campbell in Williams v. Hill, 19 How. 246, 15 L. ed. 570: "Nor can the real property conveyed in the deed be retained as a security for advances, or debts subsequently made, on the strength of a parol engagement." The case of First Nat. Bank v. Caldwell, 4 Dill. 314, is entitled to more than passing consideration, not only from the eminent ability of the judge who decided it, but as being a case from this Federal district, and to which the law of Nebraska was applicable. There certain railroad coupons were held as a pledge. They were exchangeable for land, and, by arrangement of the debtor and creditor, they were exchanged, land contracts being issued in the name of the debtor, but delivered to the creditor. The court held that the pledgee had a lien superior to that of a judgment creditor. Judge Dillon, however, declined to pass on the question whether a lien could be created by the mere deposit of title deeds. The fact that there they stood in lieu of coupons held in perfect pledge was the controlling fact in his mind. Giving, however, due weight to his apparent opinion in favor of the English rule, we do not feel that we can adopt it in the face of what seems to us the overwhelming 44 L. R. A.

ing reason and weight of authority against it.

The plaintiff argues that, so far as the reasons urged for denying the lien are founded on the statute of frauds, they are of no force because our statute excepts from its operation estates arising by act or operation of law. This phrase occurs twice in the statute,—once in § 3, already quoted, and again in § 4, with reference to trusts. Comp. Stat. chap. 32. The phrase is twice found in the statute of 29 Car. II. chap. 3, and in the same connection,—in § 3 in very similar words to our § 3; in § 8 with regard to trusts. Section 8 of the English statute excepts trusts arising by implication or construction of law, and extinguishments or transfers by act or operation of law; while our § 4 excepts trusts arising or extinguished by implication or operation of law. It is manifest, from the closeness of context, that the phrase was used in our statute in the English sense. We have not found any exact definition thereof. Chancellor Kent, in Simonds v. Catlin, Coleman & C. Cas. 346, said: "These words are strictly technical, and refer to certain definite estates, such as those by the curtesy and dower, or those created by remittitur." In Bouvier's Law Dictionary it is said that the term indicates the manner in which a party acquires rights without any act of his own. There can be no doubt that Parliament intended no more than these statements imply, at least in the 3d section of the statute. In the 8th section trusts were involved, and the object of the exception seems to have been to avoid the destruction of the ingenious method of conveyancing derived from the doctrine of trusts, and the construction which had been placed on the statute of uses, and to preserve resulting and constructive trusts. Whatever may have been the precise idea in the legislative mind, it is clear that the exception was not meant to give effect to contracts which the parties had failed to express in the form required by the statute. Such an interpretation would render the exception wholly destructive of the statute; yet it requires that interpretation to bring this case within the exception. The lien here arises, if at all, solely from the contract of the parties. It is not a result flowing by law independent of their contract, or even derivative from any valid contract which they made.

Finally, it is insisted that a court of equity will enforce the lien as the result of an imperfect attempt to create a legal mortgage. Certain California cases are cited in support of the argument. The power of equity is frequently asserted to reform instruments, and to compel their execution under certain circumstances. But neither the petition nor the evidence presents a case for the reformation of an instrument or the specific performance of a contract. There is not made out, as suggested, a case for the specific performance of an oral contract on the ground of part performance. The plaintiff has not altered its position except by paying the consideration, and that alone is not such a part performance as will take a case out of the statute of frauds. Moreover, there was no contract to specifically enforce. Miller did not promise to execute a mortgage. He indorsed the contract, and delivered it, which was all that his contract contemplated. Nothing more could be required, at least where the rights of third persons have intervened. In no way can the bank be given any relief except by giving effect to a transaction which the law has denounced as void. Affirmed.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

Sarah E. PUGH et al., Appts.,

v.

David F. HIGHLEY et al.

(.....Ind.....)

A judgment creditor who, in good faith, buys land at a proper execution sale, on his own valid judgment, does not take the land subject to prior secret equities.

(March 9, 1899.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court for Grant County in favor of plaintiffs in a suit brought to enforce a vendor's lien upon certain real estate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Moon & Wolf, for appellants:

A vendor's lien may be enforced against the vendee or a purchaser from the vendee with notice.

Deibler v. Barwick, 4 Blackf. 339; Pierce v. Gates, 7 Blackf. 162; McCarty v. Pruett, 4 Ind. 226; Merritt v. Wells, 18 Ind. 171; Boling v. Howell, 93 Ind. 329.

The recording act protects "any subsequent purchaser . . . in good faith and for a valuable consideration."

Rev. Stat. 1894, § 3350; Wert v. Naylor, 93 Ind. 431.

The burden is on a vendor, in a suit against a subsequent purchaser, to allege and prove facts which disclose that the grantee is not a bona fide purchaser.

McCarty v. Pruett, 4 Ind. 226; Gaar v. Millikan, 68 Ind. 208; Johns v. Sewell, 33 Ind. 1.

The presumption always is, in the absence of allegations to the contrary, that a purchaser of real estate is a bona fide purchaser.

Rooker v. Rooker, 75 Ind. 571; Craig v. Major, 139 Ind. 624; Anthony v. Wheeler, 130 Ill. 129; Meek v. Skeen, 23 U. S. App. 232, 60 Fed. Rep. 322, 8 C. C. A. 641; Gratz v. Land & River Improv. Co. 53 U. S. App. 499, 82 Fed. Rep. 381, 27 C. C. A. 305, 40 L. R. A. 393.

Appellant's rights were fixed by the sale. Catherwood v. Watson, 65 Ind. 581; Rooker v. Rooker, 75 Ind. 571; Moss v. Jenkins, 140 Ind. 589; Maroney v. Boyle, 141 N. Y. 462; Riley v. Martinelli, 97 Cal. 575, 21 L. R. A. 33.

Under our present law a bidder at sheriff's sale does not await the execution of a deed to become a purchaser.

Rev. Stat. 1894, § 778; Heck v. Fink, 85 Ind. 6.

NOTE.—As to claim of purchaser at judicial sale to be a bona fide purchaser, see note to Riley v. Martinelli (Cal.) 21 L. R. A. 33. 44 L. R. A.

A distinction must all the time be kept in mind between a mere judgment lien holder who, according to the weight of authority, is not protected against liens of which he had no notice when he took his judgment, and one who has become a purchaser at a sheriff's sale of his debtor's property.

A third person buying at sheriff's sale will be protected against secret liens and equities.

Before the purchase the judgment creditor has or may have a lien on all of his debtor's property. The moment he purchases at his own sheriff's sale, he loses his lien on all the debtor's property except only that portion which he purchases. If his title or lien on that fails, he loses his judgment which he has satisfied as well as the amount he has had to pay in cash for costs, unless he can bring himself within Rev. Stat. 1894, § 777.

Had Mrs. Pugh taken a deed from the owner of the land who was her debtor, in payment of her debt, and for no other consideration, she would have been protected.

Adams v. Vanderbeck, 148 Ind. 92; People's Sav. Bank v. Bates, 120 U. S. 556, 21 L. ed. 754; Franklin Sav. Bank v. Taylor, 9 U. S. App. 406, 53 Fed. Rep. 854, 4 C. C. A. 55; Morse v. Cohannet Bank, 3 Story, 389; McMahan v. Morrison, 16 Ind. 172, 79 Am. Dec. 418; Dillon v. Dorne, 19 Ind. 203; Aiken v. Bruen, 21 Ind. 137; Brannon v. May, 42 Ind. 92; Boling v. Howell, 93 Ind. 329; Work v. Brayton, 5 Ind. 396; Gilchrist v. Gough, 63 Ind. 576, 30 Am. Rep. 250.

Why should not the rule that a precedent debt constitutes a valuable consideration for a conveyance apply to a purchase at sheriff's sale to satisfy such debt?

Orth v. Jennings, 8 Blackf. 426; Milner v. Hyland, 77 Ind. 458; 2 White & T. Lead. Cas. in Eq. pt. 1, p. 93.

The law requires the judgment creditor, in order to preserve his rights, to bid all the property is worth.

Hervey v. Krost, 116 Ind. 268; Horn v. Indianapolis Nat. Bank, 125 Ind. 381, 9 L. R. A. 676; Anderson v. Anderson, 129 Ind. 573.

If the title to be acquired is uncertain, bidders will be discouraged.

Horn v. Indianapolis Nat. Bank, 125 Ind. 381, 9 L. R. A. 676.

The question presented in this case is passed upon in Catherwood v. Watson, 65 Ind. 576; Rooker v. Rooker, 75 Ind. 571.

The purchaser at a sale under execution would possess the same rights as a purchaser of the execution defendant.

Orth v. Jennings, 8 Blackf. 420.

Doe, Hosier, v. Hall, 2 Ind. 556, 54 Am. Dec. 400, decides that a bona fide purchaser at sheriff's sale takes the land as against a prior unrecorded deed of which he had no notice.

Gifford v. Bennett, 75 Ind. 528; McMillan v. Hadley, 78 Ind. 590; Sills v. Lawson, 133 Ind. 137.

It is said in many cases in other states that a purchaser at a judicial sale may be a bona fide purchaser.

Ohio L. Ins. Co. v. Ledyard, 8 Ala. 866; Ellis v. Smith, 10 Ga. 253; Roberts v. Bourne, 23 Me. 185, 39 Am. Dec. 614; Jackson, Lansing, v. Chamberlain, 8 Wend. 620; Morrison v. Funk, 23 Pa. 421; Hetzl v. Barber, 69 N. Y. 1; Maroney v. Boyle, 141 N. Y. 462; Graff v. Louis, 71 Fed. Rep. 591.

The very fact that a court of equity will limit the lien proceeds upon the assumption that, if the land is sold to a bona fide purchaser, the existing equities cannot be enforced against such purchaser.

Milner v. Hyland, 77 Ind. 458.

In Vitito v. Hamilton, 86 Ind. 137, the court reiterates the rule that an execution plaintiff who purchases at his own sale is a bona fide purchaser.

Pierce v. Spear, 94 Ind. 127.

The recording acts give to a bona fide purchaser at his own execution sale the same protection that is accorded by the registry laws to any other purchaser in good faith.

Bayley v. Greenleaf, 7 Wheat. 46, 5 L. ed. 393; Neuman v. Davis, 24 Fed. Rep. 609; Tennant v. Watson, 58 Ark. 252; Hunter v. Watson, 12 Cal. 363, 73 Am. Dec. 543; Foorman v. Wallace, 75 Cal. 552; Riley v. Martinelli, 97 Cal. 575, 21 L. R. A. 33; Halloway v. Platner, 20 Iowa, 121, 89 Am. Dec. 517; Butterfield v. Walsh, 21 Iowa, 99, 89 Am. Dec. 557; Walker v. Elston, 21 Iowa, 529; Butterfield v. Walsh, 36 Iowa, 534; Eitenheimer v. Northgraves, 75 Iowa, 23; Parker v. Prescott, 87 Me. 444; Woodward v. Sartwell, 129 Mass. 210; Luton v. Sharp, 94 Mich. 202; French v. DeBow, 38 Mich. 708; Davis v. Ownsby, 14 Mo. 170, 55 Am. Dec. 105; Adams v. Buchanan, 49 Mo. 64; Chandler v. Bailey, 89 Mo. 641; Parks v. People's Bank, 97 Mo. 130; Hope v. Blair, 105 Mo. 85; Condit v. Wilson, 36 N. J. Eq. 370; Voorhis v. Westervelt, 43 N. J. Eq. 644; Hackensack Sav. Bank v. Morse, 46 N. J. Eq. 161; Wood v. Chapin, 13 N. Y. 509, 67 Am. Dec. 62; Wood v. Morehouse, 45 N. Y. 368; Sternberger v. Ragland, 57 Ohio St. 148; Paine v. Mooreland, 15 Ohio, 435, 45 Am. Dec. 585; Meek v. Skeen, 23 U. S. App. 232, 60 Fed. Rep. 322, 8 C. C. A. 641; Reynolds v. Haskins, 68 Vt. 426.

Where a judgment defendant who is a resident householder is the owner of less property than is exempt from execution a judgment against him does not become a lien against his real estate.

Dumbould v. Rowley, 113 Ind. 353; Ray v. Yarnell, 118 Ind. 112; King v. Easton, 135 Ind. 353; Barnard v. Brown, 112 Ind. 53; Citizens' State Bank v. Harris, 149 Ind. 208.

But where the owner or his grantee permits the land to be sold at sheriff's sale upon such judgment, the sale will convey title, if there is no redemption; and it will not be set aside where there has been no claim to exemption made before the sale.

41 L. R. A.

Moss v. Jenkins, 146 Ind. 589.

The fact that the bid of appellant Pugh was credited upon her judgment, except the costs which she paid in cash, does not place her in any different position from that which she would occupy if she had paid her bid in cash.

Robertson v. VanCleave, 129 Ind. 217, 15 L. R. A. 68; Burton v. Ferguson, 69 Ind. 480; Clossen v. Whitney, 39 Minn. 50; Boos v. Morgan, 130 Ind. 305; Boots v. Ristine, 146 Ind. 75.

The appellees, seeking the aid of a court of equity to enforce a vendor's lien,—a creature of courts of equity,—must show that its enforcement is not inequitable to appellant.

Richards v. Mackall, 124 U. S. 183, 31 L. ed. 396; Willard v. Wood, 164 U. S. 502, 41 L. ed. 531; Penn Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Austin, 168 U. S. 685, 42 L. ed. 626.

The fact that no mortgage was taken for the unpaid purchase money and put upon record is itself a badge of fraud.

Hutchinson v. First Nat. Bank, 133 Ind. 271.

When it appeared from the evidence that the lien was concealed for the express purpose of giving Clayborn H. Highley a fictitious credit, the proof of fraud became conclusive.

Blennerhassett v. Sherman, 105 U. S. 100, 26 L. ed. 1080; Dobson v. Snider, 70 Fed. Rep. 10; Montgomery v. Phillips, 53 N. J. Eq. 203; Jewett v. Sundback, 5 S. D. 111; Goll & F. Co. v. Miller, 87 Iowa, 426; Snouffer v. Kinley, 96 Iowa, 102; Steele v. Coon, 27 Neb. 586; Fetters v. Duvernois, 73 Mich. 481; Stook-Growers' Bank v. Newton, 13 Colo. 245; Lehman v. Van Winkle, 92 Ala. 443; State Sav. Bank v. Buck, 123 Mo. 148; Central Nat. Bank v. Doran, 109 Mo. 40.

The acceptance of a note negotiable by the law merchant is prima facie a payment of the debt and a waiver of any vendor's lien.

Davis & R. Bldg. & Mfg. Co. v. Vice, 15 Ind. App. 117; Sutton v. Baldwin, 148 Ind. 361; Teal v. Spangler, 72 Ind. 380; Smith v. Bettger, 68 Ind. 254, 34 Am. Rep. 256.

Messrs. R. T. St. John and W. H. Charles, for appellees:

This court has in effect overruled the doctrine that the judgment creditor who purchases under his own judgment is a bona fide purchaser as against an existing vendor's lien.

Shirk v. Thomas, 121 Ind. 147; White v. Wilson, 6 Blackf. 448, 39 Am. Dec. 437; Glidewell v. Spaugh, 26 Ind. 319; Taylor v. Duesterberg, 109 Ind. 165; Folts v. Wert, 103 Ind. 404; Dickerson v. Tillinghast, 4 Paige, 215, 25 Am. Dec. 528; Boling v. Howell, 93 Ind. 329; Petry v. Ambroscher, 100 Ind. 510; First Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 129 Ind. 241.

A precedent debt is a sufficient consideration for a mortgage, but such mortgage will be subject to the vendor's lien.

Oliver v. Piatt, 3 How. 333, 11 L. ed. 622.

One who has acquired his title by quitclaim deed cannot be regarded as a purchaser without notice.

May v. LeClaire, 11 Wall. 217, 20 L. ed. 50; Villa v. Rodriguez, 12 Wall. 323, 20 L.

ed. 406; Baker v. Humphrey, 101 U. S. 494, 25 L. ed. 1065.

One who takes premises purchased by him at sheriff's sale in payment of a pre-existing debt is not a bona fide purchaser within the meaning of the recording act.

Peck v. Mallams, 10 N. Y. 545.

A judgment is a lien only upon the debtor's interest in the land.

Paxton v. Sterne, 127 Ind. 289; Walton v. Hargroves, 42 Miss. 18, 97 Am. Dec. 429; Bell v. Flaherty, 45 Miss. 696; Green v. Mizelle, 54 Miss. 228; Tarkington v. Purvis, 128 Ind. 182, 9 L. R. A. 607.

Where a vendor has his lien on lands in possession of his vendee, and the vendee sells the land to a third party who without notice pays a valuable consideration therefor, such purchaser will take the land devested of the vendor's lien; but where such purchaser is a judgment creditor of the vendee, and purchases on his own judgment, he is not a bona fide purchaser as against the prior equity of the vendor; but takes title subject to the same.

Orb v. Coapstick, 136 Ind. 313; Boling v. Nowell, 93 Ind. 329; Petry v. Ambroscher, 100 Ind. 510; Shirk v. Thomas, 121 Ind. 147; Tarkington v. Purvis, 128 Ind. 182, 9 L. R. A. 607; Old Nat. Bank v. Findley, 131 Ind. 225; Boos v. Morgan, 130 Ind. 305; Taylor v. Duesterberg, 109 Ind. 165; Wert v. Naylor, 93 Ind. 431; Adams v. Vanderbeck, 148 Ind. 92.

Baker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Suit to foreclose vendor's lien. Appellees conveyed lands to one Clayborn Highley, and took his unsecured note therefor. Afterwards appellant recovered judgment against the grantee, and caused execution to issue. The sheriff levied on the lands in question. At the sale, appellant was the purchaser. When the time for redemption expired, she received a sheriff's deed for the lands. Complaint in two paragraphs. The first is silent concerning notice to appellant of appellee's equity. The second charges that appellant had notice before receiving the sheriff's deed. Appellant's several demurrers for want of facts were overruled. A demurrer was sustained to an answer of appellant, in which she averred that she bid at the sale, paid the costs, and receipted the sheriff for the full amount of her judgment, without knowledge or notice of appellees' claim. Judgment for appellees after trial on issues completed by answers of general denial and payment, and reply denying payment.

The question is: Does a judgment creditor, who in good faith buys at a proper execution sale on his own valid judgment, take the land subject to prior secret equities? The lien of a judgment attaches only to the actual interest of the debtor in the land. While the judgment remains unexecuted, the lien may be subordinated to any prior equity, though secret; for the creditor pays or surrenders nothing to or for the debtor, and continues to hold against the debtor his full claim, which the court has merely changed from a cause of action into a judgment. A security for an antecedent debt will be upheld between the parties, but the taker will not be protected against prior secret equities, because he parts with nothing. But a purchaser who pays the owner the value of the land takes the title clear of equities of which he has no notice. And a creditor who, without notice, cancels a pre-existing debt in consideration of his debtor's conveying him land is a good-faith purchaser for value. To hold that the debtor may sell his land to a stranger, and turn over the purchase price (money, notes, goods, land) to his creditor in satisfaction of the debt, whereby the creditor is free from claimants of secret equities, and to hold that the creditor, if the debtor conveys the land to him in payment of the debt, is liable to be affected by secret equities, is to approve the roundabout and involved, and to condemn the straight and simple, method of accomplishing the same result,—using the land to pay the debt. A good-faith purchaser, other than the judgment creditor, at a proper execution sale on a valid judgment, who pays the sheriff the amount of his bid, acquires all the right, title, and interest in the land sold (except redemption) that the judgment debtor could have conveyed to him by deed or bargain and sale. As to secret equities, he stands on the same footing with the good-faith purchaser for value from the apparent owner of land. In both cases the purchaser irrevocably parts with his money, relying, and having the right to rely, on getting, not merely what the debtor actually owns, but what from the public records he apparently owns. In either case,—before the debtor himself conveys, or before the sheriff conveys for him,—the holder of the prior secret equity has had it in his power to prevent any one's being misled by the false situation. If either the subsequent purchaser or the holder of the secret equity must suffer or be postponed, it should be the latter, since his initiative made delusion by the debtor's apparent circumstances possible.

What, now, is the position of the judgment creditor who purchases at a proper execution sale on his own valid judgment? (The premises exclude the question of the effect upon the judgment creditor of irregularities in the proceedings.) The authorities holding that he is not a good-faith purchaser for value seem to be based upon either or both of two propositions,—that he has parted with nothing, has not changed his position for the worse; and that he will not be permitted to urge a claim that rises higher than the source of his right (by that meaning the lien of his judgment). The judgment creditor purchaser has parted with value, and has changed his position for the worse. He has paid to the sheriff the amount of his bid in cash, actually or constructively; for, if he merely receipts for payment of his judgment in whole or in part, the transaction, in contemplation of law, is the same as if he had paid the sheriff in cash, and the sheriff had paid him in cash. His payment is just as irrevocable as that of a stranger purchaser. His right to vacate the satisfaction of the judgment is no greater than that of a stranger purchaser; and under Rev. Stat. 1881, § 765 (Burns's Rev. Stat. 1894, § 777; Horner's Rev. Stat. 1897, § 765), there can be no right of that kind in the present case, for defects in the proceedings and want of title in the debtor are excluded from the question, by the facts. If the judgment creditor purchaser does not pay at the time of the sale, he is liable to judgment for the amount of the bid, and damages, interest, and costs, like any other purchaser. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 760; Burns's Rev. Stat. 1894, § 772; Horner's Rev. Stat. 1897, § 760. He has also changed his position for the worse if he is not to be permitted to hold under the execution sale the same as a stranger purchaser. The debtor may have directed the sheriff to levy upon the very land that was subject to the secret equity. Manifestly, the judgment creditor, without notice, is ethically as innocent in bidding as is the stranger. By the sale, the execution becomes functus officio, and the judgment creditor has lost the lien of his execution upon the goods and chattels of his debtor. By the sale, the judgment is satisfied pro tanto, and the judgment creditor has lost the lien of his judgment upon the other lands of his debtor. But, it is said, he may not urge a claim of higher value than the source of his right,—that is, his judgment lien. Why not? If an innocent stranger pays for a deed, he acquires the apparent title of the grantor, and the holder of the secret equity will not be heard to say aught against it; that is, the purchaser gets more than the debtor had. Stronger than the innocent stranger's, however, are the equities of the judgment creditor purchaser without notice; for the holder of the secret equity has less opportunity to protect himself against the stranger than he has against the judgment creditor, since he may have no means of ascertaining, even by the exercise of the highest vigilance, to whom his secret trustee is about to convey, but it is only his own inaction that can prevent his learning of the judgment before sale,—in time to subordinate the lien to his rights. Shall equity offer a premium for sloth? If not, then the judgment creditor purchaser should likewise take more than the debtor had. If an owner of an antecedent debt cancels in good faith the obligation in consideration of a deed from his debtor he takes the title free from secret equities; that is, the purchaser gets more than the debtor had. Shall the private—maybe secret—extinguishment of the debt he held of more exalted worth in equity than the law's public and open satisfaction thereof? If not, then the judgment creditor purchaser should likewise take more than the debtor had. If a stranger without notice buys at execution sale, his purchase cuts off secret claims against the land; that is, the purchaser gets more than the debtor had. The law does not prohibit, but, on the contrary, encourages, the judgment creditor to bid; for it is in the interest of the law's execution of the judgment, and to the advantage of the debtor, that he should compete with the other bidders. If a stranger purchases, the sheriff pays over the money to the judgment creditor, who thereby receives satisfaction out of property on which his judgment may not have been actually a lien. Shall equity accredit the circuitous, and discredit the direct, means to the same end? If not, then the judgment creditor purchaser should likewise take more than the debtor had. It is a misapprehension to say that the rights of a judgment creditor purchaser arise from the judgment lien, and therefore continue subject to prior secret equities. His position as purchaser is in no sort of legal privity with his position as judgment creditor. When the sale is made, he ceases to be a judgment creditor. His rights thenceforward are those of a purchaser at execution sale. The contention that the rights of a purchaser at execution sale are one thing if he is a stranger, and another if he is the judgment creditor, is untenable in reason.

The decisions of this court, upon analysis, are found in conformity with these principles. In Catherwood v. Watson, 65 Ind. 576, the facts were these: Daniel Watson bought land with his wife's money, and took title in his own name. Subsequently, Catherwood obtained judgment against one Mills, on which Daniel became replevin bail. The land was sold on execution to satisfy the judgment, and Catherwood purchased. Mrs. Watson sued to quiet title. Catherwood had no notice of her claim till after the execution sale. It was held that Catherwood was entitled to the land clear of Mrs. Watson's secret equity. It appears in Rooker v. Rooker, 75 Ind. 571, that Samuel Rooker used money of his wife in buying land, and took title in his own name. His wife had instructed him to buy the land for her daughter Mary. Samuel recognized the trust, and made a will, devising the land to Mary. In Samuel's lifetime, the Farmers' Friend Manufacturing Company recovered judgment against Samuel, and bought the land at execution sale on its judgment. The company had no notice of Mary's equities. Within the year of redemption, the company sold its certificate of sale to James Rooker, who knew about the claims of Mary. After James received a sheriff's deed, the guardian of Mary, her father having died in the meantime, brought suit to quiet title. It was decided that the company was a good-faith purchaser for value, and that, the rights of the parties having been fixed by the execution sale, James's knowledge of Mary's equities at the time he bought the certificate was immaterial. Milner v. Hyland, 77 Ind. 458. Hyland bought realty with his wife's money and took title in his own name. Milner and others recovered judgments against Hyland, on which executions were issued and levied on the land. Milner became purchaser at the sheriff's sale, which was made in part to satisfy Milner's own judgment. By the decision, Milner was fully protected against the secret equity of Mrs. Hyland. Vitito v. Hamilton, 86 Ind. 137. A mortgage was made to appellee, in which the land intended to be encumbered was not described. The same landowner later executed a mortgage to appellant, in which the same mistake occurred. Appellant brought suit against the mortgagor to reform and foreclose. Appellee was not a party. At the sale, appellant was the purchaser, without notice of appellee's equity. Subsequently appellee brought suit to reform and foreclose, but appellant was not a party. At the sale, appellee was the purchaser. Held, that appellant's purchase at his own sale cut off appellee's prior secret equity. In the ejectment case of Pierce v. Spear, 94 Ind. 127, the title resulting from an execution sale at which the judgment creditor was the purchaser was determined to be the paramount one.

Decisions to the same effect in other jurisdictions abound. Tennant v. Watson, 58 Ark. 252; Newman v. Davis, 24 Fed. Rep. 609; Foorman v. Wallace, 75 Cal. 552; Riley v. Martinelli, 97 Cal. 575, 21 L. R. A. 33; Doyle v. Wade, 23 Fla. 90; Columbus Buggy Co. v. Graves, 108 Ill. 459; Halloway v. Platner, 20 Iowa, 121, 89 Am. Dec. 517; Butterfield v. Walsh, 21 Iowa, 99, 89 Am. Dec. 557; Walker v. Elston, 21 Iowa, 529; Etteneheimer v. Northgraves, 75 Iowa, 28; Parker v. Prescott, 87 Me. 444; Woodward v. Sartwell, 129 Mass. 210; Luton v. Sharp, 94 Mich. 202; Adams v. Buchanan, 49 Mo. 64; Condit v. Wilson, 36 N. J. Eq. 370; Voorhis v. Westervelt, 43 N. J. Eq. 644; Wood v. Chapin, 13 N. Y. 509, 67 Am. Dec. 62; Wood v. Morehouse, 45 N. Y. 368, 376; Barto v. Tompkins County Nat. Bank, 15 Hun, 11; Paine v. Mooreland, 15 Ohio, 435, 45 Am. Dec. 585; Sternberger v. Ragland, 57 Ohio St. 148; Grace v. Wade, 45 Tex. 529; Reynolds v. Haskins, 68 Vt. 426; Bayley v. Greenleaf, 7 Wheat. 46, 5 L. ed. 393. The decisions in Arkansas, Florida, Illinois, New Jersey, and Texas apparently are controlled by statutes ranking judgment creditors with subsequent purchasers for value. The cases of Gifford v. Bennett, 75 Ind. 528; Wert v. Naylor, 93 Ind. 431; and Adams v. Vanderbeck, 148 Ind. 92,—holding that stranger purchasers at execution sales, and cancelers of antecedent debts, without notice, are innocent purchasers, are also authoritative in principle. The statements in Boling v. Howell, 93 Ind. 329; Petry v. Ambroscher, 100 Ind. 510; Tarkington v. Purvis, 128 Ind. 182, 9 L. R. A. 607; and Orb v. Coapstick, 136 Ind. 313,—in so far as they may be deemed to affirm that the holder of an antecedent debt who cancels his claim for a conveyance of land from his debtor takes subject to secret equities of which he had no notice, are disapproved.

Against the decisions in which was directly involved the very question that arises in the present appeal, no authority to the contrary in this state has been cited, nor has an extended investigation discovered one. There are, however, several instances of obiter dicta. In Rooker v. Rooker, 75 Ind. 571, and Vitito v. Hamilton, 86 Ind. 137, the expressions of dissent, by force of the term, are excluded from the decisions. In Carnahan v. Yerkes, 87 Ind. 62, 67, the following language was used: "An execution creditor, who bids off property at a sale upon his own execution, and applies the bid to the payment of his own judgment, is not regarded as a bona fide or innocent purchaser." The statement is incomplete, because silent as to notice. Applied to a judgment creditor purchaser with notice of the prior equity, it is right; to one without notice, wrong. The facts in the case disclose that the judgment creditor purchaser had notice, prior to the execution sale, of the senior rights of his adversary. The quotation must be limited, or regarded as dictum. In Shirk v. Thomas, 121 Ind. 147, 153, it was said: "Rooker v. Rooker, 75 Ind. 571; Gifford v. Bennett, 75 Ind. 528; Vitito v. Hamilton, 86 Ind. 137, . . . have, indeed, been overruled, and must be regarded as without force. . . .

The great weight of authority, evidenced by our own well-considered cases, . . . is that a judgment creditor who buys at his own sale obtains only the interest which the judgment debtor had in the property at the time the judgment was entered." The facts were these: Albert Tyner on August 1, 1884, owned certain land. That day he deeded it to James Tyner. The deed was recorded in May, 1885. On December 6, 1884, James Tyner, for full value, deeded the land to Shirk's ancestor. This deed was recorded February 18, 1885. Shirk's ancestor went into possession under his deed, and Shirk was in possession at the time of the sale, under Thomas's judgment. On October 28, 1884, Thomas caused a writ of attachment to issue against Albert Tyner, on the ground of his nonresidency. The writ was levied on the land in question. January 8, 1885, Thomas recovered judgment in attachment. July 7, 1886, order of sale was issued. July 31, 1886, sale occurred and Thomas bought. Neither James Tyner nor Shirk's ancestor nor Shirk had any notice of the attachment proceedings. The deed from Albert Tyner had been on record fourteen months, and Shirk and his ancestor had been in possession of the land nineteen months, before Thomas purchased at the execution sale. When it was determined that the rights of Thomas as holder of a judgment in attachment were no greater than those of the holder of an ordinary judgment, and were therefore subordinate to prior equities, the case was ended. Thomas could not be an innocent purchaser at any sort of a sale that occurred more than a year after he had notice of the prior deeds. The quoted proposition is pure dictum. Nor does one of the seventeen cases cited in Shirk v. Thomas as supportive of the dictum uphold it. In White v. Wilson, 6 Blackf. 448, 39 Am. Dec. 437, a misdescription in a mortgage was corrected against judgment creditors, not against purchasers at execution sale. In Glidewell v. Spangh, 26 Ind. 319, the right of a purchaser at execution sale was held inferior to the right of one in possession under an unrecorded deed at the time of the sale. Possession was notice. In Watkins v. Jones, 28 Ind. 12, the controversy was between a wife who sought to enforce a secret trust against her husband and a judgment creditor of the husband. No question concerning rights under execution sales was involved. Nor did the question arise in Troost v. Davis, 31 Ind. 34, wherein the holder of a prior equity sought to enjoin an execution sale. In Hampson v. Fall, 64 Ind. 382, Fall sent money to his mother with which to buy land for him. She took title in her own name, and subsequently mortgaged the land to one Vawter, who knew of the trust. Vawter, for value, transferred the mortgage to Hampson who got a deed through foreclosure. Hampson had no notice of Fall's equity. Hampson's title was held to be paramount. There was no sheriff's sale in Monticello Hydraulic Co. v. Loughry, 72 Ind. 562. The holder of a prior equitable lien enjoined a judgment creditor from proceeding to execution sale on his judgment. In Jones v. Rhoads, 74 Ind. 510, it appears that Castor devised his lands to Daniel Rhoads, a stranger. The heirs of Castor brought an action to set aside the will. A compromise was made, under which the court entered judgment that the will was valid, the heirs quitclaimed to Daniel, and Daniel gave his notes secured by mortgage on the devised lands to Jones, as trustee of the heirs for the full value of the lands. Jones, as trustee, later got a deed through foreclosure. Before the notes and mortgage were executed, Patton had recovered against Daniel Rhoads a judgment on which Jacob Rhoads became replevin bail. After the foreclosure sale, Jacob paid Patton, caused execution to issue, and bought at the sale. Jacob was not a party to the foreclosure proceedings. On Jones's suit to quiet title, Jacob prevailed, because the judgment lien attached to the land before the mortgage lien did. In Sharpe v. Davis, 76 Ind. 17, an ineffectual effort was made to hold, by virtue of a sheriff's deed, land to which the title never was in the judgment debtor, and for which the defendant had a recorded deed before the execution sale occurred. The same dictum appears in the opinion, however. Judgment creditors, in Boyd v. Anderson, 102 Ind. 217, failed to prevent the reformation of a prior deed made by the judgment debtor. In Heberd v. Wines, 105 Ind. 237, a wife quieted her equitable title against a judgment creditor of her husband who held the legal title in trust for her. Blair v. Smith, 114 Ind.

114, was a case of collusion between husband and wife to defraud the husband's creditors, and the rights of purchasers at execution sale were in no way involved. In Miller v. Noble, 86 Ind. 527, Miller, at his own execution sale on judgment against the widow of John Noble, purchased land that the widow took under the statute. She had married again before the judgment was rendered. After her death during coverture, the Noble children recovered the land from Miller. The case presented no question of secret equities. Hays v. Reger, 102 Ind. 524, concerned solely the subjection of a judgment lien to a prior equity. In Foltz v. Wert, 103 Ind. 404, the purchaser at execution sale had constructive notice, and his assignee both constructive and actual notice, of the prior equities. Wright v. Tichenor, 104 Ind. 185, decides that a sale upon a judgment against the husband alone does not convey the interest of the wife. The case does not pertain in the least to the relation between purchasers at execution sale and holders of prior secret equities. In Wright v. Jones, 105 Ind. 17, creditors of a widower unsuccessfully sought to subject one third of his deceased wife's land in fee to the liens of their judgments, in spite of her will to the contrary made in pursuance of an agreement between the husband and wife. Taylor v. Duesterberg, 109 Ind. 165, was a suit by a creditor of a husband to set aside as fraudulent a deed to his wife. No question arose that related to rights under execution sales. The statement in Shirk v. Thomas that the cases of Rooker v. Rooker, Gifford v. Bennett, and Vitito v. Hamilton have been overruled, is wholly gratuitous. They enunciate principles that are founded in reason; they are not opposed by any decision in this state on the same or similar facts; they flow with the current of modern authority; and they certainly are not overborne by the dissent in the Rooker and Vitito cases, nor by the obiter dicta in Sharpe v. Davis, Carnahan v. Yerkes, and Shirk v. Thomas.

Judgment reversed, with instructions to sustain the demurrer to each paragraph of the complaint.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

N. HAMLIN, Appt.,

v.

B. F. SIMPSON.

(105 Iowa, 125.)

1. The payee of a check who does not promptly present it for payment to the bank, which falls before it is presented, has the burden of proving that the maker was not injured thereby.

2. Oral evidence of an agreement by the cashier of a bank to allow a depositor to check against a special deposit for which certificates of deposit have been issued is admissible in an action against such depositor by one to whom he had given a check for the amount of a debt, which check was not duly presented, for the purpose of showing that he had reasonable ground to believe that such check would be paid, although he had no general deposit in the bank.

NOTE.—For release of indorser of check by delay in presenting it, see Kirkpatrick v. Puryear (Tenn.) 22 L. R. A. 785, and note.
44 L. R. A.

3. A finding that the cashier of a bank agreed to allow defendant to check against the amount of a special deposit in the bank is sustained by positive evidence by defendant to that effect, and by evidence that the bank, although hopelessly insolvent and making desperate efforts to keep its doors open, permitted defendant to overdraw his general account.

4. The maker of a check which the payee fails to present for some time and until after the bank has failed, is damaged thereby so as to be discharged from liability on the check, where at the time of the failure he had general and special deposits in the bank for which he held collateral security which would be insufficient to pay the amount which would have remained in the bank if the check had been paid.
5. Failure of the payee of a check to promptly present the same to the bank for payment will release the maker from liability if he is injured thereby where the bank subsequently fails, although his general deposit in the bank was overdrawn at the time, where he had a special deposit in the bank and had reasonable grounds to believe that the check would be paid because of a promise by the cashier to allow him to check against such special deposit.
6. A finding that defendant did not know that a bank upon which he drew a check in favor of plaintiff was insolvent at the time is sustained by evidence that two days thereafter he made a large deposit in the bank, although he took security for special deposits made by him therein, where such deposits were made at a time when banks were failing all over the country.

(April 8, 1898.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Audubon County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover the purchase price of certain live stock sold by plaintiff to defendant for which defendant gave a check which plaintiff failed to collect. Affirmed.

Statement by Waterman, J.:

Plaintiff seeks to recover the sum of $929.46 for hogs and cattle sold the defendant. The answer admits the purchase of said live stock at the price named, but avers that the price was settled for at the time by bank checks, which plaintiff held an unreasonable time before presenting for payment, and that the bank upon which they were drawn became insolvent. By way of reply, plaintiff says that, at the time defendant drew said checks and delivered them to plaintiff, he (defendant) had no funds with which to meet them in the bank upon which they were drawn; that at said time said bank was hopelessly insolvent, and that this fact was well known to defendant, and unknown to plaintiff; and that a presentment of said checks would have been useless. The case was tried to the court without a jury. There was a judgment dismissing plaintiff's petition, and in favor of defendant for costs. Plaintiff appeals.

Messrs. Willard & Willard for appellant.

Messrs. Theodore F. Meyers and F. E. Brainard, for appellee:

The plaintiff in this case was not compelled to accept a check in payment of his 44 L. R. A.

stock. He had an absolute right to demand payment in money only. When, instead of demanding and receiving money in payment, he receives and accepts defendant's checks, the law defines his duties and responsibilities thereafter.

Hamilton v. Winona Salt & Lumber Co. 95 Mich. 436; Cincinnati Oyster & Fish Co. v. National Lafayette Bank, 51 Ohio St. 106; 2 Parsons, Contr. 8th ed. 736.

What is undue delay in the presentment of a check, and the law relative thereto, is fixed and determined by the courts in many decisions.

Gifford v. Hardell, 88 Wis. 538; First Nat. Bank v. Miller, 37 Neb. 500.

Greater diligence must be used in the presentment of a check than a bill of exchange.

Anderson v. Gill, 79 Md. 312, 25 L. R. A. 200.

A bank deposit is subject to any arrangement which the depositor and the bank may make concerning it, so long as the rights of third persons are not injuriously affected.

Howard v. Roeben, 33 Cal. 399; Chiles v. Garrison, 32 Mo. 475; National Bank v. Smith, 66 N. Y. 271; McEwen v. Davis, 39 Ind. 109; Morse, Banks & Banking, § 188; Lamb v. Morris, 118 Ind. 179, 4 L. R. A. 111.

In determining whether the cashier of the Cass County Bank would have been authorized to pay the checks in question had the same been presented for payment by plaintiff, and whether defendant had sufficient funds on deposit with which to meet said checks, the court must take into consideration, not only the amount of defendant's open account, but also all indebtedness due from the Cass County Bank to defendant.

Industrial Trust, Title, & Sav. Co. v. Weakley, 103 Ala. 458; Re State Bank, 56 Minn. 119.

Defendant had an absolute right to, and did, rely upon the conversation with the cashier of the bank relative to the drawing of checks against the fund evidenced by certificates.

American Esch. Nat. Bank v. Gregg, 138 Ill. 596.

The time of closing of the doors of the bank, and the suspension of its business, is the time when the bank becomes insolvent in fact and in effect, so far as third persons and creditors are concerned; and is the time which the courts refer to when they speak of the insolvency of the party.

Yardley v. Philler, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 46, 58 Fed. Rep. 746. See Hayes v. Beardsley, 136 N. Y. 299; Chemical Nat. Bank v. Armstrong, 16 U. S. App. 465, 59 Fed. Rep. 372, 8 C. C. A. 155, 28 L. R. A. 231; Anderson v. Rodgers, 53 Kan. 542, 27 L. R. A. 248; Diven v. Phelps, 34 Barb. 224; Industrial Trust, Title, & Sav. Co. v. Weakley, 103 Ala. 458.

The cashier of a bank ordinarily has the exclusive control of the funds of the bank. Where a bank holds out to the world, as was done in this case, that the cashier alone had the right to issue certificates of deposit by his signature only, this is the best evidence that a holder of a certificate had a right to believe and rely upon the apparent authority of the cashier to dispense with the formality of surrendering the certificate, in order to have the debt due him from the bank evidenced upon the books of the bank.

See Barnes v. Ontario Bank, 19 N. Y. 167; Potter v. Merchants' Bank, 28 N. Y. 649, 86 Am. Dec. 273; Birmingham Trust & Sav. Co. v. Louisiana Nat. Bank, 99 Ala. 379, 20 L. R. A. 600; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. §§ 593 et seq.; Lamb v. Morris, 118 Ind. 179, 4 L. R. A. 111.

Any amount paid out on Simpson's check would have been offset or rather operated as a payment or appropriation of so much of Simpson's account as the amount of the check called for.

Windisch & M. Brewing Co. v. Bank of Maryville, Ohio Supreme Court April 7, 1893.

As between the appellant and the appellee, appellee is entitled to be paid the balance due him from the Cass County Bank, $1,690, in full before appellant can claim any benefit from the collaterals held by appellee.

Fuller v. Tomlinson Bros. 58 Iowa, 111; Adams & F. Harvester Co. v. Tomlinson Bros. 58 Iowa, 129; Little v. Phoenix Bank, 2 Hill, 425, 7 Hill, 359.

The taking of collateral security is not a waiver of demand or presentment and notice of nonpayment, unless it should appear that appellee is amply secured.

Bond v. Farnham, 5 Mass. 170, 4 Am. Dec. 47; Mead v. Small, 2 Me. 207, 11 Am. Dec. 67.

Waterman, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The facts, as stipulated or established, are that on December 13, 1893, the defendant gave his two checks on the Cass County Bank of Atlantic to plaintiff in settlement for live stock purchased. One of the checks was for $441.80; the other, for $487.66. The checks were given by defendant, at plaintiff's home, in Audubon county, 16¼ miles from Atlantic, and 5½ miles from Brayton, a station on a railroad leading to Atlantic, upon which two trains a day, except Sunday, ran to the last-named town. There was a bank in Exira, a town 7 miles from plaintiff's home. Plaintiff never presented the checks for payment, and on December 27, 1893, the Cass County Bank, being insolvent, was placed in the hands of a receiver.

2. As an excuse for not presenting the checks for payment, and to show that defendant had suffered no injury by the failure so to do, the plaintiff alleges that defendant at the time he gave the checks had no funds in said bank against which to draw. In the ordinary course of business, the checks should have been presented for payment, at the latest, during business hours of the second day after their receipt, which would have been the 15th. Tiedeman, Com. Paper, § 443. At that time, and for some days before, defendant's general account with the bank was overdrawn. On December 16 he deposited $1,150.07. During all this time defendant had on special deposit in this bank the sum of $2,000, represented by two certificates of deposit for $1,000 each. As a general rule, it may be said that a check drawn on a bank in which the drawer has not sufficient funds to meet it need not be presented at all, in order to hold the drawer. This rule, however, has some qualifications. The reasons for it seem to be that it is deemed a fraud for one to give a check which he has no ground to believe will be paid, and that he does not need notice of the fact that the check is not paid, when he must have known that payment would be refused. But if he has reason to think his check will be honored, though he may have no credit balance on the books of the bank, his act in drawing it will not be a fraud; and he will be in a position to insist on prompt presentment, demand, and notice. In Beauregard v. Knoulton, 156 Mass. 395, the rule is said to be that the drawing of a check on a bank wherein the drawer has no funds, and no ground for a reasonable expectation that the check will be paid, is a fraud, and will excuse the failure to present for payment. See also Industrial Trust, Title, & Sav. Co. v. Weakley, 103 Ala. 458; Case v. Morris, 31 Pa. 100; True v. Thomas, 16 Me. 36; Stanton v. Blossom, 14 Mass. 116, 7 Am. Dec. 198; French v. Bank of Columbia, 4 Cranch, 141, 2 L. ed. 576; Robinson v. Ames, 20 Johns. 146, 11 Am. Dec. 259; Merchants' Bank v. Easley, 44 Mo. 286, 100 Am. Dec. 287; Hill v. Norris, 2 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 114. In speaking of the rule that excuses demand and notice when the drawer has no funds in the hands of the drawee, it is said in Case v. Morris, 31 Pa. 100: "It introduced an exception to a plain and intelligible rule of commercial law, which many eminent and experienced judges have since regretted. It is adhered to on the principle of stare decisis, but it is not to be extended a single step."

3. Under the rule stated, we have this situation: There being no funds to the credit of defendant's general account in the Cass County Bank, plaintiff was presumptively under no obligation to make demand for the money; but this presumption is rebuttable, and defendant seeks to overcome it by this showing: During all of this time he held certificates of deposit, issued by the bank, for the sum of $2,000; and he claims to have had an arrangement with the cashier by which he was allowed to check against this amount.

4. Appellant's first objection to this defense is that any such agreement with the cashier would be within the statute of frauds, and that oral evidence cannot be received to establish it. Whatever merit there might be in this claim if this were an action on the agreement, it is certainly not good under the circumstances of this case. No more is being claimed here for the cashier's promise than that it gave defendant reasonable ground to believe his checks would be paid.

5. Next it is said that no such agreement is established. The defendant is the only witness to testify on this point; and while in several of his answers he gives conclusions, instead of specific facts, yet he does in one answer state clearly and positively that the cashier told him that he might check against this special deposit. The circumstances tend, we think, to corroborate him.

This bank for some time prior to December 27, 1893, was hopelessly insolvent. During the period of the transactions between these parties it was making desperate efforts, from day to day, to keep open its doors. It needed every dollar it could obtain to enable it to continue its business, and yet during this time defendant was allowed to overdraw his general account. This circumstance seems almost conclusive. Upon no other theory than an agreement such as defendant claims would this state of affairs have been permitted. We think defendant has established that he had reasonable ground to believe the checks given plaintiff would be paid on presentation. This being true, the failure to make timely demand and give proper notice will release defendant, if he has been damaged by such default.

6. The burden of proof is on plaintiff to show that defendant was not injured. Kirkpatrick v. Puryear, 93 Tenn. 409, 22 L. R. A. 785. When the bank went into the receiver's hands, defendant had on deposit $2,000 on certificates, and $640.53 on general account. This was the amount of his loss. But he holds some collateral security, which was given him by the bank prior to the failure. If the checks had been presented and paid, defendant's balance would have been $1,711.07, and the undisputed testimony is that the collateral is insufficient to pay this amount. It affirmatively appears, then, that defendant has been damaged by plaintiff's default.

7. It is also urged by plaintiff that defendant knew the bank was insolvent at the time he drew these checks. This defendant denies. But the fact that he took security for his deposits is offered as an argument in support of this allegation. We think, perhaps, the financial crisis of 1893 was a matter so affecting the interests of the whole people as that we may take judicial notice of it, and the condition of things resulting from it. About the time of this transaction, banks were failing in almost every part of the country. Even those that were entirely solvent hoarded their cash, and parted with it only on compulsion. Every bank depositor was nervous, and with good reason. Defendant's act in taking security, which might in ordinary times have meant much, under the circumstances then existing meant but little. It evidenced scarcely anything more than the timidity that was then generally prevalent among depositors. But if, perhaps, we have no right to take cognizance of these matters, of which no evidence was offered, there is one fact in testimony that is, in our minds, decisive of this point. Three days after these checks were given, defendant deposited $1,150.07 in this bank, and more than $600 of it remained, as we have already said, and was lost in the final wreck. Such action on defendant's part, it is not reasonable to believe, would have been taken, had he known the bank was insolvent. This covers the case as presented, and our conclusion is apparent.

The judgment below will be affirmed.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

George H. GOWDY, Admr., etc., of A. T. Gowdy, Deceased, Appt.,

v.
John A. JOHNSON.

(.....Ky.....)

1. A mistake of mere judgment with respect to the value of the lands set apart for a homestead will not be ground of impeaching the determination by which the homestead was set aside.

2. The loss of his family after acquiring a homestead will not terminate the homesteader's right.

3. An increase in the value of a homestead will not authorize a revaluation and reassignment,—at least when there has been no rapid or extraordinary increase of value, or any unreasonable outlay on the premises.

(November 3, 1898.)

NOTE.—Revaluation or reassignment of homestead for appreciation or depreciation of value.

- I. When the question arises.
- II. Change from fluctuation in prices.
- III. Change from improvements and additions.
- IV. Homestead in decedent's estates.

I. When the question arises.

The question whether a homestead will be reassigned for a change in value can only arise under statutes limiting homesteads to a certain value as distinguished from those which limit them to a certain number of acres or quantity of land.

II. Change from fluctuation in prices.

Homesteads are purely statutory, and the question whether there can be a reassignment because of a change of value would seem to depend largely, if not entirely, upon the language 44 L. R. A.

of the particular statute in question. The rule of the principal case, however, would seem to be the prevailing one.

Thus, the Illinois statute gives to a debtor a homestead of the value of $1,000 and no more, and where a homestead is set apart in conformity to the statute which is then worth $1,000, and it afterwards materially increases in value, it may be reassigned to the same party and $1,000 set off to him at the instance of a creditor. Stubblefield v. Graves, 50 Ill. 103.

A homestead declared and set off as exempt from execution or other process does not thereupon become fixed and permanent so as not again to be subject to reassignment and division, but may, upon an increase in value of the property so as to bring it above the statutory limit, be reassigned and set off at the instance of a creditor. Mooney v. Moriarty, 86 Ill. App. 175.

So, under the California statute limiting a homestead at its inception to $5,000 in value, every increase of value works a reduction of the

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Taylor County in favor of plaintiff in an action to annul a levy upon and sale of a portion of the property which plaintiff claimed as a homestead. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. O. McChord, for appellant:

If appellee was not a bona fide housekeeper with a family, he was not and is not now entitled to a homestead in the land.

Stults v. Sale, 92 Ky. 5, 13 L. R. A. 743.

The allotment of homestead, as made under the Christie execution, was a mistake in the valuation of the 92 acres, and was procured by fraud on the part of appellee.

Vallandigham v. Worthington, 85 Ky. 83; Lawrence v. Edelen, 6 Bush, 55; Louden v. Yager, 91 Ky. 67; Caldwell v. Taylor, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 781.

If the creditor is willing to give more for the land than $1,000, and will pay into court $1,000 for the debtor, he should be allowed to do so; or if the allotment can be made without impairing the value of the homestead, that is, leaves its value below $1,000, this should be done.

Wilson v. Calvert, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 489.

area of the homestead until a point is reached when it cannot be further cut down and leave a homestead of the statutory value without material injury; and in such case no part of the premises constitutes a statutory homestead, but the value or proceeds of the premises to the extent of the statutory limit has the benefit of the exemption. Estate of Delaney, 37 Cal. 176.

And where lands dedicated as a homestead increase in value so as to exceed the prescribed limit under the Iowa statute (Sess. Laws 1848-49, chaps. 124, 152), the quantity must be reduced so as to make it consistent with the value allowed, and it must be ascertained whether it can be divided so as to leave a legal homestead, and this may be done by means of referees or other proceedings known to the law; and if the premises when reduced to the smallest quantity, as to the dwelling house and its appurtenances, exceed the statutory value, they are not exempt as a homestead. Helfenstein v. Cave, 3 Iowa, 287.

And a debtor may have a homestead under the Missouri statute exempting the homestead of every housekeeper or head of a family from attachment or execution except that it shall not exceed a designated quantity and value, but he must take and hold it subject to fluctuations in value; and if in the course of time it shall increase in value so as to be worth more than the statutory limit, it may be assigned again and the excess applied to the payment of his debts, and if it should depreciate in value he may add to it a claim and revaluation himself. Beckner v. Rule, 91 Mo. 62.

So, in Beecher v. Baldy, 7 Mich. 488, it was held that if a homestead is within the constitutional quantity under the constitutional provision of Michigan, but exceeds the constitutional value, it may be reduced in quantity so as to bring it within the required amount provided it can be so reduced by division as to leave a homestead within the specified value without cutting off any part of that which in fact goes to constitute a homestead. In such case the homestead so reduced would be exempt, while the balance might be sold on execution; but if when reduced so far as divisible it still exceeds the constitutional limit in value, it cannot be further divided. The courts cannot, in the absence of legislation, secure to the debtor a benefit, equal to the statutory amount, as the Constitution has only exempted a homestead as an entirety.

And in Gregg v. Bostwick, 33 Cal. 220, 91 Am. Dec. 637, it was said that under the California statute neither quantity nor value can be taken into account as tests as to what the homestead is in fact in a given case. They do not come into action until after the homestead has been ascertained by other tests, and then they operate only as limitations. If the homestead when ascertained exceeds the quantity named where the limitation is by quantity, it must be reduced by cutting off the excess, and if it exceeds the value named where the limitation is by value it must be divided if it can be done without material injury to the homestead, or, if not, it must be sold and the proceeds to the value named taken in lieu thereof.

Where a creditor claims that a homestead, though within the quantity limited by law, exceeds the specified value, the value may be ascertained either by directing an issue to a jury for that purpose or by reference to a commissioner to take proof and report. Beecher v. Baldy, 7 Mich. 488.

But under the North Carolina Constitution providing that a homestead shall not exceed a specified valuation, when the homestead is valued and completely laid off it is permanently established as to extent and value as well as in other respects, and cannot be extended as to quantity or enhanced as to value by revaluation under the statute or otherwise. Vanstory v. Thornton, 110 N. C. 10.

The purpose of N. C. Const. art. 4, securing a homestead not exceeding in value $1,000 to the owner thereof to be exempt from sale under execution or other final process and of the statutory provisions enacted thereunder prescribing the method by which a homestead may be allotted and set off, giving reasonable opportunity to all creditors existing at the time to scrutinize all rights of the debtor and contest the allotment, is to give the appraisal and allotment fixedness and permanency, and if they fail to interpose objections within that time in the way prescribed they are concluded as to all questions except fraud, complicity, or other irregularity. Gully v. Cole, 96 N. C. 447.

And where a homestead has been allotted in the manner prescribed in N. C. Code, chap. 10, and the time for filing objections has passed and the return of the appraisers has been registered, a second allotment made at the instance of a judgment creditor will be treated as void, though his judgment may have been rendered and docketed after the homestead was first laid off. Thornton v. Vanstory, 107 N. C. 331.

And in Gulley v. Cole, 102 N. C. 333, it was held that a homestead as at first laid off continued to be effectual and cannot be disturbed by revaluation thereof and laying it off a second time, and that an attempt to do so would be void; but there was nothing in the case to show whether or not there was an enhancement in value.

So, under the Tennessee statute the value of the homestead should be ascertained and determined at the time at which it is set apart to the person entitled to it, the value being ascertained and the boundaries determined by judicial proceedings, and if it should subsequently depreciate in value or be estimated at a higher value it is not subject to subsequent valuations by proceedings instituted for that purpose, the intent being that the land set apart as a homestead shall not thereafter be sold so as to de-

When the property is enhanced in value so that it exceeds the statutory limit, the excess does not constitute a part of the statutory homestead.

Re Delaney, 37 Cal. 180; Thompson, Homestead & Exemption, § 109; Waples, Homestead & Exemption (1893) p. 216; 9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 463; Linch v. Broad, 70 Tex. 92.

On rehearing.

There is a wide difference in the policy to conserve homes for the good of society and the state, and the policy to save the property of poor debtors from execution for their own good, or, as contemplated by Kentucky laws, for the good of the dependent members of the debtor's family.

This decision establishes the principle that if A has a debt for $1,000 against B, and A owns 100 acres of land worth $100 per acre, and A should sue out execution and levy on the 100 acres, and the sheriff have appraisers appointed, and they, knowing that 10 acres of the land are sufficient to satisfy the judgment, should designate 10 acres for sale, and should set apart the 90 acres worth $9,- prive the occupants thereof of their possession so long as they have the rights to the homestead. Hardy v. Lane, 6 Lea, 380.

And in Texas a homestead dedicated under a former law, which has increased in value but not to exceed the value fixed in a subsequently enacted, constitutional provision, will still be protected as a homestead. Baylor v. San Antonio Nat. Bank, 38 Tex. 448.

And see also Richards v. Nelms, 38 Tex. 445, infra, III.

III. Change from improvements and additions.

A homestead exemption must continue substantially the same as to its value under the North Carolina Constitution and statutes as it was at the time it was laid off to the debtor, and he cannot erect for any purpose buildings of great value on the exempted land and thus enhance its value and by such means shield his property from his creditors. Vanstory v. Thornton, 110 N. C. 10.

Where a lotowner constructs upon land laid off to him as a homestead a dwelling house or other buildings that become part of the land, thus making it of much greater value than the statutory limit, a creditor is entitled to have so much of the property as had been placed upon and made part of the homestead, making the land of greater value than the statutory limit applied to the satisfaction of his debt so far as it may be adequate for that purpose. Ibid.

So, in Hardy v. Lane, 6 Lea, 380, holding that a homestead is not subject to subsequent valuation on account of appreciation in value, the court declined to decide what, if any, remedy creditors might have in cases in which debtors expended extravagant sums upon their homesteads so as to raise the value above the limit.

A homestead will not be disturbed, however, for slight enhancement of its value, as by ordinary repairs or slight improvements, such as clearing land in the usual course of husbandry and the like. The increase must be substantial and extraordinary to work interference. Vanstory v. Thornton, 110 N. C. 10.

And where a homestead has been greatly enhanced in value in excess of the statutory limit by the erection thereon of a dwelling house or other improvements, a creditor cannot enforce his demand by ordinary process of execution against the property, but the court, in the exercise of its chancery jurisdiction, has power to direct all proper accounts to be taken, and to appoint commissioners to ascertain what additional value has been imparted to the homestead by the improvements, and to direct a sale of the excess to the best advantage of the parties. Ibid.

So, Texas act of February 2, 1860, providing that the subsequent increase in value of a homestead by reason of improvements or otherwise shall not subject the homestead to forced sale, protects the subsequent increase in value by reason of improvements and because of appreciation in value, but does not apply to an increase by an addition of other lots or other interests. Richards v. Nelms, 38 Tex. 445.

And where property when dedicated as a homestead was worth about $1,200, but afterwards increased in value until it was worth more than $2,000, an additional lot cannot be purchased and added to the homestead under the provision of that act that the homestead in a town or city shall be a lot or lots occupied or destined as a family residence not to exceed in value $2,000 at the time of their destination as a homestead. Ibid.

Where a homestead is dedicated and the property increases in value, and other property is purchased and sought to be included in the homestead, the then value of the previously acquired property cannot be ignored and the last purchase made to relate back until the time of the original dedication in order to bring the whole within the legal homestead value. Ibid.

IV. Homestead in decedents' estates.

Where land is set off by the administrator of an estate to the widow of the intestate for a homestead, and it afterwards rises in value, a new assignment cannot be had to reduce the quantity. Kenley v. Bryan, 110 Ill. 652.

But where a homestead not worth more than the statutory limit at the time it was set apart afterwards becomes worth more than that amount it is an excessive homestead from which, on the death of the husband, the court should set off a homestead to the wife, with reference to the value of the property at the time of his death. Linch v. Broad, 70 Tex. 92.

And a wife upon the death of her husband takes, under Cal. homestead act of 1862, § 4, the property which immediately preceding his death constituted the homestead as defined and protected by statute, and nothing more, and not the specific parcel or parcels of land which were described in the declaration, and which may at one time have constituted the homestead, where it had increased in value so as to be above the statutory limit. Re Delaney, 37 Cal. 176.

But a homestead set off under Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 474, providing that if the homestead selected by the husband and wife or either of them during their coverture, and recorded while both were living, was selected from community property, it vests on the death of the husband or wife absolutely in the survivor, goes absolutely to the survivor upon the death of one of them if it was within the statutory limit when set off, though at the time of the death its value exceeded the statutory limit. Re Burdick, 76 Cal. 639.

In the above case earlier decisions on the subject by the same court were distinguished upon the ground that they were made under materially different statutory provisions.

F. H. B.

000 as a homestead from ignorance of the law or defective judgment, C, who has a debt amounting to $1,000 against B, is by this proceeding deprived of any right to subject any portion of the $9,000 worth of the land to the payment of his debt, and he is thus deprived of his legal rights in a proceeding to which he is not a party and in which he has no legal right to file exceptions to, or make any other objections to, the allotment.

Appellant offers to take the land and pay therefor $2,000, thus enabling appellee to get $1,000 with which to purchase another homestead.

Thus, every right guaranteed to the debtor under the homestead law is preserved to appellee.

McMurray v. Shuck, 6 Bush, 112; Bell v. Neach, 80 Ky. 47.

Messrs. Garnett & Garnett and H. S. Robinson for appellee.

Hazellrigg, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On June 26, 1879, one Christie caused an execution to be levied on 123 acres of land belonging to his debtor, the appellee, Johnson, who was a housekeeper with a family and entitled to a homestead. Appraisers Cundiff and Griffin were accordingly selected by the officer levying the execution to set apart the homestead, and did so by giving the debtor 92 acres of the tract. The residue of the land was sold by the officer. On November 5, 1883, the appellant, Gowdy, caused an execution against Johnson to be levied on the 92 acres theretofore laid off as a homestead; and appraisers Sublett and Burruss were selected, and they set apart the entire tract to the debtor as a homestead, at $828. On November the 20th of the same year another execution issued on the same judgment, and appraisers Taylor and Shreve set apart the same tract, valuing it at $969. Two other executions were issued subsequently, but no further effort seems to have been made to subject the homestead to the debt until December, 1894, when another execution issued, and appraisers Kerr and Romine set apart 29 acres of the tract as a homestead, valuing it at the statutory limit of $1,000. The officer then proceeded to sell the residue under the execution, when the plaintiff therein bought it at the price of $800, a sum considerably less than his debt and interest. Johnson then instituted this action in equity to have the levy and sale declared void, and his title and right quieted to the homestead as originally laid off. The answer of Gowdy sets up at length various matters supposed by him to authorize the revaluation of the homestead, and the levy on, and sale of, the excess of land over the value limit of the statute. Among other things, he avers that, as he was no party to the Christie execution, he is not bound by the action of the appraisers in setting apart the 92 acres; that as the Christie debt was small, and the residue of the tract left for sale was ample to pay the debt, the proceeding was merely formal; that as a matter of fact the 92 acres of land at that time were worth at least $1,500 or more,—a fact well known to the appraisers,—and their action was therefore fraudulent; that he is not estopped by the action of subsequent appraisers under his execution; and that since 1883 the land has increased in value to the extent of $500 at least. He avers, further, that, prior to the last levy and sale under his execution, the debtor, Johnson, ceased to be a housekeeper with a family.

We are of opinion, as held by the chancellor on demurrer, that these averments do not constitute any reason whatever for disturbing the original setting apart of the 92 acres to Johnson as a homestead under the Christie execution. It is settled law that the action of the appraisers is final and conclusive against the world, unless impeached for fraud or mistake. The mistake meant is not one of mere judgment with respect to the value of the land set apart. That is the precise thing they are called on to do,—value the land and set it apart. If, intending to set apart 50 acres, they should, in fact, set apart, by mistake, 100 acres, this would afford ground for relief to any complaining creditor. Nor can there be relief in this case on the ground of fraud. The answer declares that more than ten years have elapsed since the alleged fraud (Ky. Stat. § 2519), and as relief against fraud or mistake should be sought within five years from the discovery thereof, and, in any event, within ten years from the act complained of, the averments were insufficient to afford ground for relief, and it was proper to so declare on demurrer.

It was not denied that Johnson was a housekeeper, and in the possession of the 92 acres, when Gowdy obtained the new appraisalment, and levied on and sold the residue of the tract; his averment on this subject being simply to the effect that Johnson had ceased to have a family. This question has been authoritatively settled by this court in Stults v. Sale, 92 Ky. 5, 13 L. R. A. 743, where it was held that, while it was essential to the creation of the homestead right that the debtor should have a family, it was not essential to the continuance of the right. The loss of his family, as by death or marriage, did not deprive him of the right.

The only remaining question is to ascertain what effect, if any, is to be given the averment of Gowdy, presented in the nature of a counterclaim, that the value of the homestead had increased to the extent of at least $500 since 1883. He avers that it is now in fact worth $2,500, and expresses his willingness to pay $2,000 for it. Whether the fact that the homestead, as originally established, has so increased in value as to exceed the limit of value prescribed in the statute, may authorize a revaluation and reassignment, is a question not free from difficulty. It seems not to have been determined in this state, and in other states the courts have not agreed. In Missouri the statute seems to be quite similar to ours, and in Beckner v. Rule, 91 Mo. 62, it was said: "There is not a provision in the statute which looks to the conclusion that, when a homestead is once set off, it cannot be revalued. . . . The debtor may have a homestead, but he must take and hold it subject to the fluctuations in value. If, in course of time, it should increase in value, so as to be worth more than the statutory limit, it may be assigned again, and the excess applied to the payment of his debts. If the assigned homestead should depreciate in value, he may add to it and claim a revaluation himself." In Illinois the same rule seems to prevail. Stubblefield v. Graves, 50 Ill. 103. In Tennessee under a similar statute, the opposite conclusion was reached. In Hardy v. Lane, 6 Lea, 380, it was said: "There is nothing in the act from which it can be inferred that it [the homestead] is subject to subsequent repeated valuations, if perchance it may appreciate in value, or be estimated at a higher value, by proceedings subsequently instituted for this purpose. The policy of the act is to secure a fixed and permanent abode and home for the head of the family, his wife and children, in the possession of which they should not be disquieted and disturbed, if by their industry they so far improve the premises as to make them really more valuable than they were when first assigned to them. Upon the construction contended for, i. e., that the homestead must always be kept to the exact value first assigned to it, the occupants would be constantly liable to the annoyance of new suits to ascertain, by the speculations and opinions of creditors and others, whether the homestead had not appreciated in value." In North Carolina (Gully v. Cole, 96 N. C. 447), it was held that, as no provision was made in the statute for laying off the homestead a second time, it could not be done, in the absence of fraud or irregularity in connection with the assignment. But whether the creditor might have an equitable remedy in case the homestead had greatly increased in value was a question not decided, although mentioned.

Our statute provides that, in addition to the personal property exempted from sale, there shall be exempt from sale, under execution, attachment, or judgment, except to foreclose a mortgage given by the owner or for purchase money due therefor, so much land, including the dwelling house and appurtenances owned by the debtors who are actual bona fide housekeepers with family resident in this commonwealth, as shall not exceed in value $1,000. Other sections provide for valuation and allotment, and no sale is to be made of the homestead unless it is of greater value than $1,000, and is not divisible without great diminution of its value. We thus see that the thing attempted to be protected from sale is the land,—the homestead itself. The object of the statute, as of all statutes of like character, is not so much to exempt a certain sum of money from subjection to debt, or land of a certain value, but it is intended to protect the homestead itself,—the dwelling house and appurtenances,—to the end that the citizens of the commonwealth may be home owners. The matter of value is a mere incident,—a proper one, it is true, as our lawmakers have conceived it to be the better rule that some limitation in value should be applied. In some other states, we believe, no limitation of value is prescribed.

We have already seen that the act of setting apart the homestead, whether by the sheriff or by commissioners appointed under order of court, is a final and conclusive act. In effect, the act is an adjudication,—a judicial procedure in rem,—not to be disturbed except for fraud or mistake, as in other adjudications. We think this judgment in the homesteader's favor is, in effect, a judgment that he is the permanent holder of a certain described tract of land, and is entitled to the possession of it so long as it remains his homestead. The matter of its value, at most only an incident controlling the quantity of the assignment, is no longer a question of importance or interest to the owner and homesteader after his rights are once fixed to a particular boundary. That question is a closed one. It was never other than a preliminary one,—a condition precedent, as it were, to the final assignment of the homestead by metes and bounds. When that is fixed, the ownership and right of occupancy is fixed. We regard it as altogether repugnant to the policy and object of our homestead law that this fixed right of occupancy shall be made to depend on the fluctuations of the real-estate market. How often might it happen that homesteads of the prescribed value as originally assigned, and not susceptible of further division, would have to be sold, upon an advance in the market? It is against the policy of the law that any homestead be sold at all, and it is to be laid off—set apart—in all cases except where great diminution in value would result by a division. It is sold then as a matter of necessity, and the conditions which give rise to the necessity of selling the homestead of the citizen ought not to be multiplied or increased, after his rights have once been judicially determined and fixed of record.

The bad effect on the homesteader of rendering his habitation unstable, and increasing his anxiety for the continued shelter of his family, is not to be overlooked. While it is said that the state by such statutes is conferring merely a favor or privilege on the debtor, it is to be remembered that the state gets value received. It comes to be supported in time by a citizenship interested in the state and tied to her soil, of independent home owners, and not of transient and uncertain tenants. It was aptly said by Mr. Benton in the Senate of the United States, that "tenantry is unfavorable to freedom. It lays the foundation for separate orders in society, annihilates the love of country, and weakens the spirit of independence. The tenant has in fact no country, no hearth, no domestic altar, no household god. The freeholder, on the contrary, is the natural supporter of a free government; and it should be the policy of republics to multiply their freeholders, as it is the policy of monarchies to multiply their tenants." As already stated, we have heretofore decided, in effect, that once a homesteader always a homesteader. And we think it equally clear within certain limitations as to occupancy and possible exceptions to be noticed, once a homestead always a homestead.

Learned counsel suggest that a gold mine might be discovered on the premises of the original assignment as made. If so, or if an extravagant residence were erected on the premises, there would likely be found some equitable remedy for the creditor. The law will not brook fraud on the part of the homesteader, and, if extraordinary outlays of money or property are put on the exempted premises beyond what is reasonably necessary to the profitable use and comfortable enjoyment of the home as such, it might afford ground for the interposition of a chancellor. In the case before us there has been a presumably natural increase in the value of the premises of $500, in a space of some ten or a dozen years; and the doctrine contended for would have permitted the appellant, or some other creditor, to have cut off a part of the homestead every year of the ten. The result even then would have to be based on mere opinions and speculations as to value, reached often after years of constant legal warfare. However, we have before us no gold-mine case, or one involving any fraud on the part of the appellee, or unreasonable outlay on the premises, or the question of rapid and extraordinary inflation of prices. It will be time enough to consider such cases, if any such should arise, when they are reached.

The judgment granting the appellee the relief sought and dismissing appellant's counterclaim is affirmed.

Petition for rehearing overruled.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

ADDYSTON PIPE & STEEL COMPANY,
Appl.,

v.

City of CHICAGO et al.

(170 Ill. 580.)

A creditor's bill will not lie against a municipal corporation to reach money due from it to a contractor who is a debtor of the complainant.

(December 22, 1897.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Appellate Court, First District, affirming a judgment of the Superior Court for Cook County in favor of defendants in a creditor's bill to reach a debt due by the defendant city to Michael J. Joyce. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John T. Barker, for appellant:

A municipal corporation is a trustee holding property in trust for the use of the public (Hyde Park v. Chicago, 124 Ill. 156; McCord v. Pike, 121 Ill. 288), and, being a trustee for its constituents, it stands on the footing of other corporations.

Sherlock v. Winnetka, 59 Ill. 389.

Equity has no power to dispense with the plain requirements of a statute.

Stone v. Gardner, 20 Ill. 304, 71 Am. Dec. 268.

Its jurisdiction is ancient and ample, and not limited to the construction given to garnishment acts.

Smither v. Lewis, 1 Vern. 398; Balch v. Wastall, 1 P. Wms. 445; Singer & T. Stone Co. v. Wheeler, 6 Ill. App. 225.

The public is interested in the enforcement of lawful contracts, as well as in the suppression of illegal transactions.

Greenhood, Pub. Pol. 29.

A contract for work performed under the direction of a board of public works and of superintendents fixes the liability throughout.

Chicago v. Dermody, 61 Ill. 431.

A debt due by a municipal corporation to its creditor may by a creditor's bill be subjected to the satisfaction of a judgment against the creditor.

Furlong v. Thomssen, 19 Mo. App. 364; Beal v. McVicker, 3 Mo. App. 592; Pendleton v. Perkins, 49 Mo. 565; Lyell v. St. Clair County Supers. 3 McLean, 580; Singer & T. Stone Co. v. Wheeler, 6 Ill. App. 225; Sinking Fund Comrs. v. Northern Bank, 1 Met. (Ky.) 174.

Messrs. William G. Beale, Byron Boyden, and Edward B. Burling, for appellees:

A municipal corporation cannot be subjected to garnishment proceedings.

Chamberlain v. Gaillard, 26 Ala. 504; Memphis v. Laski, 9 Heisk. 511, 24 Am. Ren. 327; People, Spauln, v. Omaha, 2 Neb. 169; Hightower v. Slaton, 54 Ga. 110, 21 Am. Rep. 273; Wallace v. Lawyer, 54 Ind. 508, 23 Am. Rep. 661; School Dist. No. 4 v. Gage, 39 Mich. 486, 33 Am. Rep. 421; Erie v. Knapp, 29 Pa. 176; McDougal v. Hennepin County Supers. 4 Minn. 189; Burnham v. Fond du Lac, 15 Wis. 194.

It is a mistaken point of view to regard a municipal corporation in the same manner as a corporation established for private gain. Nearly all the creditors of the city are receiving their money from the city in return for services of a public character. They are public servants, and the public should not be deprived of their services in order that an individual may secure payment of his debt.

Philadelphia Granite & Blue Stone Co. v. Douglass, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 133.

NOTE.—The above case seems to be an unusual one, for the reason that creditors' bills are not commonly brought against municipal corporations. The same reasons seem to apply to such cases that apply to garnishments. For 44 L. R. A.

exemption of municipal property from levy, see Ellis v. Pratt City (Ala.) 33 L. R. A. 264. As to garnishment of county, see note to State, Summerfield, v. Tyler (Wash.) 37 L. R. A. 207.

The answer of the city to a creditor's bill is conclusive.

King v. Clark, 3 Paige, 76; Philadelphia F. Ins. Co. v. Central Nat. Bank, 1 Ill. App. 344; United States Ins. Co. v. Central Nat. Bank, 7 Ill. App. 426; Fifield v. Gorton, 15 Ill. App. 458; Bouton v. Smith, 113 Ill. 481.

Craig, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a judgment of the appellate court affirming a judgment of the superior court of Cook county sustaining a demurrer to a creditor's bill brought by the Addyston Pipe & Steel Company against the city of Chicago and one Michael J. Joyce. It is alleged in the bill that the defendant Joyce had a contract with the city of Chicago, in and about the performance of which the complainant furnished him material and labor which he failed to pay for. The bill then alleges the obtaining of judgment, issuing of execution, and return of execution nulla bona; that the city holds money and effects which belong to the defendant Joyce; and prays discovery as is provided for in § 49, chap. 22, Hurd's Rev. Stat. 1893. In brief, the claim made in the bill is that the city of Chicago is indebted to Joyce for labor performed under his contract with the city, and complainant is entitled by creditors' bill to reach the money, and compel its payment to complainant. The demurrer was sustained in the superior court, and the judgment affirmed in the appellate court, on the sole ground that a creditor's bill will not lie against a municipal corporation; and the correctness of that decision is the only question presented by this record.

This court held, in Chicago v. Hasley, 25 Ill. 596, that the property of a municipal corporation like Chicago could not be levied upon and sold under an execution. This decision was predicated upon the grounds of public policy. It is there said: "There can be no doubt that the property of a private corporation may be seized and sold under a fi. fa. for the payment of its debts, as in the case of an individual. . . . The nature, objects, and liabilities of political, municipal, or public corporations, we think, stand on different grounds. These corporations signify a community, and are clothed with very extensive civil authority and political power. All municipal corporations are both public and political bodies. They are the embodiment of so much political power as may be adjudged necessary by the legislature granting the charter for the proper government of the people within the limits of the city or town incorporated. . . . For those purposes, the authorities can raise revenue by taxation, make public improvements, and defray the expenses thereof by taxation." The court then goes on to show that, if the property of the city could be levied on and sold, it would be impossible for it to perform the functions to the people for which it was created. In Mervin v. Chicago, 45 Ill. 134, 92 Am. Dec. 204, the question arose whether a municipal corporation was liable to garnishment; and the court after referring to Chicago v. Hasley, 25 44 I. R. A.

Ill. 596, with approval, held that it was not so liable. It is there said: "The question has been often before the American courts, and, although the decisions are not uniform, in a large majority of the cases it has been held the writ would not lie. The reason given for these decisions is uniformly the same, and is substantially that given by this court in the case in 25 Ill. It must be decided as a question of public policy. These municipal corporations are in the exercise of governmental powers to a very large extent. They control pecuniary interests of great magnitude, and vast numbers of human beings, who are more dependent upon the municipal, for the security of life and property, than they are on either the state or the Federal government. To permit the great public duties of this corporation to be imperfectly performed, in order that individuals may the better collect their private debts, would be to pervert the great objects of its creation. That its efficiency for purposes of government would be impaired by holding it liable to garnishment cannot be doubted. A large and growing city, like Chicago, must constantly have hundreds of persons in its employment; and if the city cannot, at short intervals, make a settlement of these multitudinous accounts, but is liable to be drawn into court at the suit of every creditor of its numerous employees, it will not only be engaged in much expensive and vexatious litigation, in which it has no interest, but, if unable to safely pay its employees and contractors, it may lose the services of persons that may be of much value." A municipal corporation cannot be properly turned into an instrument or agency for the collection of private debts. It exists simply for the public welfare, and cannot be required to consume the time of its officers or the money in its treasury in defending suits, in order that one private individual may the better collect a demand due from another. The doctrine announced in Mervin v. Chicago is fully sustained by the following authorities: Chamberlain v. Gaillard, 26 Ala. 504; Memphis v. Laski, 9 Heisk. 511, 24 Am. Rep. 327; People, Spaul, v. Omaha, 2 Neb. 169; Hightower v. Slaton, 54 Ga. 110, 21 Am. Rep. 273; Wallace v. Lawyer, 54 Ind. 508, 23 Am. Rep. 661; School Dist. No. 4 v. Gage, 39 Mich. 486, 33 Am. Rep. 421; McDougal v. Hennepin County Supers. 4 Minn. 184 (Gil. 130); Burnham v. Fond du Lac, 15 Wis. 194. The decision of the questions in these cases, as will be found upon examination, is predicated on the ground of public policy, and they fully sustain the doctrine announced by this court.

If, as we have held, a municipal corporation is not liable to the process of garnishment, upon what ground can a creditors' bill be maintained against a municipal corporation? If it is contrary to public policy to permit the one, upon the same ground and for like reasons must not the other be denied? The process of garnishment and a creditors' bill are, in effect, instituted for the same purpose. They are, as a general rule, instituted to reach money in the hands of a third party, due and owing from a judgment debtor to a judgment creditor. A reference to the statute under which the two proceedings are instituted will show their similarity. Rev. Stat. 1893, chap. 62, § 1, provides that whenever a judgment shall be rendered by any court of record or any justice of the peace in this state, and an execution against the defendant in such judgment shall be returned by the proper officer "No property found," on the affidavit of the plaintiff or other credible person being filed with the clerk of such court or justice of the peace, that said defendant has no property, within the knowledge of such affiant, in his possession liable to execution, and that such affiant hath just reason to believe that any other person is indebted to such defendant, or hath any effects or estate of such defendant in his possession, custody, or charge, it shall be lawful for such clerk or justice of the peace to issue a summons against the person supposed to be indebted to, or supposed to have any of the effects or estate of, the said defendant, commanding him to appear before said court or justice as a garnishee; and said court or justice of the peace shall examine and proceed against such garnishee or garnishees, in the same manner as is required by law against garnishees in original attachments. Rev. Stat. 1893, chap. 22, § 49 (Chancery), provides: "Whenever an execution shall have been issued against the property of a defendant, on a judgment at law or equity, and shall have been returned unsatisfied, in whole or in part, the party suing out such execution may file a bill in chancery against such defendant, and any other person, to compel the discovery of any property or thing in action, belonging to the defendant, and of any property, money, or thing in action due to him, or held in trust for him, and to prevent the transfer of any such property, money, or thing in action, or the payment or delivery thereof to the defendant, except when such trust has, in good faith, been created by, or the fund so held in trust has proceeded from, some person other than the defendant himself. The court shall have power to compel such discovery, and to prevent such transfer, payment, or delivery; and to decree satisfaction of the sum remaining due on such judgments, out of any personal property, money, or things in action, belonging to the defendant or held in trust for him, with the exception above stated, which shall be discovered by the proceedings in chancery, whether the same were originally liable to be taken in execution at law or not."

Under the section of the statute providing for garnishment when an execution has been issued and returned "No property found," a summons may be issued against the person supposed to be indebted, commanding him to answer as garnishee. Under the other statute, where an execution has been issued and returned "No property found," a creditors' bill may be filed. The object attempted to be reached in each case is practically the same. In one case a judgment may be rendered as in an action at law, while in the other a money decree may be rendered. An execution may issue in either case. The two proceedings are so similar, and the result to be accomplished under both so nearly the same, that if it is contrary to public policy, as we have held it is, to allow garnishment against a municipal corporation, for the same reasons a creditors' bill cannot be sustained. Should the courts hold that a creditors' bill would lie against a municipal corporation, to reach money due its employees or contractors, a wide door would be open to all the evils mentioned in Merwin v. Chicago; and we are not prepared to establish a rule which might lead to such results. But it is said that in a garnishment proceeding the answer of the city may be controverted, and the city may thus be required to sustain the answer by evidence; while in a creditors' bill, where the city in its answer denies that it is in any manner indebted, that will end the litigation as to the city, and hence a different rule should be adopted when a creditors' bill is filed. In Bouton v. Smith, 113 Ill. 486, it was held that when a bill is for discovery only, and fails as such, it should be dismissed, and could not be retained for any other purpose. But where the bill seeks, not only discovery, but other relief, the court has jurisdiction to retain the bill for all purposes. Indeed, § 25 of the chancery act declares that the disclosure shall not be regarded conclusive. That section provides: "When the complainant shall require a discovery respecting the matters charged in the bill, the disclosure shall not be deemed conclusive, but, if a replication be filed, may be disproved or contradicted like any other testimony, according to the practice of courts of equity." It is therefore apparent from the ruling in the case last cited, and from the language of § 25 of the statute, that in many, if not all, creditors' bills which might be brought against a municipal corporation there would be as much controversy as would arise in a garnishment proceeding, and hence the rule that should control in the one case should also govern in the other.

We are satisfied that the judgment of the Appellate Court is correct, and it will be affirmed.

Isaac H. SNYDER, Appt.,
v.

City of MT. PULASKI et al.

(176 Ill. 397.)

1. Permission to use a well in a city street, given as part of an electric light franchise, is a mere license revocable at the pleasure of the municipality, although the licensee has made expenditures on the faith of it and would not have accepted the franchise without such permission.

2. One contracting with a city for the right to maintain a well in a public street is bound to take notice that the city has no power to bind itself by such a contract and may revoke it at any time.

NOTE.—As to limitation of power to grant property rights in streets, see also Hibbard v. Chicago (Ill.) 40 L. R. A. 621; Augusta v. Burum (Ga.) 26 L. R. A. 340; Eddy v. Granger (R. I.) 28 L. R. A. 517; Stevens v. Muskegon (Mich.) 36 L. R. A. 777; Smith v. McDowell, Hall (Ill.) 22 L. R. A. 393.

(October 24, 1898.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Appellate Court, Third District, affirming a decree of the Circuit Court for Logan County dismissing a bill filed to enjoin defendants from interfering with a well which complainant was alleged to have a contract right to maintain in a street. Affirmed.

Statement by Phillips, J.:

On March 24, 1891, the appellant was granted, by ordinance, the right to erect and operate an incandescent electric light plant in the village of Mt. Pulaski for the term of twenty years. On the 18th of April of the same year he purchased a lot on which a flour mill formerly stood, which, when in operation, had been supplied with water from a well in Green street, near its intersection with Spring street, in the village. This well was dug by the operators of the flour mill with the consent of the village authorities, and was connected with the lot by means of pipes laid underground. Afterwards, on June 23 of the same year, by an ordinance duly passed and approved, appellant was allowed the use of the well for the period of twenty years; the same to be maintained at his own expense, and to be so kept as to be safe to the traveling public. In October following, by another ordinance, he was granted the right to put in upon the streets of the village the necessary appliances for an arc system of electric lighting, with a contract for street lights for five years. In the erection of the incandescent plant he expended, in round numbers, $9,000, and for the arc system about $10,000 more. When the right to use the well was given him, he found that the Peoria, Decatur, & Evansville Railway Company was using it to supply its engines; and he entered in to a contract with it to supply it with water, using the railway company's pump until the following spring. In the spring of 1892 he discovered the water supply to be insufficient, and dug a well immediately adjoining the old one, inserting what is known as a "Cook's point" to connect the two. Later on he made contracts with various parties (among others, the Illinois Central Railroad Company and a flour mill) to furnish them water, and continued his business without interruption until November 25, 1895, when he was served with a notice, signed by the street commissioner, ordering him to remove the "Cook's point" and all other attachments placed in Green street by him, and the pump and attachments in this second well. The pump in it not being suitable to be placed in the old well, on December 13, 1895, he purchased a new one, with necessary pipe and apparatus, for the purpose of placing the same in the old well, the cost of which was about $500. In order to lift the pump out of the new well, he erected a derrick, and was proceeding with the work of taking out the pump and appliances and putting the new pump in the old well, when the events transpired which gave rise to this suit. On December 21, 1895, the city council (the village organization having been changed to that of a city organization) repealed the ordinance granting the appellant the use of the old well; and thereafter, while he was at work making the changes above mentioned, he was served with a notice, signed by the city attorney, stating that the city objected to the deepening of the old well, and to the placing of any appliances therein; which would enable him to draw water from a deeper level than the bottom of the well as it was originally constructed. He was also notified at the same time, verbally, by both the city marshal and the city attorney, to stop work, which he refused to do. While the work was going on, the street commissioner and others tore down the derrick, and filled up the pipe he was placing in the old well with brickbats and other materials, and also proceeded to fill up the well with dirt and rubbish. Thereupon he obtained an injunction restraining the city from interfering with and obstructing him in the work, and proceeded to clean out the old well and put down in it a new 8-inch pipe, driving the same about 30 feet below the bottom of the well. He then covered the well with a platform made of 4-inch oak plank, and filled up the new well. The evidence shows that, prior to this trouble, appellant maintained the well in a dangerous condition; that he permitted steam to escape into it in a manner calculated to frighten horses on the street, and kept it insecurely covered. The temporary injunction granted was, on the hearing, dissolved, and his bill dismissed. An appeal was taken to the appellate court for the third district, where the decree of the circuit court was affirmed, and the case is brought here by this further appeal.

Messrs. A. G. Jones and Blinn & Harris, for appellant:

Cities and villages have the power to provide for a supply of water by sinking wells, building cisterns, etc., and may maintain them in the public street.

Ill. Rev. Stat. chap. 24, art. 10, § 169; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 3d ed. § 690; West v. Bancroft, 32 Vt. 387; Louisville v. Osborne, 10 Bush, 226.

Municipalities, under the power of exclusive control of their streets, may allow any use of them consistent with public objects for which they are held.

Gregsten v. Chicago, 145 Ill. 452; Nelson v. Godfrey, 12 Ill. 20; Quincy v. Bull, 106 Ill. 337; Gridley v. Bloomington, 68 Ill. 47; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. People, Elgin, 91 Ill. 251; Chicago Municipal Gaslight & Fuel Co. v. Lake, 130 Ill. 42; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 3d ed. § 688; Dickson v. Kewanee Electric Light & Motor Co. 53 Ill. App. 381; McCartney v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 112 Ill. 611; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Guernsey & S. Electric Light Co. 46 Mo. App. 120; Union Coal Co. v. La Salle, 34 Ill. App. 98; People, Bransom, v. Walsh, 96 Ill. 248, 36 Am. Rep. 135; Chicago v. Rumsey, 87 Ill. 364.

A contract made by a city officer, although unauthorized, may be ratified so as to become binding upon the municipality.

1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 3d ed. § 463; Shawnee-town v. Baker, 85 Ill. 563; Bruce v. Dickey, 110 Ill. 534.

Where an ordinance is passed without consideration, if upon the faith of such an ordinance a person invests his money, that is a consideration; so that what may have been a revocable license ceases to be so and cannot be revoked.

Chicago Municipal Gaslight & Fuel Co. v. Lake, 130 Ill. 54; Willoughby v. Lawrence, 116 Ill. 20, 56 Am. Rep. 758; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 548; Rerick v. Kern, 14 Serg. & R. 267, 16 Am. Dec. 497; 2 Herman, Estoppel & Res Adjudicata, §§ 1040, 1041; Russell v. Hubbard, 59 Ill. 337; Moale v. Baltimore, 56 Md. 496; White v. Smith, 37 Mich. 291; Harrison v. Boring, 44 Tex. 255; Williams v. Flood, 63 Mich. 487; Rhodes v. Otis, 33 Ala. 578, 73 Am. Dec. 439; Campbell v. Indianapolis & V. R. Co. 110 Ind. 490.

A revocable license, where the use of property granted is in the nature of a public use, cannot be revoked without reasonable notice.

Houston & T. O. R. Co. v. Boozar, 70 Tex. 530; Cornish v. Stubbs, L. R. 5 C. P. 334; Mellor v. Watkins, L. R. 9 Q. B. 400.

Messrs. F. L. Tomlinson and Beach & Hodnett for appellees.

Phillips, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The streets of a city are dedicated for public use, and for these purposes the city council may improve and control them, and adopt needful rules for their management and use. But that body has no power to alien or otherwise encumber such streets, so long as they are public streets, but must hold them in trust for public uses only; and hence no easement or right therein not of a public character can be granted by a municipality, or acquired by any individual or corporation, for exclusive private use, to the exclusion of the public. Field v. Barling, 149 Ill. 556, 24 L. R. A. 406; Hibbard v. Chicago, 173 Ill. 91, 40 L. R. A. 621. A permanent encroachment upon public streets for a private use is a purpresture, and is in law a nuisance. Driggs v. Phillips, 103 N. Y. 77; Smith v. State, 23 N. J. L. 712; Atty. Gen., Holtz v. Heishon, 18 N. J. Eq. 410; State v. Woodward, 23 Vt. 92; Chamberlain v. Enfield, 43 N. H. 356; Com. v. King, 13 Met. 115; Hibbard v. Chicago, supra. In the case last cited it was said (p. 98, 173 Ill. and p. 623, 40 L. R. A.): "Where the city has authorized a temporary use which causes a temporary obstruction, one having been licensed to exercise such temporary use would not be liable for a penalty, under the ordinances, for obstructing the street, as it was permitted as a matter of grace or favor. That such permission was given may be implied from circumstances. Gridley v. Bloomington, 68 Ill. 47. But when the city demands the removal of such a structure, it, if permitted to remain thereafter, becomes a nuisance."

The claim of the appellant that the second ordinance, which granted him the privilege of using the well, is part of the whole contract, and that without it he would not have accepted the franchise or erected the plant, in no way affects the question of law. He claims that the right to use the well was part of the consideration upon which he acted, and was intended as an inducement to him to accept the franchise and build the works. He must have acted with full knowledge of the fact that the municipality had no right or power to confer on him a right to a private use of the street, giving him a right to a permanent encroachment thereon, and allowing him to create a purpresture. There being no power in the city to make a discrimination in the use of the streets in favor of appellant, and permit him to have a permanent private use of the same, or to part thereof, if it has done so, the most that can be said is that it amounted to a mere license that would not render him amenable to punishment for a violation of an ordinance of the city in obstructing the street. Such permission to so use the street is not binding upon the city, and is not irrevocable. The municipality having no power to grant such permanent use, there can be no estoppel against it from requiring the street to be open in its entirety, because no estoppel can arise from an act of the municipal authorities done without authority of law. Seeger v. Mueller, 133 Ill. 86; Pettis v. Johnson, 56 Ind. 139; Stevens v. St. Mary's Training School, 144 Ill. 336, 18 L. R. A. 832; Day v. Green, 4 Cush. 433.

There was power in the city council to pass the ordinance repealing the former ordinance granting the right to appellant to use the street; for such former ordinance, being without authority of law, might well be rescinded. Appellant acquired no right under the former ordinance against the public, nor did he acquire any right against the municipality by estoppel, nor by any right conferred by the ordinance, because the right conferred was a mere private use, and that private use created a purpresture. This fact it was the duty of appellant to know; hence a right existed in the city council to repeal the ordinance theretofore enacted granting the right to appellant to have and use this well in the public streets of the city.

It was not error in the circuit court of Logan county to dismiss appellant's bill, nor in the appellate court for the third district to affirm its decree.

The judgment of the Appellate Court for the Third District is affirmed.

Boggs, J., took no part in the decision of this case.

Rehearing denied December 13, 1898.

CHICAGO & EASTERN ILLINOIS RAIL-ROAD COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

R. A. ROUSE, Admr. etc., of George W. Brewer, Deceased.

(178 Ill. 132.)

1. The responsibility of the master for the act of a fellow servant is governed by the law of the place where the cause of action arose.
2. The liability of an employer for injury to an employee by a fellow servant in a state which has by statute abolished the common-law rule can be enforced in another state in which the common-law rule still prevails.

(February 17, 1899.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Court, Third District, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Vermilion County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries resulting in death and alleged to have been caused by negligence for which defendant was responsible. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Will H. Lyford, H. M. Steely, and Albert M. Cross, for appellant:

The courts of Illinois will not enforce the statutes of another state which are contrary to our public policy.

Pope v. Nanke, 155 Ill. 617, 28 L. R. A. 568; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 589, 10 L. ed. 274, 308; Story, Confli. L. §§ 28, 38; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Gardiner, 51 Neb. 70; Armstrong v. Best, 112 N. C. 59, 25 L. R. A. 188; Tuttle v. National Bank of the Republic, 161 Ill. 497, 34 L. R. A. 750; Buell v. Breesse Mill & Grain Co. 65 Ill. App. 271.

The Illinois fellow-servant rule has its foundation in public policy.

Honner v. Illinois C. R. Co. 15 Ill. 550; Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 4 Met. 49, 38 Am. Dec. 339; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Cow, 21 Ill. 26, 71 Am. Dec. 298.

Therefore the Indiana statute which abrogates the Illinois common-law fellow-servant rule will not be enforced in Illinois.

Anderson v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 37 Wis. 321.

A statute creating a liability for damages for death by wrongful act will not be enforced in another state which has no such statute, or which has a radically different statute on that subject.

Richardson v. New York C. R. Co. 98 Mass. 85; Ash v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 72 Md. 144; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Richards, 68 Tex. 375; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. McCormick, 71 Tex. 660, 1 L. R. A. 804; Davis v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 143 Mass. 301, 58 Am. Rep. 138; Woodard v. Michigan, S.

NOTE.—For law of place governing actions for negligence, see Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Carroll (Ala.) 18 L. R. A. 433; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Ihlenberg (C. C. App. 6th C.) 34 L. R. A. 393; Evey v. Mexican C. R. Co. (C. C. App. 5th C.) 88 L. R. A. 387. 44 L. R. A.

See also 46 L. R. A. 814.

& N. I. R. Co. 10 Ohio St. 121; McCarthy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 18 Kan. 46, 26 Am. Rep. 742; Whitford v. Panama R. Co. 23 N. Y. 465; Louder v. Segal, 59 N. J. L. 66; Vauter v. Missouri P. R. Co. 84 Mo. 679, 54 Am. Rep. 105.

The fellow-servant rule is founded in natural justice. This is shown (1) by the nature of the rule itself; (2) by the fact that three different tribunals, reasoning upon the question as one of first impression, unbiased by each other, reached the same conclusion (Priestley v. Fowler, 3 Mees. & W. 1; Murray v. South Carolina R. Co. 1 McMull. L. 385, 36 Am. Dec. 268; Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 4 Met. 49, 38 Am. Dec. 339); (3) by the consensus of opinion, in all common-law tribunals, without a dissenting voice, in favor of the rule; (4) this statute creating liability for a fellow servant's negligence, where the master has omitted no duty and is not to blame, is against good morals, in that it punishes in damages where, under our law, there is no fault.

In deciding this question of comity, the silence of the Illinois legislature, and its failure to modify or abolish the fellow-servant rule, as long held by our courts, is a clear indication of the public policy of this state regarding that rule.

Thompson v. Waters, 25 Mich. 214, 12 Am. Rep. 243.

Questions of interstate law are decided on their merits as questions of law, and the residence or citizenship of the parties to the suit is immaterial.

Whitford v. Panama R. Co. 23 N. Y. 465; Davis v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 143 Mass. 301, 58 Am. Rep. 138; McCarthy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 18 Kan. 46, 26 Am. Rep. 742.

Section 6 of the Indiana act is contrary to the policy of our law.

Eckman v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 169 Ill. 312, 38 L. R. A. 750.

Under the Illinois law, engineers, firemen, and conductors are fellow servants.

Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Robb, 36 Ill. App. 627; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Brandou, 65 Ill. App. 150; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Meyer, 65 Ill. App. 531; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Leeper, 40 Ill. App. 194.

Messrs. Tilton & Cundiff, for appellee: The statute of Indiana under which this judgment was obtained has been construed by the supreme court of the state which enacted it, and our courts will respect such construction; and this statute is the law governing this case.

Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Ind.) 49 N. E. 582.

If the courts of a state have construed a statute the courts of a sister state will ordinarily respect their construction.

Elmendorf v. Taylor, 10 Wheat. 152, 6 L. ed. 289; Jessup v. Carnegie, 80 N. Y. 441, 36 Am. Rep. 645; Shelby v. Guy, 11 Wheat. 367, 6 L. ed. 469; South Ottawa v. Perkins, 94 U. S. 260, 24 L. ed. 154; Peik v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 94 U. S. 164, 24 L. ed. 97; Leavenworth County v. Barnes, 94 U. S. 70, 24 L. ed. 63; Adams v. Nashville, 95 U. S. 19, 24 L. ed. 369; Leonard v. Columbia Steam Nav. Co. 84 N. Y. 48, 38 Am. Rep. 491.

The statute abrogating the fellow-servant rule has been held constitutional in the following cases:

Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Ind.) 49 N. E. 582; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Herrick, 127 U. S. 210, 32 L. ed. 109; Herrick v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 31 Minn. 11, 47 Am. Rep. 771, 32 Minn. 435.

The following authorities have held actions of this character to be transitory and not local, and that they can be maintained in any court to whose jurisdiction the defendant can be subjected.

Rorer, Interstate Law, p. 217; Herrick v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 31 Minn. 11, 47 Am. Rep. 771; Dennick v. Central R. Co. 103 U. S. 11, 26 L. ed. 439; The Scotland, 105 U. S. 29, 26 L. ed. 1003; Northern P. R. Co. v. Babcock, 154 U. S. 190, 38 L. ed. 958; Higgins v. Central New England & W. R. Co. 155 Mass. 176; Burns v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 113 Ind. 169; Leonard v. Columbia Steam Nav. Co. 84 N. Y. 48, 38 Am. Rep. 491; McLeod v. Connecticut & P. Rivers R. Co. 58 Vt. 727; Hanna v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 41 Ill. App. 116; Shedd v. Moran, 10 Ill. App. 618.

An action may be maintained in one state if not contrary to its own policy, for a wrong done in another state and actionable there, although a like wrong would not be actionable in the state where the suit is brought.

Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 670, 36 L. ed. 1128; Dennick v. Central R. Co. 103 U. S. 11, 26 L. ed. 439; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Coa, 145 U. S. 593, 36 L. ed. 829; Herrick v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 31 Minn. 11, 47 Am. Rep. 771; Higgins v. Central New England & W. R. Co. 155 Mass. 176; Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Doyle, 60 Miss. 977; Morris v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 65 Iowa, 727, 54 Am. Rep. 39; Northern P. R. Co. v. Babcock, 154 U. S. 198, 38 L. ed. 960; Hanna v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 41 Ill. App. 116.

Granting that while engaged upon that portion of the appellant's railroad lying in Illinois the relation of fellow servant existed between the deceased and the conductor whose negligence caused his death, and that he assumed the risks incident thereto, it does not necessarily follow that he assumed like risks when engaged on his engine in Indiana, where the statutes gave a right of recovery therefor.

Boston & M. R. Co. v. McDuffey, 51 U. S. App. 111, 79 Fed. Rep. 937, 25 C. C. A. 247.

The question as to whether the engineer and conductor of the extra freight were fellow servants of the deceased does not arise.

BOGGS, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

George W. Brewer, deceased, appellee's intestate, during his lifetime and at the time of his death, was a resident of Vermilion county, in this state. The appellant, a corporation organized under the laws of this 44 L. R. A.

state, was engaged in operating its trains over its own lines and leased lines of railway in the states of Illinois and Indiana. Said intestate was employed as a fireman on one of appellant's locomotive engines, and, while engaged in the discharge of his duty in that capacity on an engine drawing a passenger train along the line of appellant's road in the state of Indiana, was killed by a collision between the said engine and train upon which he was employed, and another engine, drawing a freight train, controlled and operated by other servants of the appellant company upon its said line of road in the state of Indiana. This was an action on the case, commenced in the circuit court of Vermilion county, Illinois, by the appellee, administrator of the said Brewer, to recover damages for the benefit of those entitled to receive distribution of the personal effects of the said deceased.

The declaration, in some of the counts, charged that the collision was occasioned by the negligence of the conductor of the freight train, and, in other counts, that the trains collided because of the negligence of the engineer of the freight train, and counted and predicated the right of recovery upon an alleged liability created by the statute of the state of Indiana in such cases, and set forth the statute of such state, and such statute was produced in evidence. Section 7083 of the Indiana statute provides that where the death of an employee of any railroad company or other corporation is caused by the negligence of any person in the employ or service of such corporation who has charge of any locomotive engine or train of cars upon any railroad, or by the negligence of any fellow servant engaged in the same common service in any of the several departments of such corporation, while the employee so killed is obeying or conforming to the orders of some superior having authority to direct at the time of such death, the railway company or other corporation operating such locomotive engine or train shall be liable to respond to the personal representatives of such deceased in damages in a sum not exceeding $10,000, to be distributed to the widow and children, if any, or next of kin, of the deceased, in the same manner as personal property of the deceased. A plea of not guilty was filed, and the cause submitted to and heard by a jury, who returned a verdict in favor of the appellee administrator in the sum of $5,000. The judgment was affirmed by the judgment of the appellate court for the third district on appeal, and the appellant company has prosecuted a further appeal to this court.

The effect of the statute of Indiana is to abrogate the doctrine which, it seems to be conceded, would otherwise be applicable to the facts of this case,—that the appellant company, as employer, is not to be held liable for an injury, fatal or otherwise, to an employee which was occasioned by the negligence of a fellow servant of such employee. The principal question arising is whether this statute will be applied and the doctrine thereof enforced in an action instituted and maintained in the courts of this state. or whether the law as it exists in this state will govern and control. Actions not penal, but for pecuniary damages for torts or civil injuries to the person or property, are transitory, and, if actionable where committed, in general may be maintained in any jurisdiction in which the defendant can be legally served with process. We think it well settled that, without regard to the rule which may obtain as to a cause of action which accrued under the laws of a separate and distinct nation, a right of action which has accrued under the statute of a sister state of the Union will be enforced by the courts of another state of the Union, unless against good morals, natural justice, or the general interest of the citizens of the state in which the action is brought. Dicey, Conf. Laws, pp. 667-669, § 1; Herrick v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 31 Minn. 11, 47 Am. Rep. 771; Dennick v. Central R. Co. 103 U. S. 11, 26 L. ed. 439; The Scotland, 105 U. S. 29, 26 L. ed. 1003; Northern P. R. Co. v. Babcock, 154 U. S. 190, 38 L. ed. 958; Higgins v. Central New England & W. R. Co. 155 Mass. 176; Walsh v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 160 Mass. 571; Burns v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 113 Ind. 169; Morris v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 65 Iowa, 727, 54 Am. Rep. 39; Leonard v. Columbia Steam Nav. Co. 84 N. Y. 48, 38 Am. Rep. 491; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Lewis, 89 Tenn. 235; McLeod v. Connecticut & P. Rivers R. Co. 58 Vt. 728.

It is argued by counsel for appellant that an action cannot be maintained in this cause in our courts, for the reason, as alleged, that the laws of the two states are materially variant, it being, as counsel insist, against natural justice and the established public policy of this state to hold an employer liable for injuries inflicted upon an employee by a fellow servant. This position finds support in the opinion rendered by the supreme court of Wisconsin in Anderson v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 37 Wis. 321, and also in expressions employed in opinions rendered in cases in the courts of England. But such is not the prevailing doctrine in the courts of this country. The supreme court of the state of Minnesota, having before it the precise point in the case of Herrick v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 31 Minn. 11, 47 Am. Rep. 771, gave forcible and clear expression of that which we conceive to be the correct doctrine. In that case the injury was inflicted in the state of Iowa, and was actionable under a statute of that state making railroad corporations liable for damages sustained by an employee in consequence of the negligence of a fellow servant. The rule of nonliability for injuries caused by a fellow servant obtained in Minnesota, where the action was brought. The court said: "The statute of another state has, of course, no extraterritorial force, but rights acquired under it will always, in comity, be enforced if not against the public policy of the laws of the former. In such cases the law of the place where the right was acquired, or the liability was incurred, will govern as to the right of action, while all that pertains merely to the remedy will be controlled by the law of the state where the action is brought. And we think the principle is the same, whether the right of action be ex contractu or ex delicto. The defendant admits the general rule to be as thus stated, but contends that, as to statutory actions like the present, it is subject to the qualification that, to sustain the action, the law of the forum and the law of the place where the right of action accrued must concur in holding that the act done gives a right of action. We admit that some text writers—notably, Rorer on Interstate Law—seem to lay down this rule, but the authorities cited generally fail to sustain it. . . . But it by no means follows that, because the statute of one state differs from the law of another state, therefore it would be held contrary to the policy of the laws of the latter state. Every day our courts are enforcing rights under foreign contracts where the lex loci contractus and the lex fori are altogether different, and yet we construe these contracts and enforce rights under them according to their force and effect under the laws of the state where made. To justify a court in refusing to enforce a right of action which accrued under the law of another state, because against the policy of our laws, it must appear that it is against good morals or natural justice, or that, for some other such reason, the enforcement of it would be prejudicial to the general interests of our own citizens. If the state of Iowa sees fit to impose this obligation upon those operating railroads within her bounds, and to make it a condition of the employment of those who enter their service, we see nothing in such a law repugnant either to good morals or natural justice, or prejudicial to the interests of our own citizens." The same question engaged the attention of the supreme court of the state of Massachusetts in Walsh v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 160 Mass. 571, and it was said: "If, however, we assume, as was ruled and as we do assume, that, if the accident had happened in this state, the plaintiff could not have recovered, it is argued he cannot recover now. . . . As between the states of this Union when a transitory cause of action has vested in one of them under the common law as there understood and administered, the mere existence of a slight variance of view in the forum resorted to, not amounting to a fundamental difference of policy, should not prevent an enforcement of the obligation admitted to have arisen by the law which governed the conduct of the parties." In Northern P. R. Co. v. Babcock, 154 U. S. 190, 38 L. ed. 953, the observations of the supreme court of the state of Minnesota in Herrick v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 31 Minn. 11, 47 Am. Rep. 771, were quoted with approval, and the principles of that case applied. And in Boston & M. R. Co. v. McDuffey, 51 U. S. App. 111, 79 Fed. Rep. 934, 25 C. C. A. 247, it was ruled the responsibility of the master for the act of a fellow servant is governed by the law of the place where the cause of action arose. In East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Lewis, 89 Tenn. 235, the suit was brought in Tennessee to recover damages for injuries received by an employee in the state of Georgia. The trial court charged the jury the plaintiff could recover, though guilty of contributory negligence. Such was the law of Tennessee, the place of the forum. The rule in the state of Georgia, the place where the injury was received, precluded recovery if the neglect of the person injured contributed to his injury. The court held the law of the state of Georgia controlled, and that the rule in the state of Tennessee, where the case was being tried, was not applicable to the case. The supreme court of the state of Indiana has declared the statute in question to be constitutional and valid. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Ind.) 49 N. E. 582. The right of action accrued and became complete in that state. In this state the doctrine of respondere superior does not apply to a case where an employee is injured or killed by the neglect of a fellow servant, but the doctrine of respondere superior is, in general, recognized in the jurisprudence of this state, and we perceive no ground warranting us to declare the enforcement of the doctrine as enlarged or extended by the Indiana statute must be regarded as so repugnant to good morals or natural justice, or so prejudicial to the best interests of our people, that we should shut the doors of our courts against a suitor who seeks to enforce a right of action which arose under the statute of the sister state.

What has been said disposes of all objections to the action of the court in giving, refusing, and modifying instructions to the jury, except the complaint as to one instruction given for the appellee, relative to the liability of the company in the event they should find the trains collided because of the negligence of the conductor of the freight train. The criticism made upon this instruction is that there was no evidence to support it. We think the objection is not well grounded. The testimony of the engineer of the freight train, which was proceeding northward, tended to show he was induced to refrain from putting the train upon the side track at the stations of Atherton and Lyford by a remark, in the nature of directions, made to him by the conductor at Otter Creek Junction. It further appeared that the conductor was riding in the cab of the engine of the freight train when that train ran past the side tracks at Atherton and Lyford. The trains collided 500 feet north of Lyford. The freight train should have been placed on the side track at Atherton or at Lyford, and this the conductor knew, or would have known had he kept his orders in mind, and noted the fact that his train was moving on the time of the passenger train, which was coming south.

No other errors are assigned, and the judgment of the Appellate Court is affirmed.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

CLARK & McCULLOH, Appts.,
v.
Julius C. RENNINGER et al., Trustees for John J. Beeghly.

(.....Md.....)

A person employed to cut merchantable timber by a contract which provides for a settlement each month, but for the retention of 25 per cent of the amount due until the sum of $500 shall be held as a forfeiture for the satisfactory completion of the job, is a contractor, and not an employee or person in the employ of the owner of the timber, within the meaning of act 1878, chap. 108, providing for a receiver of an employer who fails to pay employees as required by the act.

(March 14, 1899.)

APPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Circuit Court for Garrett County in favor of plaintiff in a proceeding under the manufacturers' and miners' law of Garrett County to have defendant's property placed in the hands of a receiver for failure to pay labor claims. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Gilmore S. Hamill and Robert H. Gordon, for appellants:

The act of 1878, chap. 108, § 50, specially provides for an indebtedness, either to persons in the employ of the manufacturers or to the furnishers of raw material. Any suit which might have been brought looking to the enforcement of the lien provided for by that act must be based upon an actual indebtedness, and not upon unliquidated damages under a contract; in other words, it is the same as if an action of indebitatus assumpsit had been brought, and all actions of that kind are subject to pleas of non-assumpsit; and under the plea of non-assumpsit the defendant may show that the contract was conditional and that part of it was not performed by the plaintiff.

Alexander v. Gardner, 1 Scott, 281; see note, Brantley's Edition, 9 Gill, 215.

Under that plea the defendant may show that the goods delivered were not such as were contracted for, or that the work was done in an unworkmanlike manner, although there was a special contract to pay for the goods or work at a certain price, and the plaintiff can then recover only on the quantum meruit.

Cousins v. Paddon, 2 Crompt. M. & R. 547; Cooper v. Whitehouse, 6 Car. & P. 545.

The right to recoup damages is well settled.

Rees v. Logsdon, 68 Md. 93; Coates v. Sangston, 5 Md. 133; Lee v. Rutledge, 51

NOTE.—On the question, Who are employees? see also Tod v. Kentucky Union R. Co. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 18 L. R. A. 303, and note; also Palmer v. Van Santvoord (N. Y.) 38 L. R. A. 402; Boston & A. R. Co. v. Mercantile Trust & D. Co. (Md.) 38 L. R. A. 97; Lewis v. Fisher (Md.) 29 L. R. A. 278.

Md. 311; Abbott v. Gatch, 13 Md. 314, 71 Am. Dec. 635.

Messrs. Julius C. Renninger and Thomas J. Peddicord, for appellees:

It cannot be successfully contended that the plaintiff was not an employee, simply because the terms of the employment were reduced to writing. There are no limitations to the employment under the statute.

Act 1847, chap. 228; Hicks v. Consolidation Coal Co. 77 Md. 86.

Briscoe, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a proceeding, under the act of 1878, chap. 108, codified as article 12, §§ 145-149, Code of Public Local Laws, known as the manufacturers' and miners' law of Garrett county. The 145th section of this act provides: "If any individual engaged in mining or manufacturing in said county, or any association or body corporate engaged in any business whatever therein, shall for the space of thirty days be indebted to the persons in their employ, or to furnishers of any raw material, in the aggregate sum of $25 and shall neglect or refuse to pay the same for the space of thirty days, the circuit court for said county, as a court of equity, or the judge thereof in vacation, shall, upon the petition of the employees or furnishers of raw material or any number of them, appoint a receiver to take charge of the affairs of such individual, association, or body corporate, with a view to their liquidation and settlement.

On the 15th of October, 1896, John J. Beeghly, a citizen of Garrett county, filed a petition in the circuit court of that county, wherein it is stated that he was in the employ of, and a furnisher of raw materials for, the defendants, Clark & McCulloh, manufacturers of lumber and tan bark in Garrett county; that they were indebted to him in a sum aggregating more than $2,000 and have been so indebted for more than thirty days, and prayed for the appointment of a receiver under the provisions of the act. On the 17th of October a receiver was appointed and qualified.

Subsequently, on the 20th of October, the defendants filed an answer, denying the allegations of the petition, and alleging "that the plaintiff was not an employee or a furnisher of raw material, within the meaning of the act, for the reason that he was distinctly a contractor, and was to receive a certain contract price upon the performance on his part of the terms of the agreement; that he was not a furnisher of raw material, because the timber from the land which he was cutting belonged to the defendants and not the contractor."

By an agreement between the parties, the receiver was discharged, and the case referred to the auditor to take testimony and to make a report; and from an order of the court ratifying certain audits, this appeal has been taken.

In the view we take of the case, it will not be necessary for us to decide all the questions raised on the appeal. If the circuit court for Garrett county had no jurisdiction, 44 L. R. A.

under the local statute, to entertain this case, then the order or decree will have to be reversed and the plaintiff's petition dismissed.

The act of 1878, chap. 108, applies in express terms "to persons in their employ or to furnishers of any raw material."

There can be no question that the plaintiff does not come within that part of the act which relates to furnishers of raw material, because it appears from the contract that the material to be furnished belonged to the defendants, and, unless he was an employee or "a person in their employ," he cannot claim the benefit of the act. It will be seen by the contract between the parties that the defendants who were engaged in the manufacture of lumber and tan bark in Garrett county, agreed to furnish from their farm certain timber to the plaintiff, who was to cut the merchantable timber, sell the bark, and deliver the same within a certain time to the defendants. It was agreed "that there should be a settlement at the end of each month, and that 75 per cent of the balance due at said settlement shall be paid on the 20th of the following month, and the remainder retained until it shall be ($500) five hundred dollars as a forfeiture for the satisfactory completion of the job; when the job is completed, said forfeiture to be paid in full."

Such being the contract, we are of opinion that the plaintiff was a contractor and not an employee, or "a person in their employ," within the meaning of the Acts 1878, chap. 108.

Who are to be included within the term "employees" is a subject which has recently been passed upon by this and other courts.

In Levis v. Fisher, 80 Md. 139, 26 L. R. A. 278, it was held that an attorney at law, under the insolvent law, was not an employee within the meaning of that statute, and was not entitled to claim priority for the payment of his fees for professional services.

In American Casualty Ins. Co.'s Case, 82 Md. 566, 38 L. R. A. 97, it was said an insurance adjuster was not an employee within the terms of the statute.

In Vane v. Newcombe, 132 U. S. 233, 33 L. ed. 315, the Supreme Court says: "It seems clear to us that . . . was a contractor with the company, and not an employee. . . . We think the distinction pointed out by the circuit court is a sound one, namely, that to be an employee within the meaning of the statute, Vane 'must have been a servant bound in some degree, at least, to the duties of a servant, and not,' as he was, 'a mere contractor, bound only to produce, or cause to be produced, a certain result,'—a result of labor, to be sure,—but free to dispose of his own time and personal efforts according to his pleasure, without responsibility to the other party."

In Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. v. Wilson, 136 U. S. 505, 34 L. ed. 1025, it is said that the terms "officers and employees" both, alike refer to those in regular and continual service. Within the ordinary acceptance of the terms, one who is engaged to render service in a particular transaction is neither an officer nor an employee. They imply continuity of service, and exclude those employed for a special and single transaction. An attorney of an individual, retained for a single suit, is not his employee. It is true he was engaged to render services, but his engagement is rather that of a contractor than that of an employee.

In Rosser v. Kentucky Union R. Co. 6 U. S. App. 186, 52 Fed. Rep. 241, 3 C. C. A. 60, 18 L. R. A. 305, contractors were distinctly held not to be employees.

It is clear, we think, that the statute in this case did not mean to include contractors in the language, "persons in their employ." And strength is given to this conclusion by an examination of the act, originally passed for Allegany county, when Garrett was a part thereof, which contained the word "contractors." Acts 1847, chap. 228. But by the subsequent legislation, the word "contractors" is omitted from both the Acts 1878, chap. 108, and art. 12 of the Code of Public Local Laws, §§ 145-149.

The case of Hicks v. Consolidation Coal Co. 77 Md. 91, relied on by the appellees, cannot control the decision of this case. We said in that case that "ore, clay, and coal" could be included under the head of "furnishers of any raw material," because "the subsequent legislation had used general terms which comprehend them."

For the reasons we have given, the decree of the circuit court for Garrett county, dated the 18th of May, 1898, will be reversed and the plaintiff's petition dismissed, with costs in both courts.

Decree reversed, and petition dismissed with costs.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

James H. RUDELL et al., Pliffs. in Err.,
v.
OGDENSBURG TRANSIT COMPANY.

(.....Mich.....)

1. A contract by a carrier to deliver goods at destination at a certain time, which allows the usual period for making the trip, is within the general authority of the carrier's agent.
2. A shipper's contract with a carrier cannot be changed by handing a receipt or bill of lading to his clerk.

(July 12, 1898.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for failure to deliver goods in defendant's possession for transportation when it agreed to do so. Reversed.

Statement by Grant, Ch. J.:

Plaintiffs, commission merchants in Detroit, shipped a quantity of potatoes and onions by the defendant's line to Chicago. Plaintiffs had sold them to merchants in Chicago, at a certain price, provided they were delivered there by the 12th of July, 1894. This was during the great railroad strike, when prices for produce in Chicago were very high. Plaintiffs gave evidence tending to show that they made the contract of carriage with Mr. Chesebrough, the local agent for the defendant in Detroit, on the morning of July 9; that defendant agreed to deliver them in Chicago by noon of the 12th, barring shipwreck and fire; that the goods were delivered to the defendant at the time agreed upon; that the defendant failed to deliver the goods until the 14th; that meanwhile the price had fallen; the consignees refused to accept; and that the goods were sold at the best price obtainable, which was much less than the contract price. Defendant denied that it guaranteed to deliver at a fixed time. Mr. Chesebrough admitted informing plaintiffs that the boat would leave about 10 o'clock on the morning of the 12th; that it would arrive at Chicago within fifty hours; and that the goods were shipped on that understanding. The case was submitted to the jury, who found a verdict for plaintiffs. One of the defenses was that Mr. Chesebrough had no authority to make the contract of guaranty that the steamer would arrive at a certain time. It was stipulated that this question might be further argued upon a motion for a new trial, and that, if the court should then determine that no such authority was shown, the verdict might be set aside, and judgment rendered for the defendant, and that, if upon appeal to this court that decision was reversed, judgment might be rendered here for the plaintiffs. The court did set the verdict aside, and rendered judgment for the defendant.

Messrs. Bowen, Douglas, & Whiting, for plaintiffs in error:

The principal is bound in all cases where the agent is acting within the scope of his authority although in fact he has in a particular instance exceeded or violated his instructions and acted without instructions.

Leo Austrian & Co. v. Springer, 94 Mich. 343; Methuen Co. v. Hayes, 33 Me. 169; Trainer v. Morison, 78 Me. 160, 57 Am. Rep. 790; English v. Ayer, 79 Mich. 516; Mechem, Agency, §§ 283, 287; Story, Agency, §§ 127, 443; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 989, 990.

As common carriers, especially at the present time, transact the greater part, if not all, of their business with the public through case, as to the agent's authority to contract for transportation within a definite time, seems to be new.

NOTE.—For contracts for freight transportation made by agents in general, see note to Miller v. South Carolina R. Co. (S. C.) 9 L. R. A. 833. The precise point decided in the present 44 L. R. A.

agents and servants, it is plain that the public have a right to assume that they are authorized to do whatever they attempt to do.

Lawson, Carr. 332; Hutchinson, Carr. § 267; Wilson v. New York, N. & B. R. Co. 18 Eng. L. & Eq. 557; Pickford v. Grand Junction R. Co. 12 Mees. & W. 766.

Every presumption is in favor of the authority of the station agent to enter for his company into contracts for transportation, when such contracts are not of an unusual or extraordinary character.

5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 351, note 13; Easton v. Dudley, 78 Tex. 236; Wood, Railway Law, 450; Foster v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 56 Fed. Rep. 434; Pruitt v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 62 Mo. 527; Hutchings v. Ladd, 16 Mich. 403.

It is error to instruct the jury that the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show the authority of the station agent to contract to furnish cars at a certain date.

5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 351; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Wright, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 403.

In all cases where the facts are in dispute a question as to whether or not there was an agency, and if so, as to the authority of the agent, is one of fact, to be determined by the jury under proper instructions from the court.

1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 986; Mechem, Agency, § 106; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Carpenter, 44 Kan. 257.

The road was bound for damages for non-delivery within the time contracted for by their station agent.

Goddard v. Mallory, 52 Barb. 87; Deming v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 48 N. H. 455, 2 Am. Rep. 267; Wood v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 68 Iowa, 491, 56 Am. Rep. 861; Harrison v. Missouri P. R. Co. 74 Mo. 364, 41 Am. Rep. 318; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hume Bros. 87 Tex. 211; Goodrich v. Thompson, 44 N. Y. 324; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Rosenberg, 31 Ill. App. 47; Easton v. Dudley, 78 Tex. 236; McCarty v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. 79 Tex. 33; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Graves (Tex. App.) 16 S. W. 102.

Messrs. Wisner & Harvey, for defendant in error:

The customary way of carrying on the business of a common carrier is by issuing bills of lading, which constitute the contract between the parties.

Abbott, Shipping, p. 322; Redfield, Carr. pp. 307-309.

Unless specially authorized, the agent had no right to change the contract as drafted by the company.

On petition for rehearing.

The receipt or bill of lading issued by a common carrier to a consignor, and received by him without objection, is the contract between the parties, and fixes their liabilities and rights.

McMillan v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Co. 16 Mich. 79, 93 Am. Dec. 208; Smith v. American Exp. Co. 108 Mich. 572.

To constitute a valid agreement there must be a meeting of minds upon every feature and element thereof of which the consideration is one.

41 L. R. A.

Fire Ins. Asso. v. Wickham, 141 U. S. 564, 35 L. ed. 860; Michigan College of Medicine v. Charlesworth, 54 Mich. 522; Wilkinson v. Heavenrich, 58 Mich. 574, 55 Am. Rep. 708.

This pretended contract made by and left resting in parol does not in law constitute a contract, the verdict of the jury to the contrary notwithstanding.

Said bills of lading constituted the contract between the parties.

McMillan v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Co. 16 Mich. 79, 93 Am. Dec. 208; Smith v. American Exp. Co. 108 Mich. 572.

Grant, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The jury settled the contract in behalf of the plaintiffs. The sole question, therefore, is the authority of defendant's agent to make the contract. A shipping agent of a common carrier has general authority to make all reasonable contracts of shipment. Any undisclosed limitation does not bind the shipper. Has such an agent authority to agree to deliver goods at the place of destination at a particular time? Only when contracts are of an unusual and extraordinary character is the shipper put to inquiry as to the agent's authority. Hutchinson, Carr. § 267; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 351. A guaranty to a theatrical troupe that it would arrive at a given time is held valid. Foster v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 56 Fed. Rep. 434. One writer says: "As common carriers, especially at the present day, transact the greater part, if not all, of their business with the public through agents and servants, it is plain that the public have a right to assume that they are authorized to do whatever they attempt to do." Lawson, Carr. p. 332. This rule does not include contracts so unusual and extraordinary that they cannot reasonably be included within the general authority. Delays sometimes occur, both on land and water. Many cases like the present and that of the theatrical troupe are constantly arising, where delivery at a certain time is essential. When the shipper and the carrier agree, through its agent, upon a date of delivery at destination which gives the usual time to make the trip, such contract cannot be held unusual or extraordinary, and is within the general authority of the agent. The carrying business of the country is mostly done by corporations which act through agents who, as in this case, frequently solicit business; and, when the contract is a reasonable one, it must be upheld, in the absence of notice of lack of authority.

It is urged that the customary way of carrying on the business of a common carrier is by issuing bills of lading, which constitute the contract between the parties. This custom is not conclusive of the authority of the agent, or of the reasonableness of the contracts he assumes to make. Plaintiffs testified that they knew nothing of a bill of lading in this case, and had never seen any before the trial. Defendant introduced a bill of lading, which it claims was given to plaintiffs' clerk at the time of or soon after the delivery of the goods to it. The contract was made before, and defendant could not change it by handing a receipt or bill of lading to a clerk.

The judgment is reversed, and judgment entered in this court for the plaintiffs, with costs of both courts.

The other Justices concur.

Rehearing denied.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Erwin STEINBACK, Respt.,

v.

Louise DIEPENBROCK, Exrx., etc., of Alois Diepenbrock, Deceased, Appt.,

and

William ERDTMANN, Respt.

(158 N. Y. 24.)

1. One having no insurable interest in the life of another may acquire by assignment a valid policy upon his life, and enforce it to the full amount.
2. A life insurance policy taken out by one upon his own life for the purpose of assigning it to another having no insurable interest will be invalid.

(January 10, 1899.)

APPPEAL by defendant Diepenbrock from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming a judgment of a Special Term of the Court of Common Pleas for the City and County of New York in favor of plaintiff and defendant Erdtmann in an action brought to recover the proceeds of a life insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William Philippeau, A. Edward Woodruff, and Max Meyer, for appellant:

The assignment from Alois Diepenbrock to the defendant Erdtmann cannot be sustained unless it is affirmatively shown that it was a fair and bona fide transaction and free from all suspicious circumstances.

Re Smith, 95 N. Y. 516; Cowee v. Cornell, 75 N. Y. 91, 31 Am. Rep. 428; Nesbit v. Lockman, 34 N. Y. 167; Green v. Roworth, 113 N. Y. 462; Barnard v. Gantz, 140 N. Y. 249; Empire State Ins. Co. v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 138 N. Y. 446; Sears v. Shafer, 6 N. Y. 268.

The circumstances disclosed by the record under which the assignment to Erdtmann was executed were such as to call for the application of the doctrine of constructive fraud.

The plaintiff had the burden of proving, not only that the deceased fully understood the act, but that he was not induced by any influence of Erdtmann and that he, Erdtmann, took no unfair advantage of his superior knowledge and influence.

Cowee v. Cornell, 75 N. Y. 99, 31 Am. Rep.

428; Gardner v. Ogden, 22 N. Y. 327, 78 Am. Dec. 192; Conkey v. Bond, 36 N. Y. 427; Bain v. Brown, 56 N. Y. 285.

The plaintiff had no insurable interest in the life of the insured and admitted upon the trial that he bought the policy as a speculation. Such a transaction should not be sanctioned by this court.

Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 775, 26 L. ed. 924; Cammack v. Lewis, 15 Wall. 643, 21 L. ed. 244; Ruse v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 23 N. Y. 516.

It cannot be said that this court in the cases relied upon by the respondent intended to be understood that a speculation in human life, such as the plaintiff admits it to be, is in all respects a legal transaction, and will be upheld and enforced in this state.

Olmsted v. Keyes, 85 N. Y. 593; Ruse v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 23 N. Y. 523; Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 782, 26 L. ed. 927; Holmes v. Gilman, 138 N. Y. 369, 20 L. R. A. 566.

The assignment of a policy to a party not having an insurable interest is as objectionable as "the taking out of a policy in his name."

Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 775, 26 L. ed. 924; Franklin L. Ins. Co. v. Hazard, 41 Ind. 116, 13 Am. Rep. 313; Stevens v. Warren, 101 Mass. 564; Cammack v. Lewis, 15 Wall. 643, 21 L. ed. 244; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U. S. 457, 24 L. ed. 251; Helmetag v. Miller, 76 Ala. 183, 52 Am. Rep. 316; Ruth v. Katterman, 112 Pa. 251; Hoffman v. Hoke, 122 Pa. 377, 1 L. R. A. 229; Downey v. Hoffer, 110 Pa. 109.

In the case of an assignment of a life insurance policy for a nominal consideration the interests of justice will be promoted if this court should hold that such an assignment is presumptively made as collateral and require the assignee as part of his case to affirmatively prove that the assignment was a bona fide transaction free from suspicion and for a valuable consideration.

Mr. James Cowden Meyers, with Messrs. Goepel & Raegenor, and Thomas M. Rowlette, for respondents:

There is no presumption in law that an assignment of a policy of life insurance was made as collateral to secure a loan.

St. John v. American Mut. L. Ins. Co. 2 Duer, 219, Affirmed in 13 N. Y. 31, 64 Am. Dec. 529.

The plaintiff's title is not impeached by

NOTE.—For validity of the assignment of a life insurance policy to one who has no insurable interest in the life of the insured, see also Rittler v. Smith (Md.) 2 L. R. A. 844; Roller v. Bean (Va.) 6 L. R. A. 136; Johnson v. Alex- 44 L. R. A.

ander (Ind.) 9 L. R. A. 660, and note; Hewlett v. Home for Incurables (Md.) 17 L. R. A. 447; Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. v. Hurst (Md.) 20 L. R. A. 761.

want of interest in the life of the defendant Diepenbrock's testator.

St. John v. American Mut. L. Ins. Co. 13 N. Y. 31, 64 Am. Dec. 529; Valton v. National Fund Life Assur. Co. 20 N. Y. 32; Olmsted v. Keyes, 85 N. Y. 593; Wright v. Mutual Ben. Life Assn. of America, 118 N. Y. 237, 6 L. R. A. 731; Walsh v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 133 N. Y. 408; Geoffroy v. Gilbert, 5 App. Div. 98, Affirmed in 154 N. Y. 741.

Parker, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The counsel for the appellant in his argument insisted with great earnestness and force that the position several times asserted by this court in support of the legality of the assignment of a policy of insurance to a person having no insurable interest in the life of the insured is a mistaken one, and in conflict with the decisions of the United States Supreme Court and the court of last resort in many of the states. Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 775, 26 L. ed. 924; Franklin L. Ins. Co. v. Hazzard, 41 Ind. 116, 13 Am. Rep. 313; Missouri Valley L. Ins. Co. v. Sturges, 18 Kan. 93, 26 Am. Rep. 761; Schonfield v. Turner, 75 Tex. 324, 7 L. R. A. 189; Basye v. Adams, 81 Ky. 368; and Helmetag v. Miller, 76 Ala. 183, 52 Am. Rep. 316, furnish support for his assertion as to the rule in the United States Supreme Court and in some of the other states. Supported by these authorities, the counsel challenged the correctness of the rule that concededly has been long acquiesced in in this state by the courts and the profession. Indeed, Mr. Justice Field, in his opinion in Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 775, 26 L. ed. 924, stated the rule in this state to be that a valid assignment of a policy of insurance could be made to a person without interest in the insured. But the appellant contends that, while this may be the rule here, the decisions in other jurisdictions demonstrate that our position is wrong as a matter of sound public policy, and therefore, the true rule should be laid down, notwithstanding that expressions inducing the belief that the above rule obtained may have been made by our courts. It is urged that this task will not be a difficult one, for the reason, as the appellant contends, that there have been no cases in this state where the question was necessarily up for decision, and, therefore, all that has been said upon that subject by this court is mere dictum.

In St. John v. American Mut. L. Ins. Co. 13 N. Y. 31, 64 Am. Dec. 529, a recovery in favor of the plaintiff against an insurance company was sustained where it appeared that one Noyes had effected policies of insurance upon his own life and shortly afterwards assigned them to the plaintiff for a valuable consideration. In the answer the defendant alleged, by way of defense, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover only the amount of money that he had advanced as a consideration of the transfer of the policy to him, and that, if defendant was liable beyond such amount upon the policy, the personal representatives were interested in the excess, and therefore necessary parties to the suit. And upon the close of the evidence the counsel for the defendant pressed the point that the plaintiff had no insurable interest in the life of the insured, and therefore was not entitled to judgment. The court regarded the question as one necessary to be passed upon in the final disposition of the case, and, after considering it, held that the policies in question were valid in their inception, and that the assignment of them to the plaintiff did not affect the liability of the company, and that to entitle the assignee to a recovery it was not necessary for him to have had an insurable interest in the life of the insured. The next case was Valton v. National Fund Life Assur. Co. 20 N. Y. 32, where Schumacher obtained a policy on his life for $10,000, and by his articles of copartnership agreed that the plaintiff and another partner should become the owners of the policy and all due thereon in the event of his death before the termination of the partnership. This contingency happened, and the court held that it operated to vest absolutely the title to the policy in the plaintiff and his other partner, and a recovery could be had thereon as against the defendants. It will be observed that in the cases cited the contest was between the assignee and the company issuing the policy, and the question was not squarely presented whether, as between the assignor and the assignee, the assignee would be entitled to retain more than the sum actually invested by him, which is the rule in some jurisdictions. But it necessarily was decided that the policy was not rendered invalid by the assignment, and, further, that the assignee acquired thereby the right to enforce collection of the full amount of the policy from the company.

In Olmsted v. Keyes, 85 N. Y. 593, the plaintiff, having obtained the proceeds of a policy of life insurance, brought an action for the purpose of ascertaining and determining the conflicting claims of various defendants to the moneys paid on the policy. It appeared that Keyes procured a policy of insurance on his life, payable to the plaintiff as trustee for his wife Huldah; Huldah died intestate a few years later; afterwards Keyes married again, and thereupon the plaintiff, for value, assigned the policy to Keyes's second wife, at his request. Keyes subsequently died intestate, leaving him surviving, his widow and one child by her and several children by his first wife. It was held that during the life of the first wife the policy was her property, and upon her death the title vested in her husband as survivor, and, he having caused it to be assigned to his second wife, the assignment vested the title in her, and she alone was entitled to the money due thereon. There was a difference of view in the court as to the disposition of the case, and the argument that led to the decision considered with care the assignability of a policy of life insurance like any other contract. In the course of the argument the court referred to and considered many authorities in England and in this country, and reached the conclusion that, while an insurable interest is necessary to enable one to take out a policy of insurance on the life of another, it is not necessary that the assignee of a policy validly issued should have such an interest. After careful examination of that opinion, we find it impossible to reach any other conclusion than that it was intended to put at rest whatever controversy there may have been in this state touching the assignability of a valid policy of insurance. The case at bar is the only one we know of where the rule laid down in the case last referred to has been seriously questioned, although it is true that some discussion of the principle was had in Wright v. Mutual Ben. Life Assn. of America, 118 N. Y. 237, 6 L. R. A. 731, where the defendant unsuccessfully challenged the right of the assignee to recover, on the ground, among others, that the plaintiff had not an insurable interest in the life of the insured at the time of the assignment. The court in its opinion cited the case of Olmsted v. Keyes, 85 N. Y. 593.

The result of our further examination persuades us that what has been understood to be the rule in this state is not only in line with the authorities in most jurisdictions upon that subject, but is sound as a matter of public policy. It was formerly the rule in England that, while a policy of insurance could not be assigned at law, it could in equity. By the act of 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. chap. 144), a policy of life insurance was made assignable at law, and in some of the decisions it was said by the court that the object of the statute was to enable the assignee to sue in his own name; but it did not in any other way improve the position of the assignee, who could before that secure the money in equity. British Equitable Ins. Co. v. Great Western R. Co. 38 L. J. Ch. N. S. 132; Re Turcan, L. R. 40 Ch. Div. 5. The rule asserted by this court has also been held to be the law in many of our sister states in a number of cases, where the question has been raised either in actions brought by personal representatives of the assignor to recover the money received by the assignee on a policy or in suits brought by the company issuing the policy for the purpose of determining whether the personal representatives or the assignee were entitled to the proceeds, all claimants being made parties defendant. Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Allen, 138 Mass. 24, 52 Am. Rep. 245; Eckel v. Renner, 41 Ohio St. 232; Martin v. Stubbings, 126 Ill. 387, 403; Fitzpatrick v. Hartford L. & Annuity Ins. Co. 56 Conn. 116, and 17 Atl. 411; Clark v. Allen, 11 R. I. 439, 23 Am. Rep. 496; Murphy v. Red, 64 Miss. 614, 60 Am. Rep. 68; Rittler v. Smith, 70 Md. 261, 2 L. R. A. 844. These authorities are, it seems to us, well grounded in principle. They recognize, not only the existence of, but the necessity for, the rule that forbids any insurance upon the life of a person in which the person for whose benefit the insurance is made has no interest. Such a policy constitutes what is termed a "wager policy," or a mere speculative contract upon the life of the insured, with a direct interest in favor of its early termination. It is, in terms, forbidden by statute in England (14 Geo. III. chap. 48), and in many other jurisdictions, including this state (Laws 1892, chap. 690, § 55); and this court held in Ruse v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. 41 L. R. A.

Co. 23 N. Y. 516, that such insurance is void at common law, and that the English statute, in so far as it prohibits such insurance, is merely a declaratory act.

But the question we are considering presupposes a valid contract of insurance, the policy being issued either for the benefit of the assured personally, or for the benefit of someone having an insurable interest in the assured at the time of the taking out of the policy. Such a policy constitutes a contract to pay a certain amount of money to the payee on the death of the assured. It is a chose in action, with all the ordinary incidents belonging thereto, and as such may be assigned, either as collateral or absolutely, as the payee may elect. While an insurable interest in the payee is necessary, in the first instance, to the creation of a valid contract, it is not necessary that such interest should continue. The case of a wife divorced from her husband will serve as an illustration. The policy taken out for her benefit during the existence of the married relation is not affected by a subsequent severance of that relation through a decree of a court of competent jurisdiction, by which she ceases to have an insurable interest in his life. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U. S. 457, 24 L. ed. 251. The materiality of the value of the interest has relation to the question whether the policy is taken out in good faith, and not as a gambling transaction. If it be taken out in good faith, then a sound public policy would seem to require that the payee should be permitted to treat it as he may any other chose in action, and go to the best market he can find, either to sell it or borrow money on it. It would substantially confine him to such terms as the company issuing the policy should choose to make with him, if he should be limited in his choice of a purchaser to the party having an interest in the continuance of the life of the assured.

On the other hand, it is said that, if the payee of a policy be allowed to assign it, a safe and convenient method is provided by which a wagering contract can be safely made. The insured, instead of taking out a policy payable to a person having no insurable interest in his life, can take it out to himself, and at once assign it to such person. But such an attempt would not prove successful, for a policy issued and assigned, under such circumstances, would be none the less a wagering policy because of the form of it. The intention of the parties procuring the policy would determine its character, which the courts would unhesitatingly declare in accordance with the facts, reading the policy and the assignment together, as forming part of one transaction. Cammack v. Lewis, 15 Wall. 643, 21 L. ed. 244, and Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 775, 26 L. ed. 924, were cases where the policies were taken out in order that they might be assigned to the assignees, through their procurement, under circumstances that might well be held to be in evasion of the law prohibiting gaming policies. In Warnock's Case the agreement touching the procurement of the policy and the use to be made of it, including the promise to assign it, was in writing, and executed the very day the policy was applied for, and the day following the assured executed an assignment of the policy, which had in the meantime been issued in pursuance of such an agreement. The insurance company paid over the money to the assignee, and the court held that the personal representatives of the assured were entitled to receive from the assignees all the money, except the sums advanced by them under the agreement, plus the sum paid by them to the widow. In the opinion it is said that the assignment of the policy to a party not having an insurable interest is as objectionable as the taking out of a policy in his name. That remark was clearly true as applied to the facts of that case, for the policy was taken out in pursuance of an agreement to assign it. It was therefore, in fact, a policy taken out for the benefit of parties having no insurable interest, although in form issued to the assured, and by him assigned to such parties. In such case the court will always declare the fact to be as it is, without regard to the effort of the parties to hide the truth and cheat the law. But the language employed by the court, and evidently advisedly, is broad enough to cover all assignments of policies to parties not having an insurable interest, including as well those taken out in good faith, and kept up as long as the financial condition of the insured permits, as those deliberately taken out for the purpose of speculation upon a life that the intended beneficiary, whether as payee in the policy or by assignment, has no interest in prolonging. The point of actual separation between the cases asserting the assignability and those asserting the nonassignability of policies of insurance to persons not interested in the continuance of the life of the assured seems to be that those asserting nonassignability proceed on the assumption that the question is one of law, and that, if a policy is not assignable in one case, it cannot be in any case; while in the other line of cases the underlying principle is that all valid contracts are assignable, but that contracts are not necessarily valid and free from the taint of gambling because upon their face they appear to be regularly and properly issued. In order to ascertain the truth, all the facts and circumstances may be proved, and if it then appear that the parties intended by the contract to enable a third and uninterested party to speculate upon the life of another, the court will declare such contract invalid, not because of the assignment, but in spite of it.

Warnock's Case and this one are very wide apart in their facts, and serve very well to illustrate the necessity for the position taken by the courts of this state upon this general subject. In December, 1887, Alois Diepenbrock took out a policy of insurance on his life in the Equitable Life Assurance Society. He paid the premiums regularly down to December, 1892, a period of about five years, at which time the surrender value of the policy was about $485. He was pressed for money, and finally sold the policy to the defendant Erdtmann for $600, or something 44 L. R. A.

like $115 more than he would have received by the surrender of the policy to the company. He had paid a much larger sum in premiums,—something over $2,000,—and there seems to be no good reason why a person owning such a policy, and obliged to sell it, should not be permitted to get back as much as possible of the money that he has paid out for insurance. His condition of health may have changed very materially, of which fact the company can take no advantage; for in its contract it made allowance for that possibility. There is no good reason for saying that an insured person should not have the right, whenever his necessities press him, because of a failing condition of health that assures a speedy death, to realize on his policy, and obtain for it something like a fair price, which may, perhaps, be almost equal to its face value.

The personal representatives of the assured contested the assignment, also, on the ground that it was intended as collateral, although in form a valid assignment; but the special term found otherwise, and the appellate division approved that finding, so that question is no longer open for consideration.

Other questions are presented by the appellant, but, after a careful examination of them, we conclude that no error was committed below that will support a reversal of the judgment.

The judgment should be affirmed, with costs.

All concur, except Martin, J., absent.

PEOPLE of the State of New York, as rel.
COMMISSIONERS OF PUBLIC CHAR-ITIES AND CORRECTION, Repts.,
v.

William CULLEN, Appt.

(153 N. Y. 629.)

1. Legislative power to enlarge the jurisdiction of the court of appeals by providing for a review of certain judgments of inferior courts that were not reviewable before is not taken away by the provision of Const. art. 6, § 9, providing that the legislature may further restrict such jurisdiction.
2. A judicial separation at the suit of the wife, although it does not dissolve the marriage, does so far terminate or suspend the relation of husband and wife that the husband cannot be guilty of the statutory offense of abandonment or desertion.
3. The failure of a decree of separation to make any allowance for the wife, while it provides that an application for that purpose may be thereafter made in case of a material change in the husband's pecuniary circumstances, does not leave him liable to a prosecution for abandonment or desertion in case she becomes a charge upon the public.

NOTE.—The statutes making it a criminal offense for a man to abandon his family are of comparatively recent date. The offense is purely statutory. On the question of the effect of a limited divorce upon the husband's liability in such cases, the above decision seems to be the first. For bond required from husband to support wife, see Murray v. Murray (Cal.) 37 L. R. A. 626.

(October 5, 1897.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming a judgment of the Court of Special Sessions of the City and County of New York affirming a magistrate's conviction of defendant as a disorderly person. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Payson Merrill, for appellant:

The statute under which this defendant was convicted is a penal statute, and as such is to be strictly construed.

People, Harrington, v. Special Sessions Ct. 15 N. Y. S. R. 323.

The offense of which the defendant was convicted comes within the definition of a crime in § 3 of the Penal Code.

People, Kopp, v. French, 102 N. Y. 583; People v. Pettit, 74 N. Y. 320; People v. Crandon, 17 Hun, 490; Cummings & Gilbert, Poor Laws, 120.

The object of the statute is not to create a new obligation on the part of the husband, but to provide a new remedy for enforcing an existing obligation and to punish a failure to fulfil it. The statute has no application in a case where no obligation exists.

People v. Brady, 13 Misc. 294; People, Douglass, v. Naehr, 30 Hun, 461.

The obligation of the defendant to support the complainant was terminated by the decree of 1883.

2 Parsons, Contr. p. 85; Tyler, Infancy & Coverture, § 700, p. 924; Schouler, Husb. & W. § 118; Schouler, Dom. Rel. § 222; Kamp v. Kamp, 59 N. Y. 212; Romaine v. Chauncey, 129 N. Y. 566, 14 L. R. A. 712; Galusha v. Galusha, 116 N. Y. 635, 6 L. R. A. 487; Wetmore v. Wetmore, 149 N. Y. 520, 33 L. R. A. 708; People v. Pettit, 74 N. Y. 320.

The statute under which these proceedings were taken was not intended to apply to a case where the obligation of the material contract has been modified by a decree of limited divorce at the instance of the wife.

People, Douglass, v. Naehr, 30 Hun, 461.

The judgment of separation between the complainant and the defendant in 1883 is binding upon the people in this proceeding.

People v. Baker, 76 N. Y. 78, 32 Am. Rep. 274; Rigney v. Rigney, 127 N. Y. 408.

The offense of abandonment must be one which leaves the wife without adequate support or in danger of becoming a charge upon the people, but one of the essential conditions of the offense is abandonment, and this abandonment must be a voluntary act.

Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, L. R. 1 Prob. & Div. 694; Thompson v. Thompson, 1 Swab. & T. 231, 4 Jur. N. S. 717; Pape v. Pape, L. R. 20 Q. B. Div. p. 76; Reg. v. Leresche, 65 L. T. N. S. 602; Williams v. Williams, 130 N. Y. 193, 14 L. R. A. 220.

Messrs. Percy McElrath and George W. Lyon, for respondents:

The law under which this appeal is sought to be brought is unconstitutional.

44 L. R. A.

It is sufficient to convict one as a disorderly person if he is proved to have abandoned his wife in the city of New York without adequate support or to have left her in danger of becoming a burden upon the public, or to have neglected to provide for her according to his means.

Bulkley v. Boyce, 48 Hun, 259; People, Lichtenstein, v. Hodgson, 126 N. Y. 648; People, Harrington, v. Special Sessions Ct. 15 N. Y. S. R. 329.

There is a marked distinction between the legal consequences which result from a divorce a vinculo matrimonii and a separation merely from bed and board.

N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1756, 1762; 2 Bishop, Mar. & Div. §§ 726-741; Barrere v. Barrere, 4 Johns. Ch. 187; Burr v. Burr, 10 Paige, 25; Tonjes v. Tonjes, 14 App. Div. 542.

A divorce from bed and board works no change in the relation of the parties, either to each other or to third persons, except in authorizing them to live apart until they mutually come together.

2 Bishop, Mar. & Div. § 729.

This divorce does not deprive the wife of any estate or property rights she may hold independently of her husband or adversely to him.

2 Bishop, Mar. & Div. § 741.

The liability of a husband to provide for his wife "continues irrespective of the judgment."

Tonjes v. Tonjes, 14 App. Div. 542; Barrere v. Barrere, 4 Johns. Ch. 187; Burr v. Burr, 10 Paige, 25; Erkenbrach v. Erkenbrach, 96 N. Y. 465.

The plaintiffs in this proceeding were not parties or privies to the action in the superior court, and are in no way bound or estopped by the judgment or orders made in that action.

Monroe County Supers. v. Budlong, 51 Barb. 515; Collins v. Hydorn, 135 N. Y. 320; Furlong v. Banta, 80 Hun, 248; Re State Reservation Comrs. 37 Hun, 553; People v. Rohrs, 49 Hun, 150.

To make a former recovery a bar, the litigation must have been between the same parties or their privies. By privies are meant persons who are represented by the parties, or claim under them, or in privity with them, who have mutual and successive relationship to the same right or thing.

Goddard v. Benson, 15 Abb. Pr. 191; Scott v. Drennen, 9 Daly, 226; Furlong v. Banta, 80 Hun, 248; Booth v. Powers, 56 N. Y. 22; Neeson v. Troy, 20 Hun, 173.

The offense of being a disorderly person is one against the public, and as such is dealt with and punished.

People v. Crandon, 17 Hun, 490; People v. Mitchell, 2 Thomp. & C. 172; Stowell v. Chamberlain, 60 N. Y. 276; Stannard v. Hubbell, 123 N. Y. 531.

The plaintiffs herein are not bound by immaterial and collateral facts decided in a previous action.

Hecht v. Hecht, 14 Misc. 597; Galusha v. Galusha, 138 N. Y. 272; House v. Lockwood, 137 N. Y. 250; Shaw v. Broadbent, 129 N.

Y. 123; Stannard v. Hubbell, 123 N. Y. 528; Springer v. Bien, 128 N. Y. 102.

The question of alimony was entirely collateral to the main issue in this case.

Bigelow, Estoppel, 158; Barra v. Jackson, 1 Younge & C. Ch. Cas. 585; King v. Chase, 15 N. H. 9, 41 Am. Dec. 675.

A judgment in a former suit is conclusive as to existing rights, but not as to matters which may subsequently arise.

People, Lichtenstein, v. Hodgson, 126 N. Y. 648; Smith v. McCluskey, 45 Barb. 610; Brennan v. Blath, 3 Daly, 479.

It was not the intent of the superior court that their failure to order the payment of alimony should deprive the plaintiff of all support from her husband. It was the practice of that court to deny such applications for alimony on the ground that the applicant would find a more speedy and efficient means of procuring support by having the proceedings brought before a police magistrate, as was done in this case.

Ruopp v. Ruopp, 35 N. Y. Supp. 251; Patton v. Patton, 13 Misc. 726.

Eliza Cullen is not the plaintiff in this proceeding. The proceedings may be instituted and maintained with utter disregard to her wishes or action in the premises. Whether or no she has made a demand for support is not the question in this matter.

People v. Meyer, 12 Misc. 615; People, Lichtenstein, v. Hodgson, 126 N. Y. 648.

The offense is one against the people, not against the wife.

People v. Crandon, 17 Hun, 490.

O'Brien, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant was tried before one of the city magistrates in the city of New York, and was adjudged to be a disorderly person, in that he had abandoned his wife, and had left her in danger of becoming a charge upon the public. The proceeding was instituted before the magistrate upon a verified complaint of the wife on the 12th day of August, 1896. The trial resulted in a conviction on the 12th day of December, 1896, and the defendant was thereupon ordered to pay to the commissioners of public charities the sum of $8 per week for one year for their indemnity, and for the support of his family in the meantime. It appeared that the defendant and the complainant were married in the year 1862, and that they separated in 1868, since which date they have not lived together. There is no issue of the marriage. It further appeared that on the 15th day of October, 1883, in an action for separation from bed and board, instituted by the wife in the superior court, judgment was entered upon her motion that the parties be separated from bed and board, and that the defendant pay the costs of the action. The judgment recited that it appeared from the report of a referee that the present circumstances and abilities of the defendant are such that he cannot personally pay any sum whatever for alimony and counsel, and no sum was allowed for either purpose. The judgment, however, contained a clause to the effect that, in the event of the pecuniary circumstances of the defendant becoming materially changed, touching his ability to support his wife, an application for that purpose might be made at the foot of the judgment, by any party in interest, for a modification of the judgment touching the support of the wife, or any other matter as might appear to be just. The conviction of the defendant upon these facts was reviewed and affirmed by the court of sessions, and subsequently by the appellate division of the supreme court. Until the enactment of a recent statute, this court had no power to review a judgment originating in such a proceeding. People, Public Charities & C. Comrs., v. Cullen, 151 N. Y. 54. But, by chapter 601, § 20, Laws 1895, provision is made for an appeal to this court from such a judgment when adverse to the defendant.

The learned counsel for the people contends that this statute is unconstitutional and void, and moves to dismiss the appeal. This contention is founded upon the provisions of article 6, § 9, of the Constitution, regulating the jurisdiction of this court, and providing that the legislature may further restrict this jurisdiction. It was never supposed that there was anything in the Constitution to prohibit the legislature from enlarging the jurisdiction of this court, and extending it to new cases, from time to time, as it thought proper, save only in those special cases enumerated in the article, which are expressly withdrawn from review. The jurisdiction must be confined to questions of law, and in some cases the unanimous decision of the appellate division is made final. These limitations are, of course, binding upon the legislature, as well as the courts, and cannot be transcended. But, subject to these provisions, it is entirely competent for the legislature to provide for a review in this court of any question of law involved in a judgment after a hearing in the appellate division. The power to further restrict appeals does not, by any fair or reasonable implication, exclude the power to enlarge the jurisdiction by providing for a review of certain judgments of inferior courts that were not reviewable before. The questions that may be considered in such cases are, of course, limited by the restrictions contained in the Constitution; but the sole question here is whether the legislature has the power to enact a statute providing for a final review in this court of a judgment or order made by a magistrate convicting a party as a disorderly person. There is no good reason to doubt the existence of such power. The judgment or order must be one entered upon the decision of the appellate division finally determining some action or special proceeding, when the appeal is given as matter of right. None of the limitations upon appeals to this court contained in the Constitution have been ignored by the statute in question, and so we think the jurisdiction to review the decisions below is clear.

The question is purely one of law, whether, upon the undisputed facts presented by the record, the defendant had abandoned or deserted his wife, within the fair meaning of the statute. The charge of which the defendant was convicted, if not a crime within the meaning of the Penal Code, was clearly of a criminal nature, and it was incumbent upon the people to prove it. The statute is summary, highly penal, and should be strictly construed. People, Kopp, v. French, 102 N. Y. 583; People v. Pettit, 74 N. Y. 320; People, Douglass, v. Naehr, 30 Hun, 461. It is the duty of the husband to support his wife, but he is not bound to support her away from his home, even though such home may be disagreeable to her. The statute under which the defendant was convicted evidently contemplates the actual existence of the marriage relations. After a judicial separation at the suit of the wife, the relation is so far terminated or suspended that the husband cannot be guilty of abandonment or desertion in any legal sense. The judgment operated to change the contract relations between the parties, and required them to live apart from each other. The wife was relieved from her marital duties, and the husband's obligation to support her could not remain as it was before. It was no longer possible for him to discharge it in the sense that the marriage state contemplates. In such cases the court generally substitutes, in place of the contract obligation to support, recognized by the common law, a provision for suitable maintenance, according to the circumstances of the parties, to be paid by the husband, or from his estate. When a judicial decree of separation from bed and board has once been pronounced, the common-law obligation to support the wife, if not entirely abrogated, is greatly modified. Alimony then becomes the regular measure of the husband's obligation. It is granted or withheld always in furtherance of justice, and the amount is regulated by the exercise of a sound discretion, according to the circumstances of the parties. When the marriage bond was modified by the decree of separation, the legal obligation to support the wife in the sense that it existed before ceased, and in its place was substituted the power of the court to appropriate some part of the property or earnings of the husband to that purpose, as justice might require. Kamp v. Kamp, 59 N. Y. 212; Romains v. Chauncey, 129 N. Y. 566, 14 L. R. A. 712; Galusha v. Galusha, 116 N. Y. 635, 6 L. R. A. 487; Wetmore v. Wetmore, 149 N. Y. 520, 33 L. R. A. 708; Schouler, Husb. & W. § 118; 2 Parsons, Contr. p. 85; Tyler, Infancy & Coverture, § 700, p. 924. In this respect, there does not appear to be any difference between an absolute and limited divorce, based upon the misconduct of the husband. In neither case can there be an abandonment or desertion, within the meaning of the statute. The statute was never intended to apply to a case like this, where the obligations of the marital contract have been modified by a decree of the court, and where the defendant is guilty of no act, except to obey the decree.

It is quite true, as the learned counsel for the people contends, that the judgment in the divorce action did not dissolve the marriage. The parties still remained husband and wife in the eye of the law. Neither the husband nor the wife was competent to contract a new marriage. But, practically, the duties and obligations of the marriage relation were radically affected and wholly changed. The wife had been relieved from all her obligations. She was no longer bound to perform any of the duties of a wife.

If it be said that the husband was still under obligations to support the wife, the question arises, How was he to discharge this obligation? Certainly not in the manner contemplated by the marriage contract, and enjoined by the common law, since they had been separated by the decree of a competent court. The marital duty of the husband to support the wife always presupposes the fact that they are living together as husband and wife. This obligation, in its proper sense, contemplates an actual union of the two parties, maintaining to each other the practical relations of husband and wife. When they have been separated by the judgment of a court for the misconduct of the husband it is true that the obligation of the husband is not wholly terminated, but it assumes another form, and rests upon different principles. Their duties and obligations towards each other during the separation are just what the court may have prescribed, and no other. Those implied from the actual existence of the marriage relations have ceased, or are suspended, and the provisions of the decree of a court of equity have been substituted in their place. An action for a limited divorce is really an appeal to a court of equity by one of the parties to a marriage contract for a modification of the marriage relations, duties, and obligations as they exist at common law. The court is virtually asked to change and readjust these relations, and to prescribe such new duties and obligations to be observed by the litigants as justice may require. Such a decree, when made, is the charter that, during the separation, must regulate the obligations and duties of the parties. They cannot be regulated by the decree and the common law at the same time. The two methods of enforcing the marital duties and obligations are wholly inconsistent with each other. They proceed upon theories, and are based upon principles, so radically different, that both cannot operate together. The decree, so long as it remains in force, must be presumed to contain all the provisions for the support of the wife that justice required, or that the circumstances of the husband would warrant. If, by reason of changed conditions and circumstances, it becomes unjust to either party, the remedy is to apply for its modification. The statute in question cannot be made to take the place of the decree. It was not intended to apply to a case where the wife had procured from a court of equity a readjustment of her marriage relations. It has been adjudged by the decree that the defendant, by misconduct, has forfeited all right to the services or society of his wife, and yet the husband has been convicted of an offense of a criminal nature, for failing to do something that the decree does not require him to do. It may be that the husband ought, in justice and equity, to be compelled to support his wife, or to contribute to her support. That is a question of which the divorce court has still jurisdiction and it must be presumed that when appealed to by the wife it will determine her claim in conformity with justice. But the question here is whether the husband has committed the statutory offense of desertion or abandonment. The criminal law does not, as a rule, deal with acts or motives that are merely constructive. It deals with the actual conduct and motives of men. Abandonment, in the sense in which the term is used in the statute, means the actual and wilful desertion by the husband of the wife. It is the wilful act of actually leaving her, or separating from her, and the withdrawal of all aid and protection implied in the marriage relations. If the wife herself procures the separation, or consents to it, the case does not come within the statute. It cannot be the result of an agreement, or affected by the judgment of a court, but must be what is known to the criminal law as wilful and voluntary desertion or abandonment. In Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, L. R. 1 Prob. & Div. 694, the court thus stated the rule applicable to the construction of a similar statute: "No one can 'desert' who does not actively and wilfully bring to an end an existing state of cohabitation. . . . If the state of cohabitation has already ceased to exist, whether by the adverse act of husband or wife, or even by the mutual consent of both, 'desertion,' in my judgment, becomes from that moment impossible to either, at least until their common-law life and home have been resumed." And desertion or abandonment has been defined in substantially the same language in other cases. Pape v. Pape, L. R. 20 Q. B. Div. 76; Thompson v.

Thompson, 1 Swab. & T. 231. The same or similar terms, when used in the law of marriage and divorce, have been defined by this court, and it is held that desertion means the wilful and voluntary separation by the husband from his wife without justification, and with the intention of not returning. Williams v. Williams, 130 N. Y. 193, 14 L. R. A. 220. Abandonment cannot mean anything more than desertion. When used to characterize the act of the husband, the words are generally used interchangeably.

The fact that the court in the decree of separation made no allowance for the wife does not change the situation. The court did exercise its power and discretion on the subject, and held that the pecuniary circumstances of the defendant would not warrant an allowance then, but left it open to the complainant to apply for alimony whenever the pecuniary circumstances of the defendant changed. This remedy has always been open to the wife, and is open to her still. If the defendant has any pecuniary ability to contribute to his wife's support, the divorce court has the power to modify the decree. If he has not, then there is really no ground for this proceeding. The age and physical condition of the defendant leave no room for the supposition that he is capable of earning anything for this purpose.

We think that the charge of abandonment was not sustained by the facts, and that the conviction of the defendant, under the circumstances, was erroneous. The defendant had not abandoned his wife, within any fair interpretation of the statute.

The order of the Appellate Division, the Special Sessions, and the magistrate should be reversed, and the defendant discharged.

All concur, except Gray, J., absent.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

Max PRETZFELDER

v.

MERCHANTS INSURANCE COMPANY of Newark et al., Appts.

(123 N. C. 104.)

The waiver of proofs of loss effected by the insurer's demand for arbitration is not affected by the failure of the arbitration because of inability of the arbitrators to agree without fault of the assured so that such proofs can be subsequently demanded.

(November 22, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court for Guilford County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amounts alleged to be due on a certain fire insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—On the question of the irrevocability of a waiver of proofs of loss the case seems to be somewhat of a departure from, or at least an 44 L. R. A.

Mr. John W. Himsdale, for appellants: The arbitration clause is a valid stipulation.

Scott v. Avery, 8 Exch. 487, 5 H. L. Cas. 811; Hamilton v. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. 136 U. S. 255, 34 L. ed. 423; Pioneer Mfg. Co. v. Phoenix Assur. Co. 106 N. C. 28; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 574.

The appraisal clause being a condition precedent, the assured cannot maintain an action upon the policy without performance of legal excuse.

Ostrander, Ins. § 275; Campbell v. American Popular Life Ins. Co. 1 MacArth. 246, 29 Am. Rep. 591; Hickerson v. German-American Ins. Co. 96 Tenn. 193, 32 L. R. A. 172; Brock v. Dwelling House Ins. Co. 102 Mich. 583, 26 L. R. A. 623; Gasser v. Sun Fire Office, 42 Minn. 315; Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. Bishop, 154 Ill. 9; Uhrig v. Williamsburgh City F. Ins. Co. 101 N. Y. 362; Daven- advance upon, the prior decisions, as it holds in effect that a waiver by demand for arbitration is not revoked by the failure to arbitrate.

port v. Long Island Ins. Co. 10 Daly, 538; Chapman v. Rockford Ins. Co. 89 Wis. 572, 28 L. R. A. 405.

When the award is defeated by the misconduct of either of the appraisers, it will be chargeable to the party by whom he has been selected.

Ostrander, Ins. § 267.

The failure to organize a new board of appraisers on March 18 was caused by the plaintiff.

Davenport v. Long Island Ins. Co. 10 Daly, 535.

The assured should be held responsible for the unreasonable conduct of his appraiser.

Braddy v. New York Bovey F. Ins. Co. 115 N. C. 354; Howard Ins. Co. v. Hocking, 115 Pa. 416; 2 May, Ins. § 496b; Uhrig v. Williamsburgh City F. Ins. Co. 101 N. Y. 362; Monongahela Nav. Co. v. Fenlon, 4 Watts & S. 205; Snodgrass v. Gavit, 28 Pa. 224; Lauman v. Young, 31 Pa. 306; O'Reilly v. Kerns, 52 Pa. 214; Howard v. Allegheny Valley R. Co. 69 Pa. 489; Hostetter v. Pittsburgh, 107 Pa. 419; Page v. Vankirk, 1 Brewst. (Pa.) 285; Yost v. McKee, 179 Pa. 381; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, N. S. p. 576.

The furnishing of proof of loss is a condition precedent to the bringing of a suit.

When the policy makes the rendering of "proof of loss" a condition precedent, a failure to observe the condition is fatal.

7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1043, note; May, Ins. § 493, note; 4 Joyce, Ins. §§ 3275, 3260, 3281, 3333; 2 Biddle, Ins. § 990, p. 263; 2 Bacon, Life Ins. § 410; Cooke, Ins. § 113; Underwood v. Farmers' Joint Stock Ins. Co. 57 N. Y. 500; Richards, Ins. § 160; Blakeley v. Phenix Ins. Co. 20 Wis. 205, 31 Am. Dec. 388; 2 Wood, Ins. §§ 436-438, 449, pp. 927, 930, 989; Gould v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. 90 Mich. 302, Distinguishing Tubbs v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. 84 Mich. 646, and Aurora F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Kranich, 36 Mich. 293. See also Blossom v. Lycoming F. Ins. Co. 64 N. Y. 164, Following Savage v. Howard Ins. Co. 52 N. Y. 502, 11 Am. Rep. 741; and Scammon v. Germania Ins. Co. 101 Ill. 621; 2 Beach, Ins. § 1210, note 1; Quinlan v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 133 N. Y. 356; Shapiro v. Western Home Ins. Co. 51 Minn. 239; Dwelling-House Ins. Co. v. Osborn, 1 Kan. App. 197; McDermott v. Lycoming F. Ins. Co. 12 Jones & S. 221; Cameron v. Canada F. & M. Ins. Co. 6 Ont. Rep. 392; Bowes v. Insurance Co. 4 Pug. & B. 437; Ostrander, Ins. § 223, p. 522; Woodfin v. Asheville Mut. Ins. Co. 51 N. C. (6 Jones, L.) 559; Boyle v. North Carolina Mut. Ins. Co. 52 N. C. (7 Jones, L.) 373; Weidert v. State Ins. Co. 19 Or. 261; German Ins. Co. v. Davis, 40 Neb. 700; O'Reilly v. Guardian Mut. L. Ins. Co. 60 N. Y. 169, 19 Am. Rep. 151; Sargent v. London & L. & G. Ins. Co. 85 Hun, 31.

There has been no waiver of proof of loss.

Ostrander, Ins. § 366, p. 762; May, Ins. § 507, p. 1168; 2 Biddle, Ins. § 1048, p. 318, § 1052, p. 321; 2 Wood, Fire Ins. § 439, p. 943; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Lebecher, 20 Ill. App. 450; Davis v. Canada Farmers Mut. Ins. Co. 39 U. C. Q. B. 452; Gooden v. Amoskeag F. Ins. Co. 20 N. H. 73; Beatty v. Ly-44 L. R. A.

coming County Mut. Ins. Co. 66 Pa. 9, 5 Am. Rep. 318; Ripley v. Aetna Ins. Co. 30 N. Y. 136, 86 Am. Dec. 362; Everett v. London & L. Ins. Co. 142 Pa. 332; National Ins. Co. v. Brown, 128 Pa. 386; David v. Oakland Home Ins. Co. 11 Wash. 181; Findeisen v. Metropole F. Ins. Co. 57 Vt. 520; Hanna v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 36 Mo. App. 538; Diehl v. Adams County Mut. Ins. Co. 58 Pa. 452, 98 Am. Dec. 302.

Whether there was waiver of proof of loss is a question of fact for the jury.

2 Joyce, Ins. § 3281; 2 Biddle, Ins. § 1149, and cases in note; Lycoming County Mut. Ins. Co. v. Schollenberger, 44 Pa. 259; Home Ins. Co. v. Baltimore Warehouse Co. 93 U. S. 527, 23 L. ed. 868; Enterprise Ins. Co. v. Parisot, 35 Ohio St. 35, 35 Am. Rep. 589; Findeisen v. Metropole F. Ins. Co. 57 Vt. 520; 2 Wood, Ins. § 452, p. 979; Dwelling-House Ins. Co. v. Dowdall, 159 Ill. 179.

The burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show waiver of proof of loss.

McPike v. Western Assur. Co. 61 Miss. 37; Eaton v. Supreme Lodge K. of H. (U. S. C. C. S. D. Ohio) 15 Ins. L. J. 762; 2 Biddle, Ins. § 1149, p. 416; Mitchell v. Home Ins. Co. 32 Iowa, 421; Commonwealth Ins. Co. v. Sennett, 41 Pa. 161; Cory v. Boylston F. & M. Ins. Co. 107 Mass. 140, 9 Am. Rep. 14; Wood, Ins. § 424, p. 734; German Ins. Co. v. Fairbank, 32 Neb. 750; Citizens' F. Ins. Security & L. Co. v. Doll, 35 Md. 89; Fayerweather v. Phenix Ins. Co. 22 Jones & S. 545; German Ins. Co. v. Davis, 40 Neb. 700; Gale v. State Ins. Co. 33 Mo. App. 664.

A waiver not acted upon will not excuse an assured from furnishing proofs of loss.

2 Biddle, Ins. § 1148, p. 415, § 1059, p. 342; 4 Joyce, Ins. § 3371; Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. v. Clancy, 71 Tex. 9.

The fact that the company sends an agent to examine the premises does not constitute a waiver of proofs.

Wood, Ins. § 442, p. 979; 2 Biddle, Ins. § 1140, p. 408; 2 May, Ins. § 471, p. 1095; Dwelling-House Ins. Co. v. Dowdall, 159 Ill. 179; Burnham v. Royal Ins. Co. 75 Mo. App. 394; People's Bank v. Aetna Ins. Co. 42 U. S. App. 81, 74 Fed. Rep. 507, 20 C. C. A. 630; Leigh v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. 37 Mo. App. 542; Maddox v. German Ins. Co. 39 Mo. App. 198; Busch v. Insurance Co. 6 Phila. 252; Knudson v. Hekla F. Ins. Co. 75 Wis. 198; Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. v. Clancy, 83 Tex. 113; Briggs v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. 65 Mich. 52.

The demand for appraisal was not a waiver of proof of loss.

Porter v. German-American Ins. Co. 62 Mo. App. 520; Hanna v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 36 Mo. App. 538; Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. v. Clancy, 71 Tex. 5; Caledonian Ins. Co. v. Cooke, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 651; Bammessel v. Brevers' F. Ins. Co. 43 Wis. 463; Gale v. State Ins. Co. 33 Mo. App. 664; Carroll v. Girard F. Ins. Co. 72 Cal. 297; Walker v. German Ins. Co. 51 Kan. 725; Bishop v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 130 N. Y. 488; Rademacher v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 75 Hun, 83; Jacobs v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 86 Iowa, 145; Snowden v. Kittanning Ins. Co. 122 Pa.

502; Allemania F. Ins. Co. v. Pitts Exposition Soc. (Pa.) 11 Atl. 572.

There could be no waiver of proof of loss in the face of an express demand for it.

2 Wood, Ins. § 439, p. 946; 2 Biddle, Ins. § 1140, p. 409; Ostrander, Ins. § 366, p. 762; Harrison v. German-American F. Ins. Co. 67 Fed. Rep. 578; Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. v. Clancy, 71 Tex. 5, 83 Tex. 113.

Waiver may be revoked unless a right has been relinquished for a consideration, or the assured has acted upon the waiver to his prejudice.

Ostrander, Ins. § 364, p. 759; Beach, Ins. § 778, p. 195; 4 Joyce, Ins. § 3371; Hahn v. Guardian Assur. Co. 23 Or. 576.

On petition to rehear.

A simple demand for an appraisal is not a waiver of proof of loss.

Porter v. German-American Ins. Co. 62 Mo. App. 520; Hanna v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 36 Mo. App. 538; Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. v. Clancy, 71 Tex. 5.

Waiver is the "intentional relinquishment of a known right," and it "must be upon consideration, or operation by estoppel."

28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 526-531; Wool v. Edenton, 117 N. C. 1.

Even if there had been a waiver of the proof of loss, such waiver could be revoked by an express demand for proofs at any time before the waiver was acted upon, and while there was yet time to furnish the proofs.

4 Joyce, Ins. § 3371; Ostrander, Ins. § 364; Beach, Ins. § 778; Hahn v. Guardian Assur. Co. 23 Or. 576.

Mr. J. T. Morehead also for appellants.
Messrs. R. R. King, A. L. Brooks, and J. E. Boyd for appellee.

Clark, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The first exception, for failure to submit additional issues, is without merit. Every phase of the dispute as to the facts could have been passed upon under the five issues submitted by the court. Willis v. Atlantic & D. R. Co. 122 N. C. 906; Patterson v. Mills, 121 N. C. 258; Coley v. Statesville, 121 N. C. 301. The additional issue asked for, which was most pressed, was: "Did defendants waive proofs of loss?" Upon the issues found and the undisputed evidence, that was a question of law, for the demand alleged by the defendants, for a reference of the loss to the appraisers, under a provision in the policy, was a waiver of proofs of loss, which became useless if the appraisers were to view the loss themselves and adjust the damages. Allemania F. Ins. Co. v. Pitts Exposition Soc. (Pa.) 11 Atl. 572; 2 May, Ins. § 468; Dibbrell v. Georgia Home Ins. Co. 110 N. C. 193 (at p. 206 and bottom of p. 209). After the appraisal fell through, without plaintiff's fault, as the jury find, the plaintiff with propriety might, and probably should, have furnished proofs of loss, but not being compelled to do so the failure is rather a technicality than a meritorious defense, and should not work a forfeiture of all right of recovery for the goods insured and damaged.

When this cause was here on the former appeal it was held that if the appraisal fell through by no fault of the plaintiff, he is relegated to his right of action. It is there said (116 N. C. at pp. 496, 497): "The arbitrators were appointed but disagreed and refused to go on, and finally broke up without making an award. Subsequent attempts to agree upon another board failed. The parties were thus relegated to their legal rights, and the action can be maintained. Braddy v. New York Bowery F. Ins. Co. 115 N. C. 354. Indeed, as intimated in that case, we think the proper rule is laid down in Howard Ins. Co. v. Hooking, 115 Pa. 416, that where the arbitrators, or a majority of them, fail to agree upon an award, the plaintiff (unless he is shown to have acted in bad faith in selecting his arbitrator) is not compelled to submit to another arbitration and another delay, but may forthwith bring his action in the courts." The defendants recognize that this was so held, but ask the court to "reconsider and re-examine" the point in the light of additional authorities and evidence. The proposition to rehear a cause by raising the same points upon a second appeal cannot be entertained. It was the duty of the judge below to follow the ruling made here. If there was additional testimony, it was all submitted to the jury upon the fifth issue,—"Was the failure of the appraisers to make an award caused by the plaintiffs, or any of them?" which was found in the negative.
44 L. R. A.

In this appeal, there are sixty-four exceptions, but all of them which are worthy of any consideration are embraced in the three propositions we have discussed; indeed, many of them are repetitions in slightly different words of those three exceptions.

If fatal errors have been committed on a trial, they can be surely summed up in less than sixty-four assignments. It would simplify an appeal and give more time for argument on the really serious exceptions if counsel, who naturally in the hurry of a trial, take, out of abundant caution, numerous exceptions, should in the cool and deliberate moments of making out their statement of case on appeal sift out and abandon those they find trivial or untenable. This would aid the court to a just consideration of the appeal by directing its attention to what counsel deem the fatal errors only, which in the vast majority of cases can be presented by a very few exceptions. Certainly it can never be necessary to attempt to convince an appellate court that sixty-four fatal errors, each justifying a new trial (and none other should be presented here), have been committed below. More than eight and a half years have elapsed since this loss was sustained, and we find no error that would justify further delay of settlement. The learned brief of appellant's counsel is well indexed, which is commendable, but there is no index to the transcript, which is required by the rules of this court, 19 (3) and 20. Alexander v. Alexander, 120 N. C. 472, 474.

Affirmed.

Rehearing denied.

Frank THRIFT
v.
ELIZABETH CITY, Appt.

(122 N. C. 31.)

1. Water and lights are not in themselves such necessary expenses of a town, within the meaning of Const. art. 7, § 7, that an unusual levy of tax may be made or a debt incurred without proper legislative authority and the approval of the popular vote.
2. An ordinance granting the exclusive privilege for thirty years to construct and maintain waterworks within the corporate limits of the town, and the exclusive use of its streets, alleys, sidewalks, public grounds, streams, and bridges, is within the condemnation of Const. art. 1, § 31, declaring that "perpetuities and monopolies are contrary to the genius of a free state, and ought not to be allowed."

(May 26, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Pasquotank County enjoining it from entering into a contract for a water supply. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. I. M. Meekins, for appellant:

Powers of a municipal corporation fall within well-defined limits. Among them are those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation, not simply convenient, but indispensable.

1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 89.

Repairing bridges and building them are necessary expenses of a county.

Brodna v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244; Satterthwaite v. Beaufort County Comrs. 76 N. C. 155; Evans v. Cumberland County Comrs. 89 N. C. 154.

Building a courthouse is a necessary expense.

Hilcombe v. Haywood Comrs. 89 N. C. 346; Vaughn v. Forsyth County Comrs. 117 N. C. 429.

Nothing can be more conducive to the comfort, convenience, and health of a city or town than a system by which pure and wholesome water can at all times be obtained as per the contract in question.

Wilson v. Charlotte, 74 N. C. 748.

The town simply proposes to bind itself for a reasonable period to take the water at a stipulated price so as to induce a company to undertake at great expense the erection of waterworks without the pledge on the part of the city.

Under the peculiar circumstances of the case, the contract under consideration should be sustained as based upon a necessary expense.

People, Green, v. McClintock, 45 Cal. 11.

The authority to make such a contract under the general welfare provision of the town charter is in a charter where the power is a necessary incident, as in our case, to the power given as the discharge of a duty enjoined.

NOTE.—As to exclusiveness of franchise to a water company, see also Re Brooklyn (N. Y.) 26 L. R. A. 270; Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank v. Arkansas City (C. C. App. 8th C.) 34 L. R. A. 318.

44 L. R. A.

See also 40 L. R. A. 687.

Hardy v. Waltham, 3 Met. 163; Allen v. Taunton, 19 Pick. 485; Atlantic City Waterworks v. Atlantic City, 48 N. J. L. 378; Grant v. Davenport, 36 Iowa, 396; Des Moines Street R. Co. v. Des Moines Broad-Gauge Street R. Co. 73 Iowa, 513; Columbus Waterworks v. Columbus, 48 Kan. 102, 15 L. R. A. 354.

The validity of exclusive privilege can only be contested by another company or person claiming such right.

Grant v. Davenport, 36 Iowa, 396.

A city has the authority to grant a franchise to a person or corporation to establish waterworks, and is empowered to rent hydrants from such persons or corporations.

Wood v. National Waterworks Co. 33 Kan. 590; Columbus Waterworks Co. v. Columbus, 46 Kan. 686; Burlington Waterworks Co. v. Burlington, 43 Kan. 725; Manley v. Emilen, 46 Kan. 656; Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. §§ 146, 443, and notes to § 568; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 1115, 1118, and cases cited; Vincennes v. Citizens' Gaslight Co. 132 Ind. 114, 16 L. R. A. 485; Columbus Waterworks Co. v. Columbus, 48 Kan. 99, 15 L. R. A. 354; Pontchartrain R. Co. v. Orleans Nav. Co. 15 La. 404; Pontchartrain R. Co. v. New Orleans & C. R. Co. 11 La. Ann. 253; Pontchartrain R. Co. v. Lafayette & P. R. Co. 10 La. Ann. 741; Crescent City Gaslight Co. v. New Orleans Gaslight Co. 27 La. Ann. 138.

In the same manner as Congress may reward the discovery of a new invention or mode of constructing roads, by an exclusive privilege, the legislature may reward those who employ their capital and industry in doubtful enterprises for the construction of a railway between two points which may be of great utility to the public, though the success of the enterprise may be precarious.

Pontchartrain P. R. Co. v. Orleans Nav. Co. 15 La. 404; Des Moines Street R. Co. v. Des Moines Broad-Gauge Street R. Co. 73 Iowa, 513; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Louisiana Light & H. P. & Mfg. Co. 115 U. S. 650, 29 L. ed. 516; The Binghamton Bridge, 3 Wall. 51, 18 L. ed. 137; Bridge Proprietors v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co. 1 Wall. 116, 17 L. ed. 571; New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Rivers, 115 U. S. 674, 29 L. ed. 525; Louisville Gas Co. v. Citizens' Gas Co. 115 U. S. 683, 29 L. ed. 510; St. Tammany Waterworks v. New Orleans Waterworks, 120 U. S. 64, 30 L. ed. 563; Newport v. Light Co. 8 Ky. L. Rep. 22; Louisville v. Wible, 84 Ky. 290; Atlantic City Waterworks v. Atlantic City, 48 N. J. L. 378; Memphis v. Memphis Water Co. 5 Heisk. 495; State v. Milwaukee Gaslight Co. 29 Wis. 454, 9 Am. Rep. 598; Citizens' Water Co. v. Bridgeport Hydraulic Co. 55 Conn. 1.

Messrs. Shepherd & Busbee, for appellee:

The ordinance in question is a contract by which the defendants pledge the faith and credit of the town within § 7, art. 7, of the State Constitution, and the same is not a necessary expense within the said constitutional provision.

Charlotte v. Shepard, 120 N. C. 411; Cartersville Improv. Gas & W. Co. v. Cartersville, 89 Ga. 683.

A grant of the exclusive use of the streets cannot be made without express legislative authority.

See Parkersburg Gas Co. v. Parkersburg, 30 W. Va. 435; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 13, note 1.

Douglas, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action brought to enjoin the board of commissioners of Elizabeth City from entering into a contract with the defendant White for a water supply for the town and its inhabitants for the term of thirty years. Sections 1 and 7 of said contract are as follows:

"Sec. 1. Be it ordained by the town commissioners of the town of Elizabeth City, that the exclusive privilege be and is hereby granted to the said John Orlando White, his associates or assigns, for a term of thirty years from and after the passage and approval of this ordinance, to construct and maintain waterworks within the corporate limits of the town of Elizabeth City, North Carolina, for supplying said town and its inhabitants with water for public and private uses; and to use the streets, alleys, sidewalks, public grounds, streams, and bridges of said town of Elizabeth City embraced within the entire territory of the present corporate limits of the town, and all territory under their jurisdiction, and also whatever other territory and additions may at any time hereafter be annexed to said corporate limits, and become a part and portion thereof, for the purpose of placing, constructing, embedding, laying, taking up, and repairing pipes, conduits, mains, buildings, machinery, hydrants, and other structures, appliances, and other devices, needful and requisite for the supplying, conducting, and service of water to said town and its inhabitants."

"Sec. 7. In consideration of the advantages, conveniences, and benefits which may result to said town and its inhabitants from the construction, maintenance, and operation of said waterworks and of the water supply hereby secured for public and private uses, and as an incentive and inducement for the said grantee, his associates or assigns, to enter upon the construction of said waterworks, the exclusive franchise and license hereby granted to and vested in the said John Orlando White, his associates or assigns, shall remain in full force and effect for the full term of thirty years from the date of the completion of said waterworks. And the said town of Elizabeth City does hereby agree to rent of said grantee, his associates or assigns, for the use and purposes hereinafter mentioned, the seventy (70) hydrants hereinbefore mentioned for and during the term of thirty years, beginning at the time of the completion of said waterworks. Said town of Elizabeth City agrees to pay the said John Orlando White, his associates or assigns, rent for the use of said seventy (70) hydrants, the sum of $40 each, yearly, or, for the whole seventy hydrants, the sum of $2,800 yearly, which rent shall be paid in equal semi-annual instalments on or before the last day of June and December in each and every year during said term."

It is admitted that there is no express statutory authority for such contract, and no legislative authority whatever, other than the section in the town charter authorizing the levy of taxes for general purposes not to exceed 75 cents on the $100 valuation. The plaintiff contends "that the ordinance in question is a contract by which the defendants pledge the faith and credit of the town, within § 7 of article 7 of the state Constitution, and that the same is not a necessary expense, within the said constitutional provision," and that no grant of the exclusive use of the streets can be made "without express legislative authority." The defendants contend that the rental of an adequate water supply is such a necessary expense of the ordinary city government as not to require a submission to a popular vote of the inhabitants. It is apparently admitted that the rental can be paid from the ordinary tax levy, within the limit allowed by the charter.

The court below rendered the following judgment: "The court is of the opinion: (1) That waterworks are not a necessary expense, within the meaning of the Constitution. Shepard v. Charlotte. (2) That it is beyond the power of the defendants to levy an increased tax, for the purposes set out in the pleadings, without further legislation approved by a majority of the qualified voters. (3) That it is not within the power of the defendants to bind the corporation for thirty years' rental. It is adjudged, upon the pleadings, that the defendant be perpetually enjoined against proceeding further in the execution of said ordinance, or accepting bond and paying out the revenues of the town under said ordinance, and from levying any tax in furtherance of, or discharge of, such obligation growing out of said ordinance, or doing any of the acts or things set out in paragraph 10 of the complaint."

We see no error in the judgment. It may now be taken as well settled by this court that water and lights are not in themselves such necessary expenses of a town as to authorize an unusual levy of tax, or the incurring of a debt, without proper legislative authority, and the approval of a popular vote. Charlotte v. Shepard, 120 N. C. 411, and same case on rehearing at this term, 122 N. C. 602; Mayo v. Washington Comrs. (at this term) 122 N. C. 5, 40 L. R. A. 163. In the consideration of this question, we see no substantial difference between issuing bonds to run for thirty years, and the making of a binding contract for the same period, requiring the town to pay a large yearly sum, which cannot be reduced, but which may be greatly enlarged. In Mayo v. Washington Comrs. 122 N. C. 5, 40 L. R. A. 163, it was held that the town of Washington could not issue, without legislative authority and popular ratification, $20,000 of bonds running thirty years, and bearing not more than 6 per cent interest; and yet it is contended that the town of Elizabeth City can, without either such authority or ratification, bind itself for the same period of time to pay an annual rental which can never be less than 6 per cent on $46,600. In our opinion, both come equally under the same principle of public policy and within the constitutional prohibitions. We do not wish to be understood as being opposed to waterworks or electric lights, or any other modern conveniences that may conduce to the growth and development of our towns, or the health and comfort of their inhabitants. Nor is there any inherent objection to towns owning and operating their own waterworks and light plants, whenever it is the will of their people, properly expressed under valid legislative authority. The experience of the past has shown the wisdom of the constitutional restrictions, and, whether wise or not, it is our duty to enforce them whenever they apply.

There is another fatal defect in the proposed contract, and, as it is presented in the record, we feel called upon to decide it, in justice to the contracting parties. It would probably be included in any new contract, and might be relied on as having received the apparent approval of our silent acquiescence. Those provisions of the ordinance granting the exclusive privilege to construct and maintain waterworks within the corporate limits of the town, and the exclusive use of its streets, alleys, sidewalks, public grounds, streams, and bridges, come within the condemnation of § 31 of article 1 of the Constitution of this state, which declares that "perpetuities and monopolies are contrary to the genius of a free state, and ought not to be allowed." A monopoly need not be a perpetuity, nor is a perpetuity necessarily a monopoly; but both, existing either jointly or severally, are within the constitutional prohibition. There can be few, if any, monopolies more dangerous in their tendencies, and unjust and harmful in their results, than those that pertain to municipal corporations. In the present age of activity in scientific research, and wonderful development in mechanical inventions and discoveries, it is highly improbable that any present system will long remain the best. Improved methods and cheaper appliances will result, and yet the town would deliberately surrender to a private individual its highest attributes of delegated sovereignty, and would place beyond its power for nearly a generation all opportunity of securing for its citizens the benefits and improvements of a progressive age. It not only would be bound for its annual rental, which would always increase with the extension of its territory and the growth of its population, but its citizens, deprived of every chance of obtaining water from any other source, would be compelled to pay exorbitant charges, or be cut off, at the will of the company. The courts might afford relief, but it is the better public policy to encourage competition, instead of fostering monopolies, and thus, as far as possible, avoid the necessity of judicial interference. All authorities hold that no such exclusive privilege can be granted by a municipal corporation without express legislative authority, and this of itself would settle the case at bar; but we feel compelled to go further, and say that, while the point is not now directly before us, we do not wish to be understood as conceding the power of the legislature itself to grant such exclusive privileges. In our opinion, they come directly within the meaning of "monopolies," as construed in the light of our institutions, the genius of our people, and the spirit of our laws. We are not inadvertent to some decisions to the contrary in other jurisdictions, but in all of them, where the power is admitted, it is strictly construed. As was said by Chief Justice Taney in Proprietors of Charles River Bridge v. Proprietors of Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 420, 548, 9 L. ed. 773, 824: "The continued existence of a government would be of no great value, if, by implications and presumptions, it was disarmed of the powers necessary to accomplish the ends of its creation, and the functions it was designed to perform, transferred to the hands of privileged corporations." In some of them, as in Memphis v. Memphis Water Co. 5 Heisk. 495, 529, the error has apparently arisen from adopting the substance of Lord Coke's definition of a "monopoly," as "an exclusive right granted to a few of something which was before of common right." Our theory of government, proceeding directly from the people, and resting upon their will, is essentially different—at least, in principle—from that of England; and common-law maxims and definitions, framed while the judges were still under the spell of the feudal system, must be construed by us in the light of changed conditions. Under our system of government, all rights and privileges are primarily or common right, unless their restraint becomes necessary for the public good, and municipal corporations are beginning to be considered rather in the light of public agencies. Section 37 of article 1 of the Constitution (the Declaration of Rights) declares that "this enumeration of rights shall not be construed to impair or deny others retained by the people; and all powers not herein delegated remain with the people." We do not mean to say that any citizen has a right to dig up a public street for the purpose of laying water pipes without permission from the city, as this would seriously interfere with its primary use; nor is a municipal corporation compelled to give to everyone that may apply, authority to establish a system of gas or water works, or electric lights. All that the law says is that neither the corporation nor the legislature shall deprive itself of the power of providing for the future necessities of the people, and thus "disarm themselves of the powers necessary to accomplish the ends of their creation." We do not regard this as a new principle, but simply as the legitimate result of what has already been said by this court. McRee v. Wilmington & R. R. Co. 41 N. C. (2 Jones, L.) 186, 189; Simonton v. Lanier, 71 N. C. 498; Washington Toll Bridge Co. v. Beaufort Comrs. 81 N. C. 491, 498.

44 L. R. A.

It is stated in the ordinance now under consideration that this exclusive privilege is granted as an "incentive and inducement" for the construction of said waterworks, and it is argued that we should not drive away foreign capital by too strict a legal construction, but should rather encourage its investment in our state. All the encouragement that we can offer is the fullest protection of the law, meted out with even-handed justice. But it is said that we should be influenced by motives of public policy. Even so; we see no true principle of public policy which requires us to follow the dangerous experiment of sowing the dragon's teeth in the hope of reaping a golden harvest.

The judgment is affirmed.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

Ellen G. BOND, Respt.,
v.

Rudolph MARTIN et al., Appts.

(.....Or.....)

A nonresident may claim an exemption of household furniture from execution under Hill's Ann. Laws, § 282, subd. 4, providing that household furniture to a specified value shall be exempt from execution if owned by a householder and in actual use or kept for use by and for his family, or when being removed from one habitation to another on a change of residence.

(August 13, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Umatilla County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover possession of household furniture seized by defendants under execution. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John J. Balleray and M. A. Butler, for appellants:

The statutes of the state (Hill's Code, p. 353, § 282) providing that the following property shall be exempt from execution if selected and reserved by the judgment debtor or his agent at the time of the levy, or as soon thereafter, before sale thereof, as the same shall be known to him, and not otherwise, applies only to a defendant who is a resident of this state. It is not the intention of the statute to create any exemption in favor of foreigners, nor of people who were about to become foreigners so far as the state is concerned, nor to absconding debtors. It is created by the state for the protection of her own citizens—her own residents and inhabitants.

Jones v. Alsbrook, 115 N. C. 46; Lyon v. Callopy, 87 Iowa, 567; Ross v. Banta, 140 Ind. 120; Kingen v. Stroh, 136 Ind. 610; Schwartz v. Birnbaum, 21 Colo. 21; Freeman, Executions, §§ 209, 220; Mooney v. Union P. R. Co. 60 Iowa, 346.

Messrs. Carter & Raley, for respondent:

The statute makes no discrimination between residents and nonresidents, nor does it purport to confine itself to residence at all.

Where the statutes do not make any distinction between residents and nonresidents, no such distinction exists, and if the statutes do not restrict the exemption of property for the payment of debts to residents, the statutes will apply alike to nonresidents as well as residents.

Rood, Garnishment, § 92; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Maltby, 34 Kan. 125; Bell v. Indian Live Stock Co. (Tex.) 3 L. R. A. 642; Hewett v. Allen, 54 Wis. 583; Lowe v. Stringham, 14 Wis. 222; Wright v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 19 Neb. 175, 56 Am. Rep. 747; Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. v. Gough, 35 Kan. 1; Pettit v. Muskegon Boom Co. 74 Mich. 214; Mineral Point R. Co. v. Barron, 83 Ill. 365; Wabash R. Co. v. Dougan, 142 Ill. 248; Haskill v. Andros, 4 Vt. 609, 24 Am. Dec. 645; Hill v. Loomis, 6 N. H. 263; Sprout v. McCoy, 26 Ohio St. 577.

The plaintiff was a resident householder within this state at the time of the levy of the execution.

To constitute a new domicile two things are indispensable, (1) residence in the new locality, and (2) the intention to remain there; the change cannot be made except facto et animo; both are alike necessary; either without the other is insufficient.

Mitchell v. United States, 21 Wall. 351, 22 L. ed. 587; Ringgold v. Barley, 5 Md. 186, 59 Am. Dec. 107; Keller v. Carr, 40 Minn. 428; Darragh v. Bird, 3 Or. 229; People v. Platt, 117 N. Y. 159.

Beam, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action commenced in the circuit court of Umatilla county to recover the possession of some household furniture seized by the defendant Turner on the 26th day of May, 1897, to satisfy an execution issued on a judgment recovered by the defendant Martin against the plaintiff in the justice's court for North Pendleton precinct. The facts are that for some time prior to the 17th day of May, 1897, the plaintiff had been a resident and householder within the city of Pendleton, engaged in keeping a boarding house; but, about the time mentioned, she closed her business, and concluded to move to Rossland, British Columbia, where her husband then was. Preparatory to such removal, she delivered her household furniture to a railway company at Pendleton, for shipment, expecting to follow it in three or four weeks. After the furniture had been received by the company, it was attached by Turner, under a writ of attachment issued in the action brought by Martin; and, on the

NOTE.—For discrimination against nonresident widow with respect to her claims against her husband's estate, see Bumington v. Grosve—44 L. R. A.

nor (Kan.) 13 L. R. A. 282; Small v. Small (Kan.) 30 L. R. A. 243; Graham v. Stoll (Tenn.) 21 L. R. A. 241, and note.

19th of May, the plaintiff commenced an action against the defendants in the justice's court for East Pendleton precinct, to recover possession thereof, on the ground that the property in question was exempt from execution, and recovered judgment therein on the 26th. On the same day, Martin caused an execution to issue on the judgment which had in the meantime been recovered by him against the plaintiff in the action referred to, and caused the property in question to be again seized by the defendant Turner under such execution, whereupon this action was commenced in the circuit court to recover its possession. The defense to the action is (1) that such property was not exempt from execution at the time of its seizure, because the plaintiff was not then a resident and householder of the state; and (2) that the judgment in the action brought by her against the defendants on the 19th of May is a bar to this proceeding.

Upon the first point the court charged the jury that subdivision 4 of § 282 of the statute exempting from execution the goods, furniture, and utensils of a householder, could be taken advantage of only by residents of the state. It then proceeded to instruct them as to what would and would not constitute a "resident," within the meaning of this rule, and the errors assigned on this branch of the case are based upon the giving and refusal of instructions upon this point. But we do not deem it necessary to examine the errors so assigned, for, in our opinion, the judgment must be affirmed on the ground that the property was exempt from execution, whether plaintiff was a resident of the state or not. The statute provides that "household goods, furniture, and utensils to the value of $300," shall be exempt from execution "if owned by a householder and in actual use or kept for use by and for his family, or when being removed from one habitation to another on a change of residence." Hill's Anno. Laws (Or.) § 282, subd. 4. It is not limited either in terms or by necessary implication to citizens or residents of the state, and the courts have no right to so restrict it by judicial interpolation. Exemption statutes are, of course, confined in their operation to the state in which they are enacted. They have no extraterritorial effect, nor do they constitute a part of the contract between the debtor and creditor which may be enforced in another jurisdiction. But they are a part of the law of the forum, and regarded as relating to and affecting the remedy only. It would therefore seem logically to follow that such a statute must extend its protection to all litigants in the courts of the state where it is enacted, whether residents or not, unless it is expressly or impliedly restricted to some designated class of persons; for, as said by Mr. Justice Williams in Has-kill v. Andros, 4 Vt. 609, 24 Am. Dec. 645: "Whatever remedy our laws give to enforce the performance of a contract will equally avail the citizen or the foreigner; and they equally must be subject to any restraints which the law imposes upon them. Our inhabitants can have no greater rights in enforcing a claim against a foreigner than an alien can have in enforcing a similar claim against one of our own citizens. Whoever submits himself or his property to our jurisdiction must yield to all the requirements which are made of our citizens in relation to the collecting of debts or maintaining suits, and is clearly entitled to all the benefits, exemptions, and privileges to which other debtors or suitors belonging to our own state are subject or entitled. If the one can hold a cow, suitable wearing apparel, and necessary household furniture, without having the same taken from him by execution, so can the other. Nothing short of the express language of a statute would justify us in saying that a person may, by virtue of an execution, be stripped of his wearing apparel, his necessary household furniture, and his only cow, merely because he resides under another government, when a person residing here would not be subject to the same inconvenience and distress." And the great weight of authority is in favor of the rule thus laid down. It seems to be quite generally agreed that, where the statute does not restrict the exemption of property from execution to residents or some other designated class of persons, the courts have no authority to do so, and it must apply to all persons, litigant nonresidents as well as residents. Thus, in the case of Lowe v. Stringham, 14 Wis. 223, the debtor was a nonresident, and it was held that he was entitled to the benefit of the exemption laws of the state, the court saying: "The statute makes no discrimination between temporary and permanent residents, nor does it purport to confine its privileges to residents at all. It exempts certain articles of the debtor and his family. And we think it would be entirely inconsistent with the beneficent intentions of the statute, as well as with the dignity of a sovereign state, to say that the temporary sojourner, or even the stranger within our gates, was not entitled to its protection." And in Mineral Point v. Barron, 83 Ill. 365, the defendant in the original action was a resident of the state of Wisconsin, and claimed the benefit of the Illinois statute (Rev. Stat. 1874, chap. 62, § 14) which provided that "the wages and services of a defendant, being the head of a family and residing with the same, to an amount not exceeding $25 shall be exempt from garnishment"; and it was held that he was entitled to the benefit of such statute. Again, in the case of Sproul v. McCoy, 26 Ohio St. 577, the court says: "Exemptions from execution or sale allowed to 'every person who has a family,' under the provisions of the act of April 16, 1893 (70 Ohio Laws, p. 132), may be claimed by any debtor against whom an action is prosecuted in the courts of this state whether such debtor be or be not a resident of this state." And to the same effect are the cases of Missouri P. R. Co. v. Matby, 34 Kan. 125; Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. v. Gough, 35 Kan. 1; Bell v. Indian Live Stock Co. (Tex.) 3 L. R. A. 642; Wright v. Chicago B. & Q. R. Co. 19 Neb. 175, 56 Am. Rep. 747; Menzie v. Kelly, 8 Ill. App. 259; Wabash R. Co. v. Dougan, 142 Ill. 248; Hill v. Loomis, 6 N. H. 263. In some of the states the right of exemption is expressly limited to residents, and such are the provisions of the statutes under which the decisions cited by the appellant were made.

As to the other defense pleaded, it is sufficient to say that the judgment in the justice's court was upon a separate and distinct cause of action from the case in hand, and is therefore no bar to this action.

The judgment of the court will therefore be affirmed.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Daniel H. KRAMER

v.

David H. KISTER, App't.

(187 Pa. 227.)

1. An agreement made openly in court, and participated in by the parties, their counsel, and the district attorney, has no element of confidential professional communication in it which will preclude testimony concerning it by one of the attorneys.
2. Evidence of an agreement to compound a prosecution for felony is not inadmissible because the agreement is void, when offered to contradict a party who has denied that there was such an agreement.
3. The dissent from a sealed verdict by one juror when the jury is polled, after sealing a verdict and separating, on the ground that he did not agree to it except because he thought he was obliged to, makes it necessary to discharge the jury, and, if they are sent out again and render a verdict, it will not be sustained.

(July 21, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for York County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for alleged false arrest and malicious prosecution. Reversed.

On August 13, 1894, Kister made information against Kramer before a justice of the peace charging him with larceny of certain cigars. He was held to bail, indicted by the grand jury for burglary and larceny, and pleaded not guilty. It being conceded that the offense did not amount to burglary, the counsel at the trial thought that upon the evidence a reasonable doubt would arise and result in an acquittal. It was finally agreed with consent of court to offer no evidence and allow a verdict of not guilty to be taken, which was accordingly done, and the prisoner discharged. Subsequently he brought this action for malicious prosecution. Defendant contended that as part of the agreement to dismiss the former action he had agreed not to institute such an action as the present one.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. James G. Glessner, H. L. Fisher, and G. G. Fisher, for appellant:

The offer was erroneously rejected on the alleged incompetency of the witness to testify to the matter inquired into, because he was acting as counsel for Daniel Kramer.

NOTE.—The unsettled state of the practice respecting sealed verdicts is shown by the opinion in the above case.

For amendment of sealed verdict see Galther v. Willmer (Md.) 5 L. R. A. 756.

44 L. R. A.

Confidential implies privacy, secrecy; but where was the private, secret, or confidential "relation" or matter between counsel and client, that the offer proposed, or even tended, to expose?

Miller v. Weeks, 22 Pa. 89; Livers v. Van Buskirk, 4 Pa. 316; Heaton v. Findlay, 12 Pa. 304.

A party may call an attorney to prove an offer of compromise by him on the part of his client. So, agreements made in the presence of an attorney between his client and the opposite party are not privileged communications.

19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 141; Whiting v. Barney, 30 N. Y. 330, 86 Am. Dec. 385.

As to collateral matters, the knowledge of which the attorney has acquired by personal conversation, and which was not communicated as a secret, or as to such collateral facts which may be material communications between them, the attorney may be compelled to answer.

19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 143.

A verdict defective in form may be corrected at the request of the jury, or with their consent any time before they have separated.

Wright v. Phillips, 2 G. Greene, 191.

The jury were sent back at about half past nine o'clock, under a threat requiring a verdict or a week's confinement.

How could the result have been otherwise than that of intimidation and coercion?

16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 519; 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 522 and note 4; Green v. Telfair, 11 How. Pr. 260; Chesapeake, O. & S. R. Co. v. Barlow, 86 Tenn. 537.

Though the parties, after the charge of the judge and before the jury have retired, agree that the jury may deliver a sealed verdict, yet, when they come into court to deliver in the sealed verdict, either party may have the jury polled; and any of the jurors may dissent from the verdict to which he had previously agreed.

Root v. Sherwood, 6 Johns. 68, 5 Am. Dec. 191; Blackley v. Sheldon, 7 Johns. 32; Scott v. Scott, 110 Pa. 387.

No juror should be induced to agree to a verdict by fear that a failure to so agree would be regarded by the public as reflecting on his intelligence or integrity.

16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. pp. 523, 524, note 4, citing State v. Bybee, 17 Kan. 462; Hooker v. Jamison, 2 Watts & S. 438; Cranston v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 103 N. Y. 614; Green v. Telfair, 11 How. Pr.

260; Slator v. Mead, 53 How. Pr. 57; Pierce v. Pierce, 38 Mich. 412.

The power of court and jury is restricted to the amendment of mere formal defects.

Wolfran v. Eyster, 7 Watts, 38; M'Connell v. Linton, 4 Watts, 357.

In no case can jurors who, as here, have failed to agree upon a verdict when being polled in open court, though all had signed an agreement to that effect, but having separated in the meantime, be sent back to reconsider, find, and return a lawful verdict.

Walters v. Jenkins, 16 Serg. & R. 414, 16 Am. Dec. 585; M'Connell v. Linton, 4 Watts, 357; Reitenbaugh v. Ludwick, 31 Pa. 132.

Messrs. N. M. Wanner and W. A. Miller for appellee.

Mitchell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The counsel for the present plaintiff at the trial in the criminal court was called by the defendant at the present trial to prove an arrangement by which the verdict in the former case was obtained; the purpose of the offer, as stated by defendant, being to contradict the plaintiff, who had testified that there was no such agreement to which he was party. The witness was rejected as incompetent. It was objected by plaintiff that the offer, as made, did not contradict his testimony; and, critically tested, it probably did not. We should not be disposed, therefore, to interfere with the ruling of the judge, had it been put on that ground; but it was not. The witness was excluded explicitly on the ground that he was incompetent to testify on the subject because he had been of counsel with the plaintiff at that time. This was error. What the witness was called to prove was an agreement alleged to have been made openly in court when the case was called for trial, and participated in by the parties, their counsel, and the district attorney. There was no element of confidential professional communication in it. In Levers v. Van Buskirk, 4 Pa. 309, counsel had been permitted to testify that the title on which a previous suit by his client was brought was the same as in the suit then trying. This was held to be proper; Bell, J., saying: "This kind of protection has never been carried so far as is now claimed. It is to be confined to confidential communications, and knowledge derived wholly or in part from private and professional intercourse, and does not embrace those facts which the counsel may become acquainted with collaterally, or those which were from necessity, and to subvert the interests of the client, publicly disclosed, by direction of the client himself, on the trial of his cause." This has been cited as a correct expression of the rule in Beeson v. Beeson, 9 Pa. 279, 301, and Heaton v. Findlay, 12 Pa. 304.

It was further objected that such an agreement, if made, was void, as compounding a prosecution for felony, and evidence of it therefore inadmissible, as against public policy. But, whether void or not as an agreement, evidence that it was made was admissible as a contradiction of plaintiff, going to his credibility with the jury. 44 L. R. A.

Whether such an agreement would be void or not must depend on its exact nature, and the circumstances under which it was made. Certainly a prosecutor who has begun maliciously and without probable cause cannot be permitted to use the uncertainty of a jury trial as a weapon to force his victim to release him from the consequences of his malicious act. But, on the other hand, a prosecutor who has made an honest mistake, or who finds, from any cause, that his expected proof is likely to fail him, is not bound to go on and press for a conviction of the accused, guilty or not guilty. What the commonwealth demands is justice, and the due punishment of crime; and its policy is not necessarily to force a duel to the end between prosecutor and prisoner, but to prevent the stifling of just prosecutions by illegal means or for illegal considerations.

The remaining assignments refer to the verdict. The jury, having agreed to a sealed verdict, separated, and the next morning the verdict was handed up, opened, and announced; but, on the jury being polled, one juror dissented, whereupon the judge sent them out again, with some strong remarks on keeping them until they had agreed. In a short time they returned with the same verdict as the one sealed, and it was received and recorded against the defendant's objection. The practice of allowing the jury to seal a verdict and then separate is very general throughout the United States. Seventy-five years ago, Chief Justice Gibson spoke of it as in common use in Pennsylvania; having grown out of and superseded the privy verdict known to the common law, which was delivered to the judge out of court. Dornick v. Reichenback, 10 Serg. & R. 84. Both forms were alike, in being without binding force as verdicts until delivered by the jury in court. All the authorities agree that the only verdict is that which the jury announce orally in court, and which alone is received and recorded as the jury's finding. Dornick v. Reichenback, 10 Serg. & R. 84; Scott v. Scott, 110 Pa. 387; Com. v. Breyessee, 160 Pa. 457. The authorities also agree that, as the only verdict is that announced by the jury in court, if, with or without a poll, any juror disagree, there is no verdict. Scott v. Scott, 110 Pa. 387. But the course to be pursued in such case is an open question, upon which we have no direct authority in this state. A verdict which is merely defective in form, whether sealed or not, and whether the jury have separated or not, may, before it is recorded, be recommitted to them for correction,—as, for example, to calculate the interest where they have found for plaintiff for a sum certain, "with interest." Wolfran v. Eyster, 7 Watts, 38; Reitenbaugh v. Ludwick, 31 Pa. 131. But for a defect in substance where the jury has separated, and a fortiori for a defect that prevents the jury's delivery from being a verdict at all, as where the dissent of one shows that it is not unanimous, whether the judge should treat it as a mistrial, and discharge the jury, or whether he may send them out to consider a verdict anew, is undetermined. A few collateral intimations and dicta seem to point to the former as the proper course, but we have no decision. Thus, in Wolfman v. Eyster, 7 Watts, 38, the court expressly limited the decision to "amending mere defects of form and substantially changing the finding of the jury." And in Scott v. Scott, 110 Pa. 387, where the associate judges entered a sealed verdict notwithstanding the dissent of one juror on a poll, this court held it error, saying: "Of course had the learned president judge been present, the verdict of eleven jurors would not have been entered on the record. Unless all the jurors were agreed, he would have discharged them because of their disagreement." The authorities cited by appellee from our criminal cases (Alexander v. Com. 105 Pa. 1; Moss v. Com. 107 Pa. 267; Hilands v. Com. 111 Pa. 1; and Com. v. Eisenhower, 181 Pa. 470) refer to separation of the jury during the trial, and do not touch the present inquiry. Nor is there any settled rule in other states to which we may conform. In New York the imperfect verdict is treated as a nullity for all purposes, and the jury may be sent out to deliberate again. Douglass v. Tousey, 2 Wend. 352, 20 Am. Dec. 616. In Ohio this cannot be done. Sutliff v. Gilbert, 8 Ohio, 405. It would seem to be a question of practice, as to which there is no uniformity.

We are thus left to consider the subject on historical and general principles, as to the origin and proper extent of the practice. At common law the jury were kept together from the time they were sworn, as is still the general rule in criminal cases involving life. After they had retired to consider their verdict, they were kept without food, drink, fire, or light until they agreed; and Blackstone says: "It has been held that, if the jurors do not agree in their verdict before the judges are about to leave the town, though they are not to be threatened or imprisoned, the judges are not bound to wait for them, but may carry them round the circuit, from town to town, in a cart." 3 Bl. Com. p. 376. From the manner of this mention, it is to be inferred that this latter practice was at least unusual in Blackstone's day; and he says expressly that the deprivation of food, fire, and light was subject to the indulgence of the court. In relief of the jury, the privy verdict was recognized, though not often resorted to. "A privy verdict is when the judge hath left or adjourned the court, and the jury, being agreed, in order to be delivered from their confinement obtain leave to deliver their verdict privily to the judge out of court, which privy verdict is of no force unless afterwards affirmed by a public verdict given openly in court, wherein the jury may, if they please, vary from the privy verdict. So that the privy verdict is indeed a mere nullity; and yet it is a dangerous practice, allowing time for the parties to tamper with the jury, and therefore very seldom indulged." 3 Bl. Com. p. 377. With the prolongation of trials in the more complicated issues of modern times, and especially with the amelioration of manners, the treatment of jurors has gradually become less harsh, and changes of practice have been made in their relief. It is no longer the custom to keep them together and secluded during the whole trial, though I apprehend that the judge may do so in any case where public excitement or other exceptional reason may make it advisable, in the interest of the proper administration of justice, to do so; and it is firmly established that, in trials involving life, he must do so, unless in exceptional and very limited cases of necessity. After the retirement of the jury to consider their verdict, this indulgence terminates, and they are kept together and apart from others until verdict is rendered. But, if the adjournment of the court is to such time or under such circumstances as seem likely to lead to serious inconvenience to the jurors, the practice of allowing them to seal a verdict grew up, as said by Gibson, Ch. J., in Dornick v. Reichenback, 10 Serg. & R. 84, in place of the privy verdict. It had the same disadvantage of not being binding, and was therefore subject to the same dangers. By the recognized practice, however, it is within the discretion of the judge, which does not require any agreement of parties or counsel, and may be exercised without their consent. But it is part of the growth of modern practice, in relief of the hardships and inconvenience to which jurors are necessarily subjected, and cannot be carried beyond the point of reasonable safety to the administration of justice. No jury can demand it as a right in any case, and in certain cases no judge can grant it as a matter of grace. The necessity that the verdict shall not only be fair and unbiased, but beyond reasonable apprehension of danger that it is otherwise, must be the controlling element in determining the limits of the convenience of the jurors and the discretion of the judge. When a juror dissents from a sealed verdict, there is a necessary choice of evils,—a mistrial, or a verdict finally delivered under circumstances that justly subject it to suspicion of coercion or improper influences. We are of opinion that the former is the lesser evil. If one juror can dissent, so may all change their view, and render a new verdict exactly opposite to the one they first agreed upon and sealed. There could be no better illustration of the dangers of such a privilege than the present case. If the dissenting juror was honest in his declaration that he had not agreed to the first verdict, except because he thought he was obliged to, then his agreement to the second without having been instructed as to his rights cannot be freed from a well-founded appearance of coercion. If, on the other hand, the second verdict had been for the defendant, contrary to the first, the inference could hardly have been escaped that the change was produced by new evidence, or information illegally acquired by the dissenting juror, or by even more reprehensible means. The only safe way out of such a situation is to treat it as a mistrial, and discharge the jury.

Judgment reversed, and venire de novo awarded.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

Charles J. KELLEY
v.
George A. SCHUYLER.

SAME
v.
Joseph DONNELLEY.

(.....R. I.....)

1. Evidence of the value of articles belonging to plaintiff, but taken from his house by an officer who broke into it to execute a writ of replevin which did not cover those articles, is admissible in trespass against him.
2. To break and enter a dwelling house for the purpose of serving a writ of replevin after admittance has been demanded and refused constitutes the officer a trespasser.

(March 24, 1898.)

PETITION by defendants for a new trial of an action of trespass quare clausum fregit brought for breaking and entering plaintiff's dwelling house and carrying away property under a writ of replevin. Denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Thomas W. Robinson and C. J. Farnsworth, for defendants:

Under the old law there was no question about the right of the sheriff to break doors for the purpose of serving a writ of replevin.

Fitzherbert, Natura Brevium, 157, note b; Dalton, Sheriffs, 353.

Under the provisions of the statute of Westminster I. chap. 17, the sheriff was expressly directed to break and enter to make replevin.

In Hitchcock on New England Sheriffs and Constables, 2d ed. p. 126, it says that an officer may break the house after demand and refusal of admission to execute a writ of replevin.

See also 6 Comyns, Dig. Pleader, 3 K, 1; Bacon, Abr. Replevin, E, 7; 3 Bl. Com. p. 149; Gilbert, Distress, 78.

That an officer has a right to break and enter is also laid down by Cobbey, Replevin, § 647.

See also Wells, Replevin, § 287; 2 Free-man, Executions, § 468.

Replevin is the peculiar and proper remedy to recover personal property.

The whole purpose of the action is the taking of the goods. This process was never intended to be defeated by a man's shutting his door in the face of the law.

Gardner v. McDermott, 12 R. I. 206; Keith v. Johnson, 1 Dana, 604, 25 Am. Dec. 167; Kneas v. Fittler, 2 Serg. & R. 263.

The goods mentioned in the writ of replevin were not goods that the defendant in replevin claimed to own. There is no testimony to the effect that they were his goods. Ownership of the goods of plaintiff's intestate is expressly denied by the plaintiff in replevin. He simply refused permission to the officer serving the writ of replevin to go into his house to get the goods described in the writ.

Howe's Pr. chap. 12, § 5, p. 148; 1 Backus, Sheriffs, 127; Link v. Harrington, 23 Mo. App. 429; Semayne's Case, 5 Coke, 91, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. *39, and note.

It is expressly denied by the officer that he took any goods except what were mentioned in his writ. If the goods were mentioned his writ would protect him.

Shipman v. Clark, 4 Denio, 446, 47 Am. Dec. 264.

An officer may break outer doors when the goods of a person other than the owner are in the house.

2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 852.

Mr. Joseph Osfield, Jr., for plaintiff.

Tillinghast, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These are actions of trespass quare clausum fregit, for breaking and entering the plaintiff's dwelling house, and taking and carrying away certain articles of personal property of the plaintiff therefrom. The facts are substantially these: One Josephine Donnelley died at the plaintiff's house, leaving there certain articles of personal property. One Thomas O'Brien was appointed administrator on the estate of said Josephine, and he afterwards sued out of the district court of the tenth judicial district a writ of replevin against the plaintiff in the present suits, to obtain possession of said personal property, the plaintiff having refused to deliver the same. The defendant George H. Schuyler, who was a constable, went to plaintiff's house to serve said writ, but was refused admittance. After obtaining advice from his attorney, he went again, on the 12th day of February, 1897, and, being again refused admittance, he, with the assistance of the defendant Donnelley, broke and entered the house, by prying open the outside door, which was locked. They also forced an inner door, which was fastened, and then proceeded to take and carry away, by virtue of the authority contained in the writ of replevin, certain goods and chattels which the defendant Donnelley pointed out to the officer as the property of said O'Brien, administrator. The evidence is conflicting as to whether the defendants took and carried away certain other goods and chattels belonging to the defendant in addition to those described in the writ. The replevin suit was pending in said district court at the time of the trial of these cases, and, so far as appears, has not yet been tried, so that there has been no judicial determination as to the ownership of the goods and chattels replevied. At the trial of the cases in the common pleas division, the plaintiff recovered a verdict in each for the sum of $100; and the defendants respectively have petitioned for a new trial on several grounds, two only of which are now relied on, viz.:

NOTE.—The authorities relating to the right to break and enter a dwelling house to execute a writ of replevin are quite fully presented in the above case. As to liability of officer for 44 L. R. A.

serving process generally, see McLendon v. State, Kennedy (Tenn.) 21 L. R. A. 738, and Thompson v. Jackson (Iowa) 27 L. R. A. 92.

(1) That the court erred in admitting evidence as to the value of the goods taken; and (2) that it refused to charge the jury that the officer charged with the service of said writ of replevin was justified in breaking and entering the plaintiff's house, after a demand and refusal of admittance, for the purpose of making service of said writ, and that said writ was a full and complete protection to the defendant. The court, on the contrary, charged the jury, in substance, that the officer had no right to break and enter the plaintiff's house for the purpose of serving said writ, and that both he and the defendant Donnelley committed a trespass in so doing. The defendants duly excepted to the rulings. The only question before us, therefore, is as to the correctness of said rulings.

We think the first ruling complained of was correct. The evidence offered as to the value of the articles taken away by the defendants, as we understand it, was finally limited to those articles which the plaintiff claimed belonged to him or his family, and which were not included in the replevin writ. As to such articles, of course the plaintiff had the right to prove their value.

We think the second ruling also was correct; for, while there seems to be some slight conflict in the authorities as to whether an officer who has broken into a dwelling house, and made an attachment or taken property found therein, in pursuance of his precept, may not lawfully hold the same, although the decided weight of authority is to the contrary (see the leading cases of Ilsley v. Nichols, 12 Pick. 270; People v. Hubbard, 24 Wend. 369, 35 Am. Dec. 628; State v. Hooker, 17 Vt. 670-673; 2 Freeman, Executions, 2d ed. § 255, and cases cited), yet it is almost universally conceded that the officer who breaks and enters a dwelling house for the purpose of serving any civil process therein, except perhaps as herein-after mentioned, is a trespasser; this position being based on the ground that the law will not permit the sanctity of one's dwelling house, which from very ancient times has been regarded as his castle, to be violated in this way. In short, the law provides, and wisely, too, we think, that the means of obtaining possession of personal property in civil process must be in subordination to the common-law rights of the defendant. "Public policy," says Campbell, J., in Bailey v. Wright, 39 Mich. 96, "requires, above all things, that courts and officers executing their process shall respect the lawful rights of all persons. The practical permission which overzealous officers would receive to commit wrongs with substantial impunity, if their levies should be held good without regard to the manner of their enforcement, would remove every check on lawlessness. To hold that an act is lawful which may be lawfully resisted is absurd." 44 L. R. A.

Such misconduct should neither be justified nor winked at." Blackstone says a sheriff may not break open any outer doors to execute either a feri facias or a capias ad satisfaciendum; but he must enter peaceably, and may then, after a request and refusal, break open any inner doors belonging to the defendant, in order to take the goods. 3 Bl. Com. p. 417. And in Snydacker v. Brosse, 51 Ill. 357, 99 Am. Dec. 551, the court says: It is believed that what is said by Blackstone regarding said writs is true of all civil process. Cases to the same general effect are numerous; but in view of the fact that in Clark v. Wilson, 14 R. I. 11, this court held the same doctrine, it is unnecessary to cite them. In that case, Durfee, Ch. J., said: "It is perfectly well settled that an officer ordinarily has no authority to break an outer door or window of a dwelling house in order to enter it for the purpose of executing a civil writ or process."

But the defendant's contention, as we understand it, is that, in serving a writ of replevin, at any rate, the officer has the right, after demanding admittance and being refused, to break into a dwelling house in order to execute his precept. Some authority for this distinction is to be found in a few of the cases cited by defendant's counsel, but it is too vague and unsatisfactory to be controlling. Thus, in Keith v. Johnson, 1 Dana, 605, 25 Am. Dec. 167, cited by defendants, it was held that the sheriff, having an execution under the statute of that state passed in 1828, had the right to make a forcible entry into the defendant's house, to levy it on a slave for which it had issued on a judgment in detinet. An examination of the case, however, shows that, while the court was of the opinion that such a right existed at common law, yet that the decision was based upon the statute. We do not therefore consider the case of much value as an authority for the defendants' position, but rather to the contrary, as there it did not appear how the defendants got into the house and the court said it could not be presumed that they broke the outer door. The case of Link v. Harrington, 23 Mo. App. 429, is very blindly reported, and it is impossible to tell whether the officer entered a dwelling house or not, but probably not, as no dwelling house is mentioned; and the natural inference is that the premises referred to, which the officer entered for the purpose of levying a writ of attachment upon certain goods therein belonging to a third party, of which premises it is stated that he assumed exclusive control for twenty-four hours or more, consisted of some building other than a dwelling house. In Wells, Replevin, § 287, also cited by defendant, the author says: "Authorities in modern times upon this question are meager, but it has been held that the sheriff had a right to enter the defendant's house to search for goods described in a writ of replevin;" and, in support of this statement, he refers, among others, to Semayne's Case, 5 Coke, 91; also, 1 Smith,

Lead. Cas. p. 213. That case is not an authority in support of the proposition above enunciated, except to a limited extent, as will be presently shown, but is generally to the contrary, and was cited by Durfee, Ch. J., in support of his opinion in Clark v. Wilson, 14 R. I. 11. It was held in Semayne's Case that, in all cases where the King is party, the sheriff may break the house, either to arrest or do other execution of the King's process, if he cannot otherwise enter, and also that, where the door is open, the sheriff may enter and do execution at the suit of a subject, and so also may the lord, and distrain for his rent service. But it was also held that it was not lawful for the sheriff, on request made and denial, at the suit of a common person, to break the defendant's house, scil. to execute any process at the suit of a subject. The limited extent to which the case is an authority for the proposition above stated by Mr. Wells is in circumstances like the following, viz.: Where the goods of A are brought and conveyed into the dwelling house of B with his knowledge and consent, to prevent a lawful execution, or to escape the ordinary process of law, this amounts to fraud and covin on the part of B; and in such case the sheriff, after denial of admittance on request made, may break the house; "for the privilege of one's house," said the judges, "extends only to him and his family and to his own proper goods, or to those which are lawfully and without fraud and covin there." See cases cited on page 228 (*188) of 1 Smith, Lead. Cas., in a note to Semayne's Case. To the same effect are Burdett v. Abbott, 14 East, 157, and De Graffenreid v. Mitchell, 3 McCord, L. 506, 15 Am. Dec. 648. The statute of Westminster I. chap. 17, cited by defendant, even conceding it to be in force in this state, is but an affirmation of the common-law doctrine above enunciated. It declares, in effect, that the sheriff may break a house or castle to make replevin, when the goods of another which he has distrained are by him conveyed to his house or castle to prevent the owner to have a replevin of his goods, provided the sheriff first make demand for the goods. See also 8 Bacon, Abr. p. 547, § 7. The other cases cited by Mr. Wells in support of the text, viz., State v. Smith, 1 N. H. 346, and the cases referred to in a note to M'Gee v. Givan, 4 Blackf. 18, go no further, at the most, than to sustain the ruling made in Semayne's Case, supra, and do not hold, generally, that an officer may break into a dwelling house to serve a writ of replevin. Buggs v. Vandyke, 3 Harr. (Del.) 288, is a case where the sheriff attempted to justify the breaking and entering the plaintiff's house and taking his goods, by showing that he did so in connection with the service of an execution against the plaintiff. The court ruled that the officer had no right to open an outer door, and sustained the plaintiff's action of trespass. See also Haggerty v. Wilber, 16 Johns. 287, 8 Am. Dec. 321. We have examined the other cases which are referred to in a general way by the defendants, viz., those cited in 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 853, note 1, but 44 L. R. A.

do not find that they are controlling, or that they furnish much support for the defendants' claim in the case at bar. Indeed, most of the cases are directly to the contrary. See, for instance, Calvert v. Stone, 10 B. Mon. 152, decided by the same court as was Keith v. Johnson, 1 Dana, 605, 25 Am. Dec. 167, and nearly twenty years afterwards, and State v. Hooker, 17 Vt. 670-673, and People v. Hubbard, 24 Wend. 369, 35 Am. Dec. 628.

A somewhat careful investigation of the authorities independently of those cited by counsel confirms us in the opinion at which we have arrived. Murfree, Sheriffs, § 268, lays down the broad proposition that an officer cannot break the outer doors of a house to execute a fi. fa. or any other civil process against the owner, and, if he does so, he becomes a trespasser. Hitchcock on New England Sheriffs and Constables takes the same view, and cites with approval the Rhode Island case of Clark v. Wilson, 14 R. I. 11. See also Drake, Attachm. § 200; Cobbey, Replevin, § 647. In Prettyman v. Dean, 2 Harr. (Del.) 494, which was an ordinary case of replevin, Clayton, Ch. J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The sheriff has a right to enter a house peaceably, where he finds the house open, for the purpose of executing a replevin. Being in, he has the right to execute his writ. If property be concealed, he has the right to break open inner doors, and generally to use such force as is necessary to enable him to obey the command of his writ." The late case of State v. Beckner, 132 Ind. 371, is clearly in point. There the officer was sued on his official bond, and the question which arose was whether he had the right to forcibly enter the dwelling house of the relator to serve a writ of replevin. The court decided that the writ was but a civil process, and did not authorize him to force the outer door of a dwelling house. Whether there is any sufficient reason, on principle, for making the distinction referred to in the books, between an ordinary case of replevin and a case where the goods and chattels sought to be obtained have been distrained or are fraudulently concealed by the defendant in his house, may be open to doubt. See 2 Freeman, Executions, 2d ed. p. 817, § 256. But conceding that in such circumstances an officer would be warranted in breaking into a dwelling house to make service of such writ, or of a writ of fi. fa. against a stranger whose goods are wrongfully withheld from the officer in the house, yet, as the cases at bar do not fall within either of those classes, the fact that the law may be as intimated by Mr. Freeman, and also in Douglass v. State, 6 Yerg. 529; 8 Bacon, Abr. p. 547; Burton v. Wilkinson, 18 Vt. 189, 46 Am. Dec. 145, and other cases hereinbefore cited,—cannot control our decision. The case out of which the present suits arise was a simple and ordinary case of replevin; and we are very clearly of the opinion that the defendants committed a trespass when they broke and entered the plaintiff's house to make service of said writ.

Petition for new trial denied, and cases remitted to the common pleas division, with direction to enter judgment on the verdicts.

SOUTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

WESTERN TWINE COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

F. R. WRIGHT et al., Respts.

(.....S. D.....)

1. The presumption is that a telegram properly addressed and deposited in the telegraph office, with charges prepaid, reached its destination and was delivered in accordance with the obligation which the law imposes upon telegraph companies.

2. A telegram received from a telegraph operator, which purports to be in reply to one which the recipient had previously deposited with the operator, with charges prepaid and properly addressed, is admissible in evidence against the person by whom it purports to have been sent, without any proof that he actually executed or authorized such despatch, or that it was ever transmitted.

3. A contract made by telegrams is a contract in writing, for which a consideration is presumed under Comp. Laws, § 3538.

NOTE.—Admissibility of telegram on behalf of person receiving it in reply to another.

While the authorities on this subject, though scarce, have taken both sides of the question, and seem to have been about equally balanced, the principal case, together with a late Delaware case, set forth below, may be deemed to have established a preponderance of authority in favor of the rule therein adopted.

Thus, a telegram purporting to have been received by a tenant from his landlord will be presumed to correspond with the copy sent, and where on its face as delivered it shows that it was in response to a letter from the landlord's attorney to the tenant asking for terms, it is prima facie admissible in evidence in an action for rent without the production of the original. Thorpe v. Philbin, 18 N. Y. S. R. 1005.

And a telegram purporting to be a reply to one sent to a steamboat, which was delivered to her officers, is admissible in evidence in an action for breach of a contract of which the telegram constituted a part, without express proof that it was signed by the master or with his consent, where the answer was delivered in the same telegraph office from which the first telegram was delivered to the officers of the steamboat. Taylor v. The Robert Campbell, 20 Mo. 254.

So, telegrams which are germane to the subject to which other telegrams relate, the contents of which are clearly relevant as a connecting part of the correspondence, may be proved by secondary evidence after evidence is given excluding the production of the originals, where no exception is taken to the admission in evidence of the other telegrams. Oregon S. S. Co. v. Otis, 14 Abb. N. C. 388, Affirmed in 100 N. Y. 446, 53 Am. Rep. 221.

And a telegram accepting a bid made by letter is admissible in evidence in an action for breach of the contract thus made, after notice to produce the letter had been given and evidence was adduced that the telegram and letter were connected with the contract, and that the plaintiff had no copy, though the defendant stated in answer to the notice to produce that he had no such letter. Rogers v. Fenimore (Del. Super. Ct.) 41 Atl. 886.

And proof that a telegram was sent to a party asking at what price he would sell 100,000 Mexican dollars, and that an answer was received that he would deliver 50,000 at a designated price, and that a letter repeating the telegram was sent at the same date, is sufficient in an action for breach of contract for failure to furnish such dollars to take the case out of the statute of frauds. Trevor v. Wood, 36 N. Y. 307, 93 Am. Dec. 511.

So, a telegram accepting a bid made by letter will not be stricken from the record in an action for breach of the contract constituted by the letter and telegram because it was addressed to J. W. F. & Co. when there was no such firm or party at the place to which it was sent, and it was delivered to J. W. F., Jr., the defendant, according to instructions. Rogers v. Fenimore (Del. Super. Ct.) 41 Atl. 886.

And in Prosser v. Henderson, 20 U. C. Q. B. 438, it was held in an action for rent that a telegram to the owner of the premises offering to pay a certain price, and an answer thereto by telegraph that the person making the offer might have the property for a designated time on the terms suggested, constitutes a perfect demise commencing at the time of the acceptance of the offer, and there was nothing in the case to show that any proof of the authenticity of the answer was made aside from the fact that it was an answer to the telegram sent.

Upon the other hand, it has been held that the usual course in establishing a contract made or closed by telegraph is to show the delivery of the original message of the parties sought to be charged at the office where it was to be transmitted, and that its authenticity must be established either by proof of handwriting or by other proof establishing its genuineness, and that evidence that a message was sent, and another purporting to be in answer to it was received, is insufficient where the proof wholly fails to show that it was sent by the person sought to be bound, or by his authority or direction. Smith v. Easton, 54 Md. 138, 39 Am. Rep. 355.

So, where a contract is sought to be made out and proved through telegrams, the messages signed by the parties must be produced; the transcripts taken from the wire are not sufficient. And the production of transcripts of telegrams delivered to the parties addressed, by which one of them offered to give the other a certain price for rye and the other accepted his offer, does not establish a contract where the original messages signed by the parties are not produced. Kinghorne v. Montreal Teleg. Co. 18 U. C. Q. B. 60.

And what purports to be a reply to a telegram is not evidence in a criminal case, against the person by whom it purports to be sent, where there is no evidence that he sent it. Chester v. State, 23 Tex. App. 577.

And what purports to be a telegraphic answer coming from one to whom a telegram was sent is inadmissible in evidence to establish the fact that he was at the place where the telegram was sent and from which the answer appeared to come at the time. Howley v. Whipple, 48 N. H. 487.

In the above case, however, there was a dictum to the effect that where a man sends a proposition to another by telegraph, and gets a reply accepting it, the original message, so far as binding the acceptor is concerned, is the copy delivered to him, and is admissible in evidence as such.

F. H. B.

4. Evidence that farmers who purchased twine were troubled by its breaking is admissible on behalf of the dealer, as against the party from whom he bought it, in order to show the worthlessness of the twine, where there is no claim made for injury to the farmers.
5. The fact that a dealer has been fully paid for an article which he sold will not preclude a recovery by him from the party from whom he bought it, on breach of warranty, to the full extent of defects existing in it.
6. Entering separate judgments in favor of principal and sureties, who separately answered, and in whose favor separate verdicts were rendered, is not improper, when it does not injure the plaintiff.

(April 13, 1899.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the County Court for Minnehaha County in favor of defendant in an action to recover the amount of a promissory note given for the purchase price of binding twine in defense of which defendant set up breach of warranty of the twine. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Rochford & McMahon, for appellant:

When a party takes the initiative, and, for the purpose of contracting by telegraph, delivers a prepaid message, containing his offer, to the telegraph company, a telegraphic acceptance shortly thereafter received, purporting to be signed by his addressee, is not admissible to bind the latter without further proof of its authenticity.

Thompson, Electricity, §§ 498, 502; Gray, Communication by Telegraph, 242; Smith v. Easton, 54 Md. 138, 39 Am. Rep. 355; Howley v. Whipple, 48 N. H. 487; Burt v. Wilona & St. P. R. Co. 31 Minn. 472; Bradner, Ev. 135, 136; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 876, 883; State v. Gritzer, 134 Mo. 512; Drexel v. True, 36 U. S. App. 611, 74 Fed. Rep. 12, 20 C. C. A. 265; Whilden v. Merchants' & P. Nat. Bank, 64 Ala. 1, 38 Am. Rep. 1.

The circumstance which permits the introduction of secondary evidence in no case excuses the proof of all the facts, the same as are required in case primary evidence is obtainable.

Neither does the fact that primary evidence is not obtainable change the onus probandi.

Meagley v. Hoyt, 36 N. Y. S. R. 27; Bradner, Ev. 135.

Where a party takes the initiative for contracting by telegraph, the telegraph company is, throughout the whole transaction, his agent, as much so as would have been any other individual he might employ.

Wilson v. Minneapolis & N. W. R. Co. 31 Minn. 481; Anheuser-Busch Brewing Asso. v. Hutmacher, 127 Ill. 652, 4 L. R. A. 575; Saveland v. Green, 40 Wis. 431; Morgan v. People, 59 Ill. 58; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 879.

When a party has entered into an absolute, irrevocable contract in writing for the purchase of personal property without warranty, a subsequent promise of warranty made to him, without further consideration, is not valid and binding.

White v. Oakes, 88 Me. 387, 32 L. R. A. 592; Sherman v. Billings, 90 Hun. 544; Summers v. Vaughan, 35 Ind. 323, 9 Am. Rep. 741; Bloss v. Kittridge, 5 Vt. 28.

When a dealer purchases personal property, such as binding twine, of a warranted quality, and in turn sells the same without warranty to farmers for use, he, in case of a breach of the warranty, is not entitled to show, as a measure of his damage, the loss of time and loss of crop suffered by these farmers.

A witness, called to tell the market value of an article, must state the market value generally, and not its value for a special purpose.

D. M. Osborne & Co. v. Carpenter, 37 Minn. 331; Osborne v. Marks, 33 Minn. 56.

Where a dealer purchases a car load of personal property, such as binding twine of a warranted quality, which he in turn sells or retails in small quantities to divers persons, the jury is not entitled to presume that all the twine is defective upon his showing that a small part of it, so retailed, does not comply with the warranty.

J. I. Case Plow Works v. Niles & S. Co. 90 Wis. 590; Meagley v. Hoyt, 36 N. Y. S. R. 27.

Messrs. Davis, Lyon, & Gates and A. B. Kittredge, for respondents:

It appearing that F. R. Wright sent the plaintiff the first telegram and prepaid the charges thereon, the presumption is that it reached its destination and was delivered to the party to whom it was addressed.

Oregon S. S. Co. v. Otis, 100 N. Y. 447, 53 Am. Rep. 221; Eppinger v. Scott, 112 Cal. 369; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 881.

If a party addresses a letter to another at his place of residence, and receives by mail an answer purporting to come from the person so addressed, the fact that such an answer was so received makes a prima facie case in favor of the genuineness of the answer.

Armstrong v. Advance Thresher Co. 5 S. D. 12; 1 Wharton, Ev. § 1328; Connecticut v. Bradish, 14 Mass. 296; Chaffee v. Taylor, 3 Allen, 598.

The ordinary rule that the burden of proof is upon him who has peculiar knowledge should prevail.

Stephen, Digest of Ev. art. 98; Harris v. White, 81 N. Y. 532; 1 Wharton, Ev. § 367; Reynolds, Ev. § 75.

Wright's employment of the telegraph company ceased when his despatch was delivered. He did not require the company to go and get an answer, nor did he pay for that service.

Durkee v. Vermont C. R. Co. 29 Vt. 127; Saveland v. Green, 40 Wis. 431.

The reply message delivered to F. R. Wright at Rowena was sufficiently authenticated. That message so delivered to Wright was the original and was primary evidence, and the preliminary step taken for the introduction of secondary evidence was unnecessary.

Ibid.; Anheuser-Busch Brewing Asso. v.

Hutmacher, 127 Ill. 652, 4 L. R. A. 575; Perry v. German-American Bank, 53 Neb. 89; State v. Sawtelle, 66 N. H. 488.

The contract of guaranty being made by telegraphic messages was in writing and imported a consideration, and the burden of showing want of consideration was with the party seeking to invalidate it.

Trevor v. Wood, 36 N. Y. 307, 93 Am. Dec. 511; Comp. Laws, § 3538, subsecs. 2, 3; Corbett v. Clough, 8 S. D. 176.

No want of consideration was shown. It was not necessary that the consideration should be specified in writing.

3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 831.

The fact that Wright sold some of this twine to purchasers without warranty, and received pay for it, does not impair his right to recover to the full extent of the defects in the twine without deducting anything on account of sums he may have received from parties to whom he sold portions of it.

Muller v. Eno, 14 N. Y. 597; Wheelock v. Berkeley, 138 Ill. 153.

The taking of separate judgments against parties who were jointly liable was an irregularity only, and, as it worked no injury, it was not reversible error.

Judd Linseed & Sperm Oil Co. v. Hubbell, 76 N. Y. 543; Decker v. Trilling, 24 Wis. 615.

Fuller, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

A breach of warranty as to the quality of certain binding twine, purchased by the defendant F. R. Wright, from the plaintiff, was the only defense relied upon in this action to recover the amount of a promissory note given in settlement therefor, and this appeal taken by plaintiff from judgments in favor of defendants presents some questions pertaining to the law of evidence which, on account of their importance, require most careful consideration.

It appeared at the trial that respondent F. R. Wright, a resident of Rowena, South Dakota, gave to appellant of 143-5 Monadnock Block, Chicago, Illinois, an order for 15,000 pounds of binding twine, and soon afterward sent from Sioux Falls a telegram of which the following is a copy:

June 29th, 1895.

To Western Twine Company, Chicago, Ill.

Do not ship twine unless guaranteed; answer at Rowena.

F. R. Wright.

As a part of the transaction, the following was offered and received in evidence:

Chicago, June 29th, 1895.

F. R. Wright, Rowena.

Twine guaranteed work as well as any other under same conditions.

Western Twine Company.

Although the possession of the message as written by appellant was denied on notice to produce, and it was shown that the sender of the former message received this promptly from the telegraph operator at Rowena, and "that all telegrams either received or sent at or from Sioux Falls or Chicago, more than six months prior to the date of the trial, had been destroyed" in compliance with a rule of the Western Union Telegraph Company, appellant's objection was that the same is "incompetent, immaterial, and irrelevant, no foundation laid for the introduction of such evidence, the plaintiff not being connected therewith, or shown to have executed or authorized any such despatch, and no proof of such despatch ever having been transmitted from Chicago, or ever received at Rowena, S. D. Hearsay in its nature."

When the message addressed to appellant was deposited in the office with the operator at Sioux Falls, all charges for transmission being prepaid, every inference that follows the posting of a letter with similar correctness to be sent by United States mail attached, and, in the absence of anything to the contrary, the presumption is that the same reached its destination and was delivered in accordance with the obligation which the law imposes upon telegraph companies. Perry v. German-American Bank, 53 Neb. 89; Com. v. Jeffries, 7 Allen, 548, 83 Am. Dec. 712; 2 Wharton, Ev. ¶ 1323; Croswell, Electricity, ¶ 674.

In Oregon S. S. Co. v. Otis, 100 N. Y. 446, 53 Am. Rep. 221, the court says: "There is thus impressed upon the telegraph service something of a public character, and thrown around it the guard and the obligations of the public law, and it seems to us reasonable to assimilate the rules of evidence founded upon transmission by mail to that of transmission by telegraph."

As a rule, to which an exception is very rare, all letters and all telegrams with equal certainty reach their destination, and, the reasonable intendments with reference to each being identical, the same legal presumption may well be entertained as to both.

If the telegram which purports to come from appellant be considered as a copy, the original of which has been destroyed, its admission was authorized under the elementary principle that after the proper foundation has been laid resort may be had always to secondary evidence as the best within the power of the party to produce.

Unquestioned as it is, the presumption that the first message was transmitted to and received by appellant stands as ample proof of that fact, and if the purported reply was not sent by someone having authority to enter into a contract on its behalf, the matter was peculiarly within its knowledge, and might easily have been shown.

Unless forgery by someone or fraud upon the part of the telegraph company is to be presumed, the delivery of the message to respondent at Rowena by its operator is a proper circumstance tending strongly to show that on the very day respondent F. R. Wright sent his message to Chicago, appellant placed its reply thereto in transit over the wires. Scott & Jarnagin, Telegraphs, ¶ 380.

Were a doctrine to prevail contrary to that which applies to a letter in the hands of its recipient, and which purports to be an answer to one he has written, and which was received by the party addressed, an agency by which the most important of human affairs are constantly transacted would be seriously impaired, and a distinction would be made to exist without a material difference.

This court has held that "a letter received by due course of mail from a party in reply to a letter addressed to such party is presumptively genuine, and admissible in evidence without further proof of the identity of the party purporting to write the reply." Armstrong v. Advance Thresher Co. 5 S. D. 12.

In a case relied upon by appellant, the proper foundation for the introduction of secondary evidence not being laid, a telegram received in reply purporting to be from a person apparently at a distant place was rejected as evidence of such fact on the ground that it was not original; and in passing upon the point the court says: "Telegraphic messages are instruments of evidence for various purposes, and are governed by the same general rules which are applied to other writings. If there be any difference, it results from the fact that messages are first written by the sender, and are again written by the operator at the other end of the line, thus causing the inquiry as to which is the original. The original message, whatever it may be, must be produced, it being the best evidence; and in case of its loss, or of inability to produce it from any other cause, the next best evidence the nature of the case will admit of must be furnished. If there was a copy of the message existing it should be produced, if not, then the contents of the message should be shown by parol testimony." Houley v. Whipple, 48 N. H. 487.

There being in this instance sufficient preliminary proof as a foundation for the introduction of a copy, we treat the telegram under consideration as such without determining whether it is the original as maintained by counsel for respondent. In our opinion all that took place between the parties pertaining to the warranty relied upon was shown by the best evidence that could under the circumstances be obtained, and we decline to follow courts that seem to take a different view.

No testimony being offered upon the point, it is urged by counsel for appellant that it was incumbent upon respondent to show a consideration for the alleged warranty, but as the telegrams constitute a contract in writing, which is presumptive evidence of a consideration, the burden was upon the party seeking to avoid it. Comp. Laws, § 3538.

The settled rule is that contracts required to be in writing may be made by telegram. Hawley v. Whipple, 48 N. H. 487; Trevor v. Wood, 36 N. Y. 307, 93 Am. Dec. 511; State v. Holmes, 56 Iowa, 588, 41 Am. Rep. 121.

Another position taken by appellant is that there is nothing to indicate that the twine was warranted to consumers, and consequently it was error to allow a farmer who had purchased some of it from respondent F. R. Wright, and had paid for same, to testify to the effect that he was delayed in the harvest.

by having to stop the machine frequently on account of the breaking of twine, that grain enough shelled out to seed the ground because so many of the bundles had to be rebound by hand, and that the twine was absolutely worthless. It clearly appears from the undisputed testimony of numerous witnesses who had tried the twine that it was of poor quality, varying from much too large in size to five or six strands, causing it to break frequently, and making it impossible to adjust the tension so that more than three fourths of the grain could be bound, and requiring frequent stops for the purpose of pulling snarled twine out of the machine and re-threading the needle.

For the purpose of proving that the note in suit was without consideration every witness sworn at the trial stated that the twine in settlement for which it was given was of no value, and, there being no claim for injury to farmers, the foregoing was admitted to properly show their source of knowledge, and the means by which their final conclusion was reached. Nor does the fact that the twine purchased by the witness was fully paid for preclude a recovery to the full extent of the defects without regard to the amount received from persons to whom sales had been made. In cases like the present the actual difference between the real value of the property and what it would have been worth had it corresponded with the warranty is the proper amount to be recovered, although a part of it has been sold for cash, and no claim has been made by any of the purchasers on account of defects. Muller v. Eno, 14 N. Y. 597; Wheelock v. Berkeley, 138 Ill. 153.

The difference between what the property would have been worth if as warranted, and its actual value at the time to which the warranty refers, is the true measure of damages. Comp. Laws, § 4593.

While it does not affirmatively appear that all the twine was disposed of a quantity had been purchased by each of a large number of experienced farmers, all of whom testified that they had tried to use the same, which proved to be of no practical value, and the finding of the jury to that effect is abundantly sustained by the uncontroverted evidence.

The record discloses that F. R. Wright is the principal maker of the note, and that the two other respondents signed as sureties. The principal and sureties answered separately, and at the conclusion of the trial, two general verdicts against appellant, one in favor of F. R. Wright, and one in favor of the sureties, were returned into court, and separate judgments were accordingly entered. Of this appellant complains although no injury thereby is intimated. Since respondents might have been sued severally the practice adopted by the court is allowable. Bank of Commerce v. Smith, 57 Minn. 374; 11 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 857, and cases there collated.

Moreover, "the court shall, in every stage of action, disregard any error or defect in the pleadings or proceedings, which shall not affect the substantial rights of the adverse party; and no judgment shall be reversed or affected by reason of such error or defect." Comp. Laws, § 4941.

Considered as an irregularity it must be disregarded because appellant is not injured. Decker v. Trilling, 24 Wis. 610.

For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgments appealed from are affirmed.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

CONNECTICUT MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

v.

Linda Y. SPRATLEY, Appt.

(99 Tenn. 322.)

1. A statute authorizing service of process on an agent of a foreign corporation, "no matter what character of agent such person may be," if the corporation has any transaction with any person or concerning any property in the state through any agency whatever within the state, is not unconstitutional as authorizing judgment without due process of law,—at least when the service is on an agent who may be reasonably presumed to give notice thereof to the corporation.
2. An agent of a foreign life insurance company who comes into the state to examine the conditions under which a death occurred, and who submits a proposition to compromise the claim, is an agent on whom service of process may be made, under Shannon's New Code, §§ 4543-6.
3. The existence of a power of attorney by which a foreign insurance company authorized service of process to be made on the secretary of state does not preclude service on an agent as authorized by the act of 1887.
4. A foreign company executing a power of attorney to the secretary of state, in accordance with the act of 1875, authorizing him to accept service of process, does not thereby make a contract with the state which precludes the state from authorizing service to be made on agents of the company.

(September 20, 1897.)

APPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Chancery Court for Shelby County in favor of plaintiff in a suit brought to enjoin defendant from enforcing a judgment which had been recovered upon certain policies of life insurance. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Turley & Wright for appellant.

Messrs. Estes & Fentress, for complainant:

The act of 1887, under which the service of process in the circuit-court case was made, does not embrace this case, in which the insurance company had legally entered and done business in the state and had filed its power of attorney appointing the secretary of state its agent to accept service of process.

NOTE.—On the question, Who may be served with process in suit against a foreign corporation, see note to Foster v. Charles Betcher 44 L. R. A.

Fithian v. New York & E. R. Co. 31 Pa. 114.

Both the history and the intensive language of the act of 1887 clearly show that its provisions were not intended to cover cases like this, but to catch a class who were defrauding the state.

Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Turner, 88 Tenn. 268.

If the act approved March 29, 1887, is held to embrace this case, the act as well as the process prescribed thereby and its service are not "due process of law" within the meaning of art. 5 of the Amendments to the Constitution of the United States and of the 14th Amendment of said Constitution.

The kind of representative and the scope of an agent's authority that will legally authorize the service of process upon one as the alter ego of a defendant in a suit are well settled, and it cannot for a moment be admitted that a state, by extreme legislation under the sanction of the Constitution of the United States, may arbitrarily provide that service of process "upon any agent," "no matter what character of agent he may be," shall be good, if, in fact, the agent on whom the service is made is not legally the proper representative of the defendant under the rules of law.

Notice to the agent to bind the principal must be within the scope of the agent's employment.

Notice to an agent of any fact outside of his agency will not affect the principal.

1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 421; Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Elliott, 1 Coldw. 618, 78 Am. Dec. 506; Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 407, 15 L. ed. 452; Schmidlapp v. La Constance Ins. Co. 71 Ga. 246; Maxwell v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 34 Fed. Rep. 286; Trentor v. Pothén, 46 Minn. 298; Re Hohorst, 150 U. S. 653, 37 L. ed. 1211; Mexican C. R. Co. v. Pinkney, 149 U. S. 194, 37 L. ed. 699; Philp v. Covenant Mut. Ben. Assn. 62 Iowa, 633; Mulhearn v. Press Pub. Co. 53 N. J. L. 150; St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 356, 27 L. ed. 225.

Substituted service (of legal process) by publication or any other authorized form, is sufficient to inform a nonresident of the object of proceedings taken where property is once brought under the control of the court by seizure or some equivalent act; but when suit is brought to determine his personal rights or obligations, such service on him is ineffectual for any purpose.

Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed.

Lumber Co. (S. D.) 23 L. R. A. 490; also Carstens v. Leldigh & H. Lumber Co. (Wash.) 39 L. R. A. 548.

565; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357; Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 15 L. ed. 451; St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 27 L. ed. 225; United States v. American Bell Teleph. Co. 29 Fed. Rep. 17.

When the company accepted the terms proposed by the statute of filing the continuing power of attorney, the contract to this extent was executed, and executed contracts are protected by the constitutional provision.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 274; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 87, 3 L. ed. 162.

The contract was not subject to repeal or modification.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. p. 345; New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Rivers, 115 U. S. 674, 29 L. ed. 525; Fisk v. Jefferson Police Jury, 116 U. S. 131, 29 L. ed. 587; Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 84, 5 L. ed. 568.

Beard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complainant is a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Connecticut to carry on a life insurance business, and has its principal situs in Hartford, in that state. For many years prior to the year 1894 it actively prosecuted its work in the state of Tennessee, soliciting applications for life insurance, and issuing policies upon such applications as were approved by its officers. In the year 1889, and afterwards in 1893, an agent of this company was in the state of Tennessee, and by his solicitations induced one B. R. Spratley, a citizen of this state, to apply for insurance on his own life, and upon these applications the complainant issued two policies, one of which was for $5,000 and the other for $3,000, payable, at his death, to his wife, the defendant, Linda Y. Spratley. Both policies were delivered in this state. In the year 1896, B. R. Spratley died, and proof of his death was forwarded to the company. Very soon thereafter complainant sent O. N. Chaffee, one of its employees, into the state, to investigate this claim, and the conditions under which this death occurred. He came, and had interviews with the beneficiary, Mrs. Spratley, her brother, and other parties, of all which he made report to his home company. Upon receiving this report, the complainant, through its vice president, wired the agent as follows: "We think case [referring to Spratley's death claim] should be settled for reserves or thereabouts." After receiving this telegram, Chaffee visited Mrs. Spratley, and submitted an offer to settle on the terms indicated in it. This offer, however, was rejected. While he was in this state on the business and occasion referred to, suit was instituted by the beneficiary against the insurance company for the amount alleged to be due on these policies in the circuit court of Shelby county, and process was served on Chaffee as the agent of the company. At the same time all the requirements of chapter 226 of the Session Acts of 1887, with regard to giving other and further notice of the bringing and pendency of this suit, were complied with. The insurance company ignoring this action, in due time judgment by default was taken against it, upon which an execution was subsequently issued. Thereupon the bill in this cause attacking the judgment upon the ground that it was taken without valid service of process; the complainant alleging that it had not, at the time of the institution of the suit in the circuit court, nor had it had for several years prior thereto, any office or agency in Tennessee; that Chaffee, upon whom service was attempted, was a special agent, for a special purpose, only temporarily in Memphis, and that as such special agent he was not amenable to process issued against the complainant company; and, further, that chapter 226 of the acts of the legislature of 1887, upon which the circuit-court procedure rested, was void, because it violated article 5 of the Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and also the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in that, under the provisions of this act, a defendant was "deprived of property without due process of law"; and it also violated so much of § 17 of the 1st article of the Constitution of the state of Tennessee as provides that "every man . . . shall have remedy by due course of law." The first ground of attack will be hereafter noticed. We will at once examine the question raised upon the constitutionality of this act. Sections 2831-2834 of the Code (M. & V.), corresponding with §§ 4539-4542 of Shannon's New Code, regulate the mode of suing corporations, and apply equally to foreign and domestic corporations. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Walker, 9 Lea, 475; Peters v. Neely, 16 Lea, 280. But they did not cover the case of a foreign corporation having no resident agent in the state. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Walker, 9 Lea, 475. This defect in the law disclosed by this last-named case led to the passage of the act which is assailed for unconstitutionality by the complainant. The provisions of this act are embodied in §§ 4543-4546 of Shannon's New Code. By the 1st section it is provided that "any corporation claiming existence under the law of any other state, found doing business in this state, shall be subject to suit here to the same extent that corporations of this state are by the laws thereof liable to the same, so far as relates to any transaction had in whole or in part within this state, or any cause of action arising here but not otherwise." Section 2 defines what is meant by the term "found doing business in this state," in these words: "Any corporation having any transaction with persons, or having any transaction concerning any property situated in this state, through any agency whatever acting for it within this state shall be held to be doing business within the meaning of § 1." Section 3 provides that "process may be served upon any agent of said corporation found within the county where the suit is brought, no matter what character of agent such person may be, and, in the absence of such an agent, it shall be sufficient to serve the process upon any person, if found within the county where the suit is brought, who represented the corporation at the time the transaction out of which the suit arising took place," etc. In Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Turner, 88 Tenn. 265, it is held that this act did not apply to any foreign corporation having resident agents in the county where the suit is brought; but that the case presented in this record is one within its provisions we think is clear. The question is, Is it constitutional? It may be said that in this legislation Tennessee is only following in the footsteps of many other states of the Union. So diversified and widespread have been the operations of corporations that possibly every state has, for the protection of its own citizens, found it necessary to adopt similar laws. In Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 15 L. ed. 451, with regard to a judgment obtained in a court of Ohio against an Indiana corporation in a suit where service was had on a resident agent in Ohio, the Supreme Court of the United States said: "It cannot be deemed unreasonable that the state of Ohio should endeavor to secure to its citizens a remedy, in their domestic forum, upon this important class of contracts made and to be performed within that state, and fully subject to its laws; nor that proper means should be used to compel foreign corporations, transacting this business of insurance within the state, for their benefit and profit, to answer there for the breach of their contracts of insurance there made and to be performed." For a long period it has been settled that a corporation created in one state has no right, under the Constitution of the United States, to transact business in another state, save by the consent, expressed or implied, of that state; and this consent may be given on such terms as the state may see proper to impose, and the terms so imposed are binding on the corporation. Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357. The only limitation upon this right is that the conditions imposed must not be repugnant to the Constitution or laws of the United States, or to that principle of natural justice which forbids condemnation without opportunity for defense. Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 15 L. ed. 451. So that, if a state permits a foreign corporation to do business within her limits, and at the same time provides that in suits against it for business there done process shall be served upon its agent, the provision is to be deemed a condition of the permission; and corporations that subsequently do business in the state are to be deemed to assent to such condition as fully as though they had specially authorized their agent to waive service of process. St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 27 L. ed. 225. Continuing in that case, the court said: "Such condition must not, however, encroach upon that principle of natural justice which requires notice of a suit to a party before he can be bound by it. It must be reasonable, and the service provided for should be only upon such agents as may be properly deemed representatives of the foreign corporation." As illustrating the length to which the courts have gone in subjecting foreign corporations to actions or demands which arise in the state of the forum, by service of process on some representative within its territorial limits, the cases of Colorado Iron Works v. Sierra Grande Min. Co. 15 Colo. 499; Shickie, H. & H. Iron Co. v. S. L. Wiley Constr. Co. 61 Mich. 226; and Pope v. Terre Haute Car & Mfg. Co. 87 N. Y. 137,—may be referred to. These cases carry the doctrine of representation far beyond the case presented in this record, and much beyond what is required of us in order to sustain the judgment here complained of. In Pope v. Terre Haute Car & Mfg. Co. 87 N. Y. 137, the foreign corporation, in a suit by a citizen of New York on a demand growing out of a transaction in that state, was brought into court by service on its president, who was passing through to a seaside resort, and was in no sense there in his official capacity, or upon any business connected with his corporation; and yet it was held that this service would sustain a judgment against a corporation. While not feeling it necessary to agree to the conclusion reached, yet the following paragraph taken from the opinion in that case does meet with our approval: "The object of all service of process for the commencement of a suit or any other legal proceeding is to give notice to the party proceeded against, and any service which reasonably accomplishes that end answers the requirements of natural justice and fundamental law. Gibbs v. Queen Ins. Co. 63 N. Y. 114, 20 Am. Rep. 513. And what service shall be deemed sufficient for that purpose is to be determined by the legislative power of the country in which the proceeding is instituted, subject only to the limitation that the service must be such as may reasonably be expected to give the notice aimed at." So, in that case, the supreme court of New York held that, while the president of the corporation was not within the state on the business of the corporation, yet as it was his duty to convey notice of the commencement of the suit to his company, "that he would do so could reasonably be presumed and expected." Mr. Murfree, in his recent work on Foreign Corporations, in section 215, after speaking of the great variety among the statutory provisions for bringing foreign corporations into the home forum, says: "The purpose of such provisions being to insure the giving of due notice to the corporation, that idea is given prominence in all the decisions interpreting them. Consequently the general rule . . . is that if the person served sustain sufficient character and rank to render it reasonably certain that the corporation would be apprised of the service, the requirement of the statute is answered." And it may be added that the demand of natural justice will be thereby satisfied. Perhaps no better statement of the doctrine of substituted service can be found than that of Lord Chancellor Craneforth in Hope v. Hope, 4 De G. M. & G. 328, which is as follows: "In cases where a defendant is abroad, the question is, whether there is any person here who may be fitly served, and service upon whom may be treated as equivalent to service upon the absent person himself. Now, this has been allowed in a variety of cases; for instance, where there has been an agent in this country managing all the affairs of a defendant who is abroad and regularly communicating with him upon his affairs, or where he has an agent here specially managing the particular matter involved in the suit. In such cases, the court has felt that it might safely allow service upon the agent to be deemed good service upon the person abroad, because the inference is irresistible that service so made upon the agent is service on a person either impliedly authorized to accept that particular service, or who certainly will communicate the process so served to the party who is not in this country to receive it himself. The object of all service is, of course, only to give notice to the party on whom it is made, so that he may be made aware of, and may be able to resist, that which is sought against him; and when that has been substantially done, so that the court may feel perfectly confident that service has reached him, everything has been done that is required."

It will not be assumed by this court that in the act of 1887 the legislature intended to disregard this principle of natural justice, and provide for the service of process upon an agent of a foreign corporation found within the territorial limits of the state, without regard to whether he was here in a representative capacity on the business of his principal, but rather the contrary; and certainly this corporation cannot be heard to complain, whatever others might do, because the agent upon whom service was made in this case was at the time in this state as the representative of the complainant, examining for it into the conditions under which Spratley's death occurred, and finally, upon the authority of his employer, submitting a proposition of compromise of the claim now in controversy. Not only had complainant transactions in this state with regard to the policies before and at the time of their delivery, but, through its agent, was found doing business in respect to them at the time of the institution of this suit; and it cannot be otherwise than that this agent would be reasonably certain to inform his principal of the fact that it had been brought. Certainly, in a case where this reasonable presumption may be made, we do not feel constrained to overturn a beneficent statute upon the suggestion of a mere possibility that it might, in some supposititious cases, be perverted to an unjustifiable end. On this point we are satisfied that the complainant was not put to judgment without due process of law, and that the statute in question is not open to the attack made on it. It is proper to add that we have carefully examined Mamrell v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 34 Fed. Rep. 286; United States v. American Bell Teleph. Co. 29 Fed. Rep. 17; Mexican C. R. Co. v. Pinkney, 149 U. S. 194, 37 L. ed. 699; Re Hohorst, 150 U. S. 653, 37 L. ed. 1211,—relied on by complainant's counsel, and we find nothing in them in conflict with this conclusion.

But it is argued that the act of 1887 did not apply to this corporation, because it had filed, under the requirements of chapter 66 of the Acts of 1875 (§ 12), an irrevocable power of attorney authorizing the secretary of state to accept service. To this it may be said: First. That this agreement is in the face of complainant's bill in which it alleges that it was a nonresident of this state, and had no office or agent in Tennessee, or had not had for some years preceding the institution of the suit on the policies; thus, by implication at least, negating its present proposition. Second. But, as a matter of law, is the contention sound? The legislation on this subject is as follows: Chapter 23 of the Acts of 1873 (§ 2) required foreign fire insurance companies to file with the treasurer of the state a written instrument authorizing any agent of such company in the state to acknowledge service of process, and chapter 66 of the Acts of 1875 (§ 12) required foreign life insurance companies to file with the insurance commissioner a power of attorney authorizing the secretary of state to accept service. Chapter 23 of the Acts of 1873 was repealed by chapter 47 of the Acts of 1891, and chapter 66 of the Acts of 1875, as well as chapter 47 of the Acts of 1891, was repealed by chapter 160, § 49, of the Acts of 1895. All these repeals were express. The suit brought by Mrs. Linda Y. Spratley in the circuit court was instituted on the 15th day of April, 1896. Chapter 160 of the Acts of 1895, repealing chapter 66 of the Acts of 1875, in § 9 contains a provision requiring every foreign insurance company, fire or life, as a prerequisite to admission into the state for the transaction of business, to constitute the insurance commissioner its attorney to accept service. It is not claimed that the complainant company had acted in accordance with this provision. From July 1, 1894, down to the time the suit in the circuit court was brought, complainant company was doing a limited business in Tennessee. It had a large number of policies in the state, from which it collected its premiums at stated periods, and when a death occurred it sent its agent into the state to make the necessary investigation, and report upon the circumstances under which the insured party died, as was done in this particular case. Ordinarily, the rule is that, where civil proceedings or jurisdiction in civil cases depend upon a statute, they fall with the repeal of that statute. Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 470. Many illustrations of this rule will be found in the cases, among which are State v. Brookover, 22 W. Va. 214; Stephenson v. Doe, Wait, 8 Blackf. 508, 46 Am. Dec. 489; Morgan v. Thorne, 7 Mees. & W. 400; Bailey v. Mason, 4 Minn. 546; Butler v. Palmer, 1 Hill, 324; Williams v. Lincoln County Comrs. 35 Me. 345; Tivey v. People, 8 Mich. 128; Lamb v. Schottler, 54 Cal. 319; Anding v. Levy, 57 Miss. 58, 34 Am. Rep. 435. But we concede that this rule does not apply in this case, and that the power of attorney given by the complainant is irrevocable, and stands to-day as if the act of 1875 still existed; yet it does not follow that the service on Chaffee, as agent, in the circuit court, was ineffectual to bring complainant into that court. The continued existence of the power of attorney does not preclude the complainant from being amenable to the operation of the act of 1887. The secretary of the state was not the agent of this corporation save in the most restricted sense; and he was located at the capital of the state, where the discharge of his official duties properly placed him. We may concede that Mrs. Spratley might have called upon him to accept service of her process; but, instituting her suit as she did, at her own home, in a remote part of the state, where there was no resident agent of complainant, but finding one there temporarily whose agency embraced the very subject of her controversy, she had a case within the purview, and she was entitled to avail herself, of the act of 1887. As this court said in Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Turner, 88 Tenn. 265, this act was not one of "limitation," but of "enlargement"; and we are unable to discover why it should not be operative against complainant, while at the same time its power of attorney remains irrevocable. But we cannot accede to the proposition that by complying with the act of 1875, by the execution of its power of attorney to the secretary of state, that complainant thereby made a contract with the state of Tennessee which is protected by the contract provision of the Constitution of the United States; and that no subsequent legislation can make this corporation amenable to action in the courts of the state by service of process on any other agent. We are unable to discover any element of a contract which precluded the state thereafter from adopting legislation which contemplated bringing this corporation into our courts by service on such other agents as reasonably represented it and were found carrying on its business, within our territorial limits. If the argument of complainant's counsel on this point is sound, then, if the office of secretary of state should be abolished, this result being the act of the state, for which complainant would in no wise be responsible, then our citizens could obtain no redress for their grievances, sustained at the hand of this company in their domestic courts, even if there was an agent with full power of representation residing in each county of the state. A position from which such a conclusion may be deduced we think necessarily unsound. We deem the act of 1875, in this regard, as simply imposing a condition for the state's permission to a foreign life insurance company to come within its borders and transact business with its citizens, and there was nothing in it, or in the acceptance of its terms by the complainant, precluding the legislature from thereafter making other provisions by which, through service upon other agents, either permanently residing or temporarily found here, this corporation might be made to answer in our courts for breach of its contracts made here.

The decree of the chancellor is reversed, and a decree will be entered against complainant and the surety on its injunction bond for the amount of the judgment of the circuit court, and interest upon it, and all costs of the two courts.

VERMONT SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Vermont, ex rel. J. W. GOODELL,
v.

J. W. McGEARY.

(69 Vt. 461.)

1. Building and furnishing a new house with the purpose of living in it does not render the owner an inhabitant of the ward in which it is situated for the purpose of becoming an elector therein so long as he continues, with his wife, the actual occupancy of leased premises in another ward.
2. The ineligibility of a person who received the majority of the votes cast for an office does not entitle the minority candidate to the office, at least when those who voted for the former did not know of his ineligibility.
3. An information in the nature of a quo warranto against a respondent for exercising the functions of an office to which he has not been duly elected rests in sound judicial discretion, and may be denied if the office is of small importance or to continue for a short time only, but not when the office is that of an alderman in a large city, and is to continue for nearly two years.

(July 17, 1897.)

APPPLICATION for a writ of quo warranto to oust defendant from the office of alderman of the Fifth Ward of the City of Burlington, which he was alleged to have usurped. Judgment of ouster.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Roberts & Roberts and W. L. Burnap, for relator:

The qualifications for alderman are specified in § 2 of the charter which provides that "the legal voters in each ward shall annually elect one alderman, etc., from among the legal voters therein, and shall also vote for mayor and city judge,"—irrespective of local habitation.

NOTE.—The above case very clearly presents the somewhat unusual question of the effect of voting for an ineligible candidate who receives a majority of the votes cast. The decision is in accord with the weight of authority on this question.

As to eligibility, see also State, Perine, v. Van Beck (Iowa) 19 L. R. A. 622; State, Childs, v. 44 L. R. A.

Sutton (Minn.) 30 L. R. A. 630; Kirkpatrick v. Brownfield (Ky.) 29 L. R. A. 703; Demaree v. Scates (Kan.) 20 L. R. A. 87; State, Taylor, v. Sullivan (Minn.) 11 L. R. A. 272; State, Thompson, v. McCallister (W. Va.) 24 L. R. A. 343; Rathbone v. Wirth (N. Y.) 84 L. R. A. 408.

This word "therein" refers grammatically to the antecedent term "ward" since "city" is not named in the sentence, and is equivalent to the expression, "of the ward."

Residence is a fact. Mere intention does not constitute a residence. There must be some local habitation or place which one can justly call home to return to.

Jamaica v. Townshend, 19 Vt. 267.

The election of the respondent, being a disqualified person, was a simple nullity, and the office is the relator's by reason of his having received the greatest number of lawful and effective votes.

Spear v. Robinson, 29 Me. 531; 2 Spelling, Extraordinary Relief, §§ 1786, 1789.

The choice of a disqualified person is ineffectual and void.

State, Hardwick, v. Swearingen, 12 Ga. 23; State, Staes, v. Gastinel, 20 La. Ann. 114.

In this state the court has exercised a discretion as to allowing a petition only in cases where the state was not a party, but a private person—as in State, Murry, v. Mead, 56 Vt. 353; State, Roberts, v. McNaughton, 56 Vt. 736. See Ang. & A. Priv. Corp. 701.

Where the prosecution was by the state's attorney, the court refused to exercise a discretion.

State v. Harris, 52 Vt. 216; State v. Bradford, 32 Vt. 50.

Leave to file is not necessary in such cases. Ang. & A. Priv. Corp. 687, 698.

Messrs. Seneca Haselton and W. B. C. Stickney, for respondent:

The only qualification for being elected to and holding the office of alderman was that one should be a legal voter in the city, and a resident of the ward for which he was chosen at the time of his election.

The qualifications of aldermen are incorporated into the section of the charter which provides for the territorial division of the city into wards, and the word "therein" can and must have a territorial signification only.

Previous to January 1, 1897, the house was dried and regularly heated, supplied with hot and cold water, with a kitchen stove, a sink and a bath room which were in use, with crockery and kitchen utensils, with potatoes, butter, flour, and apples. Previous to said 1st day of January, the rooms in the Woodbury & Walker block, which the defendant with his wife had for a considerable time occupied as lodging rooms, had been dismantled by the taking up of the carpets, the taking down of curtains and the removal therefrom of articles, and the lease under which these rooms had been occupied had been terminated.

From the 1st of January to the 6th of January, Mr. McGeary and his wife were regularly occupied at their new house in the fifth ward, remaining from morning till night.

If the defendant cannot hold the seat to 44 L. R. A.

which he was elected, Mr. Goodell certainly cannot take it.

McCrary, Elections, 3d ed. pp. 198-201; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 780; Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 196; King v. Hawkins, 10 East, 211; King v. Parry, 14 East, 549; Queen v. Tewkesbury, L. R. 3 Q. B. 628; State, Dunning, v. Giles, 2 Pinney, 166, 1 Chand. (Wis.) 112, 52 Am. Dec. 149; Saunders v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 145; State, Off, v. Smith, 14 Wis. 497; People, Furman, v. Clute, 50 N. Y. 451, 10 Am. Rep. 508; Com., McLaughlin, v. Cluley, 56 Pa. 270, 94 Am. Dec. 75; Barnum v. Gilman, 27 Minn. 466, 38 Am. Rep. 304; Sublett v. Bedwell, 47 Miss. 266, 12 Am. Rep. 338; Re Corliss, 11 R. I. 638, 23 Am. Rep. 538; People, Crawford, v. Moliter, 23 Mich. 341.

The case is one which does not call for action by the court. The objection to the defendants holding the office is in any view a narrow and technical one.

The office itself is not a constitutional one and is one of comparatively small importance.

State v. Fisher, 28 Vt. 714; State Murry, v. Mead, 56 Vt. 353; Com. v. Jones, 12 Pa. 365; King v. Sargent, 5 T. R. 467.

Ross, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The disposition of this case involves several inquiries. Was J. W. McGeary duly elected alderman of ward 5 in the city of Burlington at the annual meeting holden March 2, 1897? He received a majority of the votes cast for such officer at that meeting. Was he, then, eligible to the office? The answer to this question depends upon the ascertainment of the length of residence in ward 5 which the charter of the city then required to render him qualified to hold the office, and whether he had resided in that ward for the required length of time. There is no contention in regard to his qualifications for the office in other respects. The charter of the city, as it was March 2, 1897, divided the city into five wards. The same section of the charter which makes the division provides: "The legal voters in each ward shall annually elect one alderman, and the ward officers hereafter named, from among the legal voters therein, and shall also vote for mayor and city judge." We think that this requires a person, to be eligible to the office of alderman, to be a legal voter in the ward. This is the ordinary and natural meaning of the language "from among the legal voters therein." "Therein" means in the ward at the time of the annual election. That is the time the alderman is to be elected or selected out from among the legal voters in the ward. It does not mean, as contended by the counsel for Mr. McGeary, from among the legal voters for mayor or city judge, or other city officer, then resident in that ward. This would make the quoted clause read, "from among the legal voters of the city then resident in the ward." It would apply to the other ward officers as well. The ward officers, by other provisions of the charter, are to be chosen by the legal voters of the ward. Section 13 of the charter creates a vacancy in the office of alderman if he removes from the ward, to commence from a certain specified time. We find no provision of the charter which changes the ordinary and natural meaning of the clause quoted, or allows the voters of a ward to select their alderman from any other class than their own number, or from the then legal voters in the ward. The charter prescribes the qualifications of voters at a city election, and also the qualifications of voters in a ward election. For the latter he must be a voter in a city election. The charter then further provides: "Every such voter shall vote only in the ward of which he is at the time an inhabitant, and he shall not vote for alderman, school commissioner, or ward officers, in any ward in which he has not resided for two months preceding any such election." Had Mr. McGeary resided in ward 5 for two months prior to the annual election of March 2, 1897, when he claims to have been elected alderman for that ward? He admits that for some years prior to January 1, 1897, he had resided in ward 4 of the city. There he had rooms, which he occupied with his wife. He continued to occupy these rooms, and pay rent therefor, until January 6, 1897. He paid rent by the month until January 1, 1897. Before that time he had arranged with his landlord that if he remained longer than until January 1, 1897, he should pay rent only for the time he remained. Hence, until January 6, 1897, he occupied these rooms with his wife, and slept in them, of right. In fact, he did not remove from them, and take up his abode or place of dwelling in his new house in ward 5, until January 6, 1897. All he had done in purchasing the lot in ward 5, in erecting a dwelling house thereon, in preparing it for occupancy, in moving into it the things necessary for occupying it for a home from his rooms in ward 4 and from other sources, was preparatory to making his abode therein January 6, 1897. For a year or more he had been intending to make the new house his home at some future time, but the intention alone, nor with the preparations added, did not make it his home. The final act which transferred his home from the rooms in ward 4 to the new house in ward 5 was when he ceased to occupy the rooms, with his wife, as a place of abode, on January 6, 1897, and took up his abode in his new house in ward 5. Hence, on March 2, 1897, he had not resided two full months in ward 5, was not therein a legal voter for ward officers and therefore not eligible to be elected alderman for that ward.

Was the relator duly elected alderman for ward 5 at this election? He did not receive a majority of the votes cast. It is not established that the legal voters of the ward who cast their votes for Mr. McGeary knew that the provisions of the then charter required them to elect an alderman from among the legal voters in the ward, nor that he was not then a legal voter in the ward. By all the decisions, English and American, such knowledge by the voter must be clearly established, to have his vote treated as knowingly and purposely cast for a person ineligible to the office, and for that reason not to be counted, but to be treated as thrown away. Hence, under the most liberal rule in regard to rejecting votes cast by legal voters at an election, the votes cast for Mr. McGeary are not to be treated as though they had not been cast, but under our system of government, where the will of the legal voters, as expressed by their ballots, controls, it has been almost universally held that to insure an election a majority or plurality, as may, by law, be required, of the legal votes cast, must be received. Votes cast by legal voters are not to be rejected, although by the voter cast for a person known to be ineligible to the office. King v. Hawkins, 10 East, 211; King v. Parry, 14 East, 549; State, Dunning, v. Giles [2 Pinney, 166] 52 Am. Dec. 149, and note; and other cases cited by the defendant. Hence the relator cannot be declared elected if Mr. McGeary is ousted.

It is conceded, as is held by our decisions, that the granting or withholding leave to file an information in the nature of a quo warranto against a respondent for exercising the functions of an office to which he has not been duly elected, either because he did not receive the required number of legal votes or was not then eligible to the office, rests in sound judicial discretion. If the office is of very small importance; if it is for a short term, or the term has nearly expired; if no other person complains of being deprived of the office; and if the objection taken to the respondent's holding the office is technical, and of no considerable practical importance, —the leave to file an information is refused. State v. Fisher, 28 Vt. 714, indorsed in State, Murry, v. Mead, 56 Vt. 353. But if it is an office of importance, the proper exercise of which may seriously affect public interests or private rights, like the management and control of great moneyed corporations, or the quiet and good government of a municipality, involving the interests of large numbers, leave is usually granted to file the information, and judgment of ouster from the office is rendered thereon, although no other person has been duly elected to the office. The office in contention is an important one, touching many interests of the largest city of the state and of its inhabitants, and is to continue for nearly two years. Under our form of government, "of the people, by the people, for the people," it is of importance that no one should be allowed to exercise the functions of an important municipal office unless duly elected thereto according to law. In no other way can a high respect for law be maintained. Without a general prevalence of high respect for the law among the people, the rights of the people become unstable and insecure. No one has been legally elected alderman for ward 5. It is an office of importance. It is the right of the legal voters of the ward to determine who shall serve them in that capacity.

Let the information be filed, and judgment of ouster against the respondent be entered thereon. No costs to either party.

VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

AMERICAN EXCHANGE BANK, for Use of T. F. JAMISON & CO.

(92 Va. 495.)

1. A demurrer treated in the trial court as waived or withdrawn must be so considered on appeal.
2. Failure of a railroad company to provide suitable and safe facilities for loading and unloading stock, and also for watering and feeding them while being carried over its line of road, is negligence against which a common carrier is not permitted to contract.
3. Horses and mules as well as animals intended for food are within the provisions of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4386, requiring "cattle, sheep, swine, or other animals," when carried from one state to another, to be unloaded for rest, water, and feeding if confined for twenty-eight hours.
4. A civil action against a railroad company by the owner of injured cattle to recover damages for violation of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4386, requiring cattle to be unloaded for rest, water, and feeding when confined for twenty-eight consecutive hours, can be maintained in a state court, and is not within the rule which prohibits one state from enforcing the penal laws of another state or country, although there is a penalty provided for violating the statute, which is payable to the United States.

5. The safety and suitability of a platform used by a railroad company for unloading horses from a car is a question for the jury when the evidence is conflicting.

6. "Other accidental causes" within the meaning of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4386, making a railroad company liable for failure to unload cattle when confined for twenty-eight hours unless prevented by "storm or other accidental causes," must be taken to mean other inevitable accidental causes.

(January 16, 1896.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the City of Lynchburg to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for injuries to horses and NOTE.—Statutory duties of carriers of live stock with reference to care of stock during transportation.

- I. Scope of note.
- II. The United States statute.
- III. The South Carolina statute.
- IV. The Texas statute.
- V. Miscellaneous statutory provisions.

I. Scope of note.

This note is limited to the statutory duties of carriers of live stock with reference to care of stock during transportation. The somewhat wider, though very similar, field of common-law duties growing out of the nature of the employment is left untouched. It is to be observed, however, that, aside from the act of Congress on the subject, probably enacted to meet the exigencies of interstate and foreign commerce, the common-law rules have been relied upon there being but few of the states that have adopted any statutory provisions on the subject, and the statutes enacted would appear to be little else than an adoption of common-law rules.

II. The United States statute.

The United States Revised Statutes provide as follows:

"§ 4386. No railroad company within the United States whose road forms any part of a line of road over which cattle, sheep, swine, or other animals are conveyed from one state to another, or the owners or masters of steam, sailing, or other vessels carrying or transporting cattle, sheep, swine, or other animals from one state to another, shall confine the same in cars, boats, or vessels of any description, for a longer period than twenty-eight consecutive hours, without unloading the same for rest, water, and feeding, for a period of at least five consecutive hours, unless prevented from so unloading by storm or other accidental causes. In estimating such confinement the time during which the animals have been confined without such rest on connecting roads from which they are received shall be included. It being the intent of this section to prohibit their continuous confinement beyond the period of twenty-eight hours, except upon contingencies hereinbefore stated.

"§ 4387. Animals so unloaded shall be properly fed and watered during such rest by the owner or person having the custody thereof, or, in case of his default in so doing, then by the railroad company or owners or masters of boats or vessels transporting the same, at the expense of the owner or person in custody thereof; and such company, owners, or masters shall in such case have a lien upon such animals for food, care, and custody furnished, and shall not be liable for any detention of such animals.

"§ 4388. Any company, owner, or custodian of such animals who knowingly and willingly fails to comply with the provisions of the two preceding sections, shall, for every such failure, be liable for and forfeit and pay a penalty of not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars. But when animals are carried in cars, boats, or other vessels in which they can and do have proper food, water, space, and opportunity to rest, the provisions in regard to their being unloaded shall not apply.

"§ 4389. The penalty created by the preceding sections shall be recovered by civil action in the name of the United States, in the circuit or district court of the United States, holden within the district where the violation may have been committed, or the person or corporation resides or carries on its business; and it shall be the duty of the United States marshals, their deputies and subordinates, to prosecute all violations which come to their notice or knowledge."

This prohibition against the confinement of stock transported for more than twenty-eight consecutive hours without unloading for feed, water, and rest, and prescribing of a penalty therefor and for the recovery of damages, is directly within the terms of the clause of the Federal Constitution authorizing Congress to regulate commerce among the several states. United States v. Boston & A. R. Co. 15 Fed. Rep. 209.

But it is intended only to affect companies whose roads form a part of a line of roads over mules while in defendant's possession for transportation. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Kirkpatrick & Blackford and William J. Robertson, for plaintiff in error:

Plaintiff in the court below had no right to sue for damages sustained by it by reason of a failure on the part of the defendant to comply with the requirement of § 4386, U. S. Rev. Stat.

18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 272, 273; Atkinson v. Newcastle & G. Waterworks Co. L. R. 2 Exch. Div. 441; The Antelope, 10 Wheat. 123, 6 L. ed. 282; United States v. Lathrop, 17 Johns. 4; Ex parte Dock Bridges, 2 Woods, 428; Com. v. Feely, 1 Va. Cas. 321; Jackson v. Rose, 2 Va. Cas. 34; Nelson v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 88 Va. 974, 15 L. R. A. 583; Wisconsin v. Pelican Ins. Co. 127 U. S. 265, 32 L. ed. 239; Huntington v. Attrill, 140 U. S. 657, 36 L. ed. 1123.

Messrs. H. T. Wickham and Henry Taylor also for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Keen & Lile, for defendant in error:

The court below ought to have disposed of which animals are conveyed extending from one state to another, and does not apply where the line lies wholly within the territorial limits of one state. United States v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 18 Fed. Rep. 480; United States v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 13 Fed. Rep. 642, 9 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 259.

And it is intended to prevent cruelty in interstate commerce, as well as danger to the public health from inducing disease in animals which are to be used for food. Brockway v. American Exp. Co. 168 Mass. 257.

And it was designed to prohibit the confinement of stock on cars longer than the time named, and to fix penalties for the violation thereof, and not to fix a period during which a railroad company could without incurring liability hold cattle on its cars without unloading for the purposes named; and the question of negligence for failing to so unload though the twenty-eight hours had not elapsed is left as at common law. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Ivy, 79 Tex. 444.

So, the term "other animals" employed in U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4387, imposing a penalty upon a railroad company for keeping cattle, sheep, swine, or other animals confined in the same car for a longer period than twenty-eight consecutive hours, includes mules and horses. United States v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 13 Fed. Rep. 480. And see CHESAPEAKE & O. R. Co. v. AMERICAN EXCH. BANK.

And an accident to a train transporting stock, caused by negligence of the persons in charge, will not excuse delay, and exonerate the railroad company from the penalty imposed by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4386, for detention of stock in cars for more than twenty-eight consecutive hours without unloading, unless prevented from so unloading by storm or other accidental causes. Newport News & M. Valley Co. v. United States, 22 U. S. App. 145, 61 Fed. Rep. 488, 9 C. C. A. 579.

And the fact that stock yards of a railroad company at a station were on fire when the train arrived is not a sufficient excuse for not furnishing to a person in charge of animals being transported thereon proper facilities for unloading the same for food, rest, and water, and for not stopping the car for five hours in the plea to the jurisdiction on the demurrer. Dilatory pleas are not favored because they obstruct justice and hinder the merits of the cause. Hence it is that the liberality extended by statute and practice as to pleadings to the merits is denied to them, and they are expressly excepted in § 3272 of the Code. "Great precision is required."

5 Rob. New Prac. 106; Foswist v. Tremaine, 3 Wms. Saund. 209 b, note 1; Horton v. Townes, 6 Leigh, 58; Lloyd v. Williams, 2 Maule & S. 485.

A material part of the cause of action arose in the city of Lynchburg. "An action may be brought in any county or corporation wherein the cause of action, or any part thereof, arose, although none of the defendants reside therein."

Code, § 3215.

A cause of action is said to accrue to any person, when that person first comes to a right to bring an action.

Bouvier, Law Dict., Cause of Action; Howell v. Young, 5 Barn. & C. 260; Thorpe v. Coombe, 8 Dowl. & R. 347; Douglas v. Forrest, 4 Bing. 686; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 46, note; Douglas v. Beasley, 40 Ala.

accordance with the provision of that act. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Heggie, 86 Ga. 210.

So, a railroad company is not excused from liability where it violates U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4386, providing that live stock shall not be kept more than twenty-eight consecutive hours without unloading the same for rest, water, and food, by the fact that the person in charge of the stock does not urge compliance with the statute, as it is the duty of the company's servants and agents to select the place for stopping without his request. Ibid.

United States Rev. Stat. § 4388, imposing a penalty and forfeiture upon any company, owner, or custodian of animals for failure to feed and water them while being transported as provided for in that act, however, does not apply to receivers who are simply the court's officers appointed to execute its orders, the property being in the custody of the court. United States v. Harris, 78 Fed. Rep. 290.

And the penalty imposed by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4386, for the confinement of animals during transportation for a longer period than twenty-eight consecutive hours without unloading applies to the confinement of the entire number of animals, and the unlawful confinement of each separate animal does not constitute a separate offense. United States v. Boston & A. R. Co. 15 Fed. Rep. 209.

And a railroad company is not liable to the penalty imposed by that act, where twenty-eight hours had not elapsed after the stock was loaded before it was delivered to the first connecting carrier. United States v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 13 Fed. Rep. 480.

But in estimating the twenty-eight hours longer than which a carrier is prohibited from confining stock in the same cars by that act, the time during which stock was confined without rest previously on connecting roads must be included, and the company having possession at the expiration of the twenty-eight hours is responsible, though a part of such confinement was by a previous connecting carrier. Ibid.

So, a railroad company transporting a car load of cattle, which takes out the car containing them and leaves it at a station so that it may be unloaded and rested for five hours as 148; Carker v. Enslow, 102 Ill. 272, 40 Am. Rep. 588; Cooke v. Gill, L. R. 8 C. P. 107; Borthwick v. Walton, 15 C. B. 501.

It was distinctly negligence not to have better facilities, and defendant was not relieved of this obligation by the contract of shipment, however stringent.

Taylor, B. & H. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Tex. Civ. App.) 16 S. W. 178.

Whenever the law, either the common law or a statute, imposes a duty and creates an obligation, and such duty and obligation are violated, any person injured thereby has a right of action for redress.

Burnett v. Lynch, 5 Barn. & C. 589, 595; 3 Rob. New Pr. 425; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Heggie, 86 Ga. 210; Taylor, B. & H. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Tex. Civ. App.) 16 S. W. 178; Taylor, B. & H. R. Co. v. Sublett (Tex. Civ. App.) 16 S. W. 182.

Messrs. Ford & Ford also for defendant in error.

Buchanan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to the judgment of the circuit court of the city of Lynchburg required by U. S. Rev. Stat. art. 4386, will not be held liable for delay in transportation where the car is forwarded by the first regular freight train passing afterwards, which passes about seven hours after the expiration of the five hours. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Warnken, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 645.

But an instruction in an action against a railroad company for damages resulting from delay in transportation of stock, based upon the assumption that there was evidence from which the jurors might find that the stock were not in fact delayed longer than was necessary to comply with the Federal statute with relation to feeding and watering, is erroneous and misleading where it appears that the cattle were detained about eleven hours, while the statute only contemplates a detention of five hours, and that they had been en route only fourteen hours and were loaded in cars in which they could be fed and watered without unloading. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Hall, 66 Fed. Rep. 868.

The stoppage of a car load of stock at a station for the purpose of unloading and resting the stock, as required by U. S. Rev. Stat. art. 4386, will be presumed, however, to have been made in a proper endeavor to comply with the law, in an action by the shipper against the carrier for delay, though it is shown that the stock was provided with food and water in the cars, where it is not shown that they had space and opportunity for rest. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Warnken, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 645.

A special contract between the shipper and a carrier of live stock that the shipper should send someone with the stock to attend to feeding, watering, loading, and unloading during the trip, and the act of Congress imposing upon the person in charge of the stock the duty of feeding and watering it, relieve the carrier of the duty in the first instance where it furnishes reasonable facilities to the shipper to do so, but in the absence of such facilities at any point the contract would be held unreasonable as to such point, and the carrier would be liable for any damage resulting from failure to feed and water at that point. Fort Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Daggett, 87 Tex. 822, 61 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 322. And see CHESAPEAKE & O R. Co. v. AMERICAN EXCH. BANK.
44 L. R. A.

in an action on the case instituted by the American Exchange Bank for the benefit of T. F. Jamison & Co. against the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company for damages alleged to have been done to two car loads of horses and mules while being transported over the defendant's line of road.

The defendant filed a plea to the jurisdiction of the court. To this plea the plaintiff demurred, but the court overruled its demurrer, and it then filed a special replication to the plea, upon which issue was joined, and a trial was had by a jury impaneled to try that issue, and a verdict rendered in favor of the plaintiff.

After overruling a motion of the defendant to set aside this verdict, because contrary to the evidence, the court rendered judgment upon it, and proceeded to try the case upon its merits. Upon that trial a verdict and judgment were rendered in favor of the plaintiff.

The first assignment of error is based upon the action of the court in overruling the motion to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial on the issue raised by the plea in abatement to the jurisdiction of the court, because

And a contract between a shipper of stock and a railroad company by which the company is relieved from all liability beyond its own line does not relieve the railroad company from liability for retaining the stock in its cars more than twenty-eight consecutive hours without being fed or watered in violation of the Federal statute, though a part of the period of confinement was after a connecting carrier had refused to take the cars, where it failed to comply with a reasonable request of the owner to place the cars where he could unload them, and it is immaterial that he might have had a remedy against the connecting carrier for the refusal to accept and unload the stock. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Birchfield (Tex. Civ. App.) 46 S. W. 900.

So, where stock is delivered to a railroad company upon a verbal contract for shipment the company upon such delivery becomes bound to transport the stock with care, diligence, and despatch, and without unreasonable delay, at the price agreed on, and to unload them for rest, water, and feeding every twenty-eight hours as required by U. S. Rev. Stat., and failure to do so renders it liable in damages; and a contract subsequently entered into by which its liability is limited is without consideration and invalid. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Avery (Tex. Civ. App.) 46 S. W. 897.

But no recovery can be had in an action by a shipper against a carrier for violation of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4386, prohibiting the confinement of cattle in the same cars for a longer period than twenty-eight hours without unloading for rest, water, and feeding, where there was a special contract between the parties that the shipper was to take care of, feed, water, and attend to the stock, and the evidence is not sufficiently specific to enable the court to assess the damages arising from failure to feed and water. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Texas & P. R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 913.

And U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4387, imposes upon the person in charge of stock under transportation the duty of feeding and watering it independent of any contract, and he cannot devest himself of such duty by attempting a rescission of the contract of carriage because of delay in shipping and transportation when reasonable facilities for such feeding and watering were the verdict was contrary to the evidence. The plaintiff, by his counsel, insists that the verdict is sustained by the evidence, but whether it is or not, he contends, is immaterial, as the defendant's plea to the jurisdiction is fatally defective, and the demurrer to it should have been sustained.

We do not think that the demurrer to the plea can be considered here. The plaintiff had the right to demur or reply to the plea, but he had no right to do both. The common law did not allow a party to demur and plead to the same matter. This rule has been changed by the statute so as to allow a defendant to "plead as many several matters whether of law or fact, as he shall think necessary." Code 1887, § 3264.

But, as to subsequent stages of the pleading, there has been no change in the common law. The plaintiff can make one answer, either of law or of fact, but no more to each plea. Lang v. Lewis, 1 Rand. (Va.) 277; 4 Minor, Inst. 3d ed. 166, 167. To escape this inconvenience in the replication and subsequent stages of the pleading, the practice is to demur, if the party desires to do so, and, if the demurrer be overruled, to obtain leave from the court (which is granted as a matter of course) to withdraw the demurrer, and then to answer in point of fact; but, if the demurrer is not withdrawn, no further answer can be made, and the court must give judgment in favor of the defendant on the issue raised by the plea. Maggott v. Hansbarger, 8 Leigh, 532; 4 Minor, Inst. 1167.

In this case, although the record does not show that the demurrer was withdrawn, the court and parties must have so considered it: otherwise, the replication could not have been filed, and a trial had upon the issue of fact raised by it. The demurrer having been treated in the trial court as waived or withdrawn, it must be so considered here.

The question raised by the plea to the jurisdiction was whether the cause of action sued on, or any part thereof, arose within the jurisdiction of the circuit court of the city of Lynchburg.

The evidence introduced upon that issue shows that the injury to the horses complained of was chiefly done between the city of Covington, in the state of Kentucky, and furnished by the carrier. Fort Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Daggett, 87 Tex. 322, 61 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 322.

So, a petition in an action against a railroad company for damages for injuries caused by keeping stock in the cars more than twenty-eight consecutive hours, against the prohibition of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4386, must show that the case is not within the exception of the statute where animals have proper food, water, space, and opportunity to rest on the cars. Hale v. Missouri P. R. Co. 36 Neb. 266.

The rule has been laid down that U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4386, laying down a definite rule for the transportation of animals with reference to the length of time they may be kept in a car, and prescribing penalties for a disregard of the rule, and providing in a subsequent section for the recovery of the penalty in a civil action in the proper Federal court, in no way concerns the state courts, and they have nothing to do with its enforcement. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Peterson, 68 Miss. 454, 14 L. R. A. 550.

A railway company failing to comply with the requirements of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4386, imposing a penalty upon carriers which transport live stock if the animals are kept in the cars more than twenty-eight consecutive hours unless prevented from unloading by storm or other accidental causes, however, is liable in damages to the owner of the stock as well as for penalties. Hale v. Missouri P. R. Co. 36 Neb. 266. And see CHESAPEAKE & O. R. Co. v. AMERICAN EXCH. BANK.

And this theory seems to have been acted upon to some extent, that a violation of the statute is negligence per se, or at least evidence of negligence, and that as such it may be considered in state as well as Federal courts.

Thus, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4386, providing that no railroad company transporting animals from one state to another shall confine the same in cars, boats, or vessels of any description for a longer period than twenty-eight consecutive hours without unloading the same for rest, water, and feeding for a period of at least five consecutive hours, where a railroad company keeps live stock upon its cars more than twenty-eight consecutive hours, it constitutes negligence per se, and such railroad company is liable, not only for the penalty 44 L. R. A.

prescribed in the statute, but also for any damage or injury that may thereby be sustained by the owner of the stock. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Heggie, 86 Ga. 210.

And though that statute does not apply expressly to an express company hiring its accommodations from railroad companies, and though it does not subject the company itself to a penalty, its existence is strong evidence of the company's duty to give a reasonable opportunity to the custodian who accompanies stock on the train to provide it with food and drink on the journey. Brockway v. American Exn. Co. 168 Mass. 257.

Where horses are transported by an express company from one state to another upon railroads of which it hires accommodations, and the horses are kept in the car without food, drink, and rest for forty-nine hours in violation of that act, and the agent of the railroad company and the express company, who knows that the car will be delayed for several hours at an intermediate point, refuses a request by the custodian of the horses to unload and feed and water them upon the plea that they will soon arrive at their destination, the express company is guilty of gross negligence, and is liable in an action by the owner for injuries caused by such refusal to unload. Ibid.

Attention it also called to the other cases in state courts above set forth in which the Federal statute is applied and enforced.

III. The South Carolina statute.

The South Carolina statute (Rev. Stat. § 1676) is substantially the same as the Federal statute, in that it also prescribes twenty-eight hours as the period beyond which stock must not be confined without feeding.

A connecting carrier is bound to take notice of the length of time a shipment of animals has been confined by the carrier from which it received it under that act. Comer v. Columbia, N. & L. R. Co. 52 S. C. 36.

And it includes within the prohibition the time during which the animals have been confined without rest on connecting roads from which they are received, and the question is not how long the animals have been confined in the cars without rest or water by one particular company, but how long they have been so con-the city of Lynchburg, in this state; but we think there was evidence before the jury showing that a part of the injury was done after the horses arrived at Lynchburg.

It appears that, when the train upon which the horses were shipped reached that point, they were in such condition that it was agreed between the parties that they might be taken from the train, although they were billed to Danville, Virginia. In unloading them, the evidence tends to show that one of the horses was crowded or pushed off of a narrow platform over which they had to pass in going from the cars to the street, and one of its knee joints so fractured that it caused lockjaw, from which the horse died.

The jury were justified in believing that the injury to this horse was caused in Lynchburg. Whether the injury was caused, as the plaintiff contends, by reason of the failure of the defendant to provide suitable and safe facilities for unloading the horses there, or whether, as the defendant insists, the facilities for unloading were suitable and safe, or, if they were not, the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, so as to be fined by that company and its connecting roads. Ibid.

And a carrier is not relieved from liability thereunder for keeping cattle confined during transportation for more than twenty-eight hours without food, by the fact that a special contract existed under which the shipper assumed the duty of loading, unloading, feeding, and watering. Ibid.

So, a nonsuit will not be granted in an action by a shipper against a carrier of live stock under the statute where there is some testimony tending to show that the stock in question was confined in cars for a longer period than twenty-eight hours. Ibid.

And the failure on the part of a railroad company to furnish the necessary facilities to a shipper to enable him to feed and water his stock renders it liable thereunder, though under the contract of shipment the shipper assumed the duty of loading, unloading, feeding, and watering. Ibid.

And the failure of a railroad company to furnish facilities to a shipper of stock for loading, unloading, feeding, and watering, which the shipper had contracted to do, need not be wanting to render it liable. Ibid.

IV. The Texas statute.

Texas Rev. Stat. art. 284, provides that it shall be the duty of a common carrier who conveys live stock of any kind to feed and water the same during the time of conveyance and until the same is delivered to the consignee or disposed of as provided by law, unless otherwise provided by special contract, imposing a liability to the owner for damages and a penalty.

This statute, as applied to a shipment of stock from one state to another is a legitimate exercise of the state's police power, and not an attempt to regulate interstate commerce in such a sense as to infringe upon the exclusive constitutional right of Congress, where the initial points of the shipment and the matter complained of under the statute were both within the state. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Gray (Tex. Civ. App.) 24 S. W. 837.

And it is not invalid as applied to an interstate shipment of live stock as in conflict with U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 4386, 4388, 4389, prohibiting the confinement of stock in cars for a longer period than twenty-eight consecutive hours without unloading on transportation from one state to another, where the shipment had its initial point in the state, and the matter complained of for which the penalty is asked occurred within it. Ibid.

And it is not invalid on the ground that it is too vague and indefinite to support a penalty. Ibid.

And an instruction in an action by a shipper of cattle against a railway company alleging that it failed to deliver the cattle according to contract, in which it appeared that thirty-one hours elapsed between the times of feeding and watering such cattle, that it is the duty of a carrier to feed and water live stock during the time of conveyance and until delivery unless provided by special contract, and that it is liable to the party injured for damages for failure to do so, is not subject to the objection that it leaves it discretionary with the jury to find damages upon an issue not made by the pleadings. Taylor, B. & H. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Tex. App.) 16 S. W. 178; Taylor, B. & H. R. Co. v. Sublett (Tex. App.) 16 S. W. 182.

A carrier is primarily bound to provide food and water for stock shipped over its line of railroad, and it is its duty to provide suitable places for feeding and watering stock transported, and if this is not done it is responsible for any loss occurring from such neglect. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Wilhelm (Tex. App.) 16 S. W. 109.

And under Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 284, making it the duty of all common carriers conveying live stock of any kind to feed and water the same during the time of conveyance unless otherwise provided by special contract, if the cars in which it is transported be not so constructed that this may be done without unloading it, it becomes the duty of a railroad company carrying such stock to provide places where it may be unloaded, watered, and fed without injury, and it is not enough that the places so prepared may be suitable in good weather; and it would be liable for an injury resulting from the fact that a pen maintained by it was muddy by reason of recent rains. International & G. N. R. Co. v. McRae, 82 Tex. 614.

And a railroad company transporting live for the want of feed or water, or for any other cause incident to railroad transportation, except for fraud or gross negligence in forwarding the particular cars in which the stock was loaded. It further provided that the plaintiff should load and unload the stock, and feed and water them at its own risk and expense.

Although the contract by which the plaintiff undertook to load, feed, water, and unload its stock at its own risk and expense may have been a valid and binding contract, it was the duty of the defendant to provide suitable and safe facilities for loading and unloading the stock, and also for watering and feeding them while being carried over its line of road. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Harman, 91 Va. 601; Hutchinson, Car. § 322a.

A failure to provide such facilities is negligence, against which a common carrier is not permitted to contract. Code, § 1296; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Harman, 91 Va. 601; Virginia & T. R. Co. v. Sayers, 26 Gratt. 328.

The evidence of the plaintiff shows that stock should not only have proper machinery and facilities for unloading such stock whenever in the course of transit it may be necessary to unload it for necessary exercise and refreshment, but also to unload, feed, and water it at the journey's end if there be delay in making delivery and discharging the carrier from liability where the health of the animals requires it. Taylor, B. & H. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Tex. App.) 16 S. W. 178; Taylor, B. & H. R. Co. v. Sublett (Tex. App.) 16 S. W. 182.

And a carrier under a contract with a shipper of cattle providing that its liability shall cease upon delivery to a connecting carrier, which does not make an immediate delivery upon arrival at the end of the route, is liable for any injury resulting from a refusal of a request by the shipper for an opportunity to feed and water the cattle. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Stribling (Tex. Civ. App.) 34 S. W. 1003.

And a railroad company carrying stock to be delivered to a connecting carrier, which falls and neglects to feed and water it or allow the shipper to do so for more than thirty hours while en route, is liable for the damages resulting though the effect of such failure does not appear or become developed until later during the trip, and after the stock has passed from its possession. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Herring (Tex. Civ. App.) 24 S. W. 939.

The question whether a carrier under contract with a shipper of cattle releasing it from liability upon delivery of the cattle to a connecting carrier held them a sufficient length of time after arrival at the end of its route to afford the shipper opportunity to feed and water them, and if so held what injury resulted therefrom, are questions for the jury. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Stribling (Tex. Civ. App.) 34 S. W. 1003.

But a railroad company is not bound to feed cattle en route or afford the shipper opportunity to do so, where by the contract its liability is to cease upon delivery of the stock to a connecting carrier, and the run upon its road is but little over three hours. Ibid.

And no penalty can be recovered under the Texas statute for failure of a carrier to feed and water stock where the distance it was to be carried was such that it would require such a short time to carry it that an ordinarily prudent person would not under similar circumstances have fed and watered cattle that were in proper condition for shipment. Ibid.

stances have fed and watered cattle that were in proper condition for shipment. Ibid.

It is the duty of a shipper of cattle to properly feed and water them before starting them on their journey, and the carrier is authorized to presume, in the absence of knowledge to the contrary, that the cattle have been properly fed and watered before they are tendered for shipment. Ibid.

A shipper cannot tender his cattle in a starved and famished condition to a carrier for a short haul of a few hours, and compel the carrier to feed and water them during the trip or incur a penalty for the refusal so to do. Ibid.

So, a railroad company cannot bind the shipper by contract to load, unload, and reload his stock at his own risk, and feed, water, and attend it at his own risk while in the stock yards, and relieve itself from responsibility for such feeding, watering, and attention. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Trawick, 68 Tex. 314.

At Huntington, after the horses had been without food for some thirty-six hours, they were given water upon the cars, and also fed two or three bales of hay during the night, stances have fed and watered cattle that were in proper condition for shipment. Ibid.

It is the duty of a shipper of cattle to properly feed and water them before starting them on their journey, and the carrier is authorized to presume, in the absence of knowledge to the contrary, that the cattle have been properly fed and watered before they are tendered for shipment. Ibid.

A shipper cannot tender his cattle in a starved and famished condition to a carrier for a short haul of a few hours, and compel the carrier to feed and water them during the trip or incur a penalty for the refusal so to do. Ibid.

So, a railroad company cannot bind the shipper by contract to load, unload, and reload his stock at his own risk, and feed, water, and attend it at his own risk while in the stock yards, and relieve itself from responsibility for such feeding, watering, and attention. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Trawick, 68 Tex. 314.

A carrier is liable for injuries to cattle shipped, though the shipper agrees to accompany them and feed and water them at his own risk, where it fails to furnish him with proper facilities for so doing. Taylor, B. & H. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Tex. App.) 16 S. W. 178; Taylor, B. & H. R. Co. v. Sublett (Tex. App.) 16 S. W. 182.

Thus, a railroad company carrying stock which is not fed or watered for thirty hours is just as liable therefor where the duty under the contract of carriage devolved upon the shipper, and it fails to give him opportunities or facilities for feeding and watering, as it would be if the duty of feeding and watering rested with it. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Thompson (Tex. Civ. App.) 23 S. W. 930.

And a railroad company carrying stock cannot escape liability for failure to feed and water it for thirty-one hours, upon the ground that the contract of carriage provided that the shipper should feed and water the stock in transit and release the carrier from all damages on account thereof, without showing that it afforded the shipper sufficient and reasonable facilities and necessary opportunities to feed and water such stock during the trip. Taylor, B. & H. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Tex. App.) 16 S. W. 178; Taylor, B. & H. R. Co. v. Sublett (Tex. App.) 16 S. W. 182.

with the express promise that they would be taken to the stock yards the next morning, where they would be unloaded and fed. This was not done, and the horses had neither food nor water until they reached Greenbrier, on Wednesday evening, about sundown.

In addition to the duty imposed upon a common carrier of live stock by the common law, § 4386 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides that "no railroad company within the United States whose road forms any part of a line of road over which cattle, sheep, swine, or other animals are conveyed from one state to another, or the owners or masters of steam, sailing, or other vessels carrying or transporting cattle, sheep, swine, or other animals from one state to another, shall confine the same in cars, boats, or vessels of any description, for a longer period than twenty-eight consecutive hours, without unloading the same for rest, water, and feeding, for a period of at least five consecutive hours, unless prevented from so unloading by storm or other accidental causes. In estimating such confinement the time during which the animals have been confined without such rest on connecting roads from which they are received shall be included, it being the intent of this section to prohibit their continuous confinement beyond the period of twenty-eight hours, except upon the contingencies hereinbefore stated."

The counsel of the defendant contends that the statute of the United States has no application to this case, and that no damages can be recovered for its violation, even if damages resulted therefrom:

First. Because the statute does not embrace horses and mules, but applies only to cattle, sheep, swine, and such other animals as are intended for food; that the statute was intended to secure the people of the country from consuming diseased animal food; and that the statute is restricted to animals used for that purpose. It is true that the words "horses" and "mules" are not named in the statute, but the words "other animals" are used, and they are sufficiently comprehensive to embrace horses and mules.

So, a railroad company carrying stock may be held responsible for consequences resulting from a failure to feed and water it, though the shipper is under a contract to load and unload and feed and water, after a reasonable time has elapsed, where the train is detained for an unreasonable time through the negligence of the carrier. Fort Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Daggett (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 186.

And a railroad company carrying stock is liable for injury thereto from failure to feed and water the same for thirty-one hours, though it was carried under special contract that the shipper was to feed and water it, and though the carrier had watering stations at convenient points along its line, where it failed and neglected to notify the shipper of the location of such feeding and watering places and of the time when the trains conveying the cattle arrived at such stations, and the cattle were damaged by reason of such failure. Taylor, B. & H. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Tex. App.) 16 S. W. 178; Taylor, B. & H. R. Co. v. Sublett (Tex. App.) 16 S. W. 182.

But a railroad company is exonerated from responsibility under Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 284, providing that it shall be the duty of a common carrier who conveys live stock of any kind to feed and water it during the time of conveyance and until delivered to the consignee or otherwise disposed of, unless otherwise provided by special contract, where there was a special contract that the shipper was to take care of, feed, and water and attend to the stock, and that it was to be fed and watered at a designated place, and it does not appear that the carrier was requested to stop for feed and water at any other place. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Texas & P. R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 913.

And an instruction in an action by a shipper of horses for damages from failure of the carrier to feed and water them, and for the statutory penalty therefor confining the negligence in feeding and watering to a particular place, is not reversible error where the proof shows that the only attempt and the only opportunity given to water and feed was at that place. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Thompson (Tex. Civ. App.) 23 S. W. 930.

So, while the consent of a shipper of cattle to the omission to feed and water them at a 44 L. R. A. particular place would estop him from claiming negligence on the part of the carrier for not feeding and watering them at that place where the only delay was such as resulted in the extra time required to make the next feeding station in the absence of negligence on the part of the carrier, it would have no effect on an unusual delay by its negligence in not making the customary time. St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Turner, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 625.

But a railroad company is not liable for a penalty imposed by statute for failure to feed animals shipped over its road when the failure occurred while the road was in the hands of a receiver. And statutory penalties incurred while a railroad is in the hands of a receiver do not constitute such a claim against the company as would be included within the equitable rule that to the extent of the income used by the receiver in improvement of the property the company would afterwards be liable for claims arising under and not paid by the receiver. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Barnhart, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 601.

In order to recover the penalty or forfeiture prescribed by art. 284, Tex. Rev. Stat., for not properly feeding and watering cattle shipped the statutory grounds must be particularly set forth and fairly established by proof. Good v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. (Tex.) 4 L. R. A. 801.

But the location of feeding and watering stations for the purpose of feeding and watering stock that might be transported over lines of railway is a fact peculiarly within the knowledge of the railway companies and owners of transporting lines, and is not a matter to be pleaded by the shipper in bringing action for damage accruing from negligence in failing to properly feed and water such stock. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Wilhelm (Tex. App.) 16 S. W. 109.

The question in an action against a railway company for failure to feed and water stock for thirty hours, as to whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover a penalty under Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 284, in addition to his damages, is one of fact for the jury. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Thompson (Tex. Civ. App.) 23 S. W. 930.

And an infraction of the law by a carrier, which will justify the recovery of a penalty by

The object of the statute, we think, was to prevent cruelty and injury to animals that were shipped long distances upon cars or boats, by requiring that they should be unloaded, watered, fed, and allowed to rest at stated intervals. It is a humane rather than a sanitary regulation. As cattle, sheep, and swine were more generally shipped upon the cars than horses and mules, they were doubtless named, while the words "other animals" were added to include all animals that might be shipped in crowded cars or boats, and which would suffer also for the want of food, water, or rest.

There is nothing in the language of the statute in question which would indicate that only animals used for food were intended to be embraced within its provisions. On the contrary, we think it is clear that all animals which would suffer in like manner with cattle, sheep, and swine for want of food, water, or rest, while being shipped long distances, are within its provisions.

The second ground assigned why this statute is not applicable to this case is that one state cannot enforce the penal laws of another state or country.

No principle of law is better settled than this, but we do not think it is in any way involved in this case. In order to come within the scope of that principle, the action or suit must be in the nature of a proceeding in favor of the state whose laws have been violated. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Wisconsin v. Pelican Ins. Co. 127 U. S. 265, 32 L. ed. 239, a shipper of stock for failure to feed and water under that act, must be shown by stronger proof than a mere preponderance. Ibid.

The statutory penalty inflicted by that act is independent of the contract of carriage and the damages arising from its breach, and is not governed by a clause in such contract barring right of recovery for a claim thereunder unless suit therefor is brought within a designated number of days after the damages shall accrue. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Gray (Tex. Civ. App.) 24 S. W. 837.

V. Miscellaneous statutory provisions.

There are various other statutory provisions bearing upon the subject of the duties of carriers of live stock with reference to care during transportation, which have been judicially construed.

Thus, a railroad company transporting stock is liable under Kan. Gen. Stat. 1889, § 1250, imposing liability for all damages done to personal property in consequence of neglect on its part when caused by a failure to give that ordinary care which a man of ordinary prudence similarly situated would have given to stock under the same circumstances. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Dittmars, 3 Kan. App. 459.

And evidence that a railroad company transporting stock took about forty-two hours to come less than 400 miles, and that the motive power was poor and the train a heavy one, and that the stock was kept at one time about twenty-nine hours, and at another about twenty-four or twenty-five hours without being watered, fed, or unloaded, and was finally unloaded into a muddy yard at night and re-shipped the next morning, and of many other things which a prudent man would not do, is sufficient to warrant a recovery under Kan. 44 L. R. A.

Mr. Justice Gray delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The rule that the courts of no country execute the penal laws of another applies, not only to prosecutions and sentences for crimes and misdemeanors, but to all suits in favor of the state for the recovery of pecuniary penalties for any violation of statutes for the protection of its revenue or other municipal laws, and to all judgments for such penalties." This statement of the rule was approved by the privy council in the case of Huntington v. Attrill [1893] A. C. 150, 157, in the following language: "Their lordships do not hesitate to accept that exposition of the law, which, in their opinion, discloses the proper test for ascertaining whether an action is penal within the meaning of the rule. A proceeding in order to come within the scope of the rule, must be in the nature of a suit in favor of the state whose law has been infringed." Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 36 L. ed. 1123.

Tested by this rule, this is not a penal action, nor is it in the nature of a penal action in favor of the United States. It is merely a civil action to recover damages for injuries done the plaintiff in part, by reason of the defendant's failure to perform a duty imposed upon it by an act of Congress. The fact that there is a penalty provided for the violation of the statute payable to the United States does not prevent those who have been specially injured by its violation from recovering damages therefor. For where a duty imposed, says Mr. Cooley in his work

Gen. Stat. 1889, § 1250, making railroads liable for damages done to personal property in consequence of neglect on their part. Ibid.

And the railroad company cannot avoid the charge of negligence in transporting stock on the ground that the stock was in charge of an employee of the owner, where it merely appears that an employee accompanied the stock, but it does not appear that he was in charge. Ibid.

But the plaintiff in an action under that act must allege and prove negligence of the company and the damages resulting therefrom. Ibid.

So, Wis. Laws 1887, chap. 487, requires every railroad corporation operating a road within the state to receive and carry live stock during eight months of the year including March and April, prescribing the conditions upon which such stock is to be carried, and declares that railroad companies transporting cars of live stock shall feed and water such stock as shall be unloaded under the provisions of that act at the expense of the railroad company, where such stock shall be detained by them for a longer period than six hours. Abrams v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 87 Wis. 485.

And a contract between a carrier and a shipper by which the shipper agrees to feed and water his own stock during transportation is ineffectual to relieve the railroad company from responsibility for keeping stock confined for more than thirty-four hours without food or drink, so far as it attempts to exempt the company from liability by reason of its own negligence or the negligence of its employees. Ibid.

So, under Tex. Rev. Stat. 1895, arts. 4494, 4496, providing that railroad companies shall furnish sufficient accommodation for transportation, and discharge such passengers and properon Torts, 1st ed. p. 654, is obviously meant to be a public duty, and the penalty for its violation is made payable to the state or to an informer, the right of an individual injured to maintain an action on the case for a breach of the duty owing to him is unquestionable.

Shearman & Redfield, in their work on Negligence (§ 13), say that "the violation of a statute or ordinance regulating the speed of vehicles, horses, or trains, or requiring special signals or warnings to be given upon their approach, or lights to be shown, is such a breach of duty as may be made the foundation of an action by any person belonging to the class intended to be protected by such a regulation, provided he is specially injured thereby. The violation of such a statute of the United States may be made the basis of an action for negligence in a state court. These principles apply, not only where the statute or ordinance declares that persons violating it shall be liable for any damage sustained by reason of its breach, but also where it contains no such provisions, and simply imposes a penalty by way of fine or otherwise, for disobedience." Bishop, Noncont. L.; Comyns, Dig. Action on Statutes, F; Hayes v. Michigan C. R. Co. 111 U. S. 228, 28 L. ed. 410.

We have no doubt that one of the objects of § 4386 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was to prevent loss to the owners of live stock which would result from its being carried long distances by common carriers without food, water, and rest. The plaintiff belongs to the class intended to be protected thereby, and has the right to recover from the defendant the damages which were caused, if any, by its violation of the statute, and, having such right, he could bring his action in the state court. "It is difficult," said Mr. Justice Miller in Denick v. Central R. Co. 103 U. S. 11, 17, 18, 26 L. ed. 439, 441, 442, "to understand how the nature of the remedy, or the jurisdiction of the courts to enforce it, is in any manner dependent on the question whether it is a statutory or a common-law right. Wherever, by either the common law or the statute law of a state, a right of action has become fixed and a legal liability incurred, that liability may be enforced and the right of action pursued in any court which has jurisdiction of such matters and can obtain jurisdiction of the parties."

In the case of Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Heggie, 86 Ga. 210, it was held that, under § 4386 of the Revised Statutes (the section now under consideration), if a railroad company kept horses on its cars for more than twenty-eight hours without unloading them for rest, water, and food, it was negligence per se; and that such company was not only liable for the penalty prescribed by the statute, but also for any damage or injury thereby sustained by the owner of the horses.

In Grey v. Mobile Trade Co. 55 Ala. 387, 28 Am. Rep. 729, it was held that where a ty as shall be offered at their places of destination, making them liable to the party aggrieved for damages sustained by any failure in performance of such duty as soon as reasonable time has elapsed after cattle are offered for transportation, it becomes the duty of a railroad company to furnish accommodations for their transportation, and it is liable in damages for a breach thereof. Davis v. Texas & P. R. Co. 91 Tex. 505.

And the object and intention of Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 4227, providing that where there is a delay in shipping the corporation shall pay to the party aggrieved all damages which shall be sustained thereby with costs of the suit, are to furnish full compensation for the injury inflicted by the failure of the carrier to perform its duty. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Ritchie (Tex. Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 840.

A railroad company is not relieved from liability for delay in shipping under that act by the fact that the shipper put his cattle in the carrier's pens voluntarily, where that was the place provided for them and cars were expected at any hour, and he exercised the best care he could and attempted to feed and water them in the meantime, but was prevented from properly caring for them by insufficient accommodations. Ibid.

And the estimate of damages to cattle shipped under the provisions of that act, that the carrier shall pay to the party aggrieved all damages which shall be sustained from delay in shipping, with costs of suit, made at their destination, is not subject to objection that the cattle were not shipped to market and that the measure of damages was therefore the injury done to the cattle themselves and not the difference in market value, where such estimate was the same as the estimate at the place of shipment. Ibid.

44 L. R. A.

So, the common-law liability of a carrier, beginning when goods were delivered to him for immediate transportation, is not affected by Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 283, providing that the trip or voyage shall be considered to have commenced from the time of the signing of the bill of lading and the liability of the common carrier shall attach as at common law from and after such signing so as to relieve a railroad company from liability for injury caused by placing cattle in its shipping pens and locking them up and not shipping them until the next day. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Dimmit County Pasture Co. 5 Tex. Civ. App. 186.

So, where it is the custom of a railroad company to feed animals consigned to it for carriage at the expense of the consignor during delay in transit, a request under the contagious diseases of animals act of 1878, § 33, will be implied, and the company will incur liability for any losses occasioned by leaving the animals unfed. Curran v. Midland G. W. R. Co. [1896] 2 Ir. Rep. 183.

And under an order of council made pursuant to the contagious diseases of animals act of 1878, § 32, subd. 21, requiring that a vessel used for carrying animals by sea should after landing the animals therefrom and before taking on board any other animals or cargo be cleansed and disinfected by having all parts of the vessel with which animals had come in contact scraped and washed, the part of the vessel with which animals had come in contact must be cleansed and disinfected according to the requirements of the order before a new cargo is placed on board, though the new cargo is not loaded in a place with which the animals had come in contact. Ismay v. Blake, 7 Asp. Mar. L. Cas. 189, 66 L. T. N. S. 530, 56 J. P. 486.

F. H. B.

cargo of cotton was received by a carrier for transportation, and was destroyed by fire on the boat, the carrier could not avail himself of an exemption from liability for loss by fire if he neglected to protect the cotton on the deck of the vessel by a complete and suitable covering of canvas or other suitable material to prevent ignition by sparks, as required under penalty by act of Congress, and this, too, although the act of Congress had been repealed before the case was tried. Carroll v. Staten Island R. Co. 58 N. Y. 126, 17 Am. Rep. 221; Fort Worth & D. O. R. Co. v. Daggett, 87 Tex. 322.

In addition to the claim for damages caused by and resulting from the failure of the defendant to perform its duty in allowing the stock to be unloaded, fed, watered, and permitted to rest, the plaintiff claims that the defendant did not furnish suitable and safe facilities for unloading the stock at Lynchburg, and for its failure to do so one of the horses had a knee joint so fractured that it produced lockjaw, from which the horse died. The defendant seems not to have had, in the language of its agent at Lynchburg, "the usual gangway for loading and unloading stock leading from the car to the ground." Its arrangement for unloading stock there was to take them out of the cars on the platform of the depot next to the railroad track, thence through the depot to the opposite side of the depot to a platform, which, according to the plaintiff's evidence, was from 3 to 4 feet wide. This platform extended along the side of the depot, sloping gradually down from the door of the depot to the street. The platform, at the highest point, is from 2 to 2½ feet from the ground. One side of the platform was against the depot, so that stock could not get off of it on that side, but the other side had no railing to prevent stock from stepping or being crowded off of it. The horse which died of lockjaw, together with a mule, the evidence tended to show, was crowded or jumped off of the platform on its unprotected side, and received the injury referred to.

The defendant's evidence tends to prove that this platform had long been used by it for loading and unloading horses, and no injury had theretofore resulted from its use, and that it was safe and suitable for that purpose; that the plaintiff's agent did not lead his horses and mules out of the car, as he ought to have done, but allowed some of them to go out without anyone holding them, and was thus guilty of such contributory negligence as would prevent a recovery, even if the facilities for unloading were not suitable and safe. The facilities for unloading were not such as are usually provided. The evidence is conflicting. This was peculiarly a question for the determination of a jury, and we cannot say that its verdict upon this point, which was approved by the trial court, was not supported by the evidence.

The next and last assignment of error is that the court failed to instruct the jury that § 4386 of the Revised Statutes of the United States did not embrace or refer to horses and mules, but did embrace and refer only to cattle and other animals intended for food and erred in giving in lieu thereof the following instruction, to wit:

"That if the jury should find for the plaintiff, in estimating its damages, they will exclude all such injuries as the said horses and mules received before they came into the charge of the defendant company at Covington, Kentucky, and should estimate and allow such damages to said horses and mules as they shall find from the evidence to be due to their confinement for a period (if such there was) greater than that prescribed in § 4386 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in the cars in which they were brought by the defendant from Covington, Kentucky, to Lynchburg, Virginia."

From what has heretofore been said in this opinion, it is clear that the court properly refused to give an instruction that horses and mules were not embraced within the provisions of § 4386 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The objection urged to the instruction which was given is that "the court ought to have left it to the jury to decide upon the evidence in the case whether or not the unloading was prevented by 'accidental causes,' and whether or not the horses and mules were carried in cars in which they did, and could have proper food, water, space, and opportunity to rest, 'inasmuch as there would be no liability on the defendant under the statute if the unloading was prevented from accidental cause, or if the animals were carried in the manner set forth in § 4388 of the Revised Statutes.'"

There was no evidence whatever tending to show that the horses and mules of the plaintiff were not unloaded as required by § 4386 because of "a storm or other accidental cause," as these words have been construed by the courts of the United States. In the case of Newport News & M. Valley Co. v. United States, decided by the circuit court of appeals, and reported in 22 U. S. App. 145, 61 Fed. Rep. 488, 9 C. C. A. 579, it was held that the carrier in a criminal prosecution under that statute for failure to unload stock must show, in order to escape the penalty imposed by the statute, not only that there was in fact a storm, but that with due care he was prevented, as an unavoidable result of the storm, from complying with the law. If the storm is no excuse, said the court, unless its unavoidable effect was to prevent compliance, then it follows that no other accidental causes would be an excuse, unless the cause and its effect would be likewise unavoidable. The meaning of the general words "other accidental causes" must be ascertained by referring to the preceding special words. The rule noscitur a sociis is clearly applicable. A storm is unavoidable in the sense that it cannot be prevented. "Other accidental causes" must be taken to mean other unavoidable accidental causes. An effect attributable to the negligence of the appellant is not an unavoidable cause.

There is evidence showing that the defendant's train was delayed for some hours west of the Ohio river on account of high water and a washout, but there is no evidence tending to show that for this cause, or because of a storm or other accidental cause, the defendant was prevented from unloading the stock for more than sixty hours, and until it had reached Greenbriar, West Virginia. In the case of Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Heggie, 86 Ga. 210, cited above, it was held that the fact that the stock yards of the railroad company in that case were on fire when the train passed Nashville was no sufficient excuse for not stopping the car five hours there, or at some other station, as provided for in the statute, so that the stock, after they had been in the cars twenty-eight consecutive hours, might be unloaded, fed, and watered.

Section 4388 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides, among other things, that "when animals are carried in cars, boats, or other vessels in which they can and do have proper food, water, space, and opportunity to rest, the provisions in regard to their being unloaded shall not apply."

There was evidence tending to show that the cars upon which the stock was carried from Covington, Kentucky, were a superior kind of stock cars, 2 feet longer than the cars in which they were carried to Covington, and provided with racks and troughs in which to feed and water.

If § 4388 rendered it unnecessary to unload stock where they can and do have proper food and water upon the cars, the objection to the instruction would have been valid; but the statute does away with the requirement to unload only when the stock is carried in cars, etc., and in which they can and do "have proper food, water, space and opportunity for rest." There is no evidence tending to show that there was space and opportunity for rest in the cars in which the plaintiff's stock was shipped. In fact, it is evident that forty-three horses and mules, carried in two cars, which were only 2 feet longer than ordinary stock cars, had neither space nor opportunity for rest on the cars.

The instruction under the evidence of the case, we think, was plainly right.

We are of opinion, therefore, that there is no error in the proceedings of the Circuit Court, and that its judgment should be affirmed.

James B. PACE, Appt.,
v.

W. G. PACE, Admr., etc., of John R. Pace, Deceased, et al.

(95 Va. 792.)

A surety who has been obliged to pay the obligation can prove the entire debt against the insolvent estate of his cosurety, and receive dividends upon the entire debt until reimbursed that half of the common burden belonging to the cosurety.

(April 7, 1898.)

NOTE.—For contribution between cosureties in general, see note to Bushnell v. Bushnell (Wis.) 9 L. R. A. 411.

For rights of surety on payment of judgment see Frank v. Fraylor (Ind.) 16 L. R. A. 115, and note.

44 L. R. A.

A PPEAL by petitioner from a decree of the Corporation Court of Danville allowing him to prove for only half instead of the whole liability which petitioner and decedent had sustained on a surety bond and which petitioner had been compelled to pay in full. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Christian & Christian, for appellant:

When James B. Pace paid the note, he became entitled to two things, namely: Contribution from John R. Pace's estate, which was a claim in personam, for one half of the debt, and subrogation to all the rights, remedies, and means of payment of William F. Cheek, the creditor, against John R. Pace's estate, which right of subrogation was a right in rem. He had the right to require William F. Cheek to avail himself of all means he had for collecting the debt of John R. Pace to his relief beyond the moiety of the debt, or, if he paid it, to be subrogated to those means of indemnity and protection.

Brandt, Suretyship, § 269; Sheldon, Subrogation, § 140; Lidderdale v. Robinson, 2 Brock. 159; Robertson v. Trigg, 32 Gratt. 76.

This doctrine will not be denied as between principal and surety. It applies in precisely the same manner between cosureties.

Lidderdale v. Robinson, 2 Brock. 167; Robertson v. Trigg, 32 Gratt. 85; Powell v. White, 11 Leigh, 309; Watts v. Kinney, 3 Leigh, 272, 23 Am. Dec. 286; Miller's Appeal, 35 Pa. 481.

While J. B. Pace, when he paid the debt after the death of John R. Pace, became entitled by contribution to a personal claim against John R. Pace's estate for only one half of the debt, he became entitled by subrogation to be substituted to the creditor's right to this ascertainable proportion of John R. Pace's estate, which the creditor held for his relief and indemnity.

Enders v. Brune, 4 Rand. (Va.) 444; Watts v. Kinney, 3 Leigh, 272, 23 Am. Dec. 286; Powell v. White, 11 Leigh, 309; Hess's Estate, 69 Pa. 272.

A creditor holding collaterals, is not bound to apply them before enforcing his direct remedies against the debtor.

Lewis v. United States, 92 U. S. 618, 23 L. ed. 513.

Even though the creditor realizes upon the collaterals, he can, when he comes to prove the claim, notwithstanding, prove for the entire debt.

McClintock's Appeal, 29 Pa. 360; People v. E. Remington & Sons, 121 N. Y. 328, 8 L. R. A. 458; Allen v. Danielson, 15 R. I. 480; Logan v. Anderson, 18 B. Mon. 114; Citizens' Bank v. Patterson, 78 Ky. 291; Brown v. Merchants & F. Nat. Bank, 79 N. C. 244; Kellogg v. Miller, 22 Or. 406; Miller's Estate, 82 Pa. 113, 22 Am. Rep. 754; Graeff's Appeal, 79 Pa. 146; Patten's Appeal, 45 Pa. 151, 84 Am. Dec. 479; Miller's Appeal, 35 Pa. 481; Southern Michigan Nat. Bank v. Byles, 67 Mich. 296; Citizens' Bank v. Kendrick, 92 Tenn. 437; Brough's Estate, 71 Pa. 460; Eastern Trops. Bank v.

Vermont Nat. Bank, 22 Fed. Rep. 186; Chemical Nat. Bank v. Armstrong, 16 U. S. App. 465, 59 Fed. Rep. 372, 8 C. C. A. 155, 28 L. R. A. 231; Merrill v. National Bank, 41 U. S. App. 529, 75 Fed. Rep. 148, 21 C. C. A. 282; London & S. F. Bank v. Williamette Steam-Mill, Lumbering & Mfg. Co. 80 Fed. Rep. 226; Re Bates, 118 Ill. 524, 59 Am. Rep. 383; Findlay v. Hosmer, 2 Conn. 350; Moses v. Ranlet, 2 N. H. 488.

Where there are two debtors jointly bound, and they die insolvent, or where there are two debtors jointly bound, and they make an assignment for the benefit of creditors, in either case, the rights of the creditors to their just proportion of the estates become fixed as of the date of the death, or the assignment; and all the creditors are entitled to prove for their entire debts as they existed at that date, although they may have in the meantime realized from the other debtor's estate, or assigned property, a portion of their claim.

Morton v. Caldwell, 3 Strobb. Eq. 166; Wilson v. McConnell, 9 Rich. Eq. 500; Ex parte Stokes, De G. Bankr. Cas. 618; Re Parker [1894] 3 Ch. 400; Brown v. Merchants' & F. Nat. Bank, 79 N. C. 244; Citizens' Bank v. Kendrick, 92 Tenn. 437; Greene v. Jackson Bank, 18 R. I. 779; Winston v. Biggs, 117 N. C. 206.

The question involved here has been presented in at least two cases decided in England, and in both cases was decided conformably with our contention.

Ex parte Stokes, De G. Bankr. Cas. 618; Re Parker [1894] 3 Ch. 400; Sheldon, Subrogation, § 135.

It is supported by the direct decision of the supreme court of Pennsylvania in Hess's Estate, 69 Pa. 212; Watts v. Kinney, 3 Leigh, 272, 23 Am. Dec. 266.

The entire debt is considered, not for the purpose of making a personal decree in favor of the solvent surety against the deceased surety's estate, but for the purpose of ascertaining the true amount of the fund which the creditor had in his hands or under his control, in the eyes of a court of equity, which stood in his hands as a security to him and indemnification to the cosurety, and it is to this fund or security or means of payment that the solvent surety is entitled to resort upon the payment of the entire debt, as a security, for the purpose of securing to him the repayment of the contributory share of the debt to which his cosurety was justly liable.

See 3 Minor. Inst. pt. 1, p. 427.

Mr. E. E. Bouldin, for appellees:

The right of contribution arises between sureties where one has been called on to make good the principal's default, and has paid more than his share of the entire liability.

Lamplough v. Brathewait, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. in Eq. 5th Am. ed. Hare & W.'s notes, *71; Enders v. Brune, 4 Rand. (Va.) 438; Douglass v. Fagg, 8 Leigh, 588.

But he can only call for contribution when he has paid more than his proportion of the debt, and then for no more than the excess.

44 L. R. A.

Lytle v. Pope, 11 B. Mon. 309; Rutherford v. Branch Bank, 14 Ala. 92; Story, Eq. Jur. § 492; 1 Parsons, Contr. p. 32.

J. B. Pace has simply paid half of this debt to which, as between him and John R. Pace, the latter was bound, and therefore must contribute as under a promise to do so. This is not a superior claim to the other creditors of John R. Pace, and the law gives him no priority. As John R. Pace's estate is insolvent, and his creditors will not be paid in full, J. B. Pace desires to receive on this claim more than other creditors whose debts are as large.

As between J. B. and John R. Pace, John R. Pace never did owe and never could be made to pay more than his half.

If the creditors had sued both in a court of equity, and it was no prejudice to him, the court would have ordered each to pay half.

Sheldon, Subrogation, § 149.

J. B. Pace should not receive more than his pro rata on the debt John R. Pace owed him.

On petition for rehearing.

If Cheek had had a lien or priority he could have collected all John R. Pace owed before other creditors could collect any. But Cheek had no lien or priority. So, J. B. Pace's right and remedy are contribution, not substitution. John R. Pace must contribute his part of that debt.

Enders v. Brune, 4 Rand. (Va.) 438; Douglass v. Fagg, 8 Leigh, 588.

But he can only call for contribution when he has paid more than his proportion of the debt, and then for no more than the excess.

Adams, Eq. *269.

When J. B. Pace was not allowed, by the commissioners, to prove for no more than the excess, he complained that he was not allowed to prove that John R. Pace owed him more than his very statement on its face showed.

Watts v. Kinney, 3 Leigh, 272, 23 Am. Dec. 266.

If there had been a suit by Cheek against J. B. Pace, heard with this suit, and it appeared that he would not have been prejudiced thereby, the court would have made him get a decree for only half against John R. Pace and the other against J. B. Pace, because that would have been justice as to other creditors.

Winston v. Biggs, 117 N. C. 206; 2 Am. & Eng. Dec. in Equity, 420.

Mr. George C. Cabell also for appellees.

Harrison, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The facts of this case, in brief, are that on April 7, 1893, one T. J. Talbott (under the name of Pace, Talbott, & Co.), John R. Pace, and James B. Pace made a note for $16,000, payable to William F. Cheek or order, one hundred and twenty days after date. T. J. Talbott was the principal in the note, and John R. Pace and James B. Pace cosureties. T. J. Talbott died in the fall of 1894, entirely insolvent. Prior to his death, to wit, on October 9, 1893, John R. Pace died, leaving an estate not sufficient to pay more than 50 cents on the dollar of his debts. In May, 1894, this suit was brought to administer John R. Pace's estate, and a decree of reference was entered in July, 1894. On the 19th of September, 1895, being pressed by the executors of the creditor, William F. Cheek, James B. Pace took up the note in question by paying $16,551.57, the entire amount, principal and unpaid interest, to that time. Thereupon James B. Pace tendered proof of these facts to the commissioner in this suit, and claimed to rank in the distribution of John R. Pace's estate for the whole of the debt so paid by him, until he had received one half of the amount paid by him; but the commissioner reported that he could only rank for one half the debt, and an exception made by James B. Pace on that ground was overruled by the court below, from which ruling this appeal was taken.

The contention of the appellee is that J. B. Pace could not rank against the estate of his cosurety for the whole debt when the cosurety only owed him one half of the debt; in other words, that appellant had no right to prove for the one half of the debt which he himself was primarily bound to pay.

The question presented is an important one in the administration of insolvent estates, and there is some conflict of opinion in respect thereto. We are, however, satisfied that the view taken by the learned counsel for the appellant is sustained by the best reason and the weight of authority.

In Enders v. Brune, 4 Rand. (Va.) 447, Judge Carr, in discussing the doctrine of substitution, says: "It has nothing of form, nothing of technicality, about it; and he who, in administering it, would stick in the letter, forgets the end of its creation, and perverts the spirit which gave it birth. It is the creature of equity, and real essential justice is its object."

The doctrine is well settled that the surety has the right of substitution against the estate of his principal, where payment of a preferred debt has been made by such surety after the death of the principal; and the rule of substitution for the purpose of enforcing contribution among cosureties is not different. One surety who pays the common debt is entitled to be subrogated to all the rights and remedies of the creditor, as against his cosureties, in precisely the same manner as against the principal debtor. Robertson v. Trigg, 32 Gratt. 76; Dering v. Winchelsea, 1 White & T. Lead. Cas. in Eq. 3d Am. ed. p. 131, and notes.

In Ex parte Stokes, De G. Bankr. Cas. 618, Stokes, the creditor, held a bond executed by a principal and three sureties. Two of the sureties, Clark and Philips, became bankrupts, and Stokes, the creditor, proved against their estates. Thereafter the principal debtor compounded with his creditors; and the other surety, Thomas Charles Ord, executed an assignment for the benefit of his. Stokes, the creditor, by dividends, received from the principal debtor, from the estate of Clark, one of the sureties, and from Thomas Charles Ord, realized his whole debt to the payment whereof the remaining surety, Philips, contributed nothing. The creditor realized from the estate of Thomas Charles Ord 10s in the pound, whereas the just proportion payable by each surety was only 4s 10d in the pound. Thereupon the assignees of Thomas Charles Ord petitioned for leave to stand in the place of the creditor for his entire debt as against the estate of Philips, which had paid nothing, so as to realize from that estate its just proportion, viz. 4s 10d in the pound. The petition was allowed, Sir J. L. Knight Bruce saying: "The question then substantially is whether, as between the estates of the two sureties, when (one of them having become bankrupt) the creditor has proved the debt under the fiat, and has afterwards been paid in full, partly by the principal debtor, and partly by the surety, not a bankrupt,—the latter has the right to use the proof for the purpose of obtaining from the bankrupt's estate that amount of contribution to which the bankrupt is, or but for the bankruptcy would have been, liable, so far as the proof can furnish means for that end; and I think that he has. Where several persons are liable, each in solido, to a debt, the creditor may enforce payment in a manner which, as between the debtors themselves, is unjust. This must sometimes happen; but in such cases it is not the function and the duty of a court of justice, at least of a court of equity, to place them in the same situation, between themselves, as if the creditor had enforced his rights against them in a manner conformable to their rights against each other so far as it can be done? Generally speaking, the law of the country, as I apprehend, answers that question in the affirmative. Now, in the present case, had Mr. Stokes regulated his proceedings in such a manner, a portion of what he has received from Mr. Thomas Charles Ord's estate would have been taken by Mr. Stokes from Mr. Philips's estate, if available for the purpose. The mere circumstance that it has not until the present time become practically available for the purpose is, I conceive, nothing. This has not been done; but justice requires, I apprehend, that the nearest possible approach to that state of things shall take place, which must, I suppose, be effected by allowing the claim intended to be made by the present petition. Mr. Clark's estate, unless I mistake, has paid 5s in the pound, but not more; while, I collect, that Mr. Thomas Charles Ord's estate has paid 10s in the pound, and Mr. Philips's estate as yet nothing. . . . I repeat, that it was originally equitable between these sureties, or their estates, that the benefit of the proof, or some portion of it, should go in diminution of Mr. T. Charles Ord's burden: that, in my view, it was not competent to Mr. Stokes, by any election upon his part, to deprive Mr. Thomas Charles Ord's estate of that right: that it could not, I think, be defeated by delays and difficulties occurring in the liquidation or collection of Mr. Philips's assets: and that the right appears to me substantially to have continued and now to exist."

In the case of Morgan v. Hill [1894] 3

Ch. 400, a debt was owing by a principal debtor and five sureties. Nothing could be realized from the principal debtor, or from one of the sureties, and only a very insignificant sum from another of the sureties. So, three of the sureties were left to bear the liability. One of these three made an assignment, which, after the payment of specified prior claims, provided for the payment of his remaining debts ratably. The creditor presented his claim for payment to the trustees in the assignment, but, before the trustees paid anything thereon, the debt was paid by the other two sureties, who subsequently also took from the creditor an assignment of his debt and securities. These two sureties then claimed the right to receive a dividend from the assigned estate of their cosurety on the whole amount of the debt paid by them, until they had received one third thereof, that being the just proportion payable by each surety; and this claim was allowed by Kekewich, J., and on appeal his order was affirmed.

Kekewich, J., who decided the case in the lower court, said: "Two out of three sureties paid the whole debt, and, having so done, they are entitled to stand in the shoes of the creditor whose whole debt they have paid. That would seem to be according to natural justice; but, whether it be so or not, at all events it is strictly in accordance with the provisions of the mercantile law amendment act of 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. chap. 97).

"A surety in such a case is to stand in the place of the creditor, and to use all the remedies, and if need be, and upon a proper indemnity, to use the name, of the creditor in any action to obtain indemnification."

The reference of the learned judge to the mercantile law amendment act, as justifying his conclusion, if not justified by its conformity to "natural justice," is a circumstance that does not detract from the weight of this case as an authority in this state, because that act was passed to do away with the doctrine laid down in Copis v. Middleton [Turn. & R. 224], which was disapproved by this court in Powell v. White, 11 Leigh, 309, in a learned opinion by Judge Tucker, and the act referred to simply declared the law in England to be what it had theretofore been under our decisions.

In Hess's Estate, 69 Pa. 272, the precise question involved here was presented, and the supreme court of Pennsylvania held that the surety paying the debt, after the death of his cosurety, was entitled to prove against his estate for the entire amount of the debt. The court says:

"The debts paid by Christian Lintner, and transferred to him, stand exactly in the same position to the assets of the decedent, Henry Hess, as if presented by the creditors themselves; their status being fixed by his death, and nothing having occurred to change or reduce the amount. So far as they existed as debts payable out of the estate, no part of them is paid or extinguished, for the effect of subrogation is to consider them in full life, and enjoying all the rights of the original creditors.

"We regard the administrators of the 44 L. R. A.

decedent as trustees, and the creditors cestuis que trust owners of their share of the assets, and which, applying the principle in Miller's Appeal, 35 Pa. 481, and Patten's Appeal, 45 Pa. 151, 84 Am. Dec. 479, passed to the cosurety, who stepped into their shoes when he paid the amount due on such claims."

In the case of Miller's Appeal, 35 Pa. 481, an insolvent debtor had executed a general assignment for the benefit of all his creditors. Subsequently, the assignor became entitled to a legacy which was attached by one of the creditors; and from that attachment he realized a portion of his debt. It was held that such creditor was, notwithstanding, entitled to a dividend of the assigned estate on the whole amount of his claim as it stood at the time the assignment was made.

In this case, Judge Strong (afterwards of the Supreme Court of the United States) said: "By the deed of assignment the equitable ownership of all the assigned property passed to the creditors. They became joint proprietors; and each creditor owned such a proportionate part of the whole as the debt due to him was of the aggregate of the debts. The extent of his interest was fixed by the deed of trust. It was, indeed, only equitable; but, whatever it was, he took it under the deed, and it was only as a part owner that he had any standing in court when the distribution came to be made. . . . It amounts to very little to argue that Miller's recovery of the . . . [legacy] operated with precisely the same effect as if a voluntary payment had been made by the assignor after his assignment; that is, that it extinguished the debt to the amount recovered. No doubt, it did. But it is not as a creditor that he is entitled to a distributive share of the trust fund. His rights are those of an owner, by virtue of the deed of assignment. The amount of the debt due to him is important only so far as it determines the extent of his ownership. The reduction of that debt, therefore, after creation of the trust, and after his ownership had become vested, it would seem, must be immaterial."

There are many cases holding that where a creditor of an insolvent person, who is dead, or has made an assignment for the general benefit of creditors, holds collateral security for his debt, and, after the death or the assignment of his debtor, realizes on the collaterals, he may, notwithstanding, prove against the decedent's estate or the assigned estate for the full amount of his debt as it stood at the time of the death or assignment. The grounds upon which these cases proceed are ably set forth in the opinion of Judge Taft in Chemical Nat. Bank v. Armstrong, 16 U. S. App. 465, 59 Fed. Rep. 380, 8 C. C. A. 163, 28 L. R. A. 231, in which he reviews all the authorities.

The only case involving the question here presented, cited by appellee, is that of New Bedford Inst. for Sav. Bank v. Hathaway, 134 Mass. 69, 45 Am. Rep. 289. In this case the holder of a note, by an arrangement with a solvent surety thereon, proved the note against the insolvent estate of another surety, and then assigned the note with his claim against the estate to the solvent surety, who paid the holder in full. The court held that this amounted to a payment of the note, ordered the proof to be expunged, and only allowed the surety to prove one half of the claim. In this conclusion we cannot concur. There are three authorities cited in its support, which are not, in our judgment, entitled to the weight given them. The one chiefly relied on is Maxwell v. Heron [3 Ross, Lead. Cas. 129], a Scotch case, which, if applicable, has been overruled in England, and the law there settled, as we have seen, to the contrary.

It further appears that the decisions of the Massachusetts court upon analogous questions have not been in accord with the views of this and other courts upon like questions.

An important, if not vital, objection to the Massachusetts view of this question, is that the rights of the surety, instead of being fixed and certain, are made to depend upon accident, or upon the caprice of the creditor. It encourages a policy of obstruction in the administration of estates; for, if those interested in the insolvent estate can delay its settlement until the creditor demands his debt from the solvent surety, they reap the advantage by having a smaller debt to share with them in its distribution. On the other hand, temptation is held out for a corresponding effort on the part of the solvent surety to avoid paying, until the creditor has received such dividends as the insolvent estate will pay, because the amount for which he is liable is thereby reduced. It gives opportunity to the creditor, by collusion or otherwise, to further the interest of one surety at the expense of the just and equal rights of the cosurety.

Results like these, which depend, not upon the rights of the parties fixed by law, but upon the superior skill of one over the other in maneuvering for position, or upon the will and caprice of the creditor, or upon mere accident, cannot be founded upon sound principles.

In Watts v. Kinney, 3 Leigh, 272, 23 Am. Dec. 266, Judge Tucker, speaking for this court, says: The surety, in paying the debt, "is governed by the law of this court. Even on entering into his engagement as surety, he looks to its well-established principles. He knows, if he pays the debt to the obligee, he will stand in the obligee's shoes. He knows he will be subrogated to all the rights of the obligee, as they subsist at the time he makes his payment. He knows that a court of equity looks not to form, but to substance; that it looks to the debt which is to be paid, not to the hand which may happen to hold it; that the fund charged with its payment shall be so applied, whosoever may be the person entitled; and that it considers a debt as never discharged until it is discharged by payment to the proper person, and by the proper person. He knows that that court, which permits no act of a trustee to prejudice the cestui que trust, will not permit one who stands in the relation of the creditor or obligee to the surety to bar him of those rights which the principles of equity have secured to him. He is conscious that his rights do not depend upon the caprice of the creditor, or the whim of an executor, or the sense of right of other creditors, but rest upon the immutable principles of justice and equity; and, in making his payment, he does it in the confidence that he will be entitled to be indemnified to the full amount to which his creditor could have charged the assets of the principal."

These considerations bring us, in the case at bar, to the conclusion that John R. Pace's estate and James B. Pace were each bound in solido to their common creditor William F. Cheek for the entire amount of the debt in question; that, at the death of John R. Pace, the rights of his creditors became fixed, the assets of the estate passing, as a trust fund, into the hands of his representatives charged with the payment of his debts; that, subject to costs of administration and preferred debts, William F. Cheek then became entitled to an interest in said estate, not then ascertained, but capable of being made certain, bearing such proportion to the entire assets as his debt bore to the entire indebtedness; that when James B. Pace, the surety, paid his debt, he became at once subrogated to all the rights, remedies, and means of payment, in respect thereto, that were possessed by the creditor, and had the right to prove, as the creditor could have done, the entire debt against the estate of his cosurety, John R. Pace, and to receive dividends upon the basis of the entire debt until reimbursed that half of the common burden belonging to the cosurety. This conclusion works no injustice to the other creditors of John R. Pace. Their rights, which became fixed at the death of the debtor, remain unimpaired. They had no interest in that proportion of the assets belonging to William F. Cheek. That interest was as distinct and separate from theirs as if it had been already segregated and set apart for the benefit of William F. Cheek. They could not add to or take from it while it was the property of Cheek; nor can they do so now that it stands, in equity, as indemnity for the surety who has paid it.

For these reasons, the decree appealed from must be reversed, and the cause remanded, to be proceeded with in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion.

Cardwell, J., absent. Buchanan, J., absent, interested in case involving same question.

Rehearing denied.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

Hugh P. FARRELLY

v.

George E. COLE, State Auditor.

(.....Kan.....)

- *1. The Constitution of this state confers the supreme executive power upon the governor, and provides that he may, on extraordinary occasions, convene the legislature by proclamation. Such proclamation was issued, calling the members of the legislature together in extra session nineteen days before the time fixed by law for a meeting of the regular session. The proclamation did not expressly state that an extraordinary occasion had arisen, but it referred to the power vested in the governor by the Constitution to make such call. This was followed by a message to the members convened, suggesting that legislation was demanded by the people respecting freight rates to be charged by railroad companies. Held, that an extraordinary occasion was presented, within the meaning of the Constitution.
2. The question of the existence of an extraordinary occasion of sufficient gravity to justify a call for an extra session of the legislature is to be determined by the governor alone, in the exercise of his discretion as a sworn officer, and this discretion is not subject to challenge or review by the courts.
3. Chapter 171 of the Laws of 1897, apportioning the state into representative districts (which went into effect on June 1, 1898, and repealed all acts in conflict with it), did not terminate the existence of the house of representatives of 1897, nor shorten the term of office of its members. A member of the legislature, unlike a county or township officer, has no official functions to perform within the district or territory from which he is elected. The division of the state into legislative districts is only a provision for future elections, and is not designed to affect the title to office or tenure of the members making the apportionment.
4. The Constitution fixes the term of office of members of the legislature for two years, but does not expressly provide when their terms shall begin. In the absence of such a provision, it is competent for the legislature to fix the commencement of the term. This has been done by statute, which provides that the regular term of office for members of the senate and house of representatives shall commence on the second Tuesday of January next succeeding their election.

(March 11, 1899.)

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to compel defendant to audit and allow the amount of a voucher for services as legislator at a special session of the state legislature. Granted.

*Headnotes by SMITH, J.

NOTE.—As to extra sessions of the legislature, see also Wells v. Missouri P. R. Co. (Mo.) 15 L. R. A. 847, and note; also People, Carter, v. Rice (N. Y.) 16 L. R. A. 836.
44 L. R. A.

Statement by Smith, J.:

On February 2, 1899, the plaintiff, Hugh P. Farrelly, filed in this court his petition and affidavit praying for an alternative writ of mandamus against the defendant, George E. Cole, auditor, alleging that at the regular general election in November, 1896, plaintiff was duly elected state senator for the thirteenth senatorial district of the state of Kansas, and duly qualified as such; that as such state senator he attended and performed the duties of his office at a legal session of the legislature of the state of Kansas commencing on the 21st day of December, 1898, and concluding on the 9th day of January, 1899, and that as said state senator he performed the duties of his office in the said session of the legislature from the 31st day of December, 1898, to the 7th day of January, 1899, inclusive, and by reason of said services became entitled to compensation, payable out of the treasury of the state of Kansas, in the sum of $24, and that on the 7th day of January, 1899, he received from the secretary of the senate of the state of Kansas a voucher for the said sum of $24 due him, which voucher was duly attested according to law by the secretary of the senate; that afterwards, on the 10th day of January, 1899, he presented the said voucher, duly sworn to and attested, to George E. Cole, auditor of the state of Kansas, and demanded that he draw his warrant upon the treasurer of the state to the amount of said voucher, payable to the plaintiff; and that said George E. Cole refused, and still refuses, to comply with said demand. An alternative writ was issued, conformable to the prayer of said petition; and thereafter, and on February 8, 1899, the defendant filed his answer and return thereto, setting forth his reasons for refusing to comply with the commands of said writ, in substance as follows: That the only attempted appropriation by which it is claimed that moneys mentioned in said writ could be withdrawn from the treasury of the state of Kansas, and the only authority under which it is claimed that the defendant should audit and allow the claim of the plaintiff, were conditioned upon the provisions of two certain pretended acts of the legislature claimed to have been passed at a pretended session of said legislature held at Topeka, Kansas, commencing on the 21st day of December, 1898, the same being house bill No. 72, entitled "An Act Making an Appropriation for the Legislative Department and General Expenses Incidental to the Special Session of 1898," and house bill No. 90, entitled "An Act Making an Appropriation for the Legislative Department and General Expenses Incidental to the Special Session of 1898 and 1899;" that each of said pretended acts of said pretended legislature were null and void, and of no force and effect whatever, and constitute no authority, in law or otherwise, by which the defendant could proceed to audit and allow the said claim, or any part thereof, for the following reasons, to wit: "That on the 15th day of December, 1898, the Honorable John W. Leedy, as governor of the state of Kansas, issued his proclamation in the words and figures as follows, to wit:

Proclamation. Executive Department.
Topeka, Kan., December 15, 1898.

Whereas, assurances have reached me to the effect that, if the legislature shall be convened, suitable legislation for the regulation of railroad charges can be enacted, and deeming such matter of sufficient importance to justify the convening of the legislature in special session: Now, therefore, I, J. W. Leedy, governor of the state of Kansas, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution of the state, do hereby convene the legislature of the state of Kansas to meet at the capital of the state, at the hour of four o'clock P. M., on the 21st day of December, 1898. In testimony whereof, I have hereunto subscribed my name, and caused to be affixed the great seal of the state of Kansas. Done at the city of Topeka on the day and year first above written.

J. W. Leedy, Governor.

Attest: W. E. Bush, Secretary of State.

"That no material changes had been made in the charges of railroad companies doing business within the state of Kansas, for the transportation of persons or property, within two years prior to the issuing of said proclamation, and none were threatened or impending at the time said proclamation was issued, and no unusual or material change had taken place, affecting the nature of such traffic and transportation, with regard to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the prices charged therefor by said corporations, nor were any such changes threatened at the time said proclamation was issued. That no extraordinary occasion existed on or about the 15th day of December, 1898, or the 21st day of December, 1898, authorizing the governor of the state of Kansas to convene the legislature of said state in special session, and no sufficient reason or excuse existed for the issuing of the proclamation hereinbefore set forth, and for the convening of the legislature of said state in special session. That on the 21st day of December, 1898, in pursuance of the proclamation above set forth, and without any other warrant or authority of law or otherwise, and without any reason or excuse for so doing, the members of the house of representatives elected at the general election held in 1896, with the exception of Hon. I. E. Lambert, of the 47th representative district, Hon. Frank T. Patten, of the 74th representative district, Hon. John Heckman, of the 105th representative district, Hon. Chas. E. Lobdell, of the 115th representative district, and Hon. C. A. Maxwell, of the 120th representative district, met in a pretended special session at the city of Topeka, Shawnee county, Kansas, and in lieu of the parties above mentioned there were present, attending and taking part in said pretended special session, Hon. Chas. Harris, claiming to represent said 47th representative district, Hon. W. C. Miller, claiming to represent said 74th representative district, Hon. James Sutcliffe, claiming to represent said 105th representative district, Hon. S. L. Fillson, claiming to represent said 115th representative district, and Hon. Frank Byers, claiming to represent said 120th representative district; and at the same time the members of the state senate of the state of Kansas also met at the state house in the city of Topeka, Shawnee county, Kansas, in pursuance of said proclamation pretending to convene as a special session of the senate of the state of Kansas. That all the members of said house of representatives so convened at Topeka on the 21st day of December, 1898, with the exception of said Chas. Harris, W. C. Miller, James Sutcliffe, S. L. Fillson, and Frank Byers, were chosen at the general election of 1896, and that all the members of said house, except those last above mentioned, and except John Seaton, J. M. Goodno, E. Loomis, A. L. Brooke, E. D. McKeever, H. A. Smith, R. B. Moore, Geo. T. Polson, Ed. Jaquins, F. P. Gillispie, E. R. Burkholder, S. S. Longley, Lot Ravenscraft, Alfred Lawson, Josiah Crosby, and H. F. Geissler, who had at the general election held in November, 1898, been elected members of the house of representatives of the state of Kansas from the representative districts in which they were then respectively residing, had no title or claim to their respective offices as members of the house of representatives of the state of Kansas, save and except that conferred upon them by, through, and under the said election of November, 1896, and the proceedings had in pursuance thereof." The answer and return then sets out the names of the members of said pretended house of representatives, and the numbers of the respective districts from which they were elected, being the districts created by chapter 4 of the Session Laws of 1891. It next sets out the names of the members of the house of representatives chosen at the general election held in November, 1898, with the numbers of the respective representative districts from which they were chosen, being the districts mentioned in the apportionment act of 1897 (chapter 171 of the Laws of 1897). And further that, on the final passage of said pretended house bill No. 72 in said pretended house of representatives eighty-six persons, pretending to be members thereof (naming them), voted for said pretended bill, and that, on the final passage of said pretended house bill No. 90 in said pretended house of representatives, seventy-three persons, pretending to be members thereof (naming them), and pretending that said legislature was in legal session, voted for said pretended house bill. The answer and return specially denies that any act of the legislature of the state of Kansas directed or authorized the auditor of state to draw his warrant for the sum mentioned, in favor of said plaintiff, on account of or for the services or claim mentioned in said alternative writ. The matter was presented to this court upon a motion made by the plaintiff for the issuance of a peremptory writ of mandamus notwithstanding the answer and return of the auditor of state. The said motion was in legal effect a demurrer to the answer and return upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense to the petition and demand of the plaintiff.

Messrs. A. M. Harvey, Hungate & Thompson, and G. C. Clemens, for plaintiff:

The terms of members begin on the second Tuesday of January next after election.

People v. Fancher, 50 N. Y. 288.

The Constitution itself fixes the second Tuesday in January next after election as the beginning of legislative terms.

Section 6, art. 1.

The apportionment act did not abolish the house of 1897.

The proclamation was lawful. This court has no power to say it was not lawful.

Cooley, Const. Lim. § 41; Whiteman v. Wilmington & S. R. Co. 2 Harr. (Del.) 525, 33 Am. Dec. 411; Veto Power, 9 Colo. 642; People v. Rice, 65 Hun, 236. Affirmed in 135 N. Y. 473, 16 L. R. A. 836; Re Legislative Adjournment, 18 R. I. 825, 22 L. R. A. 716; Vanderheyden v. Young, 11 Johns. 157; Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat. 19, 6 L. ed. 537; State, Martin, v. Farwell, 3 Pinney, 439; United States v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. 729, 8 L. ed. 561; Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137, 2 L. ed. 60; People, McCauley, v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 39; Weyand v. Stover, 35 Kan. 545; State, Johnson, v. Hitchcock, 1 Kan. 178, 81 Am. Dec. 503; Beach v. Leahy, 11 Kan. 23; Noffziger v. McAllister, 12 Kan. 315; Keyes v. Snyder, 15 Kan. 143; Knowles v. Topeka Bd. of Edu. 33 Kan. 692; Norton County Comrs. v. Shoemaker, 27 Kan. 77; State, Kellogg, v. Sanders, 42 Kan. 232; Hughes v. Milligan, 42 Kan. 396; State, Little, v. Lewelling, 51 Kan. 562.

The governor of Kansas, as governor, is in no sense inferior to this court.

Householder v. Morrill, 55 Kan. 317.

Whether the recited occasion was extraordinary is not a judicial question.

The Constitution does not require that the proclamation shall recite the occasion, any more than it requires that the journals shall recite a legislative emergency.

Broom, Legal Maxims, *559; Lothrop v. Stedman, 42 Conn. 584.

When the legislature of this state convenes in special session it is a legislature for all purposes, as fully as a regular session.

State v. Majors, 16 Kan. 443.

The recited occasion was extraordinary. Wells v. Missouri P. R. Co. 110 Mo. 286, 15 L. R. A. 847.

An issue of fact cannot be framed and tried by a jury or otherwise with a view of determining by its result the validity of an act of the legislature, but the court is to be confined to matters of which it may take judicial notice.

State, Atty. Gen., v. Cunningham, 81 Wis. 510, 15 L. R. A. 561.

The special session was the legislature de facto, and its acts are valid.

Hughes v. Felton, 11 Colo. 489; Parker v. State, Powell, 133 Ind. 200, 18 L. R. A. 567; State, Atty. Gen., v. Cunningham, 81 Wis. 44 L. R. A.

516, 15 L. R. A. 561; Riley v. Garfield Twp. 58 Kan. 299.

Mr. D. R. Hite, with Mr. A. A. Godard, Attorney General, for defendant:

The terms of the Constitution contain enumerated powers, and not restrictions upon inherent power.

Leavenworth County Comrs. v. Miller, 7 Kan. 479, 12 Am. Rep. 425.

Power to convene the legislature at all, conferred as it is in the grant containing the limitation, can only be exerted when the limitation exists.

There is a class of cases, which seems to support the view that the language employed by the framers of the Constitution confers uncontrollable, unreviewable discretion upon the governor.

Whiteman v. Wilmington & S. R. Co. 2 Harr. (Del.) 514, 33 Am. Dec. 411; Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat. 19, 6 L. ed. 537; Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137, 2 L. ed. 67; Veto Power, 9 Colo. 642; Re Legislative Adjournment, 18 R. I. 827, 22 L. R. A. 716.

But an almost unbroken line of authoritative decisions of courts whose respectability and learning are the pride of American jurisprudence held that the constitutional grant of judicial power to the courts gives to the judiciary, not only the right to examine the exercise by the legislature of legislative discretion, but also the power to declare acts in excess of such discretion absolutely void. 78 Federalist, ed. of Albert Scott & Co. vol. 1, p. 426; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77; Ames v. Union P. R. Co. 64 Fed. Rep. 165, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 835; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. ed. 819; Re Gunn, 50 Kan. 187, 19 L. R. A. 519; State, Lamb, v. Cunningham, 83 Wis. 90, 17 L. R. A. 145; Giddings v. Blocker, 93 Mich. 1, 16 L. R. A. 402; State, Guthrie, v. School Fund Comrs. 4 Kan. 262; Graham v. Horton, 6 Kan. 343; Bond Debt Cases, 12 S. C. 200; Martin v. Ingham, 38 Kan. 641; Dullam v. Willson, 53 Mich. 392, 51 Am. Rep. 128.

The question as to what constitutes an extraordinary occasion, like the question as to what constitutes an extraordinary expense, is one that may be governed and determined largely by circumstances.

The word "extraordinary" is not used in the Constitution in its popular sense, but used in contradistinction of "ordinary;" that is, it refers to cases which do not ordinarily occur in the transaction of human affairs.

Cox v. Hillyer, 65 Ga. 57; Bond Debt Cases, 12 S. C. 281.

The proclamation of the governor shows conclusively that the reason which induced him to convene the legislature in special session was the assurances which he had received from members of the legislature he intended to convene, and his message further shows affirmatively that no unusual or even special occasion existed.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. pp. 54-56; Re Gunn, 50 Kan. 157, 19 L. R. A. 519.

The Constitution provides, § 29, at the general election held in 1876 and thereafter, members of the house of representatives shall be elected for two years, and members of the senate shall be elected for four years.

The word "year" in the Constitution was intended to express its ordinary meaning—calendar year.

State, Crawford, v. Robinson, 1 Kan. 17; Howard v. State, Vawter, 10 Ind. 99.

The legislature can neither extend nor abridge the term of office fixed by the Constitution.

19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 562, note; People, Davidson, v. Perry, 79 Cal. 105; Griebel v. State, Niezer, 111 Ind. 369; Pursel v. State, Roney, 111 Ind. 519; Howard v. State, Vawter, 10 Ind. 99; Fant v. Gibbs, 54 Miss. 396; State, Atty. Gen., v. Brewster, 44 Ohio St. 589; People, Fowler, v. Bull, 46 N. Y. 57, 7 Am. Rep. 302; State, Goodin, v. Thoman, 10 Kan. 193.

An extraordinary session of the legislature called by the governor is not a part of the regular session of the same legislature which has been adjourned without day and so terminated.

People, Carter, v. Rice, 135 N. Y. 473, 16 L. R. A. 836.

Smith, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The questions involved are: (1) Did an extraordinary occasion exist, within the meaning of the constitutional provision providing for the call of an extra session of the legislature, on December 15, 1898, when the proclamation was issued? (2) Were the members of the house of representatives elected at the general election in November, 1896, who assembled in obedience to the proclamation of the governor, entitled to act as members of said house, and to vote upon the final passage of said appropriation bills? Section 3 of article 1 of the Constitution is as follows: "The supreme executive power of the state shall be vested in a governor, who shall see that the laws are faithfully executed." Section 5, art. 1, reads: "He may, on extraordinary occasions, convene the legislature by proclamation, and shall, at the commencement of every session, communicate in writing such information as he may possess in reference to the condition of the state, and recommend such measures as he may deem expedient." The sole power is thus deposited in the governor to convene the legislature on extraordinary occasions; and it has been uniformly held that he cannot be compelled by mandamus to act, should he refuse for any reason to exercise the power, nor be restrained by injunction in an attempt to exercise it. On the argument it was conceded by the defendant's counsel that in the trial of the issues raised by the return the court could only consider such matters as under the law it can take notice of judicially. While the return makes certain allegations which it would require evidence to establish, the consideration of such matters was, under the admission of counsel above stated, eliminated from the case. These averments are as follows: "(2) That no material changes had been made in the charges of railroad companies doing business within the state of Kansas, for the 44 L. R. A.

transportation of persons or property, within two (2) years prior to the issuing of said proclamation, and none were threatened or impending at the time such proclamation was issued, and no unusual or material change had taken place, affecting the nature of such traffic and transportation, with regard to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the prices charged therefor by said corporations; nor were any such changes threatened at the time said proclamation was issued." The admission made is significant. It goes to the proposition that a trial of the question of the existence of an extraordinary occasion cannot be had on evidence commonly resorted to in ordinary cases. We are not convinced, notwithstanding the admission of counsel, that the court ought to be thus restricted in the consideration of the case, if jurisdiction is retained; and the admission that, outside of its judicial knowledge, the court could not properly, by the hearing of evidence, gain further information of the matters in issue, tends to fortify the position of the plaintiff that no investigation of the constitutional question involved ought to be had in any court on evidence of any sort.

It is not contended that the proclamation of the governor need contain a statement that the occasion was extraordinary. It does state that, "by virtue of the authority vested in me [the governor] by the Constitution of the state, I do hereby convene the legislature of the state of Kansas to meet," etc. As the governor is wholly wanting in power to convene the legislature, except on extraordinary occasions, the language above quoted made it certain, by its reference to the Constitution, that an extraordinary occasion was meant. We are led to believe that, if the governor could have stopped with the proclamation, there would have been no contention over the legality of the call, and the subsequent acts of the legislature when assembled; but it is said that the message sent by him to the senate and house of representatives on December 21st conclusively shows that no extraordinary occasion existed. The message reads: "To the Senate and House of Representatives: Although the present executive and a majority of each house of the present legislature were elected under a pledge to the people to enact a maximum rate law, when the time arrived for fulfilling that pledge the menace of a judicial decision by the highest tribunal in the land, which would make legislative regulation of railroad charges practically impossible, caused many to doubt the wisdom of attempting the promised legislation; and such difference of opinion prevailed that the executive felt called upon to withhold his approval from the compromise measure finally passed. There was then pending undetermined in the Supreme Court of the United States a case which involved the question whether, as to railroad legislation, the legislatures of theoretically sovereign states should be reduced to the level of city councils or school-district boards, upon the reasonableness as well as the authority of whose acts courts may sit in judgment. The decision of that case, announced soon after the adjournment of the legislature, fully justified the fears and anticipations of those who deemed it futile to pass a maximum rate bill; for it rendered such an enactment a mere proposal of legislation, not a law, which must be submitted to the Federal court for approval or rejection. That decision declared that whether the rates of transportation prescribed by a legislature are reasonable is a judicial question, and that first a single Federal judge, and finally five Federal justices, may upon that question reverse and hold null the deliberate judgment of an entire legislature, with its numerous membership, acting under the same oath as the judges, and calmly deliberating for days in separate chambers; that the courts may sit in judgment, not merely upon the constitutional power of the legislature to legislate concerning the particular subject-matter, but upon the reasonableness of its acts, the power to act being conceded. At the same time the court declined, though urged, to lay down any definite rule by which, in advance of its judgment in each particular case, a legislature might be able to say whether suggested rates would be held reasonable or not; so that whether rates are reasonable can be determined only by a standard which must remain unknown to every human being but the justices of that court, save as they may vouchsafe to reveal it anew as each successive law comes before them to be destroyed. It follows that you can only suggest maximum rates; you cannot prescribe them. You can submit for approval a maximum rate proposition; you cannot enact a maximum rate law. However, while the people of Kansas have for years been demanding a maximum rate law, the real essence of their demand has been the regulation of railroad charges; and although we have been deprived of the power to redeem our pledge according to its very letter, it is still our duty to do what we can to redeem it according to its spirit, and, that this may be done, I have exercised the power given me by the Constitution to convene you in special session."

Being permitted to resort only to our judicial knowledge (the proclamation being conceded to be sufficient in its recitals), the evidence of a lack of power in the governor to do what he did is confined to the message. On this we are called upon to decide whether it discloses such an ordinary and commonplace occasion for the call as to compel a conclusion that no emergency existed. The question is thus narrowed down to whether the statements in the message convict the governor of a violation of the constitutional provision mentioned. It must be remembered that what may seem extraordinary in the estimation of one man or official may be deemed commonplace and ordinary by another. Members of different political parties look at men and measures from different standpoints. One party "points with pride" to a line of political policy and legislation, while another, in estimating the same conduct and policy, "views it with alarm." The suggestions contained in the message, from our knowledge of the doctrines of the political party to which the governor belonged, were but the reiteration of a persistent demand by that party for legislation in respect to freight rates. In its platforms it had before this made this question conspicuous, and, when in control of both branches of the legislature, had passed a freight-rate bill, which was, however, vetoed by the governor. Clear, palpable, and unquestioned violation of the constitutional grant of power to the executive, admitting of no debate, must be apparent, before the courts will be justified, if at all, in nullifying his acts. The fact that a majority or a large proportion of the people of the state may regard proposed legislation as useless, destructive of property rights, or vicious, will not stamp the subject-matter of such legislation, when demanded by the executive of the lawmaking power, as ordinary or frivolous, warranting the courts in saying that such request or demand by the governor is violative of the constitutional provision under discussion.

That clause of our Constitution relating to extra sessions of the legislature was adopted from a very similar provision found in the Constitution of the United States, which reads: . . . He [the President] may, on extraordinary occasions, convene both houses [of Congress] or either of them." Const. art. 2, § 3. While the President may convene both Houses of Congress, or either of them, the governor can only call together the legislature, which includes both the senate and house of representatives. Commenting on this power of the President, the late Mr. Justice Miller, in his Lectures on the Constitution, says: "The principal exercise of this power has been in proclamations by which the President has called the Senate together at the close of a session of Congress for the purpose of considering appointments to office, and sometimes treaties." The first call for a session of the Senate was made on March 1, 1791, as follows:

The President of the United States to the President of the Senate:

Certain matters touching the public good requiring that the Senate shall be convened on Friday, the 4th instant, I have desired their attendance, as I do yours, by these presents, at the Senate chamber, in Philadelphia, on that day, then and there to receive and deliberate on such communications as shall be made to you on my part.

Geo. Washington.

After this the Senate was convened by Gen. Washington on three occasions,—March 4, 1793, June 8, 1795, and March 4, 1797. The last call reads:

To the Vice President and Senators of the United States, Respectively:

Sir: It appearing to me proper that the Senate of the United States should be convened on Saturday, the 4th of March, instant, you are desired to attend in the chamber of the Senate on that day, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, to receive any communications which the President of the United States may then lay before you touching their interests.

Geo. Washington.

Under proclamation substantially like the above, the United States Senate was convened twice by John Adams, and once each by Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, John Quincy Adams, Jackson, Van Buren, Tyler, and Polk. The proclamations of Presidents Tyler and Polk commence: "Objects interesting to the United States requiring that the Senate should be in session," etc. From the adoption of the Constitution to the year 1851,—a time when the most distinguished judges and lawyers adorned the bench and bar,—there is no suggestion in any such proclamations of the existence of an emergency or extraordinary occasion. Commencing, however, with Fillmore, all the Presidents have recited in their proclamations convening the Senate the existence of an extraordinary occasion, and all or them have so proclaimed when calling together both Houses of Congress. Messages of the Presidents, vols. 1 to 9. If the proclamation of Gov. Leedy was defective, it seems to have been much less so than those issued by the Presidents for more than fifty years. As before stated, the most usual purpose for which the Senate of the United States is convened is for the confirmation of the appointment of officers. The Constitution (art. 2. § 2) provides: ". . . And he [the President] shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate shall appoint, ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the supreme court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law." The President is devoid of power to convene the Senate of the United States except upon an extraordinary occasion. If he is empowered under the Constitution to call that dignified body together for the confirmation of several appointees, it follows logically that he has no less authority to convene it for the confirmation of one. Take, for example, the case of a postmaster. The lowest salary attached to what is known as a "presidential postoffice" is $1,000 per year. Yet, who, with the possible exception of the prospective postmaster himself, would consider that an extraordinary occasion had arisen, should the President call the Senate together for the sole purpose of confirming such an officer. Yet the legality of the act cannot be questioned, and, after confirmation, who would contend that there were any flaws in the title of the incumbent to the office? Again, the necessity for confirmation of Federal officers can hardly be considered urgent, since the statutes of the United States confer authority on the President to make appointments during a recess of the Senate: such appointments to be submitted to the Senate at a subsequent session. U. S. Rev. Stat. 1878, § 1769. If we were scrutinizing the conduct of a President in such matters, prior to 1851, we would find repeated calls to the Senate for a meeting, making no mention of an extraordinary occasion, with no message from the executive to that body following it, more than a list of appointees which he desired to have confirmed. Yet all persons—constitutional lawyers, judges, and legislators—have acquiesced in the constitutional right of the President thus to convene the Senate for the purpose named. There being no doubt or question of the power of the President to convene the Senate of the United States in extraordinary session to consider appointments made by him, by what process of differentiation is the authority withheld from the governor of Kansas, under the Constitution, to convene both branches of the legislature (for he cannot convene the senate alone) in extraordinary session, in order that the presence of the senate may be had to consider and confirm his appointments. If an extraordinary occasion is presented in the desire of the President to have his appointment of a $1,000 a year postmaster confirmed by the United States Senate, the occasion cannot be said to be less extraordinary, should the governor desire the appointment of a regent of the state university, or other officer of less consequence, confirmed by the senate of Kansas, and should call the legislature together for that purpose. These illustrations show that the words "extraordinary occasion," employed in the two Constitutions, have been construed, by long-continued custom and practical usage, not to be synonymous with "overpowering and urgent necessity." The practice has prevailed, with few exceptions, in recent years, for the retiring President, by proclamation, to convene the Senate to meet on the 4th of March ensuing for the sole purpose of acting on appointments to be made by the incoming executive. It might well be the subject of debate, when such a call was made by President Cleveland during the expiring days of his first term of office, convening the Senate on March 4, 1889, whether he considered it of supreme importance that an extra session should be held in order that his political friends and adherents might be expeditiously turned out of office, and his enemies installed. Yet what court would have entertained a controversy, involving an attack on his constitutional power, to try the fact of the existence of an extraordinary occasion at that time? It will be noted that in such cases the President making the call does not further communicate with the Senate by message or otherwise, and it is not supposable, when he is succeeded by a political opponent, that he is advised in advance of the appointments to be made, which the Senate is called upon to consider.

Thus, we have seen that extra sessions of the Senate of the United States have been and may be called and held for purposes common and ordinary, and for cause so slight and inconsequential as to be wholly at variance with the idea of extraordinary necessity, under the constitutional grant of power above referred to. While the purpose of the framers of the fundamental law may have been that the executive authority now under discussion should be used only in the event of imperative necessity, yet departure from this intent was begun early in the nation's history, and, continuing until now, custom has become fixed law, ingrafting itself upon the Constitution, compelling the courts to recognize and respect it. Are we not then driven to the conclusion that whether a condition exists which is uncommon and out of the ordinary course of things is to be determined by the President or governor in the exercise of discretion which (after being sworn as officers) has been reposed in them by the people, and from which, when once exercised, there can be no appeal to the courts? It would be an unseemly and unprecedented proceeding for this court, or any court, to entertain a controversy wherein, by proof obtained from witnesses sworn in the cause, it sought to ascertain judicially whether an extraordinary occasion existed, of sufficient gravity to authorize the governor to convene the legislature in extra session. If jurisdiction is retained of such a cause, what is the rule as to the quantum of evidence necessary to establish that there was no emergency? This is a civil action. In such cases the party having the preponderance of evidence on his side must prevail. The utter absurdity of such an inquiry, wherein a judgment either way is made to depend upon the slightest preponderance of the evidence, no doubt furnished the reasons why the counsel for the defendant took the position that judicial knowledge alone could be employed, abandoning the second paragraph of the return above set out; the truth of its averments necessarily depending upon proof derived from the testimony of witnesses. "Discretion" is defined, when applied to public functionaries, to be "a power of right conferred upon them by law, of acting officially in certain circumstances according to the dictates of their own judgment and conscience, uncontrolled by the judgment or conscience of others." Oneida Common Pleas Judges v. People, Savage, 18 Wend. 99. It perverts and destroys the meaning of the word to hold that exercise of discretion may be reviewed or controlled by some other person or tribunal than the person on whom it is conferred. Ministerial duties resting on an executive officer have frequently been enforced by the courts. Ministerial acts do not flow from the exercise of discretion, but involve a simple, definite duty imposed by law. Martin v. Ingham, 38 Kan. 641. The case of State, Guthrie, v. School Fund Comrs. 4 Kan. 261, is cited as an authority that this court will review the discretionary acts of a co-ordinate branch of the state government, viz., the legislature.

Sections 3 and 5 of article 11 of the Constitution read:

"Sec. 3. The legislature shall provide, at each regular session, for raising sufficient revenue to defray the current expenses of the state for two years."

"Sec. 5. For the purpose of defraying extraordinary expenses and making public improvements, the state may contract public debts."

In 1868 an act was passed by the legislature entitled, "An Act Providing for the Is-44 L. R. A.

suance and Sale of Bonds of the State, for the Purpose of Paying the Officers and Members of the State Legislature and Current Expenses of the State." Gen. Stat. 1868, p. 957. Bonds were issued under this act. They were decided to be void, as being issued in violation of said section 5 of the Constitution above quoted. The control of discretion was not involved. Chief Justice Kingman says: "There is no pretense in the law that the expenses were extraordinary in their character." The question decided was as to the character of the expense. This the legislature had before decided, both in the title and body of the act, and this court merely affirmed its decision. The court said: "The legislature has not even pretended to declare the expenses extraordinary in their character, or in the circumstances attending them." In Martin v. Ingham, 38 Kan. 641, Mr. Justice Valentine, in the opinion, says: "No court ever attempts, by either injunction or mandamus, or by any other action or proceeding, to control legislative, judicial, executive, or political discretion; and never, indeed, attempts to control any purely legislative, judicial, or executive act of any kind, nor pure discretion of any kind, except when a superior court on appeal reviews a decision of an inferior court; . . . The only acts of public functionaries which the courts ever attempt to control by either injunction or mandamus are such acts only as are in their nature strictly ministerial; and a ministerial act is one which a public officer or agent is required to perform, upon a given state of facts, in a prescribed manner, in obedience to the mandate of legal authority, and without regard to his own judgment or opinion concerning the propriety or impropriety of the act to be performed." Cases might be imagined, however, where the courts would be justified in declaring void the acts of a legislative body assembled at the call of a governor in extra session. For instance, if the declared object of the meeting appeared to be obviously irrelevant or utterly frivolous and trifling, showing a rampant and revolutionary purpose on the part of the executive to subvert his prescribed powers in defiance of all lawful restraint, convincing the meanest understanding that all constitutional limits of authority had been disregarded, thus bringing scandal upon the state,—in such case it might well be held that judgment and discretion had fled, and that the act was done through a blind, unreasoning resort to what might be likened to physical force. Or if it should appear from the official declarations of the governor that he resented the limitations set by the Constitution upon his authority, contending that no extraordinary occasion existed or emergency had arisen, or that he denied that any check whatever was imposed upon his power to act, and proclaimed that the special session was called to pass laws of a general nature, no particular legislation being mentioned (the declared object being merely to shorten the work of the regular session, showing a deliberate and studied design to ignore the Constitution), a legal inference would at once arise that he had not used any discretion whatever, for discretion necessarily implies the exercise of a certain degree of common sense. However, it could hardly be presumed that, in either event mentioned, the members of the legislature would give heed to a call so grossly violative of the Constitution, which each of them is required on oath to support and defend. This being a republican form of government, the people are on guard. They have made a Constitution for the guidance of their servants in the discharge of official duties. If a governor transgress, by abuse of discretion or otherwise, they have made provision for his impeachment and deposition. Should he escape this punishment, the sovereign power resides with the people to condemn his acts at the polls by removing him from a place of power after a brief term of office. This court has repeatedly decided that it cannot review legislative discretion. In the early case of State, Johnson, v. Hitchcock, 1 Kan. 178, 81 Am. Dec. 503, § 17 of art. 2 of the Constitution was under consideration. It provides: "In all cases where a general law can be made applicable, no special law shall be enacted." It was held that the language used leaves discretion to the legislature, recognizing the necessity of some special legislation, and that it seeks only to limit, not to prohibit, it. The legislature must determine whether its purpose can or cannot be expediently accomplished by a general law. Knowles v. Topeka Bd. of Edu. 33 Kan. 692.

The adjudicated cases are few in which the precise question before us has been considered. However, there are authorities directly in point. In Whiteman v. Wilmington & S. R. Co. 2 Harr. (Del.) 514, 33 Am. Dec. 411, it is said: "Another objection to the validity of this supplement is founded upon the assumption that the general assembly which passed it was not constitutionally convened, and that consequently not only this, but all its acts at that session, are absolutely void. In the Constitution of this state (art. 3, § 12) the governor is authorized to convene the general assembly on extraordinary occasions. This is a power the exercise of which the framers of the Constitution have seen fit to entrust to the chief executive officer of the state alone. As they have not defined what shall be deemed an extraordinary occasion for this purpose, nor referred the settlement of the question to any other department or branch of the government, the governor must necessarily be himself the judge, or he cannot exercise the power. He may err, but this court has no jurisdiction to review his decision or correct his error. If he act corruptly, he is liable to impeachment; but the doctrine that a mistake, or even corruption, on the part of the governor in convening the general assembly, invalidates the act of that body, would be productive of incalculable mischief." In Colorado the legislature is authorized to submit to the judges of the supreme court important questions involving public interests. The judges are then required to decide the same, although no case is pending before the court. 44 L. R. A.

In Veto Power, 9 Colo. 642, the supreme court was asked by the legislature to give an opinion whether the decision of the governor in convening the legislature in special session was conclusive or not. The court said: "Whether or not an occasion exists of such extraordinary character as demands a convention of the general assembly in special session, under the provisions of § 9, art. 4, of the Constitution, is a matter resting entirely in the judgment of the executive." Again this question was before the supreme court of Colorado, and their opinion (19 Colo. 333) contains the following language: "The governor is thus invested with extraordinary powers. He alone is to determine when there is an extraordinary occasion for convening the legislature." In People, Carter, v. Rice, 65 Hun, 245, the supreme court of New York, in deciding this question, uses the following language: "The governor by his proclamation assumed to convene the legislature in extra session under the provision of § 4 of article 4 of the Constitution. This article gave the governor power to convene the legislature in extraordinary session, and, from the very nature of the provision, he must be the judge as to what constitutes the extraordinary occasion." In Rhode Island there seems to be the same provision which is found in Colorado, authorizing the house of representatives to propound questions to the supreme court for an opinion. In 1893 the house of representatives propounded to the supreme court of Rhode Island certain questions touching the duties and powers of the governor. The supreme court rendered their opinion, as found in Re Legislative Adjournment, 18 R. I. 830, 22 L. R. A. 716. Among other things, the court says: "The powers vested in the executive department are to be exercised by the governor under his oath of office, and under the express constitutional injunction that he 'shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed;' and he is responsible to the people alone for the manner in which he discharges the duties of his high office. If he violates the Constitution or the laws which he is sworn to support, he may be impeached and removed from office, and may also be indicted and punished like any other person. . . . But for the exercise of his powers and prerogatives as governor neither the legislative nor the judicial department of the government has any power to call him to account, nor can they, or either of them, review his action in connection therewith. In short, it cannot be questioned that the governor is supreme and independent in the executive department, as is the legislature in the legislative, and the court in the judicial, department of the government. . . . Moreover, this is a case in which the executive department of the state government has the power and duty to finally pass upon a question of constitutional construction. . . . The power of the executive, which we are considering, is a political power, 'in the exercise of which,' in the language of Chief Justice Marshall in Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch. 137, 2 L. ed. 60, 'he is to use his own discretion, and is accountable only to his country, in his political character, and to his own conscience; and, whatever opinion may be entertained of the manner in which the executive discretion may be used, still there exists no power to control that discretion.' 'The subject is political.' " The supreme court of Wisconsin, in State, Martin, v. Farwell, 3 Pinney, 439, in speaking of this question, says: "But if the right is contingent, and is made to depend upon the discretion of the executive, in such case, until that discretion be exercised, no right can vest; and if, in the exercise of that discretion, the governor deny the right, then all claim of right is gone. His determination is final upon the question of right,—as much as that of a court of competent jurisdiction." In United States v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. 729, 8 L. ed. 561, the Supreme Court of the United States uses the following language: "It is a universal principle that where power or jurisdiction is delegated to any public officer or tribunal over a subject-matter, and its exercise is confined to his or their discretion, the acts so done are binding and valid as to the subject-matter; and individual rights will not be disturbed collaterally for anything done in the exercise of that discretion, within the authority and power conferred. The only questions which can arise between an individual claiming a right under the acts done, and the public or any person denying its validity, are power in the officer and fraud in the party. All other questions are settled by the decision made or the act done by the tribunal officer; whether executive, . . . legislative, . . . or judicial." The late Judge Cooley, regarded everywhere as one of the greatest of our constitutional lawyers, and the highest authority on constitutional questions, in p. 41 of his Constitutional Limitations, says: "Sometimes the case will be such that the decision, when made, must, from the nature of things, be conclusive, and subject to no appeal or review, however erroneous it may be in the opinion of other departments or other officers: but in other cases the same question may be required to be passed upon again before the duty is completely performed. The first of these classes is where, by Constitution, a particular question is plainly addressed to the discretion or judgment of some department or officer, so that the interference of any other department or officer, with a view to the substitution of its own discretion or judgment in the place of that to which the Constitution has confined the decision, would be impertinent and intrusive. Under every Constitution, cases of this description are to be met with; and, though it will sometimes be found difficult to classify them, there can be no doubt, when the case is properly determined to be one of this character, that the rule must prevail which makes the decision final. We will suppose, again, that the Constitution empowers the executive to convene the legislature on extraordinary occasions, and does not in terms authorize the intervention of anyone else in determining what is and what is not such an occasion in the constitutional sense; it is obvious that the question is addressed exclusively to the executive judgment, and neither the legislative nor the judicial department can intervene to compel action, if he [the executive] decide against it, or to enjoin action, if, in his opinion, the proper occasion has arisen. . . . But there are cases where the question of construction is equally addressed to two or more departments of the government, and it then becomes important to know whether the decision by one is binding upon the others, or whether each is to act upon its own judgment. Let us suppose, once more, that the governor, being empowered by the Constitution to convene the legislature upon extraordinary occasions, has regarded a particular event as being such an occasion, and has issued his proclamation calling them together with a view to the enactment of some particular legislation which the event seems to call for, and which he specifies in his proclamation. Now, the legislature are to enact laws upon their own view of necessity and expediency; and they will refuse to pass the desired statute, if they regard it as unwise or unimportant. But in so doing they indirectly review the governor's decision [especially if] in refusing to pass the law, they . . . [do so on the ground that the] specific event was not one calling for action on their part. In such a case it is clear that while the decision of the governor is final, so far as to require the legislature to meet, it is not final in any sense that would bind the legislative department to accept and act upon it when they are called to enter upon the performance of their duty in the making of laws." As stated by Judge Cooley, the legislature, in this state, when convened, could wholly ignore the reasons given by the governor calling it together, and disregard entirely all suggestions made by him touching the necessity of proposed legislation. Not being restricted by the Constitution to the consideration of matters within the limits of the governor's proclamation, it might proceed to enact laws having no relevancy to the object for which it was convened. The fact that the railroad law creating a court of visitation does not take effect until March 15 cannot affect the question of the necessity of convening the legislature in December for the enacting of laws affecting freight rates. The acts of the executive cannot be judged by the action of the legislature. If no railroad legislation had been enacted, that fact would have been no proof that the governor's proclamation and message were unauthorized.

44 L. R. A.

We come now to the consideration of the second question in the case, to wit: Did the house of representatives which united with the senate on December 21, 1898, in special session of the legislature, constitute a legal organization? The contention is that chapter 171 of the Laws of 1897, apportioning the state into representative districts (which by its terms went into effect on June 1, 1898, and repealed all acts in conflict with it), terminated the existence of the house of 1897, the members of which it was supposed had been elected for a term of two years; and there is the further claim that, if any house existed when the special session convened, it was the one elected in November, 1898. This proposition has at least the merit of novelty. It has been the generally accepted opinion that the terms of members of the legislature began on the second Tuesday of January; that the representatives held their offices for two years, and senators for four years, from that time; and that their terms, as fixed by the Constitution, were not, and could not be, shortened by the passage of an apportionment act. This view of the Constitution and statutes has been acquiesced in by the executive, legislative, and judicial departments of the state government since its organization; and such an interpretation, adopted, as it has been, by the people for about a third of a century, is entitled to much force. In our opinion, the passing of an apportionment act does not shorten or affect the term of office of members of the legislature then serving, nor was it intended that it should have such effect. The Constitution plainly fixes the term of a representative at two years, but does not expressly provide when the legislative term shall begin. In the absence of such provision, it is competent for the legislature to fix the commencement of the term. That the legislature possesses this power was determined in an early day, in State, Crawford, v. Robinson, 1 Kan. 17, and at the same time the court rejected the theory that the terms began when the members were elected, or declared to be so. Since that time, and in accordance with that decision, the legislature fixed the commencement of the term by providing as follows: "The regular term of office for members of the Senate and House of Representatives shall commence on the second Tuesday of January next succeeding their election." Gen. Stat. 1889, § 2721. This statute is in harmony with the constitutional provisions on the same subject, which manifestly contemplate that the term shall begin at that time. In § 25 of article 2 of the Constitution it is provided that the regular sessions of the legislature shall commence on the second Tuesday of January, and in § 6 of article 1, where provision is made for adjournment in case of a disagreement between the two houses, the governor is expressly authorized to adjourn the legislature to such a time as he may think proper, "not beyond its regular meeting." The clear implication of this provision is that each house of representatives shall continue to exist until the beginning of the next regular session. Whatever force may be given to this implication, it is clear that these provisions, together with the act of 1868, fix the second Tuesday in January next after the election as the time for the beginning of legislative terms, and each representative elected is entitled to hold his office for two years. The law fixing the commencement of the term was passed in 1868, and since then the terms of representatives and senators have been extended in length, and the sessions of the legislature have been made biennial, by the amendment of 1877. This amendment does not in terms repeal the act, nor does it contain anything that would operate as a repeal by implication. The act is prospective in character, and is just as appropriate and applicable under the amendment as it was under the original provision of the Constitution. The act was not repealed by the amendment, but is still effective in fixing the commencement of the terms of members of the legislature. Prouty v. Stover, 11 Kan. 235. The legislature may provide when the terms of members shall begin, but it cannot abridge or extend the terms fixed by the Constitution. As the second Tuesday in January, 1897, must be held to be the commencement of the term of members of the house in question, and as the Constitution fixes the duration of the term at two years, is it not a violent assumption that the legislature intended, or had authority, to abridge the terms of the members to about seventeen months, thus completely abolishing one branch of the legislature? Did it by apportioning the state, and providing for the election of the succeeding legislature, constitutionally destroy the house of representatives, and practically legislate itself out of existence? Nothing in the language of the act indicates such a purpose, if, indeed, it had the power to accomplish it. It is contended, however, that the repeal of the former apportionment act, in effect, destroyed the old representative districts, and necessarily abolished the offices of the representatives elected therefrom. The situation is likened to the abolition of a county or township, in which case it has been held that the abolition of the municipal organization has the effect of ousting the officers of such organization from office. This is decided on the theory that the jurisdiction of the officers is confined to the municipality for which they were elected, and that, when the municipality within which the official functions of the officers are to be performed is abolished, the officers themselves go with it. We cannot see the analogy between the two cases. In that case the officers cannot perform their official functions, because the organization in which they are to be performed no longer exists. In the case of a member of the legislature, although he is chosen from, and must reside within, his district, he performs no official function therein. Instead of acting individually within his district, he becomes a member of an organization which acts only in its organic capacity, and at the capital of the state. He is in a certain sense an officer of the state, and, with others, constitutes a department of the state government. The district from which he is elected is not a municipal or quasi municipal corporation, and it never acts or is dealt with as a political entity. Districts are provided to create a system by which the members will be close to the people which they represent, and from which members are to be elected. In creating districts for this purpose, the legislature fixes the boundary lines, and designates them by numbers; but that is the extent of the organization, and the only reason for their existence. The voters within the limits of a district are an electoral body who choose one of their number to represent them in the legislature, and no other action is ever taken by them as a result of such organization. The member is therefore not an officer of the district, as the probate judge is an officer of the county, or a justice of the peace an officer for the township. The matter of apportionment is only a provision for future elections, and is not designed to affect the title to office, or the tenure of the members making the apportionment. Only brief periods intervene between apportionments, if constitutional requirements are observed; and they must not only be made, but they must go into effect long enough before the election to give the electors opportunity to comply with the ballot and election laws. This necessarily requires considerable time, and certainly it was not contemplated that during this long period the office of representative should be abolished, or that the legislature could not, however great the emergency, be convened. The apportionment act provided means for electing the representatives whose terms began on the second Tuesday in January, 1899, and had no effect whatever except as a provision affecting future elections. The territory constituting the old districts remained, and the constitutional terms of the representatives were not shortened by the shifting of the lines and the change of the numbers; nor was anyone legislated out of office by the passage of the act. An examination of the apportionment act shows that but little change was made in the districts. In most cases a single county constituted a legislative district, and, where a county was divided into two or more districts, the territory composing each district is largely the same as was included in it under the former act, but designated by a different number. The exterior limits being substantially as they were before, and some, if not all, of the territory of the old districts constituting a part of the new, leave but little ground for the assertion that the members were left without territory or districts. Our view, however, is that the provisions made for future elections were not intended to, and did not, affect the tenure of office of the members making it, and that the members elected in November, 1896, were entitled to hold their offices for the constitutional period of two years, and up to the second Tuesday in January, 1899. It is significant that the representatives elected in November, 1898, did not respond to the call of the governor, or assume that they were entitled to their offices before the time for the convening of the regular session. The members elected in 1896 only claimed a place in the house of representatives at the special session. No person disputed their rights, claimed their seats, or molested them in the discharge of their duties. The house so organized was recognized by the other branches of the lawmaking power, and the validity of the organization was not challenged until the present proceeding was begun. It follows, then, that the house of representatives was a legal organization, and that the preliminary requirements of the Constitution leading up to its meeting with the Senate as a legislature, in special session, were complied with.

For the reasons herein expressed, the motion of the plaintiff for a peremptory writ of mandamus, notwithstanding the answer and return, will be sustained, and a peremptory writ issued as prayed for.

All the Justices concur.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

Parmelia J. CLAYTON, Appt.,

v.

City of HENDERSON et al.

(.....Ky.....)

1. The restriction against locating a pest house within a mile of a city, made by Stat. § 3909, is not repealed by the act of June 14, 1893, providing that the common council of a city of the third class shall have power to make quarantine laws and enforce them within 10 miles of the city, to establish hospitals, and other establishments, and acquire and hold land for such purposes within or beyond the boundaries of the city.
2. A city is liable for the damages caused by the erection of a pest house near the residence of a person, notwithstanding the fact that it is erected within a mile of a city contrary to a statute which expressly makes the officers liable therefor, without declaring the city liable.
3. Ministerial officers only are liable for the erection of a pest house within a mile of a city in violation of Stat. § 3909.

NOTE.—As to nuisance of pest house, see also Baltimore v. Fairfield Improv. Co. (Md.) 40 L. R. A. 494.
44 L. R. A.

4. A surety on the bond of a pest-house keeper is not, by executing the bond, rendered liable for the maintenance of the pest house within forbidden limits.
5. A cause of action under the common law against a city for establishing a pest house near a residence claiming compensatory damages only cannot be joined with an action against officers under a statute for punitive damages, although both causes of action arise out of the same transaction.

(February 19, 1898.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Henderson County in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover damages for the erection and maintenance of a pest house within 1-2 mile of the limits of the defendant city contrary to the provisions of a statute which resulted in injury to plaintiff. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Montgomery Merritt, S. B. Vance, and R. D. Vance for appellant.

Messrs. Clay & Clay and Dudley & Fitts for appellees.

Du Belle, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

By an act adopted in 1886, embodied in § 3909, Ky. Stat., it was provided: "It shall not be lawful to locate or maintain any pest house or other place intended for the treatment of eruptive diseases, or diseases which are contagious or infectious, within the corporate limits of any incorporated city or town, or within a distance of 1 mile of the boundary line thereof. Any officer of any city or town, or other person, who shall violate the provisions of this act, or in anywise aid or abet therein, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction, shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $1,000, and be liable in damages to any person injured thereby, and, if wilfully done, such person or his heirs or representatives may recover punitive damages." Under this statute which is set out in the petition, the appellant brought suit, making parties defendant the city of Henderson, the mayor thereof, the members of the common council, and the keeper of the pest house and his surety; alleging that they had wilfully maintained, and aided and abetted in maintaining, a pest house within 1-2 mile of the limits of the city, near appellant's residence; that they had sent persons afflicted with smallpox to the pest house; that by that means that disease was communicated to her, to her damage; and that they had taken no steps, and provided no means, to prevent the spreading of the disease and the communication thereof to other persons. After various motions to require appellant to elect which of the defendants she would proceed against, and whether she would pursue a cause of action under the common law or under the statute, had been overruled, general demurrers to the petition were sustained.

On behalf of appellees it is claimed that the act of 1886 was repealed by implication by the act of June 14, 1893, for the government of cities of the third class, which provides (§ 3200): "The common council of each of said cities shall, within the limits of the Constitution of the state and this act, have power by ordinance . . . to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases into the city, to make quarantine laws for the purpose and enforce the same within 10 miles of the city, to establish and erect hospitals, almshouses, city prisons, workhouses, make regulations for the government thereof, and to acquire and hold land for the purpose either within or beyond the boundaries of the city." The claim is that the act of 1886 is a limitation upon the power of the common council of cities of the third class, and therefore inconsistent with the grant of power in the charter, which recognizes no limitations except the Constitution and this act; and, further, that the act of 1893 was intended to cover the whole subject of the rights, duties, and liabilities of cities of the class named; and it is urged that, being so intended, it is a repeal of all prior legislation upon the subject, even if not in terms repugnant. It was also urged that the intent of the legislature to repeal the act of 41 L. R. A.

1886 is further shown by the provisions of the acts in regard to the government of cities of the second and fourth classes, notably the latter, which provides (Ky. Stat. § 3490) that the boards of council of said cities shall have power "to make regulations to prevent the introduction or spreading of contagious or infectious diseases in the city, to pass quarantine laws for that purpose and to enforce the same within 1 mile of the city; to establish and regulate hospitals or pest houses in or outside of the city; to make all regulations necessary to secure the general health of the inhabitants of the city, and to regulate and provide for the burial of the dead." Undoubtedly, it needs no argument to show that the word "hospitals" includes pest houses. But it does not follow because the city council is authorized to establish hospitals and other named institutions, most of which are proper, and some of which are necessary, to be situated within the city limits, and for such purpose is also authorized to acquire property within or without those limits, that therefore all may be established within the boundary. On the contrary, the preceding subsection above quoted looks directly to the exclusion of contagious diseases from the city limits; and it would be a strained construction to hold that the adoption of an act which was manifestly intended to authorize the deportation of cases of contagious diseases from cities of the third class accomplished the repeal of an act which forbids the treatment of such cases within the limits or in the vicinity of cities of all classes. It is true that the Constitution (§ 156) provides that "all municipal corporations of the same class shall possess the same powers and be subject to the same restrictions;" and, if the act of 1886 were applicable alone to cities of the third class, there might be force in the contention that the act for their government was intended as a complete code of laws on the subject, and therefore repealed all antecedent laws in relation thereto not embraced in its provisions. But the act of 1886 is not restricted in its application to cities of the third class. It embraces all municipalities, is a proper exercise of the general police powers of the state government to take measures for the security of the health of its citizens, and we do not think it repealed by the act of 1893, any more than the common law of nuisances is thereby repealed as to nuisances established within the limits of cities of the third class. Whether the general act is repealed as to cities of the fourth class by the act for their government is not presented by this record, and need not be here considered.

It is further contended on behalf of the city of Henderson that, even if the act of 1886 was not repealed, the city cannot be held liable, because the act does not make the corporation responsible, but only the officers who shall violate its provisions; and, further, because the act complained of, being forbidden by statute, was beyond the scope of the powers of the municipality, was ultra vires, and therefore imposed no liability upon the corporation. But, in the contention that the act imposed no responsibility upon the corporation, the common-law liability for establishing a nuisance which inflicts special damage upon an individual is overlooked; and as it is not necessary that the word "nuisance" should be used in the pleading, but only that facts be stated which show the existence of the nuisance and the damage resultant therefrom, we think a cause of action has been stated against the city. "A pest house erected by town, municipal, or county authorities near the premises of another, injuring the health of his family, or exposing them to contagious disease, is a nuisance for which an action will lie, and, in the case of a county, against the boards or officers erecting it." Wood, Nuisances, 2d ed. § 66. And in Haag v. Vanderburgh County Comrs. 60 Ind. 511, 28 Am. Rep. 654, suit was brought against the board of commissioners of the county, which was held to be, in legal contemplation, the county; and the court held that it was a well-recognized rule that municipal corporations are liable for torts in certain classes of cases including nuisances, in the same manner as natural persons; referring to 2 Hilliard, Torts, p. 273; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 120; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. p. 766. And in the contention that the acts alleged in the petition, being unauthorized, cannot impose a liability upon the corporation, counsel seem to confuse the liability of a municipality for unauthorized contracts with its liability for torts committed by its officers acting under its authority in a matter within the scope of its corporate powers, but in regard to which its powers have been abused. Said Chief Justice Shaw, in Thayer v. Boston, 19 Pick. 513, 31 Am. Dec. 157, cited with approval in McGrac v. Marion, 98 Ky. 673, in which a number of other cases upon the subject are referred to: "The court are therefore of the opinion that the city of Boston may be liable in an action of the case where acts are done by its authority, which would warrant a like action against an individual, provided such act is done by the authority and order of the city government, or of those branches of the city government invested with jurisdiction to act for the corporation upon the subject to which the particular act relates, or where, after the act has been done, it has been ratified by the corporation by any similar act of its officers." The rule in this respect is admirably stated in 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 968: "To create such a liability, it is fundamentally necessary that the act done which is injurious to others must be within the scope of the corporate powers, as prescribed by charter or positive enactment (the extent of which powers all persons are bound, at their peril, to know); in other words, it must not be ultra vires in the sense that it is not within the power or authority of the corporation to act in reference to it under any circumstances." And, again, in § 972: "Prima facie, a municipal corporation is not liable for the trespass and wrongful acts of its officers, though done colore officii; but it will clearly be liable therefor where the act, if not wholly ultra vires in the sense before explained, was expressly authorized by the governing body 44 L. R. A.

of the corporation, or where, without special authority, it was done by its officers in the scope of their duties and employment, and has been ratified by the corporation."

The next question which arises is whether the members of the board of council are, by the act of 1886, made liable for damages caused by the establishment of the pest house at a place within the statutory limits. It seems quite clear that, in the absence of statutory provision, they would not be. They are invested with legislative powers, and, in the action complained of, were doubtless exercising those powers. "Where the officers of a municipal corporation are invested with legislative powers, they are, of course, exempt from individual liability for the passage of any ordinance within their authority, and their motives in reference thereto will not be inquired into; nor are they individually liable for the passage of any ordinance not authorized by their powers, for such ordinance is void, and need not be obeyed." 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 313, and authorities there cited.

The question remains, however, whether the statute under consideration was intended to create a liability against all classes of officers, both legislative and ministerial, of a municipal corporation, concerned in the establishment of a pest house within the forbidden limits, or whether it applied only to ministerial officers who might participate therein. With some hesitation, on account of the absence of direct authority, we have reached the latter conclusion. It would seem improbable that the legislature intended to create a statutory liability against a class of legislative officers, based upon action taken by them in that capacity, without any specific mention of the class to which they belonged, which had uniformly been held exempt from such liability. Such a construction would produce an interference with freedom of action by a legislative body, which ought not to be lightly inferred when the language construed does not expressly provide therefor. It seems probable, rather, that the act was intended to apply to the establishment of such an institution by the executive or ministerial officers of the municipality, to persons who might establish private pest houses, and to persons who might aid or abet either officers or persons so offending. To the class first named belongs the mayor, as well as the keeper of the pest house; but not the surety of the pest-house keeper, merely by virtue of the fact that he is such surety. The mere execution of the bond by him as surety does not, in any fair or just sense, render him liable for aiding or abetting in the establishment or maintenance of the pest house within forbidden limits.

There remains to be considered, therefore, only the question raised by the motions to require an election by appellant, viz., whether an action under the common law against the city for special damages caused to appellant by its maintenance of a nuisance can properly be joined with an action for damages against an officer under the statute in question. Under the Code of Civil Practice (§ 83), several causes of action may be united, if each affects all parties to the action, may be brought in the same county, may be prosecuted by the same kind of action, and if all of them be brought for injuries to person and property. The weight of authority seems to be that, where a specific proceeding is prescribed by the statute, it may not be joined with an action at common law; but that, if a penalty or damages be made recoverable in a specific form of action, counts therefor may be joined with counts for other causes of action in the same form, but not in different forms. See authorities quoted in 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1015m. So, it has been held that a common-law action for negligence cannot be joined with one for statutory negligence. Kendrick v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 81 Mo. 521. And see Felter v. Manville, 23 Kan. 191. On the other hand, it has been held that a statutory liability of a corporation and its common-law liability may be enforced in the same action. Bottomley v. Port Huron & N. R. Co. 44 Mich. 542. But in the case at bar it is sought to recover at common law against one defendant, and under the statute against another.

Under the averments of the petition, only compensatory damages can be recovered against the municipality, for the statute giving punitive damages does not apply to the corporation, and gross negligence is not averred. Under the statute, punitive damages are sought to be recovered against an individual, upon the allegation that the act done was wilful. Without passing upon the question of whether or not averments might be made under which the city would be responsible in punitive damages, it is sufficient to say that such averments are not made in the petition in this case, and that we think a cause of action under the common law against one party for compensatory damages cannot be properly joined with an action against another party for punitive damages,—a right which is given under the statute, although both causes of action arise out of the same transaction.

For the reasons given, the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Rehearing denied.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

W. E. HOGGARD and Wife, Appts.,
v.
Mayor, etc., of MONROE.

(51 La. Ann. —.)

- *1. Municipal corporations are not liable in damages for acts of their common councils in respect to matters entirely outside of the powers of the corporation.
2. The authority of towns situated on navigable streams to establish and operate public ferries rests entirely, in Louisiana, upon special grants to that effect; and the fact of the existence of such a special grant must be averred in a petition seeking to hold a municipal corporation liable for damages claimed to have occurred in the maintenance of a public ferry.

(February 6, 1899.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Judicial District Court for the Parish of Ouachita in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiffs' son which was alleged to have been caused by negligence for which defendant was responsible. Affirmed.

Statement by Nicholls, Ch. J.:

This case is before us through an appeal by plaintiffs from a judgment of the district court sustaining defendant's exception of no cause of action. Plaintiffs, in their petition, asked judgment in the sum of $15,000 as damages for the death of their minor son, who, it was alleged, was drowned from a ferryboat through the negligence and misconduct of defendant's servants and employees in charge of the boat. The allegations of the petition bearing upon the issue before us were: "That on the 18th of August, 1898, the defendant corporation was engaged in the maintenance and conduct of a public ferry across the Ouachita river, a navigable stream, within the corporate limits of the city of Monroe. That on said day Charles Hoggard, the minor son of petitioners, was engaged in hauling wood to the city of Monroe, and in so doing was compelled to cross the said Ouachita river at said ferry, and, at the invitation of defendant's servant and employee, entered the flatboat belonging to, and operated by, said corporation. Driving his team on said ferryboat, there being no barriers at the rear end of said boat, he stopped the same on or near the center of the boat, when he was required by the keeper of said ferry (the employee of said corporation) to drive to the rear of the flat or ferry boat, to make room for other wagons and teams thereon. That, in his effort to obey these instructions, his team became unmanageable, and walked off from the rear of said boat into the river, carrying and precipitating the wagon and petitioner's son with them into the stream, where, after a great and desperate effort and struggle to save himself, he was drowned. That, notwithstanding ample time elapsed from the precipitation of plaintiff's son into the water until he lost his life, there was no effort whatever made by the said corporation, its employees and servants, to render him any assistance, or attempt to save his life. That the death of their son was the result of gross, wanton, and extreme negligence, and criminal carelessness, on the part of said corporation, and its employees and servants, in the fitting out and operating of said ferry, and not from any fault or carelessness of petitioners' son. That said negligence on the part of the corporation, its servants and employees, consisted, among other things, especially in its failure to provide its boats with suitable chains, poles, or other barriers to prevent teams, vehicles, and passengers from being precipitated, as was their son, into the river, which chains, poles, or barriers it was incumbent on the defendant corporation, under the law, as a keeper of a public ferry, to provide its boats with, as well as other necessary appliances for the safety of persons trusting their lives and property into its temporary care and keeping. That said negligence of the defendant corporation, its servants and employees, especially consisted, further, in the command of the keeper of said ferry (he being the servant and employee of defendant) to plaintiff's son to drive his team to the rear of said boat and make room for other teams, notwithstanding the absence of a barrier or other character of appliances to check the same, and prevent its precipitation into the water, and further in the absolute failure on the part of the corporation, its employees and servants, to make any effort whatever to assist plaintiff's son in his struggles to save his life, notwithstanding there was ample time in which such effort could have been successfully made, if the said defendant had provided its ferry with properly constructed life-saving appliances, as it should have done, and which failure was negligence."

*Headnotes by NICHOLLS, Ch. J.

NOTE.—As to liability of municipal corporation for unauthorized operation of toll road, see Becker v. La Crosse (Wis.) 40 L. R. A. 829. 44 L. R. A.

Messrs. Hudson, Potts, & Bernstein, for appellants:

A municipal corporation is responsible for acts done by its agents, whether in contractu or in delicto, in the course of its business and of their employment, or for tortious ultra vires acts, as a private corporation or individual would be, under similar circumstances.

Bennett v. New Orleans, 14 La. Ann. 120; Reynolds v. Shreveport, 13 La. Ann. 426; McGary v. Lafayette, 4 La. Ann. 440; Ware v. Baratavia & L. Canal Co. 15 La. 170, 35 Am. Dec. 139; Wilde v. New Orleans, 12 La. Ann. 15; 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 393; Salt Lake City v. Hollister, 118 U. S. 256, 30 L. ed. 176; Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 24, 35 L. ed. 55; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Haring, 47 N. J. L. 137, 54 Am. Rep. 123; Hutchinson v. Western & A. R. Co. 7 Heisk. 634; M'Creedy v. Guardians of Poor, 9 Serg. & R. 94, 11 Am. Dec. 687; M'Gary v. Lafayette, 12 Rob. (La.) 674; Jones, Neg. of Mun. Corp. § 178; 5 Thomp. Corp. §§ 6279-6353.

On rehearing.

Mr. C. J. Boatner, also for appellants:

A corporation cannot escape the consequences of the acts done in the corporate name, and by corporate authority, on the ground that the articles of incorporation or grant of power, as the case may be, did not authorize the act to be done.

44 L. R. A.

Dooley v. Kansas, 82 Mo. 444, 52 Am. Rep. 330; Hunt v. Boonville, 65 Mo. 620, 27 Am. Rep. 229; Salt Lake City v. Hollister, 118 U. S. 256, 30 L. ed. 176.

A corporation is liable for the consequences of an ultra vires act.

See Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Smith, 76 Ala. 572, 52 Am. Rep. 353; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Haring, 47 N. J. L. 137, 54 Am. Rep. 123; Buffett v. Troy & B. R. Co. 40 N. Y. 168; Quimby v. Vanderbilt, 17 N. Y. 306, 72 Am. Dec. 469; Bissell v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Cos. 22 N. Y. 258; Cary v. Cleveland & T. R. Co. 29 Barb. 35; Weed v. Saratoga & S. R. Co. 19 Wend. 534.

Messrs. Stubbs & Russell, for appellee:

The powers contained in the charter of this defendant "do not include the power to lease a ferry, either expressly or by implication, nor is the power incident to those expressly granted.

Millsaps v. Monroe, 37 La. Ann. 641.

If the defendant has no power to lease a ferry for the purpose of operating it, it has no power to maintain and conduct a ferry.

Rev. Stat. § 1501.

The operation of the ferry by defendant was ultra vires, or outside of and beyond its corporate powers and duties.

Municipal corporations are not liable for the torts committed by its officers in the performance of an ultra vires act.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 1181, § 968; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1165; 2 Thomp. Neg. 737; Elliot, Roads & Streets, 355, 356; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 299; Green's Brice, Ultra Vires, 246; Becker v. La Crosse, 99 Wis. 414, 40 L. R. A. 329; Royce v. Salt Lake City, 15 Utah, 401; Albany v. Cunliff, 2 N. Y. 165; Smith v. Rochester, 76 N. Y. 506; Stoddard v. Saratoga Springs, 127 N. Y. 261.

Nicholls, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiffs allege that the city of Monroe was engaged in the maintenance and conduct of a public ferry across the Ouachita river, a navigable stream, within the corporate limits of that city; but they nowhere allege that this was done under the authority of general law, of statutes conferring powers to that effect upon municipal corporations generally, or of a special provision in its charter. The circumstance that municipal corporations may be situated on the banks of navigable streams does not carry with it an inherent or impliedly granted power to operate a ferry across the stream. Millsaps v. Monroe, 37 La. Ann. 641. If it did, it would be proper for us to take judicial notice of the fact. We know of no statute conferring generally a power of that kind upon towns so situated. On the contrary, § 1501 of the Revised Statutes confers upon police juries, throughout the state, the exclusive privilege of establishing ferries within their respective limits, and of generally regulating the police of the same, except those within the control of municipal corporations. The ferries referred to as being "under the control of municipal corporations" are those under the control of municipal authority, by direct, general, or special statute grant. There being no general, inherent, or implied authority, or general statute vesting authority, in municipal corporations, to establish and operate public ferries, the right to do so must rest in particular cases upon special authority, and the existence of that authority should be specially pleaded. Plaintiffs herein make before us the broad contention that the city of Monroe is bound to them independently of any authority in it, either general or special, to operate ferries. That liability flows from the fact itself that the city did carry on a ferry, and that, as resulting from that fact, injury was done to plaintiffs' son. They urge that it is monstrous to say that the city of Monroe should operate a ferry freed from all responsibility for the manner in which it was conducted; but this argument involves an assumption of fact, that the "city" did operate such a ferry. It may be true that one was conducted under authority of the common council in the name of the city; but, unless the corporation itself was authorized to establish the ferry, it cannot be said that the act of the council was the act of the city. The council represents the city only in respect to matters which fall within the corporate powers of the corporation. Beyond this, its acts are ultra vires. We think that it is universally recognized as law that acts of the directing body of municipal corporations, covering matters entirely beyond the powers of the corporation, do not bind the latter, though it has been held, if the acts be within the powers, but directed to be done at some particular time, or in some particular manner, departure from such provisions of law would not necessarily make the acts absolutely void. Defendant refers the court, on this subject, to 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 968-971, and § 973a, note; 2 Thomp. Neg. p. 737; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1165; Elliott, Roads & Streets, pp. 355, 356; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 299; Brice, Ultra Vires, Green's ed. p. 246; Becker v. La Crosse, 99 Wis. 414, 40 L. R. A. 829; Royce v. Salt Lake City, 15 Utah, 401; Albany v. Cunkliff, 2 N. Y. 165; Smith v. Rochester, 76 N. Y. 506; Stoddard v. Saratoga Springs, 127 N. Y. 261.

Plaintiffs advance in support of their position a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Salt Lake City v. Hollister, 118 U. S. 256, 30 L. ed. 170, but we think the court in that case did not intend to go, nor did it in fact go, to the extent which plaintiffs assert. That case was presented and passed upon under an exceptional state of facts. The city of Salt Lake was not brought into court upon a claim made against it, based on either contract or tort, but was in court as a plaintiff seeking to recover money which it alleged it had been improperly and illegally made to pay, but under protest. The city, in bringing its suit, fell under the operation of the rule that the right to resist payment of a claim, when advanced, is much broader than is the right when money has been paid under it to recover it back. Independently of this, the supreme court held that the law made the imposition of a tax in favor of the government follow as the immediate and direct result of the fact itself of the carrying on of a particular business without reference to who carried it on, or under what circumstances it was done. The city of Salt Lake had, without authority, carried on a distillery. Called on to pay a tax, it made the payment, but, under protest, and sought afterwards to have the sum so paid reimbursed to it. The court held that the claim so presented was not well founded, and, in the course of its opinion, declared and showed that the acceptance of the doctrine contended for was against public policy, in tax matters, as it would lead to the destruction of the tax system. There is no matter of public policy favoring the acceptance of the doctrine advanced by plaintiffs in cases like the present. On the contrary, it would lead up necessarily to ruinous public results, and would do away with all the checks which experience has shown to be absolutely essential for the safety and well being of the different communities. We would not be justified in departing from established legal landmarks to meet the hardships and supposed equities of a particular case.

For the reasons assigned, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the judgment appealed from be, and the same is hereby, affirmed.

Rehearing denied March 20, 1899.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

Archibald H. TAYLOR, Admr., of John Scott, Jr., Deceased, Appt.,
v.

David H. CARROLL et al.

(.....Md.....)

1. A special title acquired by an assignee of a mortgage for the purpose of foreclosure only will not vest in or devolve upon his administrator upon his death.

NOTE.—As to effect of pendency of action as notice, see also Holland v. Citizens' Sav. Bank (R. I.) 8 L. R. A. 553, and note.

As to effect of assignment of mortgage, see also Sanford v. Kane (Ill.) 8 L. R. A. 724, 44 L. R. A.

See also 47 L. R. A. 275.

2. More than twenty years' delay in proceeding with a foreclosure after it has been begun will relieve a purchaser of the property from the effect of the lis pendens as notice, if there is no satisfactory excuse or explanation of the delay.

(March 14, 1899.)

APPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Circuit Court of Baltimore City enjoining defendant from proceeding to sell certain property under a mortgage and decreeing that the mortgage did not constitute a lien upon the property. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. E. P. Keech, Jr., and A. H. Taylor for appellant.

Messrs. George Whitelock and Thomas H. Ridgely, for appellees:

The possession of the appellees and those under whom they claim has conformed to the conveyances to their devisors, and has been, since 1876, both constructively and by physical inclosure, coextensive with the outlines of the lots as described in these conveyances.

Code, art. 75, § 76; Kopp v. Herrman, 82 Md. 350.

Such a possession constitutes title.

Zion Church v. Hilken, 84 Md. 170.

And the appellees being armed with both the legal and equitable title fortified by actual possession can invoke the aid of a court of equity to remove by injunction a cloud upon such title.

Polk v. Rose, 25 Md. 161, 89 Am. Dec. 773; Baumgardner v. Fowler, 82 Md. 631; Polk v. Pendleton, 31 Md. 118; Livingston v. Hall, 73 Md. 395; Helden v. Hellen, 80 Md. 620.

Adverse possession affords, not only a good defensive title, but is sufficient to support an action of ejectment against one in possession having the paper title.

Hoye v. Swan, 5 Md. 248; Armstrong v. Risteau, 5 Md. 256, 59 Am. Dec. 115.

It constitutes a title which a court of chancery will compel a purchaser to accept.

Doe, Campbell, v. Fletcher, 37 Md. 430; Lurman v. Hubner, 75 Md. 271; Bay v. Posner, 78 Md. 49.

The idea that a party ought to stand by and see his property illegally exposed to public sale, and then force the purchaser to bring ejectment, seems to be sustained by no good authority.

Holland v. Baltimore, 11 Md. 196; Brown v. Stewart, 56 Md. 432; Spencer v. Almoncy, 56 Md. 551.

It can hardly be controverted that courts of equity in Maryland have adopted by analogy to the statute of limitations the period of twenty years, reckoning from the maturity of a mortgage, as constituting a complete bar to the enforcement of the mortgage lien.

Crook v. Glenn, 30 Md. 70; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Trimble, 51 Md. 109; Brown v. Harcastle, 63 Md. 488; Baldwin v. Trimble, 85 Md. 406, 36 L. R. A. 489; 2 Jones, Mortg. §§ 1195, 1208, 1210.

Such a mortgage can no longer be treated as evidence of a subsisting debt.

Boyd v. Harris, 2 Md. Ch. 213; 2 Jones, Mortg. § 1204.

The period of limitations in this case began to run from February 3, 1875, when the mortgagee's right of action accrued.

2 Jones, Mortg. § 1210; Subers v. Hurlock, 82 Md. 49.

The jurisdiction here invoked is well established.

Foa v. Blossom, 17 Blatchf. 352; Downs v. Sooy, 28 N. J. Eq. 58.

If Carroll's title was good when acquired, the subsequent acts of Scott did not make it bad.

Applegarth v. Russell, 25 Md. 317; Campbell's Case, 2 Bland, Ch. 210, 20 Am. Dec. 360, and note to Brantly's ed.

If Scott's proceeding was ever a lis pendens 44 L. R. A.

dens it has long since ceased to be such because it was not prosecuted with diligence.

Price v. McDonald, 1 Md. 412, 54 Am. Dec. 657.

The doctrine of lis pendens can have no application to this case for Carroll was in possession at the time of Scott's proceedings.

Tongue v. Morton, 6 Harr. & J. 21; Frazer v. Palmer, 2 Harr. & G. 469.

And a lis pendens must moreover relate to specific property—to the very thing or property in question.

Sanders v. McDonald, 63 Md. 503; Feigley v. Feigley, 7 Md. 537, 61 Am. Dec. 375.

Then, too, the court in which the suit is pending must have acquired undeniable jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties.

Murguiondo v. Hoover, 72 Md. 17.

But the proceeding in Baltimore county was not even a cause, plaint, or action.

Ruley v. Hyland, 77 Md. 488.

It was entirely ex parte until it came before the court for ratification of the sale.

McCabe v. Ward, 18 Md. 505.

The power of sale contained in a mortgage ordinarily passes to, and may be exercised by, the assignee or his executor, because it is a power coupled with an interest.

Berry v. Skinner, 30 Md. 567; Barrick v. Horner, 78 Md. 253.

But where the power is conferred upon a third person who has no interest in the estate, it is a collateral power, and does not pass on the decease of the donee to his representatives, but can be executed only by the person actually named in the mortgage.

Barrick v. Horner, 78 Md. 245.

Briscoe, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On February 3, 1873, Spotswood Garland, of Baltimore county, conveyed by way of mortgage to Douglas H. Gordon, of that county, to secure a loan of $20,000, certain lands situate in Hampden, at that time Baltimore county, but since the act of 1898, chap. 98, a part of Baltimore city including the four lots in controversy in this case.

On the 28th of July, 1877, Gordon, the mortgagee, for the purpose of foreclosure, assigned this mortgage to John Scott, Jr., a member of the Baltimore bar, who subsequently on September 11, 1877, under the power contained in the mortgage, sold a large part of the mortgaged land, not including these lots in dispute, for the sum of $2,100; the sale was ratified by the court, and afterwards, on the 20th of March, 1878, an auditor's account was filed therein showing a balance of indebtedness of $7,691.01, with interest from the 5th of September, 1877, after allowing credit for the money arising from the sale. This audit and account was ratified by the court on the 17th of May, 1878.

John Scott, Jr., is dead and Archibald H. Taylor, the appellant, was, on the 28th of October, 1897, appointed administrator of the estate, who, upon an order of the circuit court of Baltimore county, substituting him as party plaintiff, proceeded as such administrator to advertise and sell the mortgaged land, including these four lots.

It further appears that David Carroll, the testator of the appellee, prior to June 20, 1877, acquired title to both the leasehold and reversionary interests in the four lots described in the mortgage, and under his will they passed to the appellees. This bill is filed by the appellees to restrain the sale and to declare that this mortgage does not constitute a lien or charge on these lots, and from a decree in favor of the appellee this appeal has been taken.

The first question, then, presented by this state of facts relates to the right of the appellant to exercise the power of sale conferred by the mortgage. The appellant admits by his answer to the bill that the mortgage was assigned to John Scott, Jr., for the purposes of foreclosure only, and whether this assignment vested such title in Scott as would pass upon his death to his administrators is the question here.

The general proposition is true that the power of sale contained in a mortgage passes with the estate by assignment of the mortgage debt and is not affected by the death of the mortgagee because it is a power coupled with an interest, and is appendant to the estate. Berry v. Skinner, 30 Md. 572; Mackubin v. Boorman, 54 Md. 387. But it is distinctly held that where the power is conferred upon a third person, who has no interest in the estate, it is a collateral power. In Queen City Perpetual Bldg. Asso. v. Price, 53 Md. 398, this court said: "If any other person than the mortgagee or his assigns be intended by the parties to execute the power he or they must be specially named in the power." In Chilton v. Brooks, 71 Md. 450, it was said that the assignee of a mortgage, whoever he may be (if not a corporation), may execute the power as if designed by name, while an attorney may do it only when specially named. And in Barrick v. Horner, 78 Md. 256, where the earlier cases on this subject are cited and reviewed, it is said: "It is clear that the right to execute the power cannot vest in his executors, unless they are designated by the instrument in such terms as to bring them within the provisions of the statute. An assignee of the mortgage in a case where the power was effectively conferred upon the mortgagee would take the right to execute the power, as an incident of the estate, but where a stranger is the donee, the power not being appurtenant to the estate, can be exercised by him only who has had it conferred according to a proper construction of the statute—that is, by having been specially named in the mortgage." In that case, it was said that the executors of Horner, not being specially named, are without authority to execute the power.

In view of these analogous authorities there can be no question, it seems to us, that Mr. Scott only acquired a special title for the purposes of foreclosure only by the assignment of the mortgage in this case, and as he took no beneficial interest or property in the mortgage, none could vest in or devolve upon his administrator.

44 L. R. A.

But there is another reason, apart from the one just stated, why the decree of the circuit court should be affirmed. It will be seen that on the 10th of August, 1877, Scott began proceedings as assignee under the mortgage in the circuit court of Baltimore county, and nothing further was done looking to a sale of this property until October 29, 1897. The deeds to the appellees' testator were executed prior to June 20, 1877, and for more than twenty years the appellees and their devisor remained in adverse possession of and have exercised ownership over these lots. There is no evidence of part payment or admission of an existing debt, nor recognition in any manner of the mortgage debt, nor any other circumstance from which it can be inferred that the debt has not been paid.

It is insisted, however, that the mortgage proceedings instituted by Scott in 1877, is a lis pendens, and "that no title by adversary possession, or limitations, could be gained by anyone claiming under the parties to that suit."

Whether the proceeding in the circuit court for Baltimore county was at the time a lis pendens or not, we do not find it necessary for the purposes of this case to decide, because it is clear that in order "to constitute litis pendencia, there must be a continuance of litis contestatio."

The long and unexplained delay in the prosecution of the suit, we think, amounts to laches. Mr. Pomeroy, in his work on Equity Jurisprudence, 634, thus lays down the rule: "In order, however, that a purchaser pendente lite may be thus affected, the suit must be prosecuted in good faith, with all reasonable diligence and without unnecessary delay. A neglect to comply with this requisite would relieve a purchaser from the effect of the lis pendens as notice."

In Johnston v. Standard Min. Co. 148 U. S. 370, 37 L. ed. 485, the court said: "The mere institution of a suit does not of itself relieve a person from the charge of laches, and that if he fail in the diligent prosecution of the action the consequences are the same as though no action had been begun."

In the recent case of Demuth v. Old Town Bank, 85 Md. 326, we said: "Laches is such neglect or omission to assert a right as, taken in conjunction with lapse of time more or less great and other circumstances causing prejudice to an adverse party, operates as a bar in a court of equity. There must be a legal duty to do some act, a failure to do that duty and attendant circumstances which cause prejudice to an adverse party before the doctrine can be successfully invoked."

And in Preston v. Horwitz, 85 Md. 164, this court repeated the general rule, that the policy of the law is to give quiet and repose to titles, and courts of justice ought not to countenance laches or long delays on the part of claimants.

In the case now before us, there was nothing done "to keep the suit alive and in activity," from the 20th of October, 1877, the date of the ratification of the sale made by Scott, until October 29, 1897, when the appellant was substituted as plaintiff. Nor does the record disclose any circumstance from which a satisfactory excuse or explanation can be given for the long delay in prosecuting this suit. And this being so, the facts and circumstances of the case bring it within the application of the well-settled rule as to laches.

For these reasons, the decrees will be affirmed.

Charles J. BONAPARTE, Appt.,
v.

Mary WISEMAN.

(.....Md.....)

The employment of an independent contractor to make an excavation upon a lot in near proximity to a neighbor's house, in a populous city, and to the depth of several feet below the level of the foundation of that house, does not relieve the proprietor from the obligation either to see that the contractor in doing the work protects the neighbor's wall by the exercise of due care, or to give the neighbor timely notice of the nature and extent of the intended excavation that he may take due precautions for the protection of his own wall.

(March 14, 1899.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas of Baltimore City in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for negligence in excavating upon a lot next to plaintiff's building in such a manner as to cause plaintiff's building to fall. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William Reynolds, for appellant: Plaintiff never acquired, by grant or otherwise, any easement in the defendant's land of collateral support to the buildings erected upon her lot.

Such an easement of lateral support for a building may now be acquired by prescription in England.

Dalton v. Angus, L. R. 6 App. Cas. 740; Tunstall v. Christian, 80 Va. 1, 56 Am. Rep. 581; Sullivan v. Zeiner, 98 Cal. 346, 20 L. R. A. 730; Handlan v. McManus, 42 Mo. App. 551.

The American courts have refused to admit this doctrine.

An employer is prima facie exempt from responsibility for the consequences of negligence on the part of an independent contractor or one of the latter's servants.

Deford v. State, Keyser, 30 Md. 179; City & Suburban R. Co. v. Moores, 80 Md. 348; Engel v. Eureka Club, 137 N. Y. 100.

This doctrine applies to injuries caused to neighboring buildings by excavations on the employer's land.

Gayford v. Nicholls, 9 Exch. 702; Myer v.

Hobbs, 57 Ala. 175; Aston v. Nolan, 63 Cal. 269.

In such a case as this there is no legal obligation on the landowner's part to give notice of his intention to excavate; at most a failure to give such notice may be evidence of negligence on the part of the person doing the work.

Chadwick v. Trower, 6 Bing. N. C. 1; Schultz v. Byers, 53 N. J. L. 442, 13 L. R. A. 569; Shafer v. Wilson, 44 Md. 268; Spohn v. Dives, 174 Pa. 474.

Plaintiff had actual knowledge of defendant's intention to excavate below her foundation.

If the plaintiff's own evidence shows him to have no case, he is not entitled to have the issues submitted to the jury.

Medcalfe v. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co. 45 Md. 206; Oscanyan v. Winchester Repeating Arms Co. 103 U. S. 261, 26 L. ed. 539; Altwater v. Baltimore, 31 Md. 462; Shrieve v. Stokes, 8 B. Mon. 453, 48 Am. Dec. 401; Bohrer v. Dienhart Harness Co. 19 Ind. App. 489; Novotny v. Danforth, 9 S. D. 301.

Mr. William Colton, for appellee:

Notice of the intention by one who desires to excavate and improve his property must be given to the occupant or owner of the property thereunto adjoining, when such excavation and improvement may endanger the adjoining buildings of his neighbor.

Shafer v. Wilson, 44 Md. 268; Lasala v. Holbrook, 4 Paige, 169, 25 Am. Dec. 524; 3 Kent, Com. p. 532; Washb. Easements & Servitudes, 435.

The excavation and improvement contemplated by the appellant, "however skillfully conducted, may be attended with accidental and disastrous results" to adjoining property, and therefore was notice to the appellant, for he knew the nature and extent of his contemplated improvements.

The course permitted by the appellant to be pursued by the contractor in taking down his foundations and excavating his lot and putting in new foundations in the manner done under the prevailing conditions operated as, and in fact was, a nuisance; and if such nuisance was created on the premises of the appellant, the doctrine of independent contractor, if otherwise applicable, would have no application.

Deford v. State, Keyser, 30 Md. 179; Ellis v. Sheffield Gas Consumers' Co. 2 El. & Bl. 767; Rapson v. Cuditt, 9 Mees. & W. 714; Pickard v. Smith, 10 C. B. N. S. 470; Bower v. Peate, L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 321; Backhouse v. Bonomi, 9 H. L. Cas. 503; Gray v. Pullen, 5 Best & S. 970; Tarry v. Ashton, L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 314; Hughes v. Percival, L. R. 8 App. Cas. 443; Stevenson v. Wallace, 27 Gratt. 77; Southern Ohio R. Co. v. Morey, 47 Ohio St. 207, 7 L. R. A. 701; Hughes v. Cincinnati & S. R. Co. 39 Ohio St. 476.

An employer cannot relieve himself from liability by contracting with another for the performance of work, the necessary or probable effect of which will be to injure third persons, either personally or in their rights.

NOTE.—For exceptions to the rule of nonliability for acts of independent contractor, see note to Hawver v. Whalen (Ohio) 14 L. R. A. 828.

For other illustrations thereof, see Negus v. Becker (N. Y.) 25 L. R. A. 667; Colgrove v. 44 L. R. A.

Smith (Cal.) 27 L. R. A. 590; Cabot v. Kingman (Mass.) 33 L. R. A. 45; Wertheimer v. Saunders (Wis.) 37 L. R. A. 146; Richmond & M. R. Co. v. Moore (Va.) 37 L. R. A. 258; Thompson v. Lowell, L. & H. Street R. Co. (Mass.) 40 L. R. A. 845.

Woodman v. Metropolitan R. Co. 149 Mass. 345, 4 L. R. A. 218; Robbins v. Chicago City, 4 Wall. 657, 18 L. ed. 427; New Orleans, M. & C. R. Co. v. Hanning, 15 Wall. 658, 21 L. ed. 223; St. Paul Water Co. v. Ware, 16 Wall. 576, 21 L. ed. 488; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Reaney, 42 Md. 117; Cooley, Torts, pp. 643-646.

Mr. Charles A. Briscoe also for appellee.

Schmucker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was instituted by the appellee, who is life tenant of the house and lot No. 815 King street, in Baltimore city, to recover damages for injury to her house resulting from an excavation made by the appellant on the adjoining lots. Nos. 811 and 813 King street, for the purpose of erecting a warehouse thereon. All three lots were originally improved by dwellings. The house of the appellee was separated from those of the appellant by an alley 2½ feet wide, which lay almost entirely upon the land of the latter, but was used by both parties in common. The appellant, desiring to erect a warehouse upon his two lots, made a contract with one Anderson, a competent builder, to tear down the houses on the lots and erect thereon a warehouse. In the latter part of 1893, Anderson tore down the two old houses to the level of a few inches below the ground, and also excavated a portion of the rear of the lots behind where the houses had stood and adjacent to the unimproved part of the appellee's lot. He did nothing further to the property until about the middle of March, 1894, when he took out the foundations of the old house next to that of the appellee and excavated for new foundations to a depth of 3 or 4 feet below the foundations of her house, which settled and was injured. There was evidence tending to show that the excavation was the cause of the injury to the house, and also evidence tending to show that the appellee did not have previous notice or knowledge of the appellant's intention to excavate below the level of her foundations. At the request of the appellant, the jury were required, in pursuance of act 1894, chap. 185, to find specially upon the following interrogatories, to each of which they answered, "No:" "Was the plaintiff or her representative, Theodore Seigwart, notified of the intended digging below the foundation wall a reasonable time before the said digging below the foundation was begun?" "Did the plaintiff or her representative, Theodore Seigwart, have actual knowledge of the defendant's intention to excavate below her foundation a reasonable time before such excavation was begun?" The general verdict and judgment were against the defendant, and he took this appeal.

The appellant offered seven prayers, all of which were granted except the fourth and seventh. The seventh prayer will be first considered by us. This prayer is based upon 44 L. R. A.

the assumption that it appeared from the plaintiff's own evidence that she had knowledge in December, 1893, or at latest in January, 1894, of the character and extent of the work about to be done, and its proximity to the easternmost wall of her house, and took no precautions for its protection. We think the court below properly refused to grant this prayer, because while the record shows that the appellant's contractor, Anderson, demolished the two old buildings on his lots during the time extending from September until December, 1893, and excavated for new foundations along the division line in the rear of the appellee's house, it also shows that he then ceased work entirely, and allowed the property to remain in the condition in which it was at that time for more than two months. The work done by the appellant's contractor was, of course, open to the observation of the appellee or the occupants of her house, and doubtless led them to infer that the appellant was getting ready to improve his lots; and the fact appearing from evidence that he owned a warehouse, at the rear of these lots, fronting on Pratt street, may have led them to further infer that he intended to build on the lots an addition to his warehouse, but it was asking too much of the court to request it to direct the jury to assume from the evidence that the character and extent of the work about to be done by the appellant was apparent to the appellee or her agent in December, 1893, or January, 1894. The wisdom of the court in refusing to grant this prayer was fully confirmed by the fact that the jury returned a negative answer to the interrogatories requiring them to pass specially upon the question of the possession of such knowledge by the appellee or her agent.

The appellant's fourth prayer asserts the broad proposition that the appellant was not liable for the injury to the appellee's house by the excavation on his lots, because the work was done by Anderson as an independent contractor, under the written agreement appearing in the record. The question of the extent to which the employment of an independent contractor to do work, which is placed entirely under his control, will relieve the employer from liability for injuries resulting to third persons, has been much discussed by the courts. The general principle, broadly stated, is that when the work is done by a competent contractor, under an agreement which gives him complete control of the work and of the persons employed by him to do it, such persons will be his servants, and not those of the employer, and the latter will not be liable for injuries caused by the negligence of the workmen, because they are not his servants and are not under his control. But this doctrine has been repeatedly held not to relieve an employer from all responsibility of every kind for the consequences of defective or unskilful work done on his premises, even by the servants of an independent contractor. In the case of Deford v. State, Keyser, 30 Md. 179, Chief Justice Alvey, in an able and elaborate opinion, reviews the leading cases upon this subject, quoting at length from the opinions of the learned judges who decided them, and comes to the conclusion that the distinction is well established between the cases in which, when work is being done under a contract, an injury is caused by negligence in a matter collateral to the contract, and those in which the thing contracted to be done causes the mischief. In the former class of cases the employer is not liable for the injury, but in the latter he is. In the case of Southern Ohio R. Co. v. Morey, 47 Ohio St. 207, 7 L. R. A. 701, the court says: "One who causes work to be done is not liable ordinarily, for injuries that result from carelessness in its performance by the employees of an independent contractor to whom he has let the work, without reserving to himself any control over the execution of it. But this principle has no application where a resulting injury, instead of being collateral and flowing from the negligent act of the employee alone, is one that might have been anticipated as a direct or probable consequence of the performance of the work contracted for, if reasonable care is omitted in the course of its performance. In such case, the person causing the work to be done will be liable, though the negligence is that of any employee of an independent contractor." In the same case, at page 214, 47 Ohio St., and page 703, 7 L. R. A., the court says: "It is equally clear that the law devolves upon everyone, about to cause something to be done which will probably be injurious to third persons, the duty of providing that reasonable care shall be taken to obviate those probable consequences. In this class of cases, the doctrine of respondeat superior has no application; his liability is placed upon the principle that he cannot set in operation causes dangerous to the person or property of others, without taking all reasonable precautions to anticipate, obviate, and prevent these probable consequences." The same doctrine has been announced by this court in the recent case of City & Suburban R. Co. v. Moores, 80 Md. 352, where the opinion says: "Even if the relation of principal and agent or master and servant do not, strictly speaking, exist, yet the person for whom the work is done may still be liable if the injury is such as might have been anticipated by him as a probable consequence of the work let out to the contractor, or if it be of such character as must result in creating a nuisance, or if he owes a duty to third persons or the public in the execution of the work."

Under these authorities, the appellant would have been liable for injury happening to the house of the appellee from the excavation of his lots if it might reasonably have been anticipated that such injury would probably occur as a consequence of an excavation made in the location and to the depth appearing from the evidence in this case. The question as to whether such injury might reasonably have been anticipated as a probable consequence of the excavation was a question of fact for the jury, which would have been taken away from them, if the appellant's fourth prayer had been granted.

44 L. R. A.

There remains to be considered the further question, Did the appellant owe to the appellee the duty of giving her notice of his intention to excavate in near proximity to her wall a reasonable time in advance of commencing the work, in order to afford her an opportunity to take suitable precautions for the protection of her foundations? In the argument of the case the appellant's counsel earnestly contended that he did not owe any such duty, and the appellee's counsel contended, with like earnestness, that he did. The cases are not uniform upon the subject of the duty of a person who is about to excavate his own lot adjacent to another's house, and below the level of its foundations, to give such notice, and it cannot be said that there is an imperative obligation to give it. The obligation to give the notice, like that to see that the excavation is made with due care, seem both to rest upon the recognized proposition that a party in possession of fixed property must take care that it is so used and managed that other persons shall not be injured, whether it be managed by his own servants or contractors or their servants. If one about to excavate his own lot do it, or cause it to be done, so carefully as not to injure the adjacent houses, he need not give notice to their owners. If, on the other hand, he give timely notice to the adjacent owners, the burden will be thrown upon them to protect their own property, and he will not be liable for damages sustained by them, if he makes the excavation with reasonable and ordinary care.

In the case of Shafer v. Wilson, 44 Md. 280, the court says: "There seems to be no doubt that an adjacent owner of land has no right to deprive his neighbor of the natural support afforded by his soil. The authorities are somewhat conflicting as to the extent of the right of the owner of any adjacent ground built upon, to improve his own property, where he is under no disability (from grant of easement, prescriptive right, or necessity) to restrict him, although it may operate to injure his neighbor's property. But it is agreed on all sides that his right, whatever that may be, must be exercised with due care and skill, at his peril, to prevent injury to the adjacent owner." In the same case, at page 281, the court, in discussing the duty of the party about to make such excavation to give timely notice of his purpose to the adjacent owner, says: "Such notice would seem to be a reasonable precaution in a populous city, where buildings are necessarily required to be contiguous to each other, and improvements made by one proprietor, however skilfully conducted, may be attended with accidental and disastrous results to his neighbors, who ought to have an opportunity to take the steps necessary to protect themselves and property." In support of these views, the court cites Lasala v. Holbrook, 4 Paige, 169, 25 Am. Dec. 524; 3 Kent, Com. p. 532; Washb. Easements & Servitudes, pp. 435 et seq.

The law as laid down by the cases we have cited does not permit the owner of a lot of ground, in a populous city like Baltimore, to make an excavation, even through an independent contractor, upon his lot in near proximity to his neighbor's house, and to a depth of some feet below the level of the foundations of that house, and be under no obligations either to see that the contractor in doing the work protects the neighbor's wall by the exercise of due care, or to give the neighbor timely notice of the nature and extent of the intended excavation, that he may take due precautions for the protection of his own wall. The appellant's fourth prayer ignored the obligation on his part either to see that the work on his lots was done with due care, or to give timely notice to the appellee of his intention to have the work done, and treated the employment of Anderson to do the work, under a written contract, as being all that was required of him in the premises. The prayer was therefore properly rejected.

The judgment will be affirmed, with costs.

Walter McCREA, Appt.,

v.

Charles B. ROBERTS, Judge of Circuit Court for Carroll County.

(.....Md.....)

1. A writ of mandamus does not lie to control judicial discretion.
2. The determination as to the issuance of a license by a judge of the circuit court under act 1894, chap. 6, § 7, upon an application by the clerk, when an objection has been filed, is required to be made upon notice to the applicant and objector and after hearing the evidence, and is, therefore, judicial in its nature, and not the exercise of a purely executive or administrative function which cannot be imposed upon the court.

(March 16, 1899.)

APPEAL by petitioner from an order of the Circuit Court for Carroll County refusing a mandamus to compel the issuance of a license to sell liquor. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. James A. C. Bond and Francis Neal Parke, for appellant:

The judge selected by the clerk is limited to the consideration of the cause shown to him at the hearing why the license should issue or not issue. What is cause under the statute becomes, therefore, not a question of discretion but a question of law.

The courts hold that where a statute provides that an officer may be removed from office for cause only, they have the right to control the discretion of the removing officer in deciding what is cause.

2 Comparative Administrative Law, p. 206; Miles v. Stevenson, 80 Md. 358; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. note, pp. 774, 775.

In determining what is cause, the investigation must be confined within the four corners of chapter 6.

NOTE.—As to imposing nonjudicial duties upon courts, see also Norwalk Street R. Co.'s Appeal (Conn.) 89 L. R. A. 794, and footnote. 44 L. R. A.

Miles v. Stevenson, 80 Md. 358; Prospect Brewing Co.'s Petition, 127 Pa. 523; Pollard's Petition, 127 Pa. 507.

With the appellee, therefore, limited in this case to the consideration of the jurisdictional questions as to the sufficiency of the application and the certificate attached thereto and the personal fitness of the appellant to sell liquor, the petition disclosed a compliance on the part of the appellant with every requirement of law; that the case was properly before appellee; that the appellant proved at the hearing every statement in his application and in the certificate attached thereto; that he established and the appellee admitted his exceptional character and fitness to be intrusted with the sale of liquor; that every fact and thing necessary for his obtaining the license was proved and done; and that no evidence was adduced and no cause whatever existed or was shown why the license should not be granted to appellant.

The answer filed by the appellee does not deny these statements of facts, nor does it set up any facts by way of defense, although § 3 of art. 60 of the Code requires him to set out all his defenses; and, consequently these facts are admitted, the answer being nothing more than a demurrer.

Merrill, Mandamus, §§ 270, 274; High, Extr. Legal Rem. § 492.

Where no legal cause why the license should not exist was shown there could be no exercise of discretion, and the appellee brought himself within the principle that mandamus will lie "to correct abuses of discretion when it has been made clearly to appear that the official refusing to do the act has either not exercised his discretion or has wilfully chosen to act in manifest disregard of duty and the legal rights of individuals."

Spelling, Extraordinary Relief, § 1384; Merrill, Mandamus, §§ 38-41, 188, 195; High, Extr. Legal Rem. 3d ed. §§ 218, 327; Black, Intoxicating Liquors, § 172; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 663, and notes; Miles v. Stevenson, 80 Md. 365; Prospect Brewing Co.'s Petition, 127 Pa. 523; Re Sparrow (Pa.) 20 Atl. 692; Pollard's Petition, 127 Pa. 507; Johnson's License, 156 Pa. 322; Kelminski's Appeal, 164 Pa. 231; Zanone v. Mound City, 103 Ill. 553, 11 Ill. App. 334; State, Wolfe, v. Kirke, 12 Fla. 278, 95 Am. Dec. 314; Ex parte Bradley, 7 Wall. 376, 19 L. ed. 218.

Every principle of pleading requires the answer to meet the substance of the petition, but here the answer not only avoids it but has no relevancy to the case made by the sworn petition.

Legg v. Annapolis, 42 Md. 203; Harwood v. Marshall, 10 Md. 451; Creager v. Hooper, 83 Md. 490; Merrill, Mandamus, § 274; High, Extr. Legal Rem. §§ 467, 472; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 876; Ampersse v. Kalamazoo, 59 Mich. 78.

The courts will review the arbitrary action of judicial officers and compel them to discharge their duties of mandamus.

Merrill, Mandamus, §§ 274, 275; High, Extr. Legal Rem. §§ 467, 472; Johnson's Li- cense, 150 Pa. 322; Re Sparrow (Pa.) 20 Atl. 692.

In this case no reason for the appellee's action is disclosed.

If the answer be sufficient, then it will lie in the power of any respondent to make a defense that will stifle investigation and supply a cover for any action, no matter how iniquitous.

United States v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 378, United States, McBride, v. Schurz, 26 L. ed. 167; People, Belknap, v. Beach, 19 Hun, 259.

The writ of mandamus in Maryland, when not in aid of the appellate jurisdiction of the court of appeals, issues out of the circuit courts.

Harwood v. Marshall, 9 Md. 83.

The judge selected by the clerk acts in no way by virtue of his judicial office or as a court, but as a distinct tribunal.

Anderson v. Levely, 58 Md. 192.

Mandamus will lie just as any other process will issue against the appellee in the ordinary course of the administration of justice.

Magruder v. Tuck, 25 Md. 217.

In order to deny a mandamus on the ground of another remedy at law the other remedy must be plain, speedy, adequate, and specific.

Harwood v. Marshall, 9 Md. 98; Merrill, Mandamus, §§ 51-54; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 831a.

Courts will pass upon constitutional questions in mandamus proceedings.

Merrill, Mandamus, § 65; Allegany County Public School Comrs. v. Allegany County Comrs. 20 Md. 449.

The appellee, chief judge of the fifth judicial circuit, did not perform a duty pertaining to his office in deciding, after he had been selected for that purpose from his associates by the clerk of his court, that a license should not be granted to the appellant.

United States v. Ferreira, 13 How. 47, 14 L. ed. 44; Goldsborough v. Lloyd, 86 Md. 374; Houseman v. Montgomery, 58 Mich. 364; Auditor of State v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 6 Kan. 500, 7 Am. Rep. 575; Case of Election Supers. 114 Mass. 247, 19 Am. Rep. 341; Re Cleveland, 51 N. J. L. 311.

If the act or power is not the act or power of the court, then the act or power is not a judicial one, as it could not have been done or exercised in the performance of a duty properly pertaining to the function of a judge qua judge.

Anderson v. Levely, 58 Md. 192.

The duty cast upon the judge selected must be said to be nonjudicial for it cannot be performed by the three judges, by two judges, nor even by one judge until he has been selected by the clerk to act, nor can it be performed by the judges or any one of them acting as a court.

The legislature of Maryland cannot impose upon the appellee, a judge of the circuit court for Carroll county and of the court of appeals of Maryland, nonjudicial duties.

Hayburn's Case, 2 Dall. 409, 1 L. ed. 436; Norwalk Street R. Co.'s Appeal, 69 Conn. 576, 39 L. R. A. 794; Wilkinson v. Leland, 44 L. R. A.

2 Pet. 627, 7 L. ed. 542; Houston v. Williams, 13 Cal. 24, 78 Am. Dec. 565; Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill, 140, 40 Am. Dec. 274; Cochran v. Van Surlay, 20 Wend. 365, 32 Am. Dec. 570; Campbell's Case, 2 Bland, Ch. 209, 20 Am. Dec. 360; United States v. Todd, 13 How. 53, 14 L. ed. 47, note; Ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S. 393, 25 L. ed. 725; Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. 46, 6 L. ed. 263; Sinking-Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, 25 L. ed. 496; 31 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 438; State v. Chase, 5 Harr. & J. 298; Wright v. Wright, 2 Md. 452, 56 Am. Dec. 723; United States v. Maurice, 2 Brook. 103.

Messrs. William H. Thomas, Reifsnider & Reifsnider, and Guy W. Steele for appellee.

Briscoe, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appeal in this case is from an order of the circuit court for Carroll county refusing a mandamus and dismissing the petitioner's application therefor. A brief statement of the facts will be necessary for a clear understanding of the case.

The act of 1894, chap. 6, regulates the sale of liquor in Carroll county. By § 4 of that act it is provided that any person desiring to obtain a license to sell liquor shall file an application in writing with the clerk of the circuit court for that county, in which he shall state his name, place, where the business is to be carried on, the kind of license desired, etc.

Section 5 of the act enacts "that there shall be annexed to said application a certificate signed by at least nine reputable freeholders, bona fide residents of the neighborhood in which the applicant proposes to conduct the business under the license applied for, in which each of the persons certifying shall state his residence or place of business; that he is over twenty-five years of age; how long he has known the applicant; that he believes the statements made in the application to be true; that from his knowledge of the applicant or applicants and his acquaintance with him or them, he believes the applicant to be a proper person or the applicants to be proper persons to have the privilege of selling spirituous or fermented liquors, and he accordingly recommends the issuance of the license applied for."

Section 6 of the act provides: "That upon the filing of such application and certificate, the applicant shall pay to the clerk with whom the same are filed, the sum of $2, to be applied to paying the expense of advertising, as hereinafter provided for, and thereupon said clerk shall insert in two successive issues in some weekly newspaper published in said county, prior to the 15th day of the month preceding the month for which the license is to begin, a notice that such application has been filed, specifying the kind of license applied for, and the place where the business is to be conducted, and stating that unless cause be shown to the contrary in writing, on or before the aforesaid 15th day of the month preceding the month with which the license is to begin, the license applied for will be issued, provided the applicant complies with the requirements of this law requisite thereto, as hereinafter provided."

Section 7 further provides "that if any person shall file with said clerk, in writing, within the time specified any reason why the license applied for should not be granted, such clerk shall forthwith present the application and certificate and the objection to a judge of the circuit court for said county, and such judge shall proceed to hear and determine the question as to whether the license applied for shall be issued or not, after giving such notice to the applicant and objector as such judge shall deem reasonable, and shall award the cost of such hearing as such judge shall deem equitable and just."

On the 25th of October, 1898, the appellant, Walter McCrea, filed an application under this law, in proper form, for a license to sell liquor in Gamber, Carroll county, with a certificate signed by eleven persons who alleged themselves to be reputable freeholders, of whom six stated that they resided in Gamber and five stated that they resided a mile or more therefrom.

Shortly afterwards an objection was filed to the issue of the license, which was signed by forty-nine persons who alleged themselves to be residents of and adjacent to the village of Gamber.

The objection stated two reasons why the license should not be issued: First, because the certificate to the application is not signed by nine reputable freeholders, bona fide residents of the neighborhood in which the appellant proposes to conduct the business under the license applied for. Secondly, because the application is not certified to by persons who appear to be sufficiently acquainted with him to know his character as a fit person to sell spirituous and fermented liquors.

This application and the objection were presented by the clerk of the circuit court to Hon. Charles B. Roberts, chief judge of the circuit court for Carroll county, who set the case for hearing before him. At the hearing, the appellant and the objectors were represented by counsel and witnesses were examined. An order was subsequently passed dismissing the application. The appellant, thereupon filed in the circuit court for Carroll county a petition alleging in substance that he had complied with all the requirements of the law, and had proved the fact of such compliance at the hearing of the objection to his application, and that he was entitled to have a license issued to him. The prayer of the petition was "that a writ of mandamus might be issued directed to Judge Roberts, a judge of the circuit court for Carroll county, commanding him to pass an order rescinding and annulling the order passed by him on the 8th day of October, 1898, dismissing the application for a license to sell spirituous and fermented liquors, and authorizing and directing that the application of McCrea . . . be granted by the clerk of the circuit court. And it is from an order overruling a demurrer to defendant's answer and dismissing the petition that this appeal has been taken.

44 L. R. A.

It is the settled law of this court that one judge of a circuit has no jurisdiction to issue a writ of mandamus against the other judges of the circuit to compel him or them to do an act which the others are authorized to do themselves. Goldsborough v. Lloyd, 86 Md. 376.

But it is urged by the petitioner that since he proved at the hearing that he had complied with the statute and did possess the requisite qualifications, there was no legal ground upon which a license could have been refused, and that the order dismissing his application was consequently not passed in the exercise of a discretion, and can be reviewed under those proceedings.

It is quite true that in cases where a tribunal refuses to exercise the judgment and discretion imposed by a statute, or arbitrarily exceeds its jurisdiction, a mandamus will lie. Miles v. Stevenson, 80 Md. 358.

This case does not, however, fall within the rule applicable to those cases. The answer of the respondent states "that he fully discharged his duty and exercised the judgment and discretion required to be exercised by him by the act, and after a full hearing, a careful consideration of the law and evidence, he dismissed the petition." And the demurrer to the answer admits these facts.

In the recent case of Wailes v. Smith, 76 Md. 469, this court said: "Where the duty is such as necessarily requires the examination of evidence and the decision of questions of law and fact, such a duty is not ministerial, and not being ministerial, the decision of a public officer to whom the discharge of such duty has been confided cannot be reviewed or reversed in a mandamus proceeding.

In Re Burtis, 103 U. S. 238, 26 L. ed. 392, the Supreme Court thus states the rule: "A writ of mandamus may be used to compel an inferior tribunal to act on a matter within its jurisdiction but not to control its discretion while acting . . . nor to reverse its decision when made." Both these rules are elementary and are fatal to this application. The district judge took jurisdiction of the matter, as it was his duty to do, heard the parties and decided adversely to the claim of the petitioner. In this he may have done wrong, and the reasons he has assigned may not be such as will bear the test of judicial criticism; but we cannot, by mandamus, compel him to undo what he has thus done in the exercise of his legitimate jurisdiction."

We come, then, to the main contention in the case, and that is, the validity of the act of 1894, chap. 6.

It is urged by the appellant that this act is unconstitutional because the issuing of licenses to sell liquor is a purely executive or administrative function and to impose this duty upon a judge is to require him to perform a nonjudicial duty, contrary to the constitutional provision that requires that the legislative, executive, and judicial powers shall be kept separate and distinct.

In the Constitution of 1776, the Bill of Rights, § 6, declared that the legislative, executive, and judicial powers of the government ought to be forever separate and distinct from each other. Article 8 of our present Bill of Rights adds to this that "no person exercising the functions of one of said departments shall assume or discharge the duties of any other," and article 33, further provides, that "no judge shall hold any other office, civil or military or political trust or employment of any kind whatsoever under the Constitution or laws of this state or the United States or any of them."

These provisions relating to the division of governmental powers were considered by this court in some of the earliest cases, and we will repeat here what was then said. In Crane v. Meginnis, 1 Gill & J. 476, 19 Am. Dec. 237, it is said: "This political maxim made its appearance in some form in all the state Constitutions formed about the time of the War of the Revolution. . . . In whatever terms they have adopted it, in none of these Constitutions are the several departments kept wholly separate and unmixed. In some of them, as in the Constitution of this state, the executive is appointed by the legislature, and the judiciary by the executive; and in others, the power of the several departments are still more blended and mingled together."

In State v. Chase, 5 Harr. & J. 298, it was further said: "New judicial duties may often be unnecessarily imposed and services not of a judicial nature may sometimes be required. In the latter case a judge is under no legal obligation to perform them."

But in Wright v. Wright, 2 Md. 452, 56 Am. Dec. 723, the court uses this language: "The evident purpose of the declaration last quoted, is to parcel out and separate the powers of the government, and to confide particular classes of them to particular branches of the supreme authority. That is to say, such of them as are judicial in their character to the judiciary; such as are legislative to the legislature, and such as are executive in their nature to the executive."

In the case now before us, we think it is clear that the duty imposed upon the judge of the circuit court by § 7 of the act of 1894, is judicial or "judicial in its nature and character," and that the objection urged against the act upon this constitutional ground is without force. The statute prescribes that a license to sell liquor shall be issued only upon certain conditions. When an objection is filed to an application, the clerk is required to submit the whole matter to a judge of the court. It then becomes necessary for him to determine whether the prescribed conditions have been fulfilled or not. This question may be one of fact or of law, or a mixed question of fact and of law. In deciding it the judge hears the evidence and is bound to make his decision according to the law and the evidence. The statute requires that the applicant for a license shall file a "certificate signed by at least nine reputable freeholders, bona fide residents of the neighborhood in which the applicant proposes to conduct the business." One of the objections filed to the applicant's application denied that the certificate thereto annexed was signed by persons possessing the qualifications. It was then necessary to determine whether the signers of the certificate were freeholders or not; whether they were reputable or otherwise; whether they were residents of the neighborhood or what was to be considered the neighborhood. It is manifest that these are questions of fact and law upon which the judge was required to exercise his judgment after hearing the evidence. In Devin v. Bell, 70 Md. 352, where the law there under consideration provided for the issue of a liquor license by a clerk of court upon the applicant's being recommended by five respectable freeholders, it was held that it was within the exclusive discretion of the clerk to determine whether the parties making the recommendation were respectable or not.

It must have been by hearing the testimony of witnesses as to whether the facts which are made by statute a prerequisite to the issue of the license existed or not, and then by the construction of the statute and its application to the facts of the case, that the judge reached the decision that the appellant was not entitled to a license.

Such a proceeding is within the rule of judicial power, as laid down by Judge Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations, p. 109, where it is said that to adjudicate upon and protect the rights and interests of individual citizens, and to that end to construe and apply the laws, is the peculiar province of the judicial department. Ex parte Thompson, 62 Ala. 100; Hopson's Appeal, 65 Conn. 146.

And in Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 728, 37 L. ed. 918, which related to the act of Congress providing for the deportation of persons of Chinese descent unlawfully within this country, where the act provided that a Chinaman might be taken by a collector or marshal before a United States judge for the purpose of determining whether he was entitled to remain in this country, the court said: "When in the form prescribed by law, the executive officer acting in behalf of the United States brings the Chinese laborer before the judge in order that he may be heard or the facts upon which depend his right to remain in this country be decided, a case is duly submitted to the judicial power; for here are all the elements of a civil case—a complainant, defendant, and a judge—actor, reus, et iudex. 3 Bl. Com. p. 25; Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat, 738, 6 L. ed. 204. No formal complaint or pleadings are required, and the want of them does not affect the authority of the judge or the validity of the statute."

But it will be observed that under the act of 1894 the license is not issued by the judge, but when an objection is made to the application the duty of the judge is merely to determine upon a case at issue whether the clerk shall issue the license or not, according as the applicant is or is not found by him to be qualified under the law.

In this respect, the case at bar is clearly distinguishable from those cited in argument by the learned counsel for the appellant.

The case of United States v. Ferreira, 13

How. 52, 14 L. ed. 47, relied upon by the appellant, is unlike this. There an act of Congress authorizing judges to determine whether certain parties were entitled to be placed upon the pension lists was held to be unconstitutional, because the findings of the judges were subject to revision by the Secretary of War, and since the findings of the judges were not final and conclusive, it was held that the act did not confer judicial power. This case is fully reviewed by the Supreme Court in Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U. S. 481, 38 L.

ed. 1058, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 545. Nor do we find the Intoxicating Liquor Cases, 25 Kan. 752, 37 Am. Rep. 284, cited by the appellant, at all in conflict with the conclusion reached by us in this case.

It, therefore, follows, for the reasons given, that the act of 1894, chap. 6, is valid and constitutional; that the order of Judge Roberts was passed in the performance of a judicial function and in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion. No writ of mandamus lies to control that discretion. Order affirmed with costs.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

Samantha E. MORRIS et al., Appts.,
v.

Isham E. CAUDLE et al.

(178 Ill. 9.)

1. A deed to a son of the grantor and "his own brothers and sisters" gives no interest to a child born a short time after the execution of the deed.
2. A deed executed before the birth of a child, but not delivered until after the birth and also the death of the child, conveys no interest either to the child or those claiming under the child, although the child would have been a grantee if in esse when the instrument took effect.

(February 17, 1899.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a decree of the Circuit Court for Wayne County in favor of defendants in a suit for the partition of certain real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Edwin Beecher and Creighton & Thomas, for appellants:

The intention of the grantors of the deed in question was to convey the premises therein to Isham E. Caudle and Amy E., the child soon expected to be born when the deed was executed and delivered. Deeds should be construed according to the intention of the parties if that can be ascertained.

Butterfield v. Smith, 11 Ill. 485; Hadden v. Shoutz, 15 Ill. 581; Bataria Mfg. Co. v. Newton Wagon Co. 91 Ill. 230; Lehndorf v.

NOTE—Infant en ventre sa mère as grantee in deed.

I. Ordinary conveyances.

II. Conveyances of uses, trusts, remainders, etc.

I. Ordinary conveyances.

With reference to ordinary conveyances designed to convey title directly and immediately to the grantee, the old common-law rule upon which the principal case is based, that to validate a deed there must be a grantee in being to take title, seems to have been generally, if not universally, adopted.

Thus, while the idea that a child conceived, but not yet born, may acquire property, may be consistent with the refinements of the civil law or with the doctrine of uses and of executory bequests and executory devises, which is borrowed from the civil law, it is wholly at variance with the plain, direct, and tangible maxims of the common law from which the power of conveyance by deed is derived, under which property must at all times have an owner, and one person cannot part with the ownership unless there be another person to take it from him, and the gift must be accompanied by actual delivery; and a deed of gift, therefore, to an unborn child who has been conceived but about six days before, conveys nothing. Dupree v. Dupree, 45 N. C. (Busbee, Eq.) 164, 59 Am. Dec. 590.

And a child en ventre sa mère at the date of a deed given, in consideration of love and affection, to grand-children, is not, in contemplation of law, in esse and capable of acquiring a right of property thereunder. Ibid.

By the strict rule of law, if A was tenant for life the remainder to his eldest son in tail, and A died without issue born, but leaving his wife big with child and after his death a son was born, this son could not take by virtue of the remainder for the particular estate determined before there was any person in esse in which the remainder would vest. To remedy this, the statute of 10 & 11 Wm. III. allows the remainders to vest in children while yet in their mother's womb; but the statute is confined to remainders, and there is no statute which enables children while yet in their mother's womb to take directly by a deed of gift by common law. Ibid., quoting 2 Bl. Com. p. 169.

And a deed of gift to living children by name, providing that afterborn children shall be allowed to share equally in the property intended to be granted, is more in the nature of a command to the children named, than an attempt to convey, and though it might in equity make a trust in such living children to share with the afterborn children, it would still leave the legal estate in the children named. Hall v. Thomas, 3 Strobb. L. 101.

And a deed given in consideration of natural love and affection to the children of the donor by name then living, and having a provision that any unborn children should share equally with the children then living, and reciting that the donor had put the said children in full and complete possession of the subject of the gift, vests the whole legal estate in the children then living to the exclusion of those born afterward. Ibid.

So, a conveyance cannot be made at common law which will vest the title to a slave in persons then unborn, and if N. C. Code 1823, chap. 411, with reference to conveyances, could help such a deed, it could not be permitted to do so, where the deed was made before the en-

Cope, 122 Ill. 317; Bradish v. Yocum, 130 Ill. 386.

At the time of the execution and delivery of the deed in question, one of the grantees therein, Amy, was a child in ventre sa mère; but she was born a month and eleven days afterward and lived two months. She was in being for all beneficial purposes to herself, and could take by descent, devise and gift.

1 Beck, Med. Jur. 12th ed. 423; 1 Bouvier, Inst. 73; 2 Bouvier, Inst. 353.

She was in esse from the time of her conception.

10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 624, and notes.

She could have had a guardian appointed for her, and could have been appointed an executor at common law.

1 Bouvier, Inst. 73; 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 628, note.

She could have been a cestui que trust by deed.

Dean v. Long, 122 Ill. 459.

She could have taken by deed as one of a class to which a remainder was limited.

actment of the statute. Newsom v. Thompson, 24 N. C. (2 Ired. L.) 277.

And in Lillard v. Ruckers, 9 Yerg. 64, it was held that a conveyance by deed of a slave to a person or persons not in esse at the time of such conveyance, as, for example, the conveyance to such children as either of two persons may thereafter have, is inoperative and vests no title in such afterborn children; but there is nothing in the case showing whether or not any of such children had been conceived at the time of the conveyance.

And in Faloon v. Simshauser, 130 Ill. 649, it was stated that in case of an immediate estate in possession, the grantee must be in esse, and a deed of that kind may be avoided by showing that the grantee came into being subsequent to the delivery of the deed; but in this case it appeared that the grantee in question was born about three years afterward.

But a man may surrender copyhold land immediately to the use of an infant en ventre sa mère, for a surrender is a thing executory, and nothing vests before admittance; and in such case the title of the surrender vests in a third person until the infant is born and becomes capable of taking an estate. Dupree v. Dupree, 45 N. C. (Busbee, Eq.) 164, 59 Am. Dec. 590, quoting Macpherson on Infants, 25 Law Lib. N. S. 565.

And it has been held that where a deed is made to a third person, who immediately conveys to the wife of the first grantor and her child or children begotten by him, a child born shortly after the date of the conveyance becomes at the instant of its birth a joint tenant with her mother by the force of the deed, and may be regarded as a prospective copurchaser. Powell v. Powell, 5 Bush. 619, 96 Am. Dec. 372.

And in Grimes v. Orrand, 2 Heisk. 298, in which the subject of controversy was a deed to the heirs of a living person to whom a child was born about three weeks after the deed was made, it was said that such person, and perhaps the unborn child, were the only persons who could inherit; but the child in question had died and this point was not necessary to the decision of the case.

The common-law rule that to render a deed valid there must be a grantor and grantee, as well as a thing granted, is only modified in North Carolina in so far as it affects a child 44 L. R. A.

20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 854, 855, and notes 1 and 2.

She was sufficiently described in the deed. Faloon v. Simshauser, 130 Ill. 649.

A deed is presumed to have been delivered on the day it bears date.

Masterson v. Cheek, 23 Ill. 72; Price v. Hudson, 125 Ill. 284; Hayes v. Boylan, 141 Ill. 400; Grand Tower Min. Mfg. Transp. Co. v. Cady, 96 Ill. 430; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 445, 446, note 2; Blake v. Fash, 44 Ill. 302.

The conveyance of a fee reserving a life estate in the grantor is a vested remainder. 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 833, note 5;

Fowler v. Black, 136 Ill. 363, 11 L. R. A. 670.

Messrs. Creighton, Kramer, & Kramer and W. T. Bonham, for appellees:

In order that any acts may constitute a good delivery, the grantor must part with his entire control of the deed.

5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 448; Hayes v. Boylan, 141 Ill. 400.

en ventre sa mère; and where a deed was made to a woman and her children, and at the time the deed was executed she had no living children, but a child was born within two months thereafter, such child will take under said deed as tenant in common with the mother, but children afterwards born and not conceived at the time of the deed will not take. Heath v. Heath, 114 N. C. 547.

II. Conveyances of uses, trusts, remainders, etc.

"Although by a grant or common-law conveyance, nothing could be transferred directly to a child in the womb, for the reason that it could not be a party to such an instrument, yet in a conveyance to uses it was otherwise; for then, the legal estate vesting in the trustee, the rule of the common law was supposed to be satisfied, and the use was allowed to shift, so as to include a child in the womb." Gay v. Baker, 58 N. C. (Jones, Eq.) 344, 78 Am. Dec. 220, dictum.

And a conveyance in trust for the benefit of a woman and her children will vest the estate in the mother and the children then born, and in one en ventre sa mère at the time, as tenants in common, but children born afterwards and not conceived at that time will not be entitled to come in. Ibid.

And such a conveyance will not, in the absence of anything on the face thereof to show that intention, be deemed to have been intended to give to the mother the use for life, and the remainder to her children so as to let in after-born children. Ibid.

In the above case it was said that the case of Dupree v. Dupree, 45 N. C. (Busbee, Eq.) 164, 59 Am. Dec. 590, supra, I., is not open to the rule of construction laid down in the case at bar, but will be found upon examination to be in accordance with it.

So, while in respect to a grantee in a deed it is necessary that he be a person in being at the time of the grant if he take immediately; if he take by way of remainder it is not necessary that he should be in being; but it is necessary that he come into being during the continuance of the particular estate or at the instant of its termination. Dupree v. Dupree, 45 N. C. (Busbee, Eq.) 164, 59 Am. Dec. 590.

And a remainder may be lawfully created un-

When the deed was executed Amy was unborn.

The grantee of a vested estate must be in esse at the time of the creation of the estate. A child en ventre sa mère is not in esse for the purpose of taking by deed.

10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 625, note 1.

Equity follows the law, and appellants cannot acquire new legal rights under this deed by resorting to a court of equity.

Marsellis v. Thalheimer, 2 Paige, 35, 21 Am. Dec. 66.

Craig, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a bill for partition, brought by the appellants in the circuit court of Wayne county wherein they prayed for partition of the lands described in the bill, as heirs at law of Samuel Caudle, deceased. Amy E. Caudle put in an answer to the bill, in which she denied that Samuel Caudle was the owner and seised of the lands named in the bill at the time of his death, and alleged "that on November 26, 1884, said Samuel Caudle and this defendant, who was at that time his wife, by warranty deed of that date conveyed the lands above described to the defendants, Isham E. Caudle and Bertha M. Caudle, . . . reserving unto themselves their life estates therein, which said deed was on said date duly acknowledged, and afterwards, on the 22d day of July, 1885, filed for record in the recorder's office of the said county of Wayne, . . . and that by reason of the said conveyance the entire estate, title, and interest which the said Samuel Caudle had, prior to the date of the said conveyance in the said lands, passed into this defendant and the said Isham E. Caudle and Bertha M. Caudle." The answer further denied that the complainants in said bill, and the defendants therein, except this defendant and the said Isham E. Caudle and Bertha M. Caudle, were seised in fee, as tenants in common by descent from said Samuel Caudle, of the said premises, or had any interest therein, and alleged that the same belonged solely to Isham E. Caudle and Bertha M. Caudle, subject to the life estate of Amy E. Caudle. The answer of Isham E. Caudle and Bertha M. Caudle set up the same defense as that of defendant Amy E. Caudle. Upon the coming in of the answer the appellants filed an amended bill, in which they alleged that the deed claimed to have been made by the said Samuel Caudle on November 26, 1884, conveying said described lands to Isham E. Caudle and Bertha M. Caudle, was never delivered to the grantees therein;

der the Michigan statutes, in favor of an unborn child, and an assignment to a man for the sole purpose of conveying the same to his wife, remainder to his heirs, is sufficient to vest the title in a child born to him by said wife a few months after the deed was made. See v. Derr, 57 Mich. 369.

So, in Graham v. Houghtall, 30 N. J. L. 352, it was held that a deed to a husband and wife, for and during the term of their natural life, or the life of the survivor of them, and after their decease to the children of such man by said wife, and their heirs and assigns, forever, vests the remainder in the children then born, subject to being opened at the birth of each succeeding child so as to let them in equally as they are born; but there was nothing in the case to show whether any of the children unborn at the time of the deed had been conceived.

And in Palmer v. Cracroft, 2 Vern. 578, in which lands were given by marriage settlement to the sons in tail male, remainder to the husband in fee, provided that if the husband or wife, or either of them died without issue male living at the time of his or her death, leaving only one daughter unmarried, the estate was to be accumulated for the benefit of such daughter, or if there were more daughters than one at the time of the death of the husband or wife, unmarried, and there was no male issue then to such daughters, and at the time of the death of the husband there were daughters and a son en ventre sa mère, it was held that under the statute 10 & 11 Wm. III., chap. 16, the posthumous son would take, though no provision was expressly made for a son.

So, a power to charge lands by will or deed for portions for children living at the time of their father's death includes within it a child en ventre sa mère. Beale v. Beale, 1 P. Wms. 244.

And where the donee of a power to found a fund in favor of her own issue to be born before the appointment executes it by a deed, which, after recting the power and her desire to exercise it and the state of her family, appoints the fund to her daughter for life, and after the daughter's death to the daughter's children in equal shares on their respectively attaining the age of twenty-one years, but if any such children should die under twenty-one leaving issue, the share of the one so dead should go to such issue and vest at twenty-one, and at the date of the deed the daughter had three children, including one en ventre sa mère, and had three born afterwards, those existing at the date of the deed of appointment, including the unborn one, were the only objects of the power. Re Francombe, L. R. 9 Ch. Div. 652, 47 L. J. Ch. N. S. 328.

And the intention of a donee to exercise a power to appoint a fund for her own issue to make it include unborn children, as well as those in existence, does not render the appointment void in toto, but the share of each of the children will be determined by the total number of objects which may be included. Ibid.

So, provision made by a deed of fine out of the estate of a wife after marriage for daughters to be born includes daughters then begotten and not yet born. Hewet v. Ireland, 1 P. Wms. 426, Glib. Eq. Rep. 145.

Where a deed of gift to living children by name is given declaring that afterborn children shall be allowed to share equally in the property intended to be granted, if a conveyance of lands, the most that could be made of it between the parties would be that at law the legal estate was in the grantees named, but in equity they might be regarded as trustees of a springing or shifting use, first, for themselves, and second, for themselves and the afterborn children as they respectively came into being; but in equity the result might be the same with reference to personality, but such a trust could never be set up against a third person without notice. Hall v. Thomas, 3 Strobb. L. 101.

A posthumous child is within the provision of marriage articles for such children to a marriage as should be living at the death of the father or mother, and such child will not be excluded on account of his being born after his father's death. Miller v. Turner, 1 Ves. Sr. 85.

F. H. B.

that said Bertha M. Caudle was not at that time in being, but was born on the 3d day of January, 1890; that the said deed purported to be made to "Isham E. Caudle and his one brothers and sisters"; that he, said Isham E. Caudle, at that time had no brothers and sisters other than the defendants and complainants in this bill, as Bertha M. Caudle, one of the defendants, was not at that time born; that the only persons, said term "one brothers and sisters" could have referred to were the other defendants and the complainants in this bill, except the said Bertha M. Caudle, who was not then born, and was not born until January 3, 1890, afterwards; that said deed was never delivered, and was never intended to be delivered, to said Isham E. Caudle, or any other of the defendants or complainants in this bill. It was also set up in the amended bill that, at the time of the making of said deed, the said defendant Amy E. Caudle was pregnant, and a short time after the making of said deed gave birth to a female child, to wit, on or about the 7th day of January, 1885; that the said child was born after the making of said deed, and was named Amy E. Caudle, but said child, Amy E. Caudle, died on or about March 11, 1885. To the amended bill Isham E. Caudle and Bertha M. Caudle filed a plea, in which they set up that in May, 1896, Amy E. Caudle, as guardian, filed a petition with the Wayne county court for leave to sell said lands as the property of Isham E. Caudle and Bertha M. Caudle; that thereafter Samuel Caudle filed his intervening petition in said court, wherein he stated that he and his wife had deeded to Isham E. Caudle and his brothers and sisters the land mentioned in the petition of Amy E. Caudle, together with other lands, by which statement he intended to admit, and did admit, that he signed, sealed, acknowledged, and delivered the deed referred to in complainant's bill; that by the admissions above pleaded the said Samuel Caudle and his heirs, the complainants herein, were and are estopped from denying the execution and delivery of the deed.

From the foregoing statement of the pleadings it appears the appellants predicate their right of recovery on the ground that Samuel Caudle died seised of the lands in controversy, and that they inherited from him, that the deed executed November 26, 1884, by Samuel Caudle and wife to "Isham E. Caudle and his one brothers and sisters," was never delivered, and hence the lands did not pass by the pretended conveyance. But appellants, from their argument filed in this court, seem to have changed their position, and they now claim that the deed of November 26, 1884, was delivered, and that the title to the land passed under that deed to Isham E. and Amy E. Caudle, an unborn child; that upon the death of Amy E. Caudle they became possessed of an undivided interest in the land as her heirs. There is no substantial dispute between the parties in regard to the facts connected with the execution of the deed in question, nor in regard to what was said and done in regard to the delivery of the instrument. It appears from the record that Samuel Caudle, the grantor in the deed, was a man advanced in years, who had raised a large family of children, and having lost his wife he had married a young woman. As a result of the second marriage one child had been born, before the deed was made, another was expected to be born within four or five weeks, and others might reasonably be expected at regular periods so long as the health and vigor of the grantor continued. Having raised and educated his children by his first wife, and being desirous of making some provision for his children of the second marriage, he called upon a justice of the peace with a view of making a will, in which he desired to devise the land in question to Isham E. Caudle, a son of the second marriage, and such other children as might thereafter be born. Upon consultation with the justice, the latter told Caudle that a will might be broken. He then decided to make a deed, and directed the squire to prepare a deed conveying the land to "Isham E. Caudle and his own brothers and sisters." The justice prepared the deed as directed, but in writing the name of the grantees in the deed he used the word "one" instead of "own." After the deed was executed and acknowledged, the grantor, Caudle, took the instrument and carried it away. Upon arriving at his home, he gave it to his wife, saying, "Mother, here's your deed; take care of it."

Under the facts as shown by the record, the question presented is whether the unborn child, Amy E. Caudle, took title to the land under the deed of November 26, 1884, executed by Samuel Caudle and his wife to Isham E. Caudle and his own brothers and sisters. A grantee must be in esse at the time the deed is executed; otherwise no title will pass by the deed. 9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 131. In Tiedeman on Real Property (§ 673) the author says: "The common law did not treat children en ventre sa mère as persons in esse for the purpose of holding or acquiring property. This capacity only attached upon their birth alive. Consequently, by the old common law children born after the death of the ancestor were precluded from participating with the others in the distribution of the intestate's estate. But this harsh rule has now been generally changed by statute." There is no doubt in regard to a posthumous child being entitled to inherit property by descent under our existing laws, and to also take by devise, but an unborn child has no such existence as will enable it to take a present grant of lands by deed. Indeed, in Faloon v. Simshauser, 130 Ill. 649, we held that in case of a grant of an immediate estate in possession the grantee must be in esse, and a deed of that kind may be avoided by showing the grantee came into being subsequently to the delivery of the deed. In speaking in regard to the necessity of the existence of a grantee in a deed of conveyance, Tiedeman (§ 797) says: "For the grant of an immediate estate in possession it is necessary that the grantee be in esse, and if it be shown that the grantee came into being after the conveyance it will avoid the deed."

There is another fatal objection to the deed,—it was never delivered to the unborn grantee or to any person for her. As has been seen, the deed was executed November 26, 1884. The child was born January 7, 1885, and died March 11, 1885. After the deed was executed, the grantor, Caudle, took it home with him, and then handed it to his wife, and it was kept in the house where he and his wife resided, under his control, until the last of July, 1885, when the wife sent it to the county seat to be recorded. If, upon the execution of the deed, Caudle had delivered it to his wife to be by her held for the grantees therein named, we would not hesitate to hold that the instrument was delivered; but where one of the grantors merely places the deed in the hands of the other grantor for safe-keeping, as was the case here, and the instrument is kept in the possession and under the control of the grantors, the deed cannot be held to be delivered. Some time after the death of the child, the deed was placed on record, and thereafter, in May, 1896, the grantor admitted, as shown by the pleadings, that he had executed and delivered the deed. This rendered the deed valid as to the grantee Isham E. Caudle, but had no bearing as to the rights of the unborn child or any person claiming under her.

As the appellants failed to establish title to the premises in question, the court properly dismissed the bill, and the decrees will be affirmed.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

BOARD OF FIRE & WATER COMMISSIONERS of the City OF MARQUETTE, Appt.,

v.

Edwin C. WILKINSON et al., Assignees of James M. Wilkinson.

(.....Mich.....)

1. A deposit of public moneys by a treasurer of a board of fire and water commissioners, under direction of the board, in a bank of which he was a partner, is in violation of Pub. acts 1875, p. 158 (1 How. Anno. Stat. §§ 424, 427), prohibiting an officer to mingle public money with that of himself or any other person, or to receive, directly or indirectly, any pecuniary or valuable consideration as an inducement for the deposit thereof.
2. Public moneys deposited by an officer in a bank of which he was a partner constitute a trust fund, even if he had the legal title to the money.
3. A receiver of a bank in which a trust fund was deposited cannot be required to repay it in preference to the claims of other creditors, unless the trust fund can be identified or traced into some other specific fund or property.

(April 18, 1890.)

APPEAL by petitioner from a decree of the Circuit Court for Marquette County refusing to allow its claim to a preference out of the funds in the hands of assignees for benefit of creditors of James M. Wilkinson. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

MORRIS, Charles R. Brown and George P. Brown, for appellant:

Wilkinson, the treasurer, could not contract with Wilkinson, the banker.

Mechem, Pub. Off. § 839; People, Plugger, v. Overysael Twp. Board, 11 Mich. 222; Clute v. Barron, 2 Mich. 192; Dwight v. Blackmar, 2 Mich. 330, 57 Am. Dec. 130;

NOTE.—In connection with this case, see also Marquette v. Wilkinson (Mich.) 43 L. R. A. 840. 44 L. R. A.

Moore v. Handlebaum, 8 Mich. 433; Powell v. Conant, 33 Mich. 396; Merryman v. David, 31 Ill. 404; Kerfoot v. Hyman, 52 Ill. 512; Cottom v. Holliday, 59 Ill. 176; Mason v. Bauman, 62 Ill. 76; Ely v. Hanford, 65 Ill. 267; Stone v. Daggett, 73 Ill. 367; Tewksbury v. Spruance, 75 Ill. 187; Hughes v. Washington, 72 Ill. 84.

A trustee cannot legally become interested to the detriment of his cestui que trust, or an agent to the detriment of his principal.

Mechem, Pub. Off. 839, 840; Davoue v. Fanning, 2 Johns. Ch. 257; Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Dewey, 14 Mich. 477.

If the board had drawn their warrant upon their treasurer for funds in his possession, his duty, involving no exercise of discretion, would be to pay, and his failure or refusal could be enforced by mandamus.

Barney v. State, 42 Md. 480; Murphy v. Smith, 49 Ark. 37.

A duty laid upon a municipality by the legislature for the protection of the citizens is not a right to be waived but an obligation to be performed. And no one attempting to act under the statute can have any excuse for disregarding any of its provisions.

Atty. Gen. v. Hanchett, 42 Mich. 438; Cullen v. O'Hara, 4 Mich. 132; Gilkey v. Hamilton, 22 Mich. 283.

A municipal corporation cannot be estopped by an act void in its inception and wholly ultra vires.

Taymouth Twp. v. Koehler, 35 Mich. 22; Sault Ste. Marie Highway Comrs. v. Van Dusan, 40 Mich. 429; Bogart v. Lamotte Twp. 79 Mich. 294; Davis v. Jackson, 61 Mich. 530; Wrought Iron Bridge Co. v. Jasper Twp. 68 Mich. 441.

A trust created for any public purpose cannot be assignable at the will of the trustee.

See Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 300, and cases there cited.

The treasurer "is himself, to all intents and purposes, the treasury, and bound to account for all that he receives, and no one else can supervise his action."

Perley v. Muskegon County, 32 Mich. 132, 20 Am. Rep. 637; People v. Wadsworth, 63 Mich. 500; Lansing v. Wood, 57 Mich. 211.

A fund is a distinct thing, however frequently the coin or bills which may be received on its account are changed in identity.

People v. Bringard, 39 Mich. 24, 33 Am. Rep. 344.

If the money deposited belonged to a third person, and was held by the depositor in a fiduciary capacity, its character is not changed by being placed to his credit in his bank account.

Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 65, 26 L. ed. 699; Stephenson v. Little, 10 Mich. 439; Colerain v. Bell, 9 Met. 499; Rock v. Stinger, 36 Ind. 346; Hancock v. Hazzard, 12 Cush. 112, 59 Am. Dec. 171; San Diego County v. California Nat. Bank, 52 Fed. Rep. 59; Swartwout v. Mechanics' Bank, 5 Denio, 555; Burnett v. First Nat. Bank, 38 Mich. 630; 3 Lewin, Tr. pp. 1090 et seq., chap. 30, § 2; State v. Bank of Commerce, 54 Neb. 725.

As between the cestui que trust and the trustee, the relation may be, and usually is, not only that of trustee and cestui que trust, but also of debtor and creditor.

Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 65, 25 L. ed. 699; People v. McKinney, 10 Mich. 54; Gunter v. Janes, 9 Cal. 643; People v. Bringard, 39 Mich. 22, 33 Am. Rep. 344; Independent Dist. v. King, 80 Iowa, 497; Bunton v. King, 80 Iowa, 506; Monroe Twp. v. Whipple, 56 Mich. 518; Brooke v. King, 104 Iowa, 713.

If it were legal or possible for Wilkinson as treasurer to deposit trust funds with Wilkinson the banker, knowledge by Wilkinson, the banker, that the funds belonged to the water board would prevent his acquiring title to the funds.

School District v. First Nat. Bank, 102 Mass. 174; Independent Dist. v. King, 80 Iowa, 497; Bunton v. King, 80 Iowa, 506; Davenport Plow Co. v. Lamp, 80 Iowa, 722; Long v. Emsley, 57 Iowa, 12.

Equity will follow trust funds.

People v. Merchants' & M. Bank, 78 N. Y. 269, 34 Am. Rep. 532; Slater v. Oriental Mills, 18 R. I. 352; Little v. Chadwick, 151 Mass. 109, 7 L. R. A. 570; Nonotuck Silk Co. v. Planders, 87 Wis. 237; City Bank v. Blackmore, 43 U. S. App. 617, 75 Fed. Rep. 771, 21 C. C. A. 514; Anheuser-Busch Brewing Asso. v. Morris, 36 Neb. 31; Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank v. King, 57 Pa. 202; Peak v. Ellicott, 30 Kan. 156, 46 Am. Rep. 90; People v. City Bank, 96 N. Y. 32; Cragie v. Hadley, 99 N. Y. 131, 52 Am. Rep. 9; Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 54, 26 L. ed. 693; Stephenson v. Little, 10 Mich. 433; Morbeck v. State, Jackson Twp., 28 Ind. 86; Halbert v. State, Martin County Comrs., 22 Ind. 128; Burnett v. First Nat. Bank, 38 Mich. 630; Re Greene, 2 Connoly, 166.

The supreme court of Wisconsin, and one or two others, have drifted back to the old rule that a cestui que trust must trace the trust fund and identify it or the specific property into which it was converted; but 44 L. R. A.

even these authorities recognize the rule that when a trustee mingles trust moneys with his own, any moneys drawn from the common fund by the trustee will be deemed to have been drawn from his own instead of the trust fund.

Burnham v. Barth, 89 Wis. 362; Wisconsin Marine & F. Ins. Co. Bank v. Manistee Salt & Lumber Co. 77 Mich. 81; Barney v. State, 42 Md. 480; Murphy v. Smith, 49 Ark. 37.

These assignees cannot set up in a proceeding in equity a defense which at law would be held to be unconscionable.

Carley v. Graves, 85 Mich. 483; Re Johnson, 103 Mich. 109; Wallace v. Stone, 107 Mich. 190; Sunderlin v. Mecosta County Sav. Bank (Mich.) 4 Det. L. N. 1115, 74 N. W. 478.

The law favors diligence in the enforcement of the claims, and the creditor "first on deck" is entitled to speedy justice, regardless of its effect upon others who are dilatory in asserting their rights.

Eureka Dist. Twp. v. Farmers' Bank, 88 Iowa, 194.

Mr. A. B. Eldredge, with Mr. A. E. Miller, for respondents:

The statute does not prohibit the almost universal practice of the deposit in bank of public moneys.

Perley v. Muskegon County, 32 Mich. 132, 20 Am. Rep. 637; Monroe Twp. v. Whipple, 56 Mich. 516; Lansing v. Wood, 57 Mich. 201; People v. Wadsworth, 63 Mich. 500.

The act of 1875 does not prohibit the board from depositing its moneys in bank, but, on the contrary, expressly recognizes such power.

A bank is more than a borrower of the funds of its depositors; it is a place for the safe keeping of moneys, a convenience for the public. This is the chief purpose of a bank.

Morse, Banks & Banking, 3d ed. p. 124, § 47.

If there was not express authority and sanction by the petitioner for all that was done, there was full knowledge on the part of the board; and the act being lawful, such long-continued knowledge and acquiescence amount to ratification, which is as binding upon the petitioner as though it were an individual.

Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 463; Lansing v. Wood, 57 Mich. 201; Davis v. Jackson, 61 Mich. 530; Chicago v. Seaton, 115 Ill. 230; Peterson v. New York, 17 N. Y. 453; San Francisco Gas Co. v. San Francisco, 9 Cal. 470; Ross v. Madison, 1 Ind. 281; Allegheny City v. McClurkan, 14 Pa. 81; Clark v. Washington, 12 Wheat. 40, 6 L. ed. 544; Bank of United States v. Dandridge, 12 Wheat. 70, 6 L. ed. 554; Brady v. Brooklyn, 1 Barb. 584; 4 Thomp. Corp. § 4964.

The right to trace trust funds has its basis in the right of property, and never was based upon any theory of preference by reason of unlawful conversion.

Where the property converted is money, and money is found in the hands of the assignee or receiver, sometimes, and under certain circumstances, such moneys are held to be identified as trust moneys, under the presumption that the trustee paid out his own moneys and kept those belonging to the trust. This presumption is, however, overcome when the trust fund is shown not to be contained in such money.

Neely v. Rood, 54 Mich. 134, 52 Am. Rep. 802; Pierce v. Holzer, 65 Mich. 263; Sherwood v. Central Mich. Sav. Bank, 103 Mich. 109; Nonotuck Silk Co. v. Flanders, 87 Wis. 237; Re Plankinton Bank, 87 Wis. 378; Sherwood v. Milford State Bank, 94 Mich. 78; Carley v. Graves, 85 Mich. 483.

A trust fund must be traced into the assets delivered to the assignee, or the cestui que trust will be compelled to share as a general creditor.

Sunderlin v. Mecosta County Sav. Bank (Mich.) 4 Det. L. N. 1115, 74 N. W. 478; Carley v. Graves, 85 Mich. 485; Wisconsin Marine & F. Ins. Co. Bank v. Manistee Salt & Lumber Co. 77 Mich. 76; Sherwood v. Milford State Bank, 94 Mich. 78; Slater v. Oriental Mills, 18 R. I. 352; State v. Bank of Commerce, 54 Neb. 725; State v. Foster, 5 Wyo. 199, 29 L. R. A. 226; Little v. Chadwick, 151 Mass. 109, 7 L. R. A. 570; Freiberg v. Stoddard, 161 Pa. 259; Oavin v. Gleason, 105 N. Y. 256; Oceil Nat. Bank v. Thurber, 8 U. S. App. 496, 59 Fed. Rep. 913, 8 C. C. A. 365; Ex parte Hardcastle, 44 L. T. N. S. 524; Englar v. Offutt, 70 Md. 78; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Armstrong, 39 Fed. Rep. 684; Northern Dakota Elevator Co. v. Clark, 3 N. D. 26; Peters v. Bain, 133 U. S. 670, 33 L. ed. 696; Thuemmler v. Barth, 89 Wis. 381.

Hooker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The board of fire and water commissioners of the city of Marquette is a corporation organized by act No. 243, Laws 1869, vol. 2, p. 104. This act provides for the selection of a secretary and a treasurer from among the members of the board. The board was organized soon after its creation, and from that time its funds were deposited in the First National Bank of Marquette, the water consumers being in the habit of paying their rates at the bank. The money was credited to the board, and checked out by the secretary. James M. Wilkinson was a member of the board from a time previous to December 10, 1883, to his death, which occurred January 24, 1898. In 1893 he was engaged in the business of banking, with a Mr. Campbell, under the name of Campbell & Wilkinson. The following is a record of proceedings of the board for December 10, 1883: "The secretary informed the board that all the accommodation in the banking business received by the board was had at the Bank of Campbell & Wilkinson, and that the banking business was done at the First National Bank, and asked the board if all the business could not be done at Campbell & Wilkinson's bank; and on motion it was resolved that all business was to be done at Campbell & Wilkinson's bank, commencing January 1, 1884." On January 1, 1884, the following proceedings were had: "The president stated that the banking was to be done at Campbell & Wilkinson's bank; from this, it would be well for this board to elect a treasurer, out of its number, to receive all moneys, and give receipts for same, and take the bank's receipts for deposits. J. M. Wilkinson was elected as treasurer of this board, and the following resolution was unanimously adopted: 'Resolved, that the moneys of this board shall be paid over to the treasurer of this board, and he is hereby authorized to give his receipt, in the name of this board, for all money which he may receive for this board.' " The money of the board was thereupon transferred to the Bank of Campbell & Wilkinson, and the business of the board was carried on there, until the death of Campbell, in 1889, in the same way that it had been done with the First National Bank. The water consumers paid their money to the bank, the bank credited them on a book kept for the purpose, and, by deposit slips, placed the amount to the credit of the board. The money was drawn, as wanted, upon ordering bank checks signed by the secretary, who kept the accounts. In December, 1889, Mr. Campbell died, and Mr. Wilkinson continued in the banking business until the time of his death; and no change whatever was made in the business of the bank, or in the board's dealings with the bank, until April 26, 1893, when a change having been made in the city charter creating a comptroller and requiring "all accounts and demands against the city and all boards thereof" to be audited by the comptroller, and the orders drawn in payment thereof to be countersigned and registered by the comptroller (City Charter, chap. 9, § 3), this led to the use of orders being drawn upon the treasurer, which orders were paid by the bank, and returned to the secretary, exactly as the checks had been before. On January 22, 1898, Wilkinson made a general assignment to the defendants for the benefit of his creditors, but made no schedule of his property. He died, as stated, two days later. The assignees took possession of his property. The petition is filed for the purpose of recovering a balance of $11,376.42, the amount which is claimed to have been in Wilkinson's hands, of the funds of the board. It proceeds upon the theory that this was a trust fund, and that the petitioner's claim should have precedence over those of other creditors of Wilkinson.

The first contention of the appellees is that the board authorized the loan of the funds (i. e., that it directed their deposit in banks, with the expectation that they would become the money of the banks holding them, and be used as the money of ordinary depositors is used by banks), and that, therefore, the relation of debtor and creditor arose between the bank and the board, as in other cases, and that the claim of the board is not a preferred claim, because the money was not held in trust.

In 1875 the legislature passed "An Act to Provide for the Safe Keeping of Public Moneys." Pub. Acts 1875, p. 158 (1 How. Ann. Stat. §§ 423-430). Among its provisions are the following:

"Sec. 1. The people of the state of Michigan enact, that all moneys which shall come into the hands of any officer of the state, or of any officer of any county, or of any township, school district, highway district, city, or village, or of any other municipal or public corporation within this state, pursuant to any provision of law authorizing such officer to receive the same, shall be denominated public moneys within the meaning of this act.

"Sec. 2. It shall be the duty of every officer charged with the receiving, keeping, or disbursing of public moneys to keep the same separate and apart from his own money, and he shall not commingle the same with his own money, nor with the money of any other person, firm, or corporation.

"Sec. 3. No such officer shall, under any pretext, use, nor allow to be used, any such moneys for any purpose other than in accordance with the provisions of law; nor shall he use the same for his own private use, nor loan the same to any person, firm, or corporation without legal authority so to do.

"Sec. 4. In all cases where public moneys are authorized to be deposited in any bank, or to be loaned to any individual, firm, or corporation, for interest, the interest accruing upon such public moneys shall belong to and constitute a general fund of the state, county, or other public or municipal corporation, as the case may be.

"Sec. 5. In no case shall any such officer, directly or indirectly, receive any pecuniary or valuable consideration as an inducement for the deposit of any public moneys with any particular bank, firm, or corporation.

"Sec. 6. The provisions of this act shall apply to all deputies of such officer or officers, and to all clerks, agents, and servants of such officer or officers."

Section 429 makes violations of this act punishable by fine and imprisonment.

Wilkinson was elected treasurer in 1884, and a resolution was adopted "that the moneys of the board should be paid over to the treasurer of the board." The funds were afterwards deposited with Campbell & Wilkinson. This was done by direction of the board and after Campbell's death the board seems to have been content to have Wilkinson treat the same as a deposit in his bank. If the law of 1875 has application to this board,—and we think that it has,—the legal custodian of the funds of this board had no right to deposit these funds in a banking institution in which he was a stockholder or partner; for § 427 prohibited his receiving, directly or indirectly, any pecuniary or valuable consideration, and § 424 prohibited his commingling the money with that of himself or any other person, firm, or corporation. If we should construe this section liberally, and say that it was not designed to prohibit a treasurer from depositing his funds in a bank in the ordinary way, we should be required to except deposits in banks in which he has a pecuniary interest. The deposit with Campbell & Wilkinson was in violation of this law, and no order of the board could make it lawful. Still more clearly improper was the practice adopted by Wilkinson, of using this fund, with his own money, in his own banking business. This was a trust fund, as much as though Wilkinson had been a farmer or broker or contractor or merchant, and had used the fund in his business. It does not follow that the fund is not a trust fund because he had the legal title to the money, though that fact may protect one who receives the money innocently. In the case of People v. Bringard, 39 Mich. 22, 33 Am. Rep. 344, it was said that "we have no hesitation in holding that whenever any township treasurer misappropriates his trust funds to his private purposes, and fraudulently refuses to account for them, he comes as plainly within the law as if he made a similar misuse of specific coins or bills, which he had no right to exchange for their equivalents." The case recognized the rule that such officers become responsible as debtors, and not bailees, and that they become owners of the money they receive. See Perley v. Muskegon County, 32 Mich. 139, 20 Am. Rep. 637, and cases cited. But it does not follow that the fund is not a trust fund, which a court of equity may require the application of to the discharge of the trust, as was held in the recent case of Marquette v. Wilkinson (Mich.) 43 L. R. A. 840. The case of People v. Wadsworth, 63 Mich. 500, does not, in our opinion, militate against this, as the question there was whether one was necessarily guilty of embezzlement of public funds of which he was custodian, lost through insolvency, said funds having been on deposit in his bank by arrangement with the township treasurer. It was only held that a fraudulent intent was essential to that offense. In the case before us, Wilkinson was a member of the board, and its treasurer. He received its funds, through his clerks, and he had no right to mingle and use them with his private funds. It should have been kept as a special fund, and, though it was not, it cannot be said that a court of equity may not apply it to its proper use, if it can find the fund. In Lansing v. Wood, 57 Mich. 211, Mr. Justice Campbell uses this language in referring to cases holding that the money which officers deposit in banks is not a public bailment, but becomes a private debt from the banker to the officer depositing it: "But it does not follow . . . that such an officer becomes, as to the public, the absolute owner of the funds in his hands, so that no one can question the use he makes of them." And he adds that in People v. McKinney, 10 Mich. 54, and People v. Bringard, 39 Mich. 22, 33 Am. Rep. 344, it was held that "a public trust fund does not lose its character by changing the specific moneys which make it up," and in the latter case the duty of the officer to keep such money entirely separate from his own was fully recognized. The law by which the board was created requires the election of a treasurer, and, though it does not prescribe his duty, the custody of funds is so uniformly considered the principal duty of such officers, in corporations, that it may be fairly implied. Moreover, the resolution quoted placed the money in the hands of the treasurer, if the board had control of its custody. The treasurer took this fund, and placed it in the custody of his copartner and himself. The collections and disbursements were made by their clerks, by whom the treasurer's account, so far as there appears to have been any, was kept. But, whatever may be said of the relation that the firm of Campbell & Wilkinson sustained to these funds, when the former died the moneys on hand belonging to the board, and those subsequently collected, passed into the hands of Wilkinson. If the act of 1875 applied, he was prohibited from mingling them with his own moneys; and, if it did not, he still held them by virtue of his office, and had no right to convert them to his own use. The fund was a trust fund in either case.

Having reached the conclusion that the funds of the board in the hands of its treasurer constituted a trust fund, it remains to ascertain whether it can be collected from the receivers. This involves questions of law as well as fact. The theory upon which property is taken from a receiver, and paid to a beneficiary, is that the court is able to find in the hands of the receiver property, or its proceeds, which was held by the insolvent, not in his own absolute right, but charged with a trust. In such a case a court of equity will hold that it is not subject to the claims of other creditors. But when the fund received in trust has been dissipated, so that it cannot be traced into some other specific property or fund, the only remedy of the beneficiary is to share equally with other creditors. In its origin, this right to follow a trust fund was limited. Early cases went only to the extent of holding that the beneficiary of property held by a trustee could follow it, and retake it from the possession of such trustee, or others in privity with him, and not bona fide purchasers for value, whether such property remained in its original form, or in some other or substituted form, so long as it could be ascertained to be the same property, or the product or proceeds thereof, but that such right ceased when the means of ascertainment failed, as when the subject of the trust was money, or had been converted into money, and then mixed and confounded in a general mass of money, of the same description, so as to be no longer divisible or distinguishable. Taylor v. Plumer, 3 Maule & S. 575.

The case of Cavin v. Gleason, 105 N. Y. 262, recognizes this rule and its limitations. It is there said: "It is clear, we think, that, upon an accounting in bankruptcy or insolvency, a trust creditor is not entitled to a preference over general creditors of the insolvent merely on the ground of the nature of his claim; that is, that he is a trust creditor, as distinguished from a general creditor. We know of no authority for such a contention. The equitable doctrine that, as between creditors, equality is equity, admits, so far as we know, of no exception founded on the greater supposed sacredness of one debt, or that it arose out of a violation of duty, or that its loss involves greater apparent hardship in one case than another, unless it appears, in addition, that there is some specific, recognized equity, founded on some agreement, or the relation of the debt to the assigned property, which entitles the claimant, according to equitable principles, to preferential payment. If it appears that trust property specifically belonging to the trust is included in the assets, the court, doubtless, may order it to be restored to the trust. So, also, if it appears that trust property has been wrongfully converted by the trustee, and constitutes, although in a changed form, a part of the assets, it would seem to be equitable, and in accordance with equitable principles, that the things into which the trust property has been changed should, if required, be set apart for the trust, or, if separation is impossible, that priority of lien should be adjudged in favor of the trust estate for the value of the trust property or funds or proceeds of the trust property, entering into, and constituting a part of, the assets. This rule simply asserts the right of the true owner to his own property. But it is the general rule, as well in a court of equity, as in a court of law, that in order to follow trust funds, and subject them to operation of the trust, they must be identified. A court of equity, in pursuing the inquiry and in administering relief, is less hampered by technical difficulties than a court of law; and it may be sufficient to entitle a party to equitable preference in the distribution of a fund in insolvency, that it appears that the fund or property of the insolvent remaining for distribution includes the proceeds of the trust estate, although it may be impossible to point out the precise thing in which the trust fund has been invested, or the precise time when the conversion took place. The authorities require, at least, this degree of distinctness in the proof, before preference can be awarded." In Atkinson v. Rochester Printing Co. 114 N. Y. 175, this language was approved.

In Holmes v. Gilman, 138 N. Y. 376, 20 L. R. A. 566, the following language appears: "The claim of the plaintiff to recover the moneys arising from the payments of these policies is based upon the principle which allows a cestui que trust to follow trust funds, and to appropriate to himself the property into which such funds have been changed, together with the increased value of such property, provided the trust fund can be clearly ascertained, traced, and identified, and provided the rights of bona fide purchasers for value, without notice, do not intervene. The right has its basis in the right of property, and the court proceeds on the principle that the title has not been affected by the change made of the trust funds, and the cestui que trust has his option to claim the property and its increased value as representing his original fund. The right to follow and appropriate ceases only when the means of ascertainment fail. It is a question of title."

In discussing this subject in the case of Frelinghuysen v. Nugent, 36 Fed. Rep. 239, Mr. Justice Bradley said: "Another difficulty in the complainant's case is the want of identity of the property claimed with the proceeds of the money abstracted from the bank. Formerly the equitable right of following misapplied money or other property into the hands of the parties receiving it depended upon the ability of identifying it; the equity attaching only to the very property misapplied. This right was first extended to the proceeds of the property, namely, to that which was procured in place of it, by exchange, purchase, or sale. But if it became confused with other property of the same kind, so as not to be distinguishable, without any fault on the part of the possessor, the equity was lost. Finally, however, it has been held, as the better doctrine, that confusion does not destroy the equity entirely, but converts it into a charge upon the entire mass, giving to the party injured by the unlawful diversion a priority of right over the other creditors of the possessor. This is as far as the rule has been carried. The difficulty of sustaining the claim in the present case is that it does not appear that the goods claimed—that is to say, the stock on hand, finished and unfinished—were, either in whole or in part, the proceeds of any money unlawfully abstracted from the bank. On the contrary, the goods and stock on hand were purchased of the other creditors of Nugent & Co. almost entirely, if not wholly, on credit, and really stand in the place of, and represent, the debts of the firm due and owing to said creditors. This is true with regard to all the raw stock on hand, and with regard to all the stock and materials from which the manufactured or partially manufactured goods were produced. If any moneys derived from the bank entered into the latter, they were those moneys which were regularly drawn by checks of the firm weekly for the payment of their hands. It seems impossible, therefore, to sustain any such general charge or trust upon the goods and property of Nugent & Co. as that which has been set up and claimed by the complainant."

The supreme court of Massachusetts, in Little v. Chadwick, 151 Mass. 109, 7 L. R. A. 570, speaking through Mr. Justice Allen, said: "When trust money becomes so mixed up with the trustee's individual funds that it is impossible to trace and identify it as entering into some specific property, the trust ceases. The court will go as far as it can in thus tracing and following trust money; but when, as a matter of fact, it cannot be traced, the equitable right of the cestui que trust to follow it fails. Under such circumstances if the trustee has become bankrupt, the court cannot say that the trust money is to be found somewhere in the general estate of the trustee that still remains. He may have lost it, with property of his own, and in such case the cestui que trust can only come in and share with the general creditors."

The case of Nonotuck Silk Co. v. Flanders, 87 Wis. 237, is an interesting case,—the more so as it overrules some prior cases which took advanced ground upon the subject of trust funds. It is there said, quoting from Jessel, M. R., in Knatchbull v. Hallett, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 696: "The guiding principle is that a trustee cannot assert a title of his own to trust property. If he destroys a trust fund by dissipating it altogether, there remains nothing to be the subject of the trust. But so long as the trust property can be traced and followed into other property, into which it has been converted, that remains subject to the trust." The court continued: "That case is as favorable to the claim of the plaintiff as any in the English courts; and yet it nowhere sanctions the proposition that the owner of the property or money intrusted is entitled to a preference over other creditors of an insolvent estate out of property or assets to which no part of the trust fund, or the proceeds thereof, is traceable. All such cases turn upon the question of fact, whether the trust property or fund, or the proceeds thereof, are traceable into any specific property or fund." The opinion is replete with authorities in support of the rule laid down by it.

In Slater v. Oriental Mills, 18 R. I. 352, the supreme court of Rhode Island refuses to hold that, "where one's property has been wrongfully applied and dissipated by another, a charge remains upon the estate of the latter for the amount thus wrongfully taken upon the ground that his estate is thereby so much larger, and that the trust property is really and clearly there, in a substituted form, although it cannot be directly traced." Proceeding with the discussion, that court said: "This view is pressed with much skill, and some authority, but we are unable to adopt it. While one who has been wronged may follow and take his own property, or its visible product, it is quite a different thing to say that he may take the property of somebody else. The general property of an insolvent debtor belongs to his creditors, as much as particular trust property belongs to a cestui que trust. Creditors have no right to share in that which is shown not to belong to the debtor, and, conversely, a claimant has no right to take from creditors that which he cannot show to be equitably his own. But right here comes the argument that it is equitably his own, because the debtor has taken the claimant's money and mingled it with his estate, whereby it is swelled just so much. But, as applicable to all cases, the argument is not sound. Where the property, or its substantial equivalent, remains, we concede its force; but, where it is dissipated and gone, the appropriation of some other property in its stead simply takes from creditors that which clearly belongs to them. In the former case, as in Pennell v. Deffell, 4 DeG. M. & G. 372, and in Knatchbull v. Hallett, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 696, the illustration may be used of a debtor mingling trust funds with his own, in a chest or bag. Though the particular money cannot be identified, the amount is swelled just so much, and the amount added belongs to the cestui que trust. But in the latter case there is no swelling of the estate, for the money is spent and gone; or, as respondent's counsel pertinently suggests, 'Knight Bruce's chest,—Jessel's bag,—is empty.' Shall we therefore order a like amount to be taken out of some other chest or bag, or out of the debtor's general estate? Suppose the general estate consists only of mills and machinery acquired long before the complainant's money was appropriated. Upon what principle could that property be taken to reimburse them? But the complainants say: 'Our money has been misappropriated by the debtor without our consent and without our fault. Why should we not be reimbursed out of his estate?' Undoubtedly, it is right that everyone should have his own; but, when a claimant's property cannot be found, this same principle prevents the taking of property which equitably belongs to creditors of the trustee to make it up. The creditors have done no wrongful act, and should not be called upon, in any way, to atone for the misconduct of their debtor. It is an ordinary case of misfortune on the part of claimants whose confidence in a trustee or agent has been abused. In examining the question upon authority, we think it is equally clear that there can be no equitable relief, except in cases where the fund claimed is in some way apparent in the debtor's estate. Of the cases cited by the complainants, only four go to the extent of holding that a cestui que trust is entitled to a lien for reimbursement on the general estate of the trustee, where the trust fund does not in some form so appear. These are Davenport Plow Co. v. Lamp, 80 Iowa, 722; McLeod v. Evans, 66 Wis. 401, 57 Am. Rep. 287; Francis v. Evans, 69 Wis. 115; Bowers v. Evans, 71 Wis. 133. In the first of these cases the court lost sight of the distinction, which we desire to make clear, between funds remaining in the estate, which go to swell the assets, and funds which, having been dissipated or used in the payment of debts, do not remain in the estate, and so do not swell the estate. Upon the former fact, as we have stated above, we concede the right to relief. But the court, in the Iowa case, seems to ignore this very important distinction, and in so doing overthrows the foundation on which its decision is based. For it says: 'The creditors, if permitted to enforce their claims as against the trust, would secure the payment of their claims out of trust moneys.' Now, how can this be so, if the trust moneys, or their substantial equivalent, are not there? The court assumes that the payment of debts is the same thing as an increase of assets, or, perhaps, that it works the same result to a creditor, by increasing his dividends. But this is not so. How the satisfaction of a debt by incurring another of equal amount either decreases one's liabilities or increases his assets can only be comprehended by the philosophic mind of a Micawber. If a debtor is solvent, it is all right, either way, because he will have enough to pay everything he owes; but, if he is insolvent, the injustice of the doctrine of the Iowa court is made almost painfully plain by the following illustration from the dissenting opinion of Taylor and Cassoday, JJ., in Francis v. Evans, 69 Wis. 115; 'Suppose that an insolvent debtor, D, has only $1,000 of property, but is indebted to the amount of $2,000, one half of which is due to A, and the other half to B. In this condition of things, D's property can only pay 50 per cent of his debts. By such distribution, A and B would each be equitably entitled to $500. Now, suppose D, while in that condition, collects $1,000 for F, but instead of remitting the money, as he should, he uses it in paying his debt in full to A. By so doing, D has not increased his assets a penny, nor diminished his aggregate indebtedness a penny. The only difference is that he now owes $1,000 each to B and F, whereas he previously owed $1,000 each to A and B. Now, if F is to have a preference over B, then his claim will absorb the entire amount of D's property, leaving nothing whatever for B. In other words, the $500 to which B was equitably entitled from his insolvent debtor, upon a fair distribution of the estate, has, without any fault of his, been paid to another, merely in consequence of the wrongful act of the debtor.' It is impossible to state the case more clearly. The illustration demonstrates that the mere fact that a trustee has used the money does not show that it has gone into his estate. If used to pay debts, he has simply turned it over to a creditor, thereby giving him a preference, while his own estate and indebtedness remain exactly as before. . . . Suppose he had stolen the money, and turned it over to somebody from whom it could not be reclaimed. Can anyone say the owner should have an equitable lien upon the thief's insolvent estate, in preference to his creditors? They and the owner are equally innocent.' See also Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 54, 26 L. ed. 693.

We think it unnecessary to quote at length from our own authorities which point in the same direction. Sherwood v. Milford State Bank, 94 Mich. 83, recognizes the principle that the trust property must be traceable. Sherwood v. Central Michigan Sav. Bank, 103 Mich. 110, goes no further than to hold that, where money is traced to a fund, it will be presumed that the trust property is the last to be paid out. In Wallace v. Stone, 107 Mich. 196, it was said that, unless the fund can be identified as being or containing the actual fund, the trust cannot be enforced against general creditors. Many authorities are cited. This language was in a dissenting opinion, but the dissent rested upon a difference of opinion relating to the facts, not law, and the rule there stated was approved by the full bench in the later case of Sunderlin v. Mecosta County Sav. Bank (Mich.) 4 Det. L. N. 1115, 74 N. W. 479.

The overruled Wisconsin cases are made the subject of the following comment in the opinion hereinbefore cited from Massachusetts: "In Wisconsin a majority of the court has declared that it is not necessary to trace the trust fund into any specific property, in order to enforce the trust; and that if it can be traced into the estate of the defaulting agent or trustee, this is sufficient." McLeod v. Evans, 66 Wis. 401, 409, 57 Am. Rep. 287. But this seems to us to be stated too broadly."

This review of cases might be extended indefinitely, as will be shown by the numerous citations contained in the cases discussed. They seem to effectually dispose of the claim that the entire estate of an insolvent trustee can be subjected to the claim of a cestui que trust, to the exclusion of general creditors, and firmly establish the proposition that one who seeks such relief must be able to trace the trust property to some specific fund or piece of property, and that when this is done there is a presumption that what remains of such fund or article is the trust fund, or its proceeds. The burden of proof is upon the complainant, and, in the opinion of Mr. Justice Bradley, "he should make it out, not only by preponderance of proof, but by a very clear preponderance." Frelinghuysen v. Nugent, 36 Fed. Rep. 237.

In this case it is impossible to say that the estate contains the proceeds of any checks received in payment for water rates, because it is impossible to say what disposition was made of such checks or their proceeds. The record shows $11,376.42 to be the balance due the board when the receiver took charge. This all accrued after April 14, 1891, because there was an overdraft at that time. It is difficult to tell how much of this was cash paid in. There is, however, some testimony on the subject. Edwin C. Wilkinson, the son of James Wilkinson, testifies that from November 1, 1897, to the day on which the bank closed its doors, one third of the amount paid in for the water board, or a little more, was paid by checks, and that, according to his best judgment, the amount was $3,176.14. That was a little more than one third, for the amount deposited during that period was $9,208.18. It would follow that $6,032.04 was deposited in cash. During the same period there was drawn out $4,265.46, but this was $2,168.24 less than the amount standing to the credit of the board on November 1. Unless we are to say that the amount drawn out should be applied against the cash paid in, viz., $6,032.04, this sum may be presumed to have been in the treasury when the bank was closed. There is no reason why we should say it, as it does not appear that these payments should not be charged against the older credit. We think it may be justly said that $6,032.04 of the cash received for the board found its way to the general cash fund of the bank within the last two months that business was done at the bank. We find an amount exceeding that sum in the fund when the assignee took it. We will presume, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that it was the trust fund that remained.

The decree will be reversed, and a decree entered here in favor of the complainant for the sum of $6,032.04, with costs of both courts.

The other Justices concur.

Augusta DETZUR, by Pauline Detzur, Her Next Friend,

v.

B. STROH BREWING COMPANY, Piff. in Err.

(.....Mich.....)

1. Permitting a shattered pane of glass

NOTE.—As to liability for negligence in respect to things falling into street, see note to St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Hopkins (Ark.) 12 L. R. A. 189.
41 L. R. A.

to remain in a window above a street where pedestrians are frequently passing, when there is an apparent danger of the pieces falling or being shaken out by the wind or otherwise, is such negligence as will create a liability to a person who is struck by a piece of the glass while on a sidewalk below the window.

2. The question of negligence in leaving cracked windows above a sidewalk is for the jury, where the testimony tends to show a dangerous condition of the windows.
3. An ordinary wind which blows broken glass out of a window is not the proximate cause of an injury caused by the fall of the glass, when there was negligence in leaving the window in such condition that the glass was liable to fall out.
4. The opinion of a witness that the glass in a broken window was unsafe is incompetent, where that is one of the principal points in the case.
5. An objection that a witness is not an expert is insufficient to raise the question of the competency of opinion evidence on the question involved.
6. An objection that a hypothetical question is incompetent does not raise the point that the question is not in proper form because it includes the witness's understanding of the testimony of another witness.
7. An objection to the incompetency of the admissions of the president of a defendant corporation, made a few hours after an accident, does not raise the question of his authority to make a settlement, or of his being engaged in the company's business, or in an attempt to make a compromise.
8. The sum of $3,500 is not so excessive a recovery for a stiff arm that it will be interfered with on appeal.
9. A new trial may be made dependent upon a refusal to remit a portion of the verdict for unliquidated damages.

(January 20, 1899.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Thomas S. Jerome, with Mr. Henry M. Duffield, for plaintiff in error:

Ordinary witnesses are not to be allowed to give their opinions to the jury, but must state the facts, from which the jury are to form an opinion.

A question calling for the conclusion of the witness upon matter of fact should be excluded.

Anderson v. Thunder Bay River Boom Co. 61 Mich. 489; Lemon v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 59 Mich. 618; Kelley v. Detroit L. & N. R. Co. 80 Mich. 237; Harris v. Clinton Twp. 64 Mich. 447; Girard v. Kalamazoo, 92 Mich. 610; Atherton v. Bancroft, 114 Mich. 241; Langworthy v. Green Twp. 88 Mich. 207; Smith v. Sherwood Twp. 62 Mich. 159; Cook v. Johnston, 58 Mich. 457, 55 Am. Rep. 703; Smaltz v. Boyce, 109 Mich. 383; Zube v. Weber, 67 Mich. 52; Passmore v. Passmore, 60 Mich. 463; Marcott v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. 49 Mich. 99; Ireland v. Cincinnati, W. & M. R. Co. 79 Mich. 163; Jones v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 49 Mich. 573; Lewis v. Bell, 109 Mich. 189.

In a question to an expert, the evidence must be hypothetically propounded.

Van Deusen v. Newcomer, 40 Mich. 90; Jones v. Portland, 88 Mich. 598, 16 L. R. A. 437.

An expert cannot be allowed to give his opinion upon facts unless the facts are all stated in the question.

Hitchcock v. Burgett, 38 Mich. 501; Fuller v. Jackson, 92 Mich. 197.

An expert cannot be allowed to state that he heard the testimony of a witness and then give his opinion, without stating the particular points of the evidence upon which he rests his conclusion.

People v. Aikin, 66 Mich. 460; People v. Millard, 53 Mich. 63.

To render the admissions of the agent of a corporation competent evidence it must be (1) in respect to a matter within the scope of his authority, (2) made in reference to the subject-matter of his agency, (3) made at the time of the transaction while the agent was actually engaged in the performance of the act concerning which the admission is made, or at a time so near after as to be practically at the same time.

Mechem. Agency, §§ 714, 715; Patterson v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 54 Mich. 91; Stebbins v. Keene Turp. 55 Mich. 552; O'Neil v. Deerfield Turp. 86 Mich. 610; Wormsdorf v. Detroit City R. Co. 75 Mich. 472; Mabley v. Kittleberger, 37 Mich. 360; Bowen v. School Dist. No. 9, 36 Mich. 149; Converse v. Blumrich, 14 Mich. 109, 90 Am. Dec. 230; Kalamazoo Novelty Mfg. Co. v. McAlister, 36 Mich. 327; Peek v. Detroit Novelty Works, 29 Mich. 313; 2 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 726; Hoag v. Lamont, 60 N. Y. 96; Lombard & S. Street Pass. R. Co. v. Christian, 124 Pa. 114.

That there had been broken glass in the window of the brewery six months before the accident was immaterial. Previous negligence—if this be negligence—is unimportant, and showing it may be prejudicial.

Thompson v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 84 Mich. 281.

Negligence cannot be inferred merely from an accident.

Robinson v. Charles Wright & Co. 94 Mich. 283; Stern v. Michigan C. R. Co. 76 Mich. 591; Werbnolsky v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co. 86 Mich. 236; Toomey v. Eureka Iron & Steel Works, 89 Mich. 249; Early v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 66 Mich. 349; Brown v. Congress & B. Street R. Co. 49 Mich. 153.

Where an accident happens in a wholly unaccountable way, a jury will not be allowed to speculate and find culpable negligence on the theory that defendant might have avoided the accident by different rules.

Whalen v. Michigan C. R. Co. 114 Mich. 512; Hall v. Murdock, 114 Mich. 233.

At the time of this accident there had just been a cyclone in the neighborhood of Detroit, and unusually high winds had been blowing for some time, and there were great atmospheric disturbances. These extraordinary gales were the proximate cause of the accident, and consequently defendant was not liable.

Lewis v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 54 Mich. 55, 52 Am. Rep. 790.

The jury were not authorized to give even a sum which, at interest, would produce the amount of plaintiff's yearly earnings at the time of the accident, for that would be a perpetuity.

Kinney v. Folkerts, 78 Mich. 688; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Bayfield, 37 Mich. 205; Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. Newton, 85 Ga. 517; Field, Damages, 864.

A new trial will be granted where the excessiveness is apparent at the first blush.

Woodson v. Scott, 20 Mo. 272; Kelly v. McDonald, 39 Ark. 387; Baltimore P. & C. R. Co. v. Pizley, 61 Ind. 22; Delphi v. Lowery, 74 Ind. 520, 39 Am. Rep. 98; Gale v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 76 N. Y. 594; Berry v. Central Railway of Iowa, 40 Iowa, 504; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Sponier, 85 Ind. 165; Graham v. Pacific R. Co. 66 Mo. 536; Boyers v. Pratt, 1 Humph. 93; Goodall v. Thurman, 1 Head, 217; McConnell v. Hampton, 12 Johns. 236; Wilford v. Berkeley, 1 Burr. 609; Chambers v. Caulfield, 6 East, 245; England v. Burt, 4 Humph. 399; Jones v. Jennings, 10 Humph. 428; Nailing v. Nailing, 2 Sneed, 631; Vaulx v. Herman, 8 Lea, 687; Tennessee Coal & R. Co. v. Roddy, 85 Tenn. 400; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 54.

The best criterion as to excessive damages is a comparison with the average amount awarded for injuries of like nature and extent, and where the verdict largely exceeds the average it will be set aside.

Lockwood v. Twenty-Third Street R. Co. 15 Daly, 374; South Cornington & C. Street R. Co. v. Ware, 84 Ky. 267; Florida R. & Nav. Co. v. Webster, 25 Fla. 394; Louisville Southern R. Co. v. Minogue, 90 Ky. 369; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Texas P. R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 311; Honeycutt v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 40 Mo. App. 674; Brown v. Southern P. R. Co. 7 Utah, 288; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Hall, 78 Tex. 657; Peri v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 87 Hun, 499; Ryder v. New York, 18 Jones & S. 220; Brassel v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. M. R. Co. 101 Mich. 5.

This is not a case where the court can properly enter a remittitur.

Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Harper, 70 Ga. 119; 1 Sutherland, Damages, 812; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 593, 594; Leeson v. Smith, 4 Nev. & M. K. B. 304; Sherry v. Frecking, 4 Duer, 452; Koeltz v. Bleckman, 46 Mo. 320; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Wilkes, 68 Tex. 617; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Coon, 69 Tex. 730.

Where it is impossible to determine what the jury acted upon, or how they made up their verdict under the charge of the court, so as to correct the error and arrive at the amount they should have given, a remittitur will not cure the verdict.

Smith v. Dukes, 5 Minn. 373; Orange & A. R. Co. v. Fulvey, 17 Gratt. 306; Lambert v. Craig, 12 Pick. 199; 2 Sutherland, Damages, ed. 1883, 812; Hodapp v. Sharp, 40 Cal.

69; Sourwine v. Truscott, 25 Hun, 67; M'Connell v. Hampton, 12 Johns. 234; Nudd v. Wells, 11 Wis. 408.

Where the excess cannot be determined by the record the parties may agree as to the amount and have the excess remitted.

Lambert v. Craig, 12 Pick. 199.

The court cannot substitute its judgment for the verdict of the jury upon a question which the jury could alone determine.

Nudd v. Wells, 11 Wis. 408; Thomas v. Womack, 13 Tex. 580.

On petition for rehearing.

A distinct question of fact was raised by the testimony as to the liability of the defendant. Upon this question, a jury influenced "by sympathy for the plaintiff and by their common knowledge of the financial ability of the defendant and their belief of large amounts expended by the defendant for medical expert evidence," could not fairly and impartially pass.

A jury who are "so moved by sympathy for the plaintiff and by their common knowledge of the financial ability of the defendant" (without any evidence to support it), and their belief "of large amounts expended by the defendant for medical expert evidence," of which there is no evidence, that the trial judge finds partiality to exist, are not qualified to pass on a disputed and independent question of fact, whether the defendant was liable at all.

Brassel v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co. 101 Mich. 5.

Mr. James H. Pound, for defendant in error:

The acts of superior agents of corporations are binding.

It is within the rule of res gestæ the admission was made the same day.

Kimball & A. Mfg. Co. v. Vroman, 35 Mich. 310, 24 Am. Rep. 558; James v. Emmet Min. Co. 55 Mich. 336; Williams v. Edmunds, 75 Mich. 92.

The fall of a large wooden sign of its own weight from its position over a public sidewalk raises a presumption of negligence in respect to its fastenings.

St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Hopkins, 54 Ark. 209, 12 L. R. A. 189; Barnowski v. Helson, 89 Mich. 523, 15 L. R. A. 33.

A presumption of negligence arises where a chisel drops from a scaffold on which a workman is engaged with tools and injures a person walking upon a sidewalk, where the injured person has a right to travel, and where people are constantly traveling.

Dixon v. Pluns, 98 Cal. 384, 20 L. R. A. 698; Mullen v. St. John, 57 N. Y. 567, 15 Am. Rep. 530; Lyons v. Rosenthal, 11 Hun, 46; Kearney v. London, B. & S. O. R. Co. L. R. 5 Q. B. 411; Byrne v. Boadle, 2 Hurlst. & C. 722; Scott v. London & St. K. Docks Co. 3 Hurlst. & C. 596; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 60; Cooley, Torts, p. 799; 1 Addison, Torts, p. 578; Thomas v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 100 Mass. 158; Schoepper v. Hancock Chemical Co. 113 Mich. 582; Myers v. Hinds, 110 Mich. 300, 33 L. R. A. 356.

If a verdict in other respects valid is excessive in amount, the court may in its discretion, instead of unconditionally awarding a new trial, give the successful party the option of reducing the amount of his recovery to the extent of the excess.

28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 309; Parker v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 93 Mich. 611; Craig v. Cook, 28 Minn. 232; Hurry v. Watson, 4 T. R. 659, note; Pacific Exp. Co. v. Malin, 132 U. S. 531, 33 L. ed. 450; Blunt v. Little, 3 Mason, 102; Kinsey v. Wallace, 36 Cal. 462; Patrick Red Sandstone Co. v. Skoman, 1 Colo. App. 323; Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Crawley, 87 Ga. 191; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Ebert, 74 Ill. 399; H. G. Olds Wagon Works v. Coombs, 124 Ind. 62; Fuller v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 31 Iowa, 211; Colins v. Council Bluffs, 35 Iowa, 432; Lombard v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 47 Iowa, 494; Doyle v. Dixon, 97 Mass. 208, 93 Am. Dec. 80; Howard v. Grover, 28 Me. 97, 48 Am. Dec. 478; Federspiel v. Johnstone, 87 Mich. 308; Pratt v. Pioneer-Press Co. 35 Minn. 251; Breck v. Smith, 44 Miss. 690; Hoit v. Molony, 2 N. H. 323; Willard v. Stevens, 24 N. H. 271; Belknap v. Boston & M. R. Co. 49 N. H. 358; Chils v. Gronlund, 41 Fed. Rep. 505; Dublin v. Murphy, 3 Sandf. 19; Barber v. Rose, 5 Hill, 76; Sears v. Conover, 3 Keyes, 113; Butt v. Schrimpf, 31 Tex. 601; Goldstein v. Cook (Tex. Civ. App.) 22 S. W. 762; McHugh v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 41 Wis. 75; Corcoran v. Haran, 55 Wis. 120; Collins v. Albany & S. R. Co. 12 Barb. 492; Clapp v. Hudson River R. Co. 19 Barb. 461; Murray v. Hudson River R. Co. 47 Barb. 196; McIntyre v. New York C. R. Co. 47 Barb. 515.

Hooker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff was injured by a piece of glass, which fell from a window of the defendant's building, cutting her arm severely, and permanently impairing its use, according to some of the testimony in the case. There is testimony upon the part of the plaintiff tending to show that a round window in the upper story was broken for some days or weeks before the accident, and that it was a piece of glass from this window which injured the plaintiff. The defendant offered testimony tending to show that there was no broken window in the building on the day before the accident, and that the glass causing the injury came from a square window, in a lower story, and its fall was caused by a high wind blowing at the time. The theory of the only court relied upon is that the defendant created and maintained a nuisance, in an insecurely fastened and broken window sash and glass, whereby the plaintiff was injured. A verdict of $10,000 was rendered in behalf of the plaintiff. A motion being made for a new trial, the court denied the same, upon condition that the plaintiff remit the sum of $8,500 from the verdict, which was done. The defendant has brought error.

Error was assigned upon the refusal of the court to charge the jury that there was no evidence of negligence. It is urged that it cannot be inferred from the mere fact that there was an accident. There is testimony tending to prove that there was a broken window; that, immediately before the accident, a window or glass was heard rattling, and the witness looked up, and saw triangular pieces of glass falling from the window which she had previously seen in a broken condition; that several pieces fell to the sidewalk; and that it was a pleasant day, with but little wind. The window was 50 or 60 feet from the ground, in a building that stood but a few feet from the street. If it is true that a pane of glass was shattered, as, we think, there was some testimony tending to show, we cannot say that a jury could not legitimately find that it was negligence to leave it in that condition until the action of the elements loosened it, and caused it to fall. It is true that, where there is no evidence suggestive of a negligent cause, no recovery should be allowed upon a charge of negligence, but this is not such a case. Circumstances consistent with the plaintiff's theory are found in the case, and offer a reasonable opportunity for the inference that the injury resulted from a careless disregard of the broken and loosened condition of glass in a window, above a street, where pedestrians were frequently passing.

Counsel say that it is common knowledge that there is nothing dangerous in itself in a broken windowpane. We know that it is common to see cracked and broken windows, and we recognize the fact that some of them are considered safe; but others are sometimes seen which are so palpably unsafe, because of the apparent danger of the pieces falling or being shaken out when the sash is shaken by wind or otherwise, that they may well be considered dangerous. As we cannot say that all cracked windows are safe, we must submit the question to the jury, when the testimony tends to show a condition of the window indicating danger.

In this connection we will mention the question of proximate cause. Counsel contend that, if the glass fell by means of its being dislodged by the wind, the negligence of the defendant was not the proximate cause of the injury, and they complain of a refusal to instruct the jury that in such event the plaintiff should not be allowed to recover. The negligence complained of is the maintenance of a window in such a condition that the glass was liable to fall out; not necessarily from its own weight, but under the natural conditions and strain to which it was likely to be subjected. It might not be negligent to leave a broken pane, if assurance could be given that it would be undisturbed by wind or by use. But wind is an every-day occurrence. It is a condition, not necessarily a cause, and one which should be taken into consideration before determining that a broken glass is not likely to fall. The wind may have been a concurring circumstance, but it cannot be said to have been the proximate cause, and the broken glass the remote cause. It cannot be true that a defendant who is liable if a defective glass falls from its own weight on a quiet day is to be relieved from responsibility because its fall is due to the pressure of a wind which should have been anticipated.

The testimony of two witnesses was relied upon to prove that a round window in the upper story had been broken for some time. One of these witnesses testified that she had noticed the window before; that it had a hole in it, etc.; she had noticed the rattling of these panes. She was then asked:
44 L. R. A.

Q. Will you state as to whether or not, before this, when you would hear this rattling, whether you thought that was a safe window or not?

A. No, sir.

The testimony was inadmissible. If we overlook the fact that the question did not ask her to state her opinion upon oath, but called merely for a previously existing opinion, and assume that she meant to give it as her opinion at the time of the trial that the glass was unsafe, such testimony was incompetent. It was proper for her to state the condition of the window, and the circumstances which came under her observation; but it was for the jury to draw inferences and conclusions, as to danger or safety. The condition of this window as to safety was one of the principal points in the case. Upon the unsafe condition of this window the case may be said to have hinged. Analogous questions have been passed upon repeatedly by us, as shown by the cases cited in the brief of counsel. But the objection now urged was not made, and it is fair to presume that the trial court did not consider it. The reason given for the objection was that she was not shown to be an expert. The court probably considered it a matter requiring no special qualification, and in this he was right; and we can hardly believe that he would have admitted the testimony had the objection been made which was made in this court.

Again, error is assigned upon a hypothetical question asked a medical expert. The objection appearing upon the record is that it was incompetent, which did not advise the court that the form of the question was objectionable. The precise point argued here is that the question made the witness's understanding of the testimony of another witness a part of the question,—a practice which has been criticised by this court, though permitted in some states. See People v. Aikin, 66 Mich. 476; Kempsey v. McGinniss, 21 Mich. 137; Lawson, Expert Ev. pp. 144 et seq.

Error is also assigned upon the introduction of admission of Bernard Stroh, the president of the company, who is said to have stated to the plaintiff's mother, in an interview some hours after the accident, that the windows were defective. Objection was made to the questions, but no ground whatever was stated, in two instances. A third objection to this testimony is based upon the ground of incompetency. While there may be cases in which a court could not fail to understand the point relied upon, even under so general an objection as incompetency, there are others where such an objection would not even suggest the real objection. In this case it might have been intended to mean that the president had no authority to negotiate a settlement or that he was not engaged in a negotiation for that purpose, and, therefore, that he was not acting in the company's business, or that, the admission being made in an attempt to compromise the matter, it should not be treated as an admission. If anything is settled by our decisions it is that, unless an objection clearly advises the trial court of the specific ground upon which it is made, it will not justify a reversal. Among the cases supporting this rule are the following: Rash v. Whitney, 4 Mich. 495; Hoard v. Little, 7 Mich. 468; Young v. Stephens, 9 Mich. 507; Morissey v. People, 11 Mich. 332; Hollister v. Brown, 19 Mich. 166; Gilbert v. Kennedy, 22 Mich. 118; Snyder v. Willey, 33 Mich. 490; Campbell v. People, 34 Mich. 351; Ward v. Ward, 37 Mich. 259; Stevens v. Hope, 52 Mich. 69; Merkle v. Bennington Twp. 68 Mich. 145; Jennison v. Haire, 29 Mich. 207; Heymes v. Champlin, 52 Mich. 26; Jochen v. Tibbells, 50 Mich. 33; Bulen v. Granger, 63 Mich. 311; Abbott v. Chaffee, 83 Mich. 256; People v. Moore, 86 Mich. 134; Hutchinson v. Whitmore, 95 Mich. 592; Seventh-Day Adventist Pub. Assn. v. Fisher, 95 Mich. 274; People v. Durfee, 62 Mich. 491.

A motion for a new trial was made upon the following grounds: (1) The damages were excessive; (2) the damages are so excessive as to evince passion, prejudice, partiality, or corruption of the jury; (3) the verdict is against the weight of evidence. The court found that the damages were excessive; that they were not so excessive as to evince passion, prejudice, or corruption, and that they do not exist; that the jurors were so moved by sympathy for the plaintiff, and by their common knowledge of the financial ability of the defendant, and their belief of large amounts expended by the defendant for medical expert evidence, as to have awarded a larger amount than they otherwise would have done, and to that extent partiality is found; that the verdict is not contrary to or against the weight of evidence. The order was then made ordering a new trial unless $6,500 should be remitted from the verdict. Error is assigned upon this order. Counsel argue that $3,500 is excessive damage for a stiff arm; but we cannot say that it is so clearly excessive as to justify our interference upon that ground. We are also of the opinion that making a new trial dependent upon a refusal to remit a portion of the verdict in cases of this kind is a well-settled practice in this state, where, as in this case, the amount of unliquidated damage is the only question involved. It has always been considered lawful for the trial judge in such a case to set aside a verdict as excessive; and it has been a common practice to grant a portion of the relief asked by requiring a remission of a portion of the verdict as a condition upon which the new trial will be denied. This has always been a matter of discretion, and, where it is not clearly erroneous, the action of the trial court should not be disturbed.

Several other questions are raised, but our investigation of them leads to the conviction that they do not furnish a ground for reversal of the case. We think it unnecessary to discuss them. The jury found a cause of action, and that left merely the question of the amount of damages to be awarded. These involved pain and suffering, and prospective as well as past deprivation of the use of the arm. Such damages are not altogether a matter of mathematical computation, but they are determined by the consensus of opinion of the jury, acting under the direction of the judge. The question of new trial was within the discretion of the court.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

The other Justices concur.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

MINNEAPOLIS SASH & DOOR COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

METROPOLITAN BANK, Respt.

(.....Minn.....)

*1. For the purposes of collecting a check or draft deposited or left for collection, a bank must employ a suitable subagent, if an agent be necessary. It must not transmit checks or drafts directly to the bank or party by whom payment is to be made. No party upon whom rests the obligation to pay upon presentation can be deemed a suitable agent, in contemplation of law, to enforce, on behalf of another, a claim against itself.

*Headnotes by COLLINS, J.

NOTE.—As to right of collecting bank to send check directly to drawee bank, see Anderson v. Rodgers (Kan.) 27 L. R. A. 248, and note; also Kershaw v. Ladd (Or.) ante, 236.
44 L. R. A.

2. This rule is not affected by notice to a depositor that the bank attempting a collection limits its liability so that it acts as agent only for the depositor, and in forwarding items for collection is only bound to select agents who are responsible according to its judgment and means of knowledge, and assumes no risk or responsibility on account of the omission, negligence, or failure of such agents.

3. Nor will an established usage and custom existing among banks to send checks or drafts payable by other banks, at distant points, to the drawee directly, and by mail, in case there is no other bank of good standing in the same town, excuse or justify such a course of procedure. In case of loss through the bad conduct of the drawee, the sender of the check or draft must bear it.

(Start, Ch. J., dissents.)

(May 2, 1899.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the District Court for Hennepin County overruling a motion for new trial after verdict in favor of defendant in an action brought to hold defendant liable for negligence in failing to promptly collect a check which had been deposited with it for collection. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Penney & McMillan, for appellant:

The respondent, having undertaken the collection of this check, was liable, not only for its own negligence, but for the negligence of its chosen agents, unless there was some contract between the parties to the contrary.

Streissguth v. National German-American Bank, 43 Minn. 50, 7 L. R. A. 363.

In the absence of express authority, an agent to collect or receive payment can receive nothing but money in satisfaction of his principal's claim.

1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1027; Story, Agency, 9th ed. 98; Mechem, Agency, 375; Trull v. Hammond, 71 Minn. 172; Hazlett v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 132 Pa. 118; Fifth Nat. Bank v. Ashworth, 123 Pa. 212, 2 L. R. A. 491; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Goodman, 109 Pa. 422, 58 Am. Rep. 728; Whitney v. Esson, 99 Mass. 308, 96 Am. Dec. 762; Farwell v. Curtis, 7 Biss. 160; Marine Bank v. Fulton County Bank, 2 Wall. 252, 17 L. ed. 785; Ward v. Smith, 7 Wall. 447, 19 L. ed. 207; Bank of Antigo v. Union Trust Co. 149 Ill. 343, 23 L. R. A. 611.

By giving up the check and taking the draft, respondent made the draft his own as between it and appellant.

Whitney v. Esson, 99 Mass. 308, 96 Am. Dec. 762.

The alleged customs are nothing more than habits or methods of transacting business, adopted by the local bankers for their own convenience and economy. There is no pretense that appellant had any knowledge of them.

Even if valid, they are operative only in respect to those who have been shown to have had knowledge of them.

Baxter v. Sherman (Minn.) 5 Det. L. N. No. 21, 76 N. W. 211; Dern v. Kellogg, 54 Neb. 560; Thompson v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 35 Minn. 428.

There can be no presumption that the usages of a particular trade or business are known to persons not in that business.

27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 750; Keavy v. Thuet, 47 Minn. 266; Nippolt v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 57 Minn. 275.

In placing the check with respondent for collection, appellant did not assent by implication to a custom that it should be negligent.

Dern v. Kellogg, 54 Neb. 560.

No custom or usage among bankers as to the manner of presenting ordinary checks for payment, e. g., of presenting by mail, will relieve them from the legal duty of presenting such checks within a reasonable time.

First Nat. Bank v. Miller, 37 Neb. 500; 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 708; Whitney v. Esson, 99 Mass. 308, 96 Am. Dec. 762.

In a legal sense a custom is to be deemed unreasonable if it be opposed to the policy of the law, as where it tends to unsettle well-established rules of law established for the protection of the rights of parties.
44 L. R. A.

Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Prince, 50 Minn. 53; Globe Mill. Co. v. Minneapolis Elevator Co. 44 Minn. 153; William Deering & Co. v. Kelso (Minn.) 76 N. W. 792.

When respondent received the Norton check for collection, there was an implied undertaking on its part to take all steps necessary to protect appellant's rights against the maker of the check.

Jagger v. National German-American Bank, 53 Minn. 386; West v. St. Paul Nat. Bank, 54 Minn. 460.

It therefore undertook in appellant's behalf, not to mail the check to the bank on which it was drawn, but, within a reasonable time, to present the same to this bank and demand its payment. If it failed to do this, it lost to appellant all recourse on the maker of the check.

Oork v. Bacon, 45 Wis. 192, 30 Am. Rep. 712; Western Wheeled Scraper Co. v. Sadi- lek, 50 Neb. 105; Wagner v. Crook, 167 Pa. 259; Anderson v. Rodgers, 53 Kan. 542, 27 L. R. A. 248; Industrial Trust, Title, & Sav. Co. v. Weakley, 103 Ala. 458; National State Bank v. Weil, 141 Pa. 157; Grange v. Reigh, 93 Wis. 552; 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. 1590 et seq.

If respondent was willing to take the check without special stipulations, appellant was authorized to assume therefrom that it was able to collect, and that it had the proper agent through whom to do it promptly.

Drovers' Nat. Bank v. Anglo-American Pkg. & P. Co. 117 Ill. 100, 57 Am. Rep. 855.

Instead of presenting the check through the express company or through any third or disinterested party, respondent mailed the check direct to the bank on which it was drawn. This was such negligence as renders it liable for the loss sustained thereby.

1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 328a; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Goodman, 109 Pa. 422, 58 Am. Rep. 728; Drovers' Nat. Bank v. Anglo-American Pkg. & P. Co. 117 Ill. 100, 57 Am. Rep. 855; Anderson v. Rodgers, 53 Kan. 542, 27 L. R. A. 248; First Nat. Bank v. City Nat. Bank, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 318; Farwell v. Curtis, 7 Biss. 160; German Nat. Bank v. Burns, 12 Colo. 539.

In a note to Anderson v. Rodgers (Kan.) as reported in 27 L. R. A. 248, after reviewing the American and English authorities, it is said: "The result of the American decisions is entire unanimity in holding that it is not proper to send a check by mail directly to the drawee for payment except in New York state, where, as shown above, the decision to the contrary cites as authority two other cases which do not exactly decide the question."

Mr. John T. Baxter, for respondent:

The pass-book notice showed what was the contract between the parties, and served to fix the duties and liabilities of this respondent.

No court has ever held that the implied contract between the bank and its customer governing collections might not be varied by express agreement.

Allen v. Merchants' Bank, 22 Wend. 215, 34 Am. Dec. 289.

In determining what the agreement is between the bank and its customer, it has been held that the contents of a placard posted up in the bank, whereby the bank offered to make collections upon certain terms, was proper evidence to show what the contract between the parties was, even without proof that the customer had ever seen the placard, or knew of its existence.

Wingate v. Mechanics' Bank, 10 Pa. 104; Heath v. Portsmouth Sav. Bank, 46 N. H. 78, 88 Am. Dec. 194; Schoenwald v. Metropolitan Sav. Bank, 57 N. Y. 418; Re State Bank, 56 Minn. 119; Re Bank of Minnesota (Minn.) 77 N. W. 796.

It was not negligence to send the Norton check direct to the Mapleton Bank for collection.

It had long been the usage of the respondent bank, and appellant was bound by that usage.

1 Morse, Banks & Banking, 28, 29; Mills v. Bank of United States, 11 Wheat. 431, 6 L. ed. 512.

It was sanctioned by the general usage of banks.

Flanders v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 51 Minn. 193; Jefferson County Sav. Bank v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 98 Tenn. 337; note on Banking Customs to Shaw v. Jacobs (Iowa) 21 L. R. A. 440; Dorchester & M. Bank v. New England Bank, 1 Cush. 177; Warren Bank v. Suffolk Bank, 10 Cush. 582; Davis v. First Nat. Bank, 118 Cal. 600; British & American Mortg. Co. v. Tibballs, 63 Iowa, 468.

The particular usage above described was long since adopted by the London banks, and is recognized and sanctioned by the English courts.

Heywood v. Pickering, L. R. 9 Q. B. 428; Prideaux v. Criddle, L. R. 4 Q. B. 461.

It is also sanctioned in New York, where the volume of banking business transacted lends weight to the decisions.

McIntosh v. Tyler, 47 Hun, 99; Indig v. National City Bank, 80 N. Y. 100; Briggs v. Central Nat. Bank, 89 N. Y. 182, 42 Am. Rep. 285; Shipsey v. Bowery Nat. Bank, 50 N. Y. 485.

A drawee bank to whom a check is mailed for collection becomes thereby a subagent of the owner for purposes of presentment, notice of dishonor, etc.

Simonds v. Black River Ins. Co. Fed. Cas. No. 12,874; Blakeslee v. Hewett, 76 Wis. 341; Mount Pleasant Branch of State Bank v. McLeran, 26 Iowa, 306.

By express agreement the selection of agents was to be according to respondent's "judgment and means of knowledge."

1 Morse, Banks & Banking, 432.

Where the drawee bank is the only one in the town it is excepted from the operation of the rule.

Western Wheeled Scraper Co. v. Sadilek, 50 Neb. 105.

Collection by express would have been unusual, and was never contemplated by the parties.

1 Morse, Banks & Banking, § 243.

But the question of proper presentment is 44 L. R. A.

eliminated from this case, for it resulted in no loss to this appellant.

Indig v. National City Bank, 80 N. Y. 100.

There was no negligence in receiving the draft on the Mankat6 Bank.

Jefferson County Sav. Bank v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 98 Tenn. 337; British & American Mortg. Co. v. Tibballs, 63 Iowa, 468; Russell v. Hankey, 6 T. R. 12; 1 Morse, Banks & Banking, 23, ¶ 8; Lawson, Usages & Customs, § 228; Story, Agency, 9th ed. § 98; Mechem, Agency, § 375.

Collins, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the admitted facts in this case, the only question necessarily to be determined, in our opinion, is whether defendant bank, doing business at Minneapolis, was negligent when it sent by mail, and for collection, the Norton check, directly to the bank at Mapleton, 117 miles distant, upon which bank the check was drawn; loss having resulted by reason of the adoption of this method of presenting the paper for payment. The defendant seeks to justify its procedure upon the ground that it had restricted its liability to its depositors, when collecting checks and drafts, by means of the notice printed upon its depositors' bank or pass books, of which notice plaintiff's secretary had actual knowledge; and also because of a well-settled usage and custom then prevailing in banks; and, further, because the same result would have ensued had another correspondent been selected.

1. Although the defendant had limited its liability so that when receiving checks or drafts for collection, or on deposit, it acted as an agent only, and in forwarding these items to other points, for collection, it was only bound to select agents who were responsible, according to its judgment and means of knowledge, and assumed no risk or responsibility on account of their omission or neglect or failure, defendant was obliged to exercise reasonable care and diligence in adopting a method of presenting the check in question to its drawee for payment, in selecting its agent. Now, can it be held that defendant exercised reasonable care when it sent the check by mail to the very party most interested against the payee and principal, and thus to place such principal entirely in the hands of its adversary. Norton had ample funds on deposit when he drew the check and also when the check reached the drawee, presumably on July 31, at the opening of business hours. It was important that it should speedily be presented for payment, in order to fix his liability in case of nonpayment. This was of the utmost importance to both payee and maker, in order that the interests of each might be protected. The interest of the drawee would naturally be to procrastinate, and possibly this would be its inclination. It seems to be settled by all of the authorities that, "for the purposes of collection, the collecting bank must employ a suitable sub-agent. It must not transmit its checks or bills directly to the bank or party by whom payment is to be made, with the request that remittances be made therefor. It is considered that no firm, bank, corporation, or individual can be deemed a suitable agent, in contemplation of law, to enforce in behalf of another a claim against itself." 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 328a; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 809; Drovers' Nat. Bank v. Anglo-American Pkg. & P. Co. 117 Ill. 100, 51 Am. Rep. 855; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Goodman, 109 Pa. 422, 58 Am. Rep. 728; Wagner v. Crook, 167 Pa. 259; German Nat. Bank v. Burns, 12 Colo. 539; Anderson v. Rogers, 53 Kan. 542, 27 L. R. A. 248. See note to this last case in 27 L. R. A. 248, in which the authorities are carefully considered. The truth of the remark as to the unsuitability of the drawee of a check as the agent selected to enforce its collection, and what may be expected if the practice is upheld, is well illustrated by the facts now before us. As before stated, the check must, in due course of mail, have reached Mapleton on the morning of July 31. Had it been in the hands of a properly designated third party, it would have been presented and paid that day. The proceeds would, if promptly transmitted, have reached defendant on the morning of August 1 or 2. Even if the payment had then been made, as it finally was, in a check upon the Mankato Bank, and defendant had pursued the course it did as to its collection, no loss would have resulted. But instead of accounting for the Norton check, so that defendant would receive the proceeds as early as August 2, the Mankato check was made out on August 4, and came to defendant's hands the next day. With sufficient funds in its hands to meet the check, the Mapleton Bank postponed a remittance for three days, and then sent a check, which proved to be worthless when seasonably presented for payment.

2. We have stated the grounds upon which defendant attempts to justify. It did show that it was usual and customary for banks to send checks and drafts, payable by other banks at distant points, to the drawee direct, and by mail, provided there was no other bank of good standing in the same town, while plaintiff was allowed to prove that an express company, whose business it was to collect and transmit money, had offices in both places. We fail to see what possible effect upon a case of this kind the fact that the drawee is the only bank in good standing in the town can have upon the duty of a bank which undertakes a collection. Any reason for such a course is equally as sound where there are two or more banks in the town as where there happens to be but one. While the syllabus of one of the cases cited in support of counsel's proposition (Western Wheeled Scraper Co. v. Sadilek, 50 Neb. 105, 44 L. R. A.

may justify him, the opinion does not. We cannot agree with counsel that the usage and custom here relied upon is a defense to the claim that defendant was negligent when forwarding this check to the Mapleton Bank for presentation and payment. As a general rule, usage and custom will not justify negligence. It may be admitted that such a course is frequently adopted, but it must be at the risk of the sender, who transmits the evidence of indebtedness upon which the right to demand payment depends, to the party who is to make the payment. Such a usage and custom is opposed to the policy of the law, unreasonable and invalid. It was so decided in Drovers' Nat. Bank v. Anglo-American Pkg. & P. Co. 117 Ill. 100, 57 Am. Rep. 855, and Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Goodman, 109 Pa. 422, 58 Am. Rep. 728. Counsel for defendant has cited two cases from the English Law Reports and three from the New York circuit court of appeals as authority upon this question. An examination of these cases will show that this exact question was not decided. See 27 L. R. A. 248, note, supra.

3. Counsel for defendant also urges that plaintiff ought not to recover, because the result would have been the same had another correspondent been selected to present the check. This assumes that a third party would have waited until August 4 for payment, and then would have accepted a check upon the Mankato Bank as payment, which would have been transmitted to defendant August 5. Such an assumption reflects seriously upon the ordinary methods of bank officers, and is without foundation. Primarily, the loss to plaintiff grew out of the fact that defendant negligently selected an unsuitable party to present the check, the payee, to compel payment, or, in case of refusal, to protect its rights, as against Norton, by due protest and notice of nonpayment. We need not discuss the further contention that payment of the Norton check could only be made in money.

The order refusing a new trial is reversed, and, on the findings of fact, judgment must be ordered in plaintiff's favor in the court below, unless such court, in its discretion, grants a new trial.

Start, Ch. J., dissenting:

I dissent. Under the undisputed evidence in this case, as to the universal custom of banks in collecting paper drawn upon a bank in good standing, which is the only bank at the place of its location, it cannot in my opinion be held, as a matter of law, negligence for the collecting bank to send the paper to the drawee bank for collection.

MONTANA SUPREME COURT.

Minnie A. CAMERON, Admr. etc., of Angus D. Cameron, Deceased, Appt.,
v.

KENYON-CONNELL COMMERCIAL COMPANY, Def.,
and

W. R. KENYON et al., Respts.

(.....Mont.....)

1. A city ordinance cannot authorize a larger quantity of explosive powder to be kept within the city limits than the state statute allows.
2. An explosion of giant powder kept by a corporation within the city limits in violation of law renders the corporation liable for the damages thereby caused.
3. It is the duty of the directors of a corporation dealing in explosives to exercise such reasonable supervision over the management of their company's business as will result in the observance of the utmost care on the part of the subordinates who direct or handle the explosives.
4. It is the duty of the directors of a corporation to avoid the creation of nuisances by their corporation through its employees acting within the line of their duties.
5. A servant is held to the same degree of care in the performance of whatever is intrusted to him by the master to do that the law would hold the master to were he acting for himself.
6. The liability of a director of a corporation in tort is not to be avoided by his vicarious character, where a tort of the corporation has been committed through the directors.
7. Nonexecution of the duty of directors, which results in the positive act of a creation and maintenance of a continuing nuisance by the corporation, on account of which a third person is killed, amounts, unless explained, to a misfeasance on their part, or, if they have actual knowledge of and authorize the nuisance, to malfeasance, and is not merely a nonfeasance for which their liability can be limited to the corporation only.
8. A director who knows nothing of a nuisance maintained by the corporation, and who could not, by exercising ordinary diligence in control, have known of it, or who has performed his duty of taking care, is not personally responsible for the nuisance.
9. The liability of the officers of a corporation for negligence in storing giant powder in violation of law depends upon their exercise of reasonable diligence in the control and supervision of the business.

(March 20, 1899.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Silver Bow Coun-

NOTE.—As to personal liability of officers of a corporation for its torts or negligence, see note to Nunnelly v. Southern Iron Co. (Tenn.) 28 L. R. A. 421.

As to liability of agent or servant in general for his own negligence, see note to Mayer v. Thompson-Hutchison Bldg. Co. (Ala.) 28 L. R. A. 433.
44 L. R. A.

ty in favor of the individual defendants in a suit brought to hold them liable as directors of a corporation for the death of plaintiff's intestate which was alleged to have been caused by the negligent management of the corporate business. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. W. Kinsley and T. J. Walsh, for appellant:

The place was a public nuisance, being maintained in violation of law.

Wood, Nuisances, 69; Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. v. Glass, 34 Ill. App. 364; Lafin & R. Powder Co. v. Tearney, 131 Ill. 322, 7 L. R. A. 262.

And the defendant company was liable for all damages occasioned by the nuisance, regardless of the question of negligence.

Ibid.

The corporation is an intangible, incorporeal thing, existing only in the contemplation of the law. It can do nothing except through the trustees; it can know nothing except through its trustees. Its trustees manage its stock, property, and concerns.

Comp. Stat. § 450, 5th Div.

The trustees may appoint subordinate agents to attend to details of the company's business, but they must supervise it.

3 Thomp. Corp. § 4107.

In the exercise of this duty of supervision the measure of care and diligence required of trustees is generally held to be such as a prudent man exercises in his own affairs.

Spelling, Priv. Corp. 432; Williams v. McKay, 46 N. J. Eq. 25; Hun v. Cary, 82 N. Y. 66, 37 Am. Rep. 546.

The character of the business is of weighty import in the determination of the degree of circumspection to be observed by trustees about the business of the company.

Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U. S. 132, 35 L. ed. 662.

The explosive nature of the material handled, and the constant danger of explosion, were a continuing admonition to guard against explosion.

Mather v. Rillston, 156 U. S. 391, 39 L. ed. 464; Burke v. Anderson, 34 U. S. App. 132, 69 Fed. Rep. 814, 16 C. C. A. 442.

If the trustees permit the business as carried on to become a public nuisance, they are jointly liable with the corporation for all damages ensuing.

Wood, Nuisances, 834; Parker & W. Public Health, 197; Rea v. Medley, 6 Car. & P. 292; People v. Detroit White Lead Works, 82 Mich. 471, 9 L. R. A. 722; Nunnelly v. Southern Iron Co. 94 Tenn. 397, 28 L. R. A. 421; 2 Wharton, Crim. L. 1423; 1 Bishop, Crim. L. 316.

The trustees were wilfully or negligently blind if they did not know of the nuisance.

They are held to have knowledge of the customs of the company, and the usual way in which its business is transacted.

3 Thomp. Corp. §§ 4098-4108; Fraylor v. Sonora Min. Co. 17 Cal. 594; Williams v. McKay, 46 N. J. Eq. 25; Reynolds v. Collins, 78 Ala. 94; Cow v. Robinson, 70 Fed. Rep. 761;

Com., Lawson, v. Ohio & P. R. Co. 1 Grant, Cas. 329; Lawson, Usages & Customs, 51.

Every violation of law is a breach of duty.

Thompson v. Greeley, 107 Mo. 577.

Anyone who may be punished criminally for maintaining a public nuisance is answerable civilly to any person who suffers in consequence of the nuisance.

Congreve v. Smith, 18 N. Y. 80.

The doctrine of misfeasance and nonfeasance is one of those subtleties of the law for which no man can give any sensible reason, and which the courts of the present day usually succeed in refining away.

Greenberg v. Whitcomb Lumber Co. 90 Wis. 225, 28 L. R. A. 439; Mayer v. Thompson-Hutchison Bldg. Co. 104 Ala. 611, 28 L. R. A. 437; Nunnally v. Southern Iron Co. 94 Tenn. 397, 28 L. R. A. 427; Simmons v. Everson, 124 N. Y. 319.

Mr. John F. Forbis, for respondents:

The officer or agent of a corporation becomes liable with the corporation primarily to third parties, whenever by malfeasance or by misfeasance he has contributed to the injury to such third person. On the contrary, he is never liable to third persons for acts of nonfeasance, but may be held liable therefor to his principal, the corporation.

3 Thomp. Corp. § 4091; Fanning v. D. M. Osborne & Co. 102 N. Y. 441; Hewett v. Swift, 3 Allen, 420; Nunnally v. Southern Iron Co. 94 Tenn. 397, 28 L. R. A. 421.

In the absence of any express provisions of statutes or ordinances on the subject, the liability of an officer or director of a corporation for any wrongful act of the corporation itself may be fairly said to depend on their personal participation therein.

One who was the director and the president of a corporation was held personally liable, in Chenango Bridge Co. v. Paige, 83 N. Y. 178, 38 Am. Rep. 407, for the wrongful use by the company of its bridge as a toll-bridge, whereby business was improperly diverted from another bridge. In this case he actively participated in the wrongful acts of the corporation.

But the president of a corporation who was not shown to have advised or approved of its wrongful use of a street for a private railroad of a corporation was held not personally liable therefor.

Fanning v. D. M. Osborne & Co. 102 N. Y. 441.

The same distinction clearly appears in the other cases.

Beach, Priv. Corp. 253, 254, 255, 262; Bath v. Caton, 37 Mich. 199; Harriman v. Stowe, 57 Mo. 93; Carey v. Rochereau, 16 Fed. Rep. 87; Henshaw v. Noble, 7 Ohio St. 232; Labadie v. Hawley, 61 Tex. 177, 48 Am. Rep. 278; Phelps v. Wait, 30 N. Y. 78; Peck v. Cooper, 112 Ill. 192, 54 Am. Rep. 231; Lane v. Cotton, 12 Mod. 488.

If an agent digs a hole which he should cover for the protection of passersby, his failure to cover it is not an act of nonfeasance, but by reason of his having dug the hole his failure to cover it becomes an act of misfeasance. On the other hand, if the hole had been dug by some other agent, and he had no knowledge thereof, or if the hole had been dug before his employment, his failure to cover it would be an act of nonfeasance.

Nunnally v. Southern Iron Co. 94 Tenn. 397, 28 L. R. A. 421; Greenberg v. Whitcomb Lumber Co. 90 Wis. 225, 28 L. R. A. 439; Ellis v. McNaughton, 76 Mich. 237.

There is no presumption of knowledge on the officer's part.

Rudd v. Robinson, 126 N. Y. 113, 12 L. R. A. 473; Fisher v. Graves, 80 Fed. Rep. 590.

Mr. W. H. DeWitt also for respondents.

Hunt, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff, as administratrix of the estate of Angus D. Cameron, deceased, brought this action against the Kenyon-Connell Commercial Company, a corporation, and M. J. Connell, W. R. Kenyon, J. E. Gaylord, C. H. Palmer, and W. A. Clark, trustees and agents of the corporation, for damages by reason of the killing of Angus D. Cameron, on January 15, 1895, through force of an explosion of giant powder negligently and unlawfully kept by defendant corporation in its warehouse within the limits of the city of Butte. The corporation denied the negligence and unlawful acts averred. Kenyon, Connell, and Palmer each separately answered, and denied any unlawful or negligent act on his part, and each affirmatively pleaded that the warehouse was the property of the corporation, and that he never authorized or directed any powder to be stored therein, and was ignorant of the fact that any powder was stored therein. Gaylord and Clark each denied the allegations of the complaint, or that he was a managing agent or trustee or officer of the corporation. Trial to jury. Motion for nonsuit by individual defendants was granted. Thereafter plaintiff's motion for a new trial as to defendants Kenyon, Connell, Palmer, and Gaylord was overruled. Plaintiff appeals.

The record discloses these facts. The defendant corporation dealt in hardware, merchandise, and powder. It owned a large frame, iron-roofed warehouse, near a railroad depot within the corporate limits of the city of Butte, where it kept its merchandise, including Hercules powder, a dangerous explosive compound of nitroglycerin and other substances. On the night of January 15, 1895, the warehouse took fire. Plaintiff's intestate, Cameron, was the chief of the fire department of the city of Butte, and commanded the firemen who responded to the alarm. While the firemen were actually engaged in an endeavor to put the fire out, a fearful explosion occurred within the corporation's warehouse, and many persons, including Cameron, were killed. From the beginning of the year 1893, Hercules and giant powder had been kept in the warehouse. Defendants Kenyon and Connell had both been seen in or about the building during 1893, and at divers times up to the time of the explosion,—Kenyon often, Connell very seldom, the other defendants never. The quantity of powder kept in the warehouse about the 1st of each month was from twenty to fifty boxes, larger quantities being stored in a powder magazine 3 miles out of the city. On the day before the explosion, a witness saw some seven boxes of powder, 50 pounds in each box, in the warehouse. An employee, one Orcutt, had immediate charge of the warehouse, and ordered the powder put where it was. He said that on the day of the explosion he thought there were somewhere about 3 to 5 cases of powder in the warehouse; while another witness, a mining superintendent accustomed to using powder, said he thought a ton must have exploded on the night of the fire. Defendant Connell was president of the corporation. Kenyon was general manager. Kenyon's duties were to give attention to the corporation's business, his particular duties being to look after the financial part, and ordering goods, but not to manage or control the warehouse or magazine, which were under the warehouseman Orcutt's direct charge. Neither Connell, the president, nor any of the other trustees, except Kenyon, had anything whatever to do with the actual personal management of the affairs of the corporation.

It is plain that this corporation, like many others in the commercial world, had one head,—director,—to whom all the other trustees gave the entire practical management of the concern. It thus furnishes but a single instance of the common practice among business men to incorporate commercial enterprises, and, in doing so, of their trusting the entire actual management to the one director who is familiar with, and assumes the real control of, the particular business undertaken. This custom has doubtless been the outgrowth of a belief, generally correct too, that, by incorporating mercantile or other undertakings, directors are not liable to creditors in case of business reverses, while those who associate themselves as members of a partnership are. But notwithstanding all this, there are various unavoidable responsibilities that attach themselves inseparably to the office of corporate directorship, which, in case of negligence or misconduct, often illustrate the risks incidental to accepting such positions of trust in a corporation, and of not prudently guarding against their possible consequences. It is a general rule that the ordinary business of a corporation is managed in the name and on behalf of the corporation by particular agents chosen by the stockholders. These agents are the directors. For their acts, performed within the apparent scope of their authority, the corporation is responsible, while, e converso, the corporation can act through these agents alone. These principles are generally familiar to business men, as well as to lawyers. They control the relation of the artificial being, the corporation, to the world at large. They find their foundation in the law of agency, which makes the corporation the principal. Still, they are extended, under certain conditions, far enough to inculcate the agents or directors of the corporation, notwithstanding the fact that the principal may also be liable for a wrong done.

Now, bearing in mind that this case presents itself upon a motion for a nonsuit, and 44 L. R. A.

that we must accordingly consider as true everything which the evidence tended to prove on the trial, we have before us a corporation guilty of a nuisance, by having kept in a frame warehouse within the limits of an incorporated city, in the vicinity of railroad depots and other buildings, an amount of Hercules powder in excess of the quantity—50 pounds—allowed to be stored therein by the laws of the state. Mont. Laws, Ex. Sess. 1887, p. 68; Comp. Stat. 1887, § 361. Cheatham v. Shearon, 1 Swan, 213. It is very hard to conceive of anything more terrible in its danger to life and property than a quantity of highly explosive powder kept near to where people live or do business. Such a menace, when known, obstructs that free use of property which the law assures to an owner; while nothing could more seriously interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life than the knowledge that in one's neighborhood there is a frame building in which nitroglycerin explosives are stored in large quantities. No ordinance of a city could authorize a larger quantity of powder to be kept by a corporation within the city limits than the state statute allows, unless some special exception is to be found exempting the inhabitants of such city from the operation of the general statute. None such affecting Butte is known to us, however; so we must regard the ordinance of that city, pleaded by defendants, which permits one hundred and fifty pounds of powder to be kept at one time by a company in its warehouse within the limits of that city, as inconsistent with the state law, without force, and immaterial to the case before us. The corporation, therefore, by maintaining this nuisance, became the subject of indictment for misdemeanor (Wharton, Cr. L. § 91), as well as liable in civil action for injury to person or property caused by the nuisance (Heeg v. Licht, 80 N. Y. 579, 36 Am. Rep. 654). These propositions are too plain for extended comment. They demonstrate a liability to this plaintiff, assuming always the evidence is uncontradicted. Hence we pass to the more direct inquiry whether the directors of the guilty corporation are also liable for Cameron's death.

As said before, the trustees manage the stock, property, and concerns of a corporation (Comp. Stat. div. 5, § 450); wherefore it is difficult to see how all responsibility in this management can be avoided as long as the trustees hold their offices. Certainly the ministerial work of a corporation may be delegated to subordinate agents, and often must be. The details of a corporation's business necessitate this; and if directors act in good faith, and with reasonable care and diligence in appointing and supervising such inferior agents, they are not personally responsible for damages occasioned by the agents' negligence, or even crimes. 3 Thomp. Corp. § 4107. But a director cannot wholly escape his duty of supervision or transfer his authority to represent his principal, at least without the principal's consent; otherwise, he could evade every responsibility imposed by law upon him by simply absenting himself from meetings, or by avoiding information of the acts of the other directors in expressing the will of the corporation, or by delegating an employee to act as trustee for him. Morawetz on Private Corporations, in § 536, says: "The general supervision and direction of the affairs of a corporation are specially intrusted by the shareholders to the board of directors; it is upon the personal care and attention of the directors that the shareholders depend for the success of their enterprise. It follows that authority to delegate these general powers of management cannot be implied. Thus, the directors of a company have no implied authority to enter into a contract with a creditor by which the entire management of the company's affairs is placed in his control until the debt has been paid."

Third persons may hold directors liable in positive tort, upon the principle that a positive wrong done by a servant or ordinary agent must be applied to the misfeasance of directors also. Salmon v. Richardson, 30 Conn. 360, 79 Am. Dec. 255. Persons having in their custody gunpowder or other instruments of danger should keep them with the utmost care. "The risk incident to dealing with fire, firearms, explosive or highly inflammable matters, corrosive or otherwise dangerous or noxious fluids, . . . is accounted by the common law among those which subject the actor to strict responsibility. Sometimes the term 'consummate care' is used to describe the amount of caution required; but it is doubtful whether even this be strong enough. At least, we do not know of any English case of this kind (not falling under some recognized head of exception), where unsuccessful diligence on the defendant's part was held to exonerate him." Webb's Pollock, Torts, p. 615. A company charged with an obligation of this nature cannot devolve it upon another in a manner so as to exonerate the company from a liability for an injury caused to a third person by the negligent way in which the duty pertaining to the care of giant powder or other dangerous explosives may be executed. In torts, the relation of principal and agent cannot relieve the wrongdoer. Berghoff v. McDonald, 87 Ind. 559.

It is unnecessary to consider the rule which relieves the master from liability for his servant's acts, where the servant does something outside of his employment, for that is not involved. But the case does present facts to which this principle fits: that whatever the servant is intrusted by the master to do for him must be performed with a like degree of care which the law holds the master to were he acting for himself. We apply this principle for the reason that there is a presumption that the trustees of a trading corporation know of the principal articles in which their company deals, and whether or not such articles are highly dangerous to life and property. It is therefore the duty of the trustees of a corporation dealing in explosives to exercise such reasonable supervision over the management of their company's business as will result in the observance of the utmost care on the part 44 L. R. A.

of the subordinates who direct or handle the explosives. This rule grows out of "the great principle of social duty that every man, in the management of his own affairs, whether by himself or by his agents or servants, shall so conduct them as not to injure another; and if he does not, and another thereby sustains damage, he shall answer for it." Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 4 Met. 49, 38 Am. Dec. 339. It is likewise their duty to avoid the creation of nuisances by their corporation, through its employees acting within the line of their duties.

Nor will inaction by itself overthrow the force of this obligation upon trustees to so control their corporation's business as to not negligently injure third persons. Along with the assumption of the duties of trusteeship go the duties of exercising reasonable care in the manner of performing those duties. This reasonable care appears not to have been exercised in this case, where the corporation, by its trustees, permitted a public nuisance to be created, and to continue, whereby, as a consequence of the act of permitting it, a third person, not in fault, has been killed. Because directors are themselves agents, it is none the less true that they owe a common-law duty to third persons. If they violate that duty, they are responsible, whether the violation is the result of a wrongful omission or commission. Mechem, Agency, § 572. Were the rule such that wrongful commission alone meant liability, as before indicated, directors' statutory duties to manage would be sufficiently performed by absence; and, the denser the ignorance on a director's part of the business of his concern, the more certain his exoneration from liability for the tortious acts of the company's employees. Such a rule would be unhealthy and unsound. The liability of a director in tort is not to be avoided by his "vicarious character," where the tort of the corporation has been committed through the directors. Nunnally v. Southern Iron Co. 28 L. R. A. 421, 94 Tenn. 394; Bank of Atchison County v. Byers, 139 Mo. 627; Delaney v. Rochereau, 34 La. Ann. 1123, 44 Am. Rep. 456. Relationship of contract to a corporation neither adds to nor subtracts from a man's duty to strangers to so use his own property, or that under his control, as not to injure another. Baird v. Shipman, 132 Ill. 16, 7 L. R. A. 128; Rich's note to Nunnally v. Southern Iron Co. (Tenn.) 28 L. R. A. 421; Jenne v. Sutton, 43 N. J. L. 257, 39 Am. Rep. 578; Mayer v. Thompson-Hutchinson Bldg. Co. 104 Ala. 611, 28 L. R. A. 433. Eminent judges have drawn distinctions between a trustee's liability for misfeasance, malfeasance, and nonfeasance. Bell v. Josselyn, 3 Gray, 309, 63 Am. Dec. 741. But they are of no vital importance on this appeal. Nevertheless, reasoning upon these distinctions, defendants have argued that they are liable, if at all, to the corporation only, inasmuch as the record shows nonfeasance merely, or nonexecution of the duties of their directorships. This argument seems to overlook the proposition that directors are charged with the affirmative duty of knowing something of the management of their company's business, and of exercising reasonable supervision of its management. Management usually signifies positive, rather than negative, conduct.

As a matter of defense, it is proper to show all facts by which the jury can say whether the inaction or ignorance relied on is a sufficient excuse for the wrong done. But we have no hesitation in saying that, upon a state of facts like that before us, nonexecution which resulted in the positive act of a creation and maintenance of a continuing nuisance on account of which a third person was killed amounts, unless explained, to misfeasance upon the part of all the directors of the company, except as to Kenyon, who, it appears prima facie, must have actually known of and authorized the nuisance. As to him it was malfeasance. A director who knew nothing of the nuisance, and who could not, by exercising ordinary diligence in control, have known of it, or, generally speaking, one who, considering the situation and all the attendant circumstances, has performed his duty of taking care, is not liable, and cannot be held so. In this case the defense must show this though, for a prima facie case is made by plaintiff. Due care involves several elements relative to the circumstances of the case. Ordinary care, for instance, on the part of a corporation that deals in hardware would not prevent the storage of large quantities of nails in a frame warehouse in the middle of a city. The dangers from doing so would be slight, even in case of fire or lightning; but such a practice with giant powder or nitroglycerin would be negligence, fraught with imminent peril to life and property. We said, in considering the law of negligence in a boiler explosion case (Johnson v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Min. Co. 16 Mont. 175): "Familiar underlying principles, evolved from generations of experience and thought, are to be applied to the peculiar phases presented by the facts and circumstances of the particular case under investigation. And so we find the opinions, in discussing the definition of 'ordinary care,' recognize that no fixed arbitrary rule can be laid down, but that the degree of care and vigilance required varies according to the exigencies which require attention and vigilance, conforming in amount and degree to the particular circumstances under which they are to be exercised." In Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 36 L. ed. 485, the court, in very clear language, said: "There is no fixed standard in the law by which a court is enabled to arbitrarily say in every case what conduct shall be considered reasonable and prudent, and what shall constitute ordinary care, under any and all circumstances. The terms 'ordinary care,' 'reasonable prudence,' and such like terms, as applied to the conduct and affairs of men, have a relative significance, and cannot be arbitrarily defined. What may be deemed ordinary care in one case may, under different surroundings and circumstances, be gross negligence. The policy of the law has relegated the determination of such questions to the jury, under proper instructions from the court. It is their province to note the special circumstances and surroundings of each particular case, and then say whether the conduct of the parties in that case was such as would be expected of reasonable, prudent men, under a similar state of affairs. When a given state of facts is such that reasonable men may fairly differ upon the question as to whether there was negligence or not, the determination of the matter is for the jury. It is only where the facts are such that all reasonable men must draw the same conclusion from them that the question of negligence is ever considered as one of law for the court."

After all, therefore, the question of the personal liability of the officers of this corporation for the negligence which resulted in Cameron's death resolves itself into whether or not they exercised reasonable diligence in the control and supervision in their management of the corporation's business, or whether they were negligent in doing or not doing so under all the circumstances of the case.

The case must be reversed and remanded for a new trial.

It is so ordered.

Brantly, Ch. J., and Pigott, J., concur.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Albert S. EMBLER, Appt.,

v.

HARTFORD STEAM BOILER INSPECTION & INSURANCE COMPANY et al., Respts.

(158 N. Y. 431.)

1. Recovery against an employer for the death of an employee precludes any right of the latter's representatives to recover on an insurance policy taken out by the employer, which includes a clause insuring against death or injury of employees or other persons, and providing for payment therefor to the employer "for the benefit of the injured person or persons, or their legal representatives in case of death."

NOTE.—For other cases as to insurance against employer's liability, see Anoka Lumber Co. v. Eldellty & C. Co. (Minn.) 30 L. R. A. 689, and Hoven v. West Superior Iron & S. Co. (Wis.) 32 L. R. A. 388.
44 L. R. A.

2. Insurance of an employer against loss of life or injury to person either of his employees or other persons, caused by a peril insured against, making the insurance payable to him for the benefit of the injured person or persons, or their legal representatives in case of death, and not contingent upon his legal liability, does not create any right of action in favor of an employee or his legal representatives,—especially in case of one who was not employed when the insurance was taken. (Per Gray, J.)

3. A third person cannot recover on a contract made for his benefit unless some obligation or duty was owing to him from the promisee. (Per Gray, J.)

(March 21, 1899.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Third Department, affirming a judgment of a Special Term for Albany County in favor of defendants in an action brought to enforce a claim on behalf of an employee upon a policy insuring an employer against liability for injuries arising from boiler explosions. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. Newton Fiero, Francis A. Smith, and E. W. Douglas, for appellant: The plaintiff is entitled to have the language of this policy construed most favorably toward her.

Griffey v. New York Cent. Ins. Co. 100 N. Y. 421, 53 Am. Rep. 202; Dwight v. Germania L. Ins. Co. 103 N. Y. 348, 57 Am. Rep. 729; Winne v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 91 N. Y. 155; Herrman v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 81 N. Y. 188, 37 Am. Rep. 488.

The clause in the policy insuring "against loss of human life or injury to person, etc.," is an insurance upon life and subject to the rules governing life policies.

The promise of the Hartford company was made absolutely for the benefit of Provencha, or his legal representatives, in case of death, and not to indemnify the pulp company for any loss it might sustain from such death. Such an intent is apparent from its terms.

The pulp company became a voluntary trustee, and as such could donate a premium to insure the life of an employee for the latter's or his representative's benefit. That life when the contract was made was deemed to be valuable, and the contractors proposed to secure a compensation to the one sustaining a loss in case of the death of a person specified in the policy.

Such a contract is legal, and can be enforced although the contemplated contingency was not then in existence, nor the beneficiary identified, and although the person claiming the benefit of the promise did not know of it when his claim accrued, and although the person paying the premium sustained no money loss by his death.

Riordan v. First Presby. Church, 6 Misc. 84; Beveridge v. New York Elev. R. Co. 112 N. Y. 26, 2 L. R. A. 648; Simson v. Brown, 65 N. Y. 362; Wainwright v. Queens County Water Co. 78 Hun, 149; Turk v. Ridge, 41 N. Y. 206; Butler v. State Mut. L. Assur. Co. 55 Hun. 301.

A trust was created in favor of the representatives of the employee of which they cannot be deprived.

Dearborn v. A. S. Holmes Ref. Co. 7 Misc. 513.

The contract of the defendant is not restricted to the payment of such sum as the Ticonderoga Company would be obliged to pay, but insured the employee, irrespective of the obligation to the Ticonderoga Company.

44 L. R. A.

This species of insurance in no way resembles a contract of indemnity.

Dalby v. India & L. Life Assur. Co. 15 C. B. 365.

The plaintiff has the right to recover against the defendant because the Ticonderoga Company had an insurable interest in the life of Provencha which was actually insured.

Miller v. Eagle Life & Health Ins. Co. 2 E. D. Smith, 268; Hebbon v. West, 3 Best & S. 578; Addison, Contr. 9th ed. 1085, 1092; Rohrbach v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 62 N. Y. 47, 20 Am. Rep. 451.

If the language "assured" referred to the employees or other persons, as well as to the Ticonderoga Company, then the insurance was for the benefit of Provencha and directly to him, without the intervention of any trustee.

Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Luchs, 108 U. S. 498, 27 L. ed. 800.

So far as authority is concerned, it seems to have been considered by counsel and the courts that such a policy of insurance is a valid policy.

Cyrenius v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 73 Hun, 365, Affirmed in 145 N. Y. 576.

Defendant is liable to plaintiff upon the ground that it promised, for a valuable consideration from the Ticonderoga Company, that it would insure the life of Provencha.

Lawrence v. Fox, 20 N. Y. 268; Dutton v. Poole, 2 Lev. 210; Sohemerhorn v. Vanderheyden, 1 Johns. 139, 3 Am. Dec. 304; Hutchings v. Miner, 46 N. Y. 456, 7 Am. Rep. 369; Glen v. Hope Mut. L. Ins. Co. 56 N. Y. 379; Roberts v. Ely, 113 N. Y. 128.

The case comes within none of the exceptions, or qualifications, limiting the application of Lawrence v. Fox.

Gifford v. Corrigan, 117 N. Y. 262, 6 L. R. A. 610; Durnherr v. Rau, 135 N. Y. 219; French v. Via, 143 N. Y. 90; Wager v. Link, 134 N. Y. 127.

Whatever view might be taken with regard to the rule of common law applicable to policies of this character, the insurance upon the life of Provencha, taken out by the Ticonderoga Company, is valid under the provision of § 55, chapter 690, Laws 1892.

The insurance company, defendant, could not retain the moneys paid as a premium after the passage of this act, and then upon the happening of the contingency provided for by its policy, repudiate the contract upon the ground that it is an illegal one.

Central Bank v. Empire Stone Dressing Co. 26 Barb. 36; Curtis v. Leavitt, 15 N. Y. 9; Washburn v. Franklin, 35 Barb. 600.

Mr. Lewis E. Griffith, for respondents: The policy or contract of insurance upon which the action is brought is one of indemnity solely.

11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 280.

An indemnitor cannot be charged unless the party to be indemnified becomes liable.

French v. Via, 143 N. Y. 90.

The measure of the liability has been definitely and conclusively established in and by the action brought by the administratrix of Provencha against the defendant pulp company, in which said loss was adjusted and the demand therefor satisfied and discharged by the payment of $1,500 agreed upon by the parties.

At common law, apart from the statute, the death would have created no liability against anybody, and no cause of action could be predicated against any person by reason thereof.

Debevoise v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 98 N. Y. 377, 50 Am. Rep. 653.

The statute simply gives a right of action where the death of the party from such injury prevented his bringing an action, or where he omitted to enforce his right during his lifetime.

Littlewood v. New York, 89 N. Y. 24, 42 Am. Rep. 271.

The pulp company had no insurable interest in the life of Provencha, as his death would not result in a pecuniary loss to the insured.

When the assured has no interest at the time the contract is made the policy is a mere wager, in which one party stakes the sum required, and the other the premium paid, upon the happening or not happening of a particular event.

Howard v. Albany Ins. Co. 3 Denio, 303; Ruse v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 23 N. Y. 516; Morrell v. Trenton Mut. L. & F. Ins. Co. 10 Cush. 282, 57 Am. Dec. 92; Trenton Mut. L. & F. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 24 N. J. L. 576; Bevin v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 23 Conn. 244; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Luchs, 108 U. S. 498, 27 L. ed. 800.

There is lacking in this case the essential relation of debtor and creditor between the defendant pulp paper company and Sylvester Provencha, or such relation as makes the performance of the covenants of the policy at the instance of said Provencha a satisfaction of some legal or equitable duty, owing by the pulp company to the said Sylvester Provencha, which must exist according to law, in order to entitle a stranger to the covenant to enforce it.

Vrooman v. Turner, 69 N. Y. 283, 25 Am. Rep. 195; Durnherr v. Rau, 135 N. Y. 219; Garnsey v. Rogers, 47 N. Y. 240; French v. Viz, 143 N. Y. 94.

Gray, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The policy of insurance which was the subject of this action was issued to the Ticonderoga Pulp & Paper Company in October, 1891; and it indemnified and insured, among other things, against loss or damage to property of every kind resulting from an explosion or rupture of steam boilers; "also against loss of human life or injury to person, whether to the assured, to employees, or to any other person or persons, caused by such explosion or rupture, payable to the assured for the benefit of the injured person or persons, or their legal representatives in case of death, and not contingent upon the legal liability of the assured." The sum of insurance stated in the policy was $50,000, and the amount of any recovery under the clause quoted was limited to the sum of $5,000. In December, 1892, Provencha, who was employed by the pulp company in the capacity of fireman, was injured as the result of an explosion of one of the boilers, and subsequently died from his injuries. His widow, as his administratrix, brought an action against the pulp company, to recover damages by reason of its alleged negligence in causing the death of her intestate; and, prior to the trial of the issues therein raised, the case was settled by the payment of the sum of $1,500. Subsequently, Provencha's administratrix assigned to the plaintiff in this action all her rights and interests in and to the policy of insurance in question; whereupon this action was brought, in which the plaintiff seeks to enforce the contract of insurance to the extent of the $5,000 provided for in the clause above mentioned.

It is contended on the part of the plaintiff in the action that this policy provides for two kinds of insurance,—one of indemnity to the pulp company, against loss or damage to property; and one against loss of human life, or injury to persons, and that the promise of the insurer in the latter respect, under the special clause which I have mentioned, was made absolutely for the benefit of Provencha, or his legal representatives in case of death, and not merely to indemnify the pulp company for any loss which it might sustain from, or by reason of, such death. It is argued that the manifest intent of the contract was to compensate to a limited extent those sustaining a loss from death regardless of any relations existing between the assured and the person killed and regardless of any interest which the assured might have in the person killed.

The policy of insurance was issued prior to the passage of the act of 1892 (Laws 1892, chap. 690, § 55), which expressly authorizes an employer to take out accident insurance covering his employees collectively, for the benefit of such as may be injured, and therefore is not affected by that law. The action must stand or fall upon the determination of the question whether the contract of insurance gave any rights to Provencha or to his legal representatives to enforce it against the insurer for his or their benefit. Certainly, Provencha was not a party to the contract of insurance, and it does not appear from the record, even, that he was an employee of the pulp company at the time the contract was made. The stipulated fact is—and it is all the evidence that we have on the subject—that Provencha, on and prior to the day when the accident occurred, was in the employment of the company. In the face of such a stipulation, it is to be inferred, if not presumed, that Provencha was not an employee when the policy was issued. But perhaps that fact alone may not have a decisive bearing upon the question, if the theory of the plaintiff be tenable, that the promise of the insurer was made for the benefit of those who, being employees, might sustain injury. The difficulty in the way of maintaining the action upon any such theory is radical, in that Provencha was neither privy to the contract, nor to its consideration. It is not necessary to define precisely what was intended between the parties by the insertion of the clause in question. It may be that it was intended purely as an indemnity to the assured against pecuniary loss resulting to it from an injury occurring to an employee; whether that pecuniary loss were established as a legal liability of the assured, or whether it were a voluntary payment made to compensate the injured person on the part of the company. Assuming that it intended an insurance of the employees through their employer, the case is not helped very much, because no right of action was given to the employee, nor could any cause of action exist at common law. It is, of course, competent for the legislature to alter the rules of the common law, and to create a cause of action where none existed previously, and that is what was attempted to be done by the legislature in the legislation of 1892, to which I have referred. But, under the rules of the common law, giving a right of action upon the engagement or promise of a party, the cause of action is vested in the person with whom or to whom the engagement or the promise is made. An exception is allowed in the case of a third party, for whose benefit a contract is made, when he may be allowed to bring an action in his own name. In such a case, however, it must appear that, when the contract was made, some obligation or duty was owing from the promisee in the contract to the party to be benefited. It is not sufficient that the performance of the contract may benefit a third person. It must have been entered into for his benefit, and the promisee must have a legal interest that it be performed in favor of the third person. Vrooman v. Turner, 69 N. Y. 280, 25 Am. Rep. 195; Durnkerr v. Rau, 135 N. Y. 219. It was said by Judge Rapallo in Garnsey v. Rogers, 47 N. Y. 233, 7 Am. Rep. 440, when speaking of the doctrine of Laurence v. Fox, 20 N. Y. 268, that he did not understand that that case went so far as to hold that every promise made by one person to another, from the performance of which a third person would derive a benefit, gives a right of action to such third party; he being privy neither to the contract nor to the consideration. Now, what was there in the relation which Provencha sustained to the pulp company which gave him a legal claim to the benefit of the promise of the insurer in this policy? If he had no legal claim, he could have no equitable claim; because a court of equity will not enforce a demand which is in contravention of rules of law. We do not know that he was an employee of the pulp company at the time this contract of insurance was made. The only parties to the contract are the pulp company and the insurance company. It cannot be supposed that there was an intention on the part of the pulp company to secure some benefit to Provencha; for he was not in its employment, and he could in no respect be deemed in privity with the pulp company with respect to the contract. There was no relation of debtor and creditor; nor any obligation or duty owing from the pulp company to Provencha, affecting or concerning this contract. The only obligation or duty, as between them, consisted in such as grew out of the relation of employer and employee, for any breach of which the law gave a right of action, and which was, in fact, availed of by Provencha's administratrix.

Nor can it be said that the pulp company had any legal interest that the promise of the insurer should be performed in favor of Provencha; for, assuming that a legal interest could have arisen upon the happening of the injury, it certainly ceased upon the satisfaction by the pulp company of the claim made in the action brought by his administratrix. I think it is impossible for us to hold, under the circumstances, that there was such a relation between Provencha and the pulp company, or any such privity on his part to this contract of insurance, as conferred upon him or his legal representatives a right of action upon the policy of insurance, and, for that reason, the judgment appealed from should be affirmed, with costs.

All concur, Parker, Ch. J., and Haight, Martin, and Vann, JJ., in result.

Parker, Ch. J., and Haight, Martin, and Vann, JJ., concur for affirmance, upon the ground that the insurance policy in question was, at most, intended as a pecuniary indemnity to the legal representatives of the deceased employees for the loss sustained by them in consequence of his death, and that but one recovery is permitted, whether the death was caused through negligence or unavoidable accident. A claim having been presented by the legal representatives against the assured, based upon negligence, and that claim having been recognized and paid, no further right of action could exist under the policy.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

Thomas J. MITCHELL, Appt.,
v.
CAROLINA CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY.
(.....N. C.....)

A carrier has the burden of showing its want of negligence, when property is lost in transit, although shipped under a contract which limits the carrier's liability to a loss resulting from its negligence.

(Faircloth, Ch. J., dissents.)

(March 21, 1899.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Craven County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover the value of a mule lost while in defendant's possession for transportation. Reversed.

NOTE.—As to the burden of proof of negligence by a carrier in the transportation of goods under contract limiting liability, see also 44 L. R. A.

Browning v. Goodrich Transp. Co. (Wis.) 10 L. R. A. 415, and note; also Witting v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo.) 10 L. R. A. 602.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Messrs. William W. Clark and Owen H. Guion for appellant.

Messrs. Simmons, Pou, & Ward, for appellee, cite—

Smith v. North Carolina R. Co. 64 N. C. 235; Lee v. Raleigh & G. R. Co. 72 N. C. 236; Selby v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 113 N. C. 588; Hutchinson, Carr. §§ 217 et seq., 248 et seq.; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 448, title "Where shippers undertake to care for stock," and notes 2 and 3.

Douglas, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

We cannot assent to the proposition that in cases of limited liability the burden of proof rests upon the plaintiff to show primarily the negligence of the defendant. In the case before us the plaintiff brought suit for the value of a mule which was shipped to him from Nashville, Tennessee, in a car with other horses and mules. When the car reached Newbern the mule was missing. The plaintiff has no means of knowing what became of it, except information furnished by the defendant, who says that it died en route. This may be true, and we presume it is, from the testimony for the defendant; but it has neither been admitted by the plaintiff nor found as a fact by the jury. Uncontradicted testimony is never equivalent to an admitted fact, as the jury may not believe it; and this is especially so where the alleged facts are peculiarly within the knowledge of the witness. Here, the plaintiff simply knew that the defendant received his mule under a contract to deliver it to him at Newbern, which it failed to do. He simply asks for his mule or its value, neither of which does he obtain. The defendant says that the shippers, implied agents of the plaintiff, signed a bill of lading releasing the defendant from all risk of loss or damage from any cause whatever not resulting from the negligence of its agents, and that the burden rests upon the plaintiff of proving affirmatively, not only the shipment and the loss, but that the loss occurred through the negligence of the defendant, when in fact he neither has, nor could have, any knowledge as to how it occurred. It is true the defendant introduced testimony tending to show the death of the mule from natural causes, but it did so purely as a matter of supererogation, with the burden of proving nothing. If its contentions are correct, it need not have said a word. It made no difference how the loss occurred, provided the plaintiff could not prove that it occurred through its negligence. The entire car load of stock might have been safely stolen through the gross negligence or actual connivance of its agents, if done without the knowledge of the plaintiff, or of anyone by whom he might prove it. If this is the law, what protection is there for the shipper? If a resident of Raleigh ships freight to New York under a so-called "released" bill of lad-ing, he cannot be expected to go with it and watch it day and night. And yet, if he did not, how could he know the facts connected with its possible loss? The carrier could stand upon the word "released," and, without one word of explanation as to the non-delivery of the freight, simply say to the plaintiff, "Prove your case." It is too well settled to need any citation of authority that common carriers cannot exempt themselves by contract from the results of their own negligence. This principle is recognized in the bill of lading before us, and yet we are asked to establish a rule of evidence that will destroy its vital principle and subvert its beneficial purposes. It makes no difference to the plaintiff whether you deny his right or simply deprive him of the only remedy by which it can be obtained, and it is equally beneficial to the defendant whether you relieve it from all liability or only place it beyond the possibility of proof. It seems to us that the error lies in a misapprehension of the true nature of the bill of lading. It is not an agreement primarily intended to release the common-law liability of the carrier, but, as said in Pollard v. Vinton, 105 U. S. 7, 20 L. ed. 998: "It is at once a receipt and a contract. In the former character, it is an acknowledgment of the receipt of property on board his vessel by the owner of the vessel; in the latter, it is a contract to carry safely and deliver." The safe carriage and delivery are the essential objects of the contract, and it is the duty of every party to a contract to comply with his agreement, or to show such facts as will excuse his nonperformance. This is especially so where the contract is made in the performance of a public duty. It is the duty of a common carrier, irrespective of contract, but subject to reasonable regulations, to accept, safely carry, and deliver all goods intrusted to it. If the goods are lost, it must show what became of them; and if they are damaged, it must prove affirmatively that they were damaged in some way that would relieve it from responsibility. The plaintiff has a prima facie case when he shows the receipt of goods by the carrier, and their nondelivery, or delivery in a damaged condition. Any further defense is in the nature of confession and avoidance. If the defendant pleads exemption by virtue of a special contract, it must prove the contract, and show that the loss or damage comes within some one of the exceptions. It must appear to the court, as matter of law, that the contract is reasonable in all of its essential features, and that the exemptions are not contrary to public policy. All such exemptions, being in derogation of common law, should be strictly construed. So far, I think the principles herein laid down are properly deducible from all the authorities; but we now come to an irreconcilable conflict of decisions as to the subsequent burden of proof. The courts of Alabama, Georgia, Iowa, Minnesota, Mississippi, Ohio, South Carolina, Texas, Tennessee, and West Virginia, and perhaps one or two others, hold that the burden still rests upon the carrier of showing that the loss was not due to its own negligence. This view is clearly laid down in an able opinion by Judge Cooper in Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Moss, 60 Miss. 1003, 45 Am. Rep. 428, where he says: "To us it also seems that public policy forbids the further relaxation of the principles of the common law governing common carriers. It is no uncommon thing in this age to see under one management a line of railroads extending from the lakes of the North to the Gulf of Mexico, or from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean. To hold that a shipper in New York or Chicago shall be required to establish the negligence of the carrier by proof of the circumstances of a fire in California or New Orleans would, in a great number of cases, result in a verdict for the carrier, even though there was in fact negligence. In a large majority of cases the facts rest exclusively in the knowledge of the employees, whose names and places of residence are unknown to the shipper. In many cases the witnesses are the employees whose negligence has caused the loss, and, if known to the shipper, it may be dangerous for him to rest his case upon their testimony, since the natural impulses of mankind would sway them, in narrating the circumstances, to palliate their fault by stating the occurrence in the most favorable light to themselves. All the authorities hold that it devolves upon the carrier to show the loss to have occurred by the excepted cause. In doing this it will add but little to his burden to show all the attending circumstances; and that the burden rests upon him to do so, and disprove his own negligence, we think arises from the terms of the contract, from the character of his occupation, and from that rule governing the production of evidence, which requires the facts to be proved by that party in whose knowledge they peculiarly lie."

This opinion is especially interesting because it tersely reviews the authorities on both sides of the question, which is the single point in the case. Bishop in his Law of Evidence, 14th ed. § 219, adopts the same view, in the following words: "And if the acceptance was special, the burden of proof is still on the carrier to show, not only that the cause of the loss was within the terms of the exception, but also that there was on his part no negligence or want of due care." It would seem from the recent work of Elliott on Railroads that this has now become the settled rule of a majority of the states, as the author says in § 1548, on page 2403: "There is some conflict among the authorities as to the burden of proof in such cases; but the prevailing rule, where the owner or his agent does not go with the stock, is that when the animals are shown to have been delivered to the carrier in good condition, and to have been lost or injured on the way, the burden of proof then rests upon the carrier to show that the loss or injury was not caused by its own negligence." This rule strongly commends itself to our better judgment, and receives our approval, especially in view of the universal acceptance of the principle that where a particular fact, necessary to be proved, rests peculiarly within the knowledge of a party, upon him rests the burden of proof. 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 41; Best, Ev. § 274; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 79; Starkie, Ev. 589; Rice, Ev. § 77; Selma, R. & D. R. Co. v. United States, 139 U. S. 560, 567, 35 L. ed. 266, 269; State v. McDuffie, 107 N. C. 885, 888; Govan v. Cushing, 111 N. C. 458, 461. On the other hand, the Federal courts, with those of a large number of the states, hold that, under a bill of lading containing a contract of limited liability, the burden rests upon the plaintiff of proving that the loss or damage was caused by the negligence of the defendant carrier; but we think that an examination of the cases will show that the true principle of the rule in those jurisdictions is that the burden of proving the negligence of the carrier does not primarily rest upon the plaintiff, but is shifted to him upon the carrier proving that the loss fell within one of the excepted causes. That the carrier must prove that the injury complained of came within one of the special exemptions created by law or contract is admitted by all the authorities. By the act of 1851, Congress relieved the owners of sea-going vessels from all responsibility from loss by fire unless caused by their own design or neglect, and from responsibility for loss of money and other valuables named unless notified of their character and value, with certain other limitations of liability not arising from their own negligence. These limitations are substantially brought forward in chapter 6 of title 48 of the Revised Statutes, subsequently amended by the act of February 13, 1893. Several of the states enacted similar legislation; and the same general principles are held to apply to common carriers on land. In addition to this, it became the custom of shipowners to protect themselves by contract from risks arising from the perils of navigation. Within reasonable restrictions, these contractual limitations have been held to be valid; and it is upon these two classes of exemptions that the decisions generally rest. Those referring to the proper or inherent vice of animals do not appear to have any bearing upon the case at bar in its present status. It must be admitted that among the different states adhering to the same general rule there is much diversity of application, as well as uncertainty of definition. This may come in some degree from the unfortunate tendency of some otherwise able judges to formulate general principles upon special cases, unmindful of the limitations or modifications that may necessarily arise from the varying facts of other cases. Some of these definitions, like our old state grants, where each grantee furnished his own survey, cover much more than was originally intended, and lap over upon other essential principles. Those unlucky rights which lie within the lappage are necessarily of uncertain tenure. Of course, perfection of definition is impossible to human foresight; and, as human motives and resulting action do not run in parallel lines, there is frequently an ultimate point of conflict between essential principles themselves. There the superior principles must prevail; such, for instance, as depend upon public policy or natural right. The great principle of legal construction was never better stated than by Lord Mansfield in King v. Bembridge, 3 Dougl. 332, where he says: "The law does not consist of particular cases, but of general principles, which are illustrated and explained by these cases." It is impracticable to review any considerable number of cases bearing upon that at bar, but a few citations from the Supreme Court of the United States, which sustains the rule most favorable to the carrier, will sufficiently illustrate this view.

In The Mohler, 21 Wall. 230, 233, The Mollie Mohler v. Home Ins. Co. 22 L. ed. 485, 486, the court says: "It is insisted that the loss occurred through a peril of navigation, which was one of the exceptions contained in the bill of lading, and that, therefore, the carrier was excused from a delivery of the wheat. . . . The burden of proof lies on the carrier, and nothing short of clear proof, leaving no reasonable doubt for controversy, should be permitted to discharge him from duties which the law has annexed to his employment." In Clark v. Barnwell, 12 How. 272, 13 L. ed. 985, the court held (quoting from the syllabus) that, "where goods are shipped, and the usual bill of lading given, 'promising to deliver them in good order, the dangers of the sea excepted,' and they are found to be damaged, the onus probandi is upon the owners of the vessel to show that the injury was occasioned by one of the excepted causes. But although the injury may have been occasioned by one of the excepted causes, yet still the owners of the vessel are responsible if the injury might have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable skill and attention on the part of the persons employed in the conveyance of the goods. But the onus probandi then becomes shifted upon the shipper to show the negligence." The same rule is sustained in Rich v. Lambert, 12 How. 347, 13 L. ed. 1017; The Niagara v. Cordes, 21 How. 7, 16 L. ed. 41; The Majestic, 166 U. S. 375, 41 L. ed. 1039. In Western Transp. Co. v. Downer, 11 Wall. 129, 20 L. ed. 160, the court says: "On the trial the plaintiff made out a prima facie case by producing the bill of lading, showing the receipt of the coffee by the company at New York, and the contract for its transportation to Chicago, and by proving the arrival of the coffee . . . in a ruined condition, and the consequent damages sustained. The company met this prima facie case by showing that the loss was occasioned by one of the dangers of lake navigation." In The Edwin I. Morrison, 153 U. S. 199, Bradley Fertilizer Co. v. The Edwin I. Morrison, 38 L. ed. 688, the court says, on page 212, 153 U. S., and page 692, 38 L. ed.: "In any aspect, the real point in controversy is, Did the respondents so far sustain the burden of proof which was upon them?" etc. It further held that, even where the loss was caused by the dangers of the sea, the burden was still upon the owners of the vessel to show that it was seaworthy. In all these cases of limited liability the rule is invariably recognized that proof of shipment and injury makes a prima facie case for the plaintiff, and that then the burden is always upon the carrier to show that the circumstances of the loss bring it within the excepted causes. When the carrier has shown this by a preponderance of testimony, then, and then only, does the burden shift to the shipper of showing that the loss, even if within the excepted classes, might have been avoided by diligence and care upon the part of the carrier. Therefore, under the most stringent rule, the plaintiff in the case at bar is entitled to a new trial, as the defendant did not prove to the satisfaction of the jury, by whom alone the fact could be found, that the circumstances of the loss brought it within the exception. The mere proof or admission of the terms of the bill of lading containing the stipulated exceptions is no proof that the loss comes within those exceptions. The necessary issues do not appear to have been submitted. Ordinarily parties cannot complain of the issues, in the absence of a special tender and exception; but this court has held in Tucker v. Satterthwaite, 120 N. C. 118, that the court below must, of its own motion, with or without suggestion, submit such issues as are necessary to settle the material controversies arising on the pleadings. If the issue as to the negligence of the defendant was intended to raise the question whether the loss came within the exception, then the burden of that issue rested upon the defendant in order to rebut the prima facie case already made out by the plaintiff. The defendant cannot be permitted, by the mere form of an issue, or a "broadside" stipulation of exemption, to change the rules of evidence, and practically destroy essential principles firmly resting upon public policy. At that stage of the proceedings the burden was admittedly upon the defendant. Has it been ever lifted or shifted? If so, we cannot see when or where.

It is contended for the defendant that it is exempted by this contract from all loss or damage not arising from its own negligence, and that therefore it cannot be required to prove the loss within the excepted classes without requiring it in effect to prove its own want of negligence. Even so. If, standing with the burden of proof upon it, it claims a total exemption, it must show every fact necessary to prove that exemption. It is not placed in any better condition than the ordinary defendant, merely by the unreasonable extent of its stipulations. The bill of lading, covering five printed pages, is full of the most stringent stipulations, all in favor of the carrier, among which is the broadside exemption from all risk "of loss or damage from any cause or thing not resulting from the negligence of the agents of said party of the first part." It then provides that, "in case the said party of the first part (the carrier) shall furnish laborers to assist in loading and unloading said stock, they shall be subject to the orders, and deemed employees, of the said party of the second part while so assisting." It gravely winds up by requiring the shipper, who has shipped nothing but horses and mules, to sign a written agreement that turkeys are reasonably worth only 12½ cents apiece in Nashville. The "reasonableness" of such a bill of lading may well be questioned. These extraordinary stipulations strongly recall the pertinency of Mr. Justice Bradley's language in delivering the opinion of the court in New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357, 21 L. ed. 627, where he says, on page 378: "It is a favorite argument, in the cases which favor the extension of the carrier's right to contract for exemption from liability, that men must be permitted to make their own agreements, and that it is no concern of the public on what terms an individual chooses to have his goods carried."

Is it true that the public interest is not affected by individual contract of the kind referred to? Is not the whole business community affected by holding such contracts valid? If held valid, the advantageous position of the companies exercising the business of common carriers is such that it places it in their power to change the law of common carriers, in effect, by introducing new rules of obligation. The carrier and his customers do not stand on a footing of equality. The latter is only one individual of a million. He cannot afford to higggle or stand out and seek redress in the courts. His business will not admit such a course. He prefers rather to accept any bill of lading, or sign any paper the carrier presents,—often, indeed, without knowing what the one or the other contains. In most cases he has no alternative but to do this or abandon his business. In the present case, for example, the freight agent of the company testified that, though they made forty or fifty contracts every week like that under consideration, and had carried on the business for years, no other arrangement than this was ever made with any drover. And the reason is obvious enough,—if they did not accept this, they must pay tariff rates. . . . Of course, no drover could afford to pay such tariff rates. This fact is adverted to for the purpose of illustrating how completely in the power of the railroad companies parties are, and how necessary it is to stand firmly by those principles of law by which the public interests are protected. If the customer had any real freedom of choice, if he had a reasonable and practicable alternative, and if the employment of the carrier were not a public one, charging him with the duty of accommodating the public in the line of his employment, then if the customer chose to assume the risk of negligence, it could with more reason be said to be his private affair, and no concern of the public. But the condition of things is entirely different, and especially so under the modified arrangements which the carrying trade has assumed. The business is mostly concentrated in a few powerful corporations, whose position in the body politic enables them to control it. They do, in fact, control it, and impose such conditions upon travel and transportation as they see fit, which the public is compelled to accept. These circumstances furnish an additional argument, if any were needed, to show that the conditions imposed by common carriers ought not to be adverse (to say the least) to the dictates of public policy 44 L. R. A.

and morality. The status and relative position of the parties render any such conditions void. Contracts of common carriers, like those of persons occupying a fiduciary character, giving them a position in which they can take undue advantage of the persons with whom they contract, must rest upon their fairness and reasonableness."

The action of the court below seems to have been based on the opinion of this court in Smith v. North Carolina R. Co. 64 N. C. 235, which, on careful examination, does not seem to decide the question before us. The general principles were not elaborated, and the opinion was evidently based entirely on the particular facts of the case. There, the exemption claimed was not general, but special, being as to fire only. The contract was proved, and it was shown that the cotton was destroyed by fire. This brought the loss within the exception. What the court evidently intended to say was that then the burden of proving negligence rested on the plaintiff. The opinion cites but two authorities, namely, 1 Parsons, Contr. 1, 704 (perhaps meaning volume 1, p. 704) and New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchants Bank, 6 How. 344, 12 L. ed. 465. In New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchants Bank the question of the burden of the proof of negligence arose only incidentally, but the court clearly recognized the prior burden of the carrier, on page 383, where it says: "The burden of proof lies on the carrier, and nothing short of an express stipulation by parol or in writing should be permitted to discharge him from duties which the law has annexed to his employment. The exemption from these duties should not depend upon implication or inference, founded on doubtful and conflicting evidence, but should be specific and certain, leaving no room for controversy between the parties." For the same reasons, the case of Selby v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 113 N. C. 588, does not conflict with the principles now discussed. The only case that we can find in our reports that seems to settle the point now in question, and to settle it apparently in favor of the plaintiff, is Morganton Mfg. Co. v. Ohio River & C. R. Co. 121 N. C. 514, where this court has laid down the rule, without dissent, that "among connecting lines of common carriers, that one in whose hands goods are found damaged is presumed to have caused the damage, and the burden is upon it to rebut the presumption." For the reasons given above, a new trial should be ordered.

Faireloth, Ch. J., dissenting:

The plaintiff shipped live stock from Tennessee to Newbern, North Carolina, over several railroad lines, including the defendant's line. One mule was found dead in the car. The plaintiff sues for its value, and alleges negligence as the cause of loss of the mule. The plaintiff had a right to ship his stock over the railroads, as common carriers, by paying the usual charge for transportation, or to ship by special contract, and he elected to take the latter course. He, by special contract, for a consideration in reduced rates for transportation, agreed to relieve the carriers from their liability of common carriers in the transportation, and agreed that their liability should be only that of a private carrier for hire, and he assumed all risk of injury by the animals to each other, or of heat or suffocation or other ill effects of being crowded in the cars, etc. We then have the case of a carrier liable for want of ordinary care; in other words, for negligence. The liability of common carriers is harsh, but upon the ground of public policy it is not unjust. After the parties closed the examination, his honor explained the rights and liabilities of carriers, and instructed the jury that there was no evidence in this case that the defendant was negligent in transporting the stock, to which the plaintiff excepted. I have carefully read the evidence, and I see no error in the charge of the court. The mule seems to have died of colic or from some natural cause, which may have been induced and accelerated by the crowded condition of the car. I think the burden of showing negligence on the part of the defendant rested on the plaintiff, and that the special agreement was a valid contract. Smith v. North Carolina R. Co. 64 N. C. 235; Selby v. Wilmington & W. E. Co. 113 N. C. 588.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

BALTIMORE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

Walker FULTON, Admr., etc., of Charles B. Fulton, Deceased.

(59 Ohio St. 575.)

- *1. Where a case that may be is duly removed from a state to a Federal court, the jurisdiction of the state court over the cause at once ceases, and it can take no further step therein; and if thereafter the case is disposed of in the Federal court, otherwise than on the merits, the plaintiff cannot recommence the action in the state court, although, under like circumstances, he might have done so had the cause not been removed.
2. In such case, whatever right the plaintiff may have under any remedial rule, statutory or otherwise, to recommence the action, must be pursued in the Federal court, as after removal it alone has jurisdiction of the cause and the parties.

(January 17, 1899.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Belmont County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. H. Collins for plaintiff in error.
Messrs. C. L. Weems, A. H. Mitchell, and W. Mitchell, for defendant in error:

The petition properly states a cause of action, and avers that the time of bringing the action is saved from the bar of the statute of limitations by reason of the facts therein stated.

We failed otherwise than on the merits;

*Headnotes by the COURT.

NOTE.—The decision that the removal of a case from a state to a Federal court transfers to the latter court the exclusive jurisdiction not only of the action brought but of the cause of action itself, so that no subsequent action can be brought thereon in the state court, even after the former action is terminated by dismissal without determining the merits, creates a new precedent, although it cites a decision denying 44 L. R. A.

the case is not still pending in the United States circuit court.

It is possibly true that court had no authority to do more under the fifth rule than to strike the case from the docket. Yet the court did more; it dismissed the case under a rule that only authorized the striking of the same from the docket. Can it be claimed that such a decision is upon the merits?

Minshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question we shall consider in this case arises upon the petition and a demurrer thereto. The petition by sufficient averment states that a cause of action against the defendant for the recovery of damages by the administrator of Charles B. Fulton for wrongfully causing his death, on the 13th day of January, 1889. The suit was commenced January 19, 1894; and, as it thus appeared that the action had not been commenced within two years, as prescribed by the statute giving the right (§§ 6134 and 6135, Rev. Stat.), the plaintiff, to obviate this, further averred that on July 7, 1891, he, as such administrator, commenced a civil action in this court, against defendant, for the benefit of said parents and brothers and sisters, for causing the death of said Charles B. Fulton, as aforesaid, by the wrongful act, neglect, and default of defendant heretofore explained, the cause of action herein being identical with that set forth in this petition. Such proceedings were had in said action that on August 3, 1891, in pursuance of the statute of the United States providing for the removal of causes from the state to Federal courts, the defendant filed in this court a petition and bond for the removal of said cause into the circuit court of the United States in and for the southern district of Ohio, eastern division, the right after nonsuit in a Federal court to renew the action in a state court within a certain statutory period so as to avoid a statute of limitations.

As to pendency of actions in both state and Federal courts sitting in the same state, see note to Willson v. Milliken (Ky.) 42 L. R. A. 448.

in which last-named court said cause was so removed and filed, and remained pending until the 6th day of December, 1893. The plaintiff failed therein, otherwise than upon the merits, by the same being disposed of by said court as follows, to wit: Said court dismissed said cause "under the fifth rule of said court, said rule providing that cases which have been upon the docket for three general terms shall be stricken therefrom, unless good cause be shown to the contrary." The defendant demurred, on the ground that the petition does not state sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action, and that it is insufficient in law. This was overruled, and the defendant excepted.

A number of errors are assigned upon the record; but, as indicated, the only one we shall consider relates to the sufficiency of the petition to entitle the plaintiff to relief on the facts stated in it. This, in fact, presents two questions: (1) Whether the limitation of two years is a part of the right of action, or is merely a limitation of the remedy, so that, if the plaintiff failed in the circuit court otherwise than on the merits, he might, under § 4991, Rev. Stat., recommence the suit within a year thereafter, although the limitation of two years for bringing the action had then expired; and (2) whether, the cause having been duly removed to the Federal court, the plaintiff could, after it had been disposed of in that court, otherwise than on the merits, again, for any purpose, resort to the state court for relief on the same cause of action, whether the limitation of two years had or had not expired.

1. Much can be said in favor of the proposition that the provisions of § 4991, Rev. Stat., do not apply to a case of this kind; for while it may be admitted that the plaintiff failed in the circuit court otherwise than on the merits, still there is much reason and authority for saying that the limitation of two years, fixed for bringing an action, for causing death by wrongful act, is a part of the right of action itself, and not merely a limitation of the remedy, and that the action cannot therefore in any case be brought after the time limited has expired. Hill v. New Haven, 37 Vt. 501, 88 Am. Dec. 613; Taylor v. Cranberry Iron & Coal Co. 94 N. C. 525; Cavanagh v. Ocean Steam Nav. Co. 19 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 391; Hanna v. Jeffersonville R. Co. 32 Ind. 113; Pittsburg, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hine, 25 Ohio St. 629, 634. As apparently contra, see Meisse v. McCoy, 17 Ohio St. 225, though the point was not there made. But, as we do not dispose of the case on this ground, no further consideration will be given it.

2. The case as originally commenced has been properly removed to the United States circuit court of the district in which it was brought, the cause of action therein being, as averred, identical with the cause of action now sued on; and it had there been disposed of, not, it is true, on the merits, but had been dismissed for want of prosecution under a rule of the court. It has been repeatedly decided that, where a case has been properly removed from a state to a Federal court, the jurisdiction of the former over the case immediately ceases, and it is its duty, in the language of the statute, to proceed no further in the cause. Its jurisdiction in that case ends with the removal. Any steps thereafter taken are said to be coram non judice and void. Kanouse v. Martin, 15 How. 198, 14 L. ed. 660; Fisk v. Union P. R. Co. 6 Blatchf. 362, 380; Hatch v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 6 Blatchf. 105; Clark v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 11 Fed. Rep. 355; New York Silk Mfg. Co. v. Second Nat. Bank, 10 Fed. Rep. 204; Shaft v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 67 N. Y. 544, 23 Am. Rep. 138; Gordon v. Longest, 16 Pet. 97, 10 L. ed. 900; Desty, Removal of Causes, §§ 108a, 108c; Dill. Removal of Causes, § 75a; Kern v. Huidekoper, 103 U. S. 485, 26 L. ed. 354; Home L. Ins. Co. v. Dunn, 19 Wall. 214, 22 L. ed. 68; Hadley v. Dunlap, 10 Ohio St. 1; Herryford v. Aetna Ins. Co. 42 Mo. 148.

We fail to perceive any good reason for holding that this only applies so long as the suit removed is pending, and that if the case should be dismissed by the Federal court for any reason, other than on the merits, it loses the jurisdiction acquired by the removal, and the plaintiff is at liberty to recommence the action in the state court, where, under like circumstances, he might have done so had the cause not been removed. The reason of the statute should be kept in view in giving it a construction. It is remedial, and must be construed liberally. Home L. Ins. Co. v. Dunn, 19 Wall. 214, 224, 22 L. ed. 68, 69. The Constitution of the United States contains, it is true, no direct provision authorizing the removal of a case by a defendant to a Federal court. It, however, does authorize a plaintiff, in a "controversy" between himself and a citizen of another state, to bring the suit in a Federal court; and Congress acting upon the reasonable presumption that the same reason applies where a defendant is sued out of the jurisdiction of the courts of his own state, has given the defendant the right to remove the cause to a Federal court. The validity of the various acts of Congress authorizing the removal of a cause, though once questioned is now well settled. The policy of the provision authorizing a removal on the ground of a diversity of citizenship is based upon the recognized fact that litigation between citizens of different states must be more or less affected by local influences, and therefore, in the interest of fair and impartial justice, the right is conferred on a defendant, sued out of the jurisdiction of the courts of his own state, to remove the cause, in analogy to the provision of the Constitution conferring the right on a citizen of one state to sue a citizen of another state in a Federal court. Thus, the spirit and policy of the statute authorizing a removal on the ground of a diversity of citizenship applies as well to any renewal of the action, after it has been disposed of in the Federal court, as to the period of its pendency. The Federal court, having acquired jurisdiction of the action by its removal from the state court, must, on principle and the reason of the statute, retain it for all purposes,—for the purpose of determining whether it should be reinstated or recommenced after it has been dismissed by it or stricken from its docket, as well as for its determination on the merits. Its jurisdiction in such case does not merely embrace the suit brought and removed, but any suit thereafter brought on the identical cause of action, after the former suit has been dismissed by it, until the cause of action has been extinguished by a judgment on the merits; the cause of action—the “controversy” between the parties—remains subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal court, and is forever excluded from that of the court from which it was removed, unless remanded with the consent of the defendant; and there are cases which make this a doubtful proposition, where the cause is a removable one. No one would claim that, after the case has been stricken from its docket by the Federal court, the state court could determine whether it should be reinstated; and by a parity of reasoning, the state court cannot pass on the right of the plaintiff to recommence the action after it has been dismissed by the Federal court. In either of these cases the question can only be determined by the court that had full and exclusive jurisdiction of the case at the time. And if there be any remedial rule, statutory or otherwise, by which a case that has been dismissed for failure to prosecute can be reinstated after the time fixed by the statute of limitations has expired, the remedy must be sought in that court. It is properly a step or proceeding in the same case. If this were not so, it would not only open the way to a violation of the policy of the statute authorizing removals, but be productive of a very inconvenient practice, and much abuse. It would enable a party to permit his case to be dismissed by failing to prosecute in the Federal court, with the purpose of recommencing it in the state court, and thus compel the defendant to be at the trouble and expense of again causing it to be removed, or submit to the jurisdiction of the state court.

The view we have taken finds support in the well-considered case of Cox v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 68 Ga. 446. It is there held that, “when a case has been removed from a state court to the circuit court of the United States, the jurisdiction of the former ceases, and, after nonsuit in the Federal court, the case cannot be renewed in the state court within six months, so as to avoid the statute of limitations.” Such right is given by statute on a nonsuit in the courts of that state, a nonsuit not being a decision on the merits. Referring to the statute which reads as follows: “If a plaintiff shall be nonsuited, or shall discontinue or dismiss his case, and shall recommence within six months, such renewed case shall stand upon the same footing as to limitation with the original case,”—the court said: “To be thus renewed, it must be the same case as to cause of action and parties; and this is identically the same case in both respects. So that the question is, Can a case which has been removed to the United States circuit court be renewed in the state court? We think not, because the act of removal ipso facto transfers the jurisdiction of the cause to the circuit court of the United States, and divests that of the state court,”—citing Kern v. Huidekoper, 103 U. S. 485, 26 L. ed. 354. In the case before us the plaintiff averred that the cause of action in the case removed was identical with the cause of action in his present petition. If it had not been, he could not have been within the provisions of § 4991, Rev. Stat., under favor of which he claimed the right to recommence his action in the state court.

Judgment reversed, and petition below dismissed.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

N. J. BLAGEN et al., Appts.,
v.

Robert C. SMITH, Respt.

(.....Or.....)

1. Testimony introduced on an immaterial matter not in issue cannot be considered on appeal in an equity case tried de novo, although no exception was taken to its admission.
2. Equity has jurisdiction to restrain existing or threatened public nuisances by injunction, at the suit of a private person who suffers therefrom a special and peculiar injury distinct from that suffered by him in common with the public at large.
3. The rule that an injunction will not be granted against the continuance of a nuisance in a locality mainly occupied for business does not apply where the nuisance is malum in se, such as a house of ill fame.

4. Owners of property so near to a house of ill fame that their enjoyment of their property is affected by disgusting scenes and sounds in such house sustain an injury different in kind from that suffered by the public at large, which entitles them to an injunction against the maintenance of the nuisance.

(March 18, 1899.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a decree of the Circuit Court for Multnomah County dismissing a suit brought to enjoin the continuance of a public nuisance. Reversed.

Statement by Moore, J.:

This is a suit by private parties to enjoin the continuance of a public nuisance. The transcript shows that the plaintiff N. J. Blagen is the owner of two lots at the southeast corner of Couch and First streets, in the city of Portland, upon which he erected a large offensive sights and sounds on the premises of the plaintiff, which did not appear in the Kentucky case.

NOTE.—This case is possibly distinguishable from that of Neaf v. Palmer (Ky.) 41 L. R. A. 219, by reason of the existence in this case of 44 L. R. A.

See also 46 L. R. A. 552.

four-story brick building in 1890, expending in the purchase of the land and the improvement thereof about $80,000; that upon the completion of this building it was leased to the plaintiff, the W. C. Noon Bag Company, a corporation which is engaged in the manufacture of bags, tents, awnings, and sails, employing from 40 to 60 men and women; that the other plaintiffs own or are in possession of certain real property having stores, warehouses, or factories erected thereon, and all situated in the immediate vicinity of Blagen's said building; that defendant R. C. Smith, having leased two lots diagonally across Couch street from Blagen's building, and two lots at the southwest and two at the southeast corners of the intersection of Davis and First streets, changed thereon various small wooden buildings into what are known as "cribs," for the purpose of renting them to dissolute women, to be used as bawdy houses. The plaintiffs substantially allege that if defendant leases these cribs, to be used for the purpose for which they were designed, it will depreciate the value of their property, render it less desirable for rent, and result in a private, special, and direct injury to them. The plaintiff the W. C. Noon Bag Company avers that from the windows in the Blagen building said cribs are in plain view; that its employees, in coming to and returning from their labor, must necessarily pass by or between these buildings, which, if they are permitted to be used for immoral purposes, will bring to the vicinity in which they are situated drunken, disorderly, and disreputable persons and criminals, the effect of which will be to endanger the lives and morals of its employees, and interfere with, disturb, and injure its business, resulting in a private, direct, and special damage to it. Whereupon plaintiffs prayed that a temporary injunction might be issued, restraining the defendant from proceeding further in the construction or repair of any building upon the said premises for the purposes of prostitution, from renting any of said cribs, or allowing any persons to occupy the same, for that purpose, and from transferring or selling said buildings to any person to be used for immoral purposes, and that upon the final hearing said injunction be made perpetual. The defendant, after denying the material averments of the complaint, alleges in substance, that he had expended in repairing said buildings the sum of $5,000, and that the only manner in which he could be reimbursed for the outlay, and for the rent which he had agreed to pay for the use of the premises, was by subletting these houses, not for immoral purposes, but to any persons who might wish to rent them; that they are cheap, and desirable only to a class of people who would be liable to want to live in that part of the city, which, by reason of its contiguity to the wharves on the Willamette river, and the liability of that stream to overflow its banks, would never be occupied as residence property, except by the poorest class of people, who are compelled by necessity to seek cheap rents; that in June, 1894, the backwater from said river stood 44 L. R. A.

6 feet deep over all said property, since which time none of it had been desirable for any purpose; that said section of the city is remote from public travel, without retail stores, and that ladies have no occasion to visit it, and never have gone into that neighborhood. The reply having put in issue the allegations of new matter contained in the answer, a trial was had, and from the evidence taken thereat the court found the facts, in substance, as above given, and also that five or six Japanese prostitutes had moved into some of these buildings since this suit was commenced, notwithstanding a temporary injunction restraining defendant from leasing them to such persons had been issued and served, and that the proximity of these cribs to the property of said Blagen may somewhat depreciate its value; that the alterations made by defendant upon said buildings have not in any manner injured plaintiff's property, or been any damage to their business; and that, if these houses be rented and used for immoral purposes, neither of the plaintiffs will suffer any special or peculiar injury therefrom, different from that sustained by the community at large. The court also made the following findings: "Tenth. That long prior to January 1, 1897, there was situated directly across the street from said property of N. J. Blagen a house of prostitution kept by one 'Liverpool Liz,' and on the corner of First and C streets, diagonally across the street, there was what was known as the 'Bella Union Theater,' a mixed saloon, where women resorted and sold liquors; that next to the building occupied by Liverpool Liz there stood a sailor boarding house, kept by Jim Turk; that this part of the town is known as part of Whitechapel district. Eleventh. That at the time of bringing this suit there were and still are, situated within two blocks of said property of N. J. Blagen fifteen saloons, and over twenty-eight houses of prostitution, called 'cribs,' and that said cribs or houses of prostitution and saloons have been standing on said property for several years prior to January 1, 1897." The court thereupon dissolved the temporary injunction and dismissed the suit, from which plaintiffs appeal.

Messrs. Williams, Wood, & Linthicum, for appellants:

The remedy provided by § 333 of Hill's Code, in cases of nuisance, is not exclusive, and does not limit the remedy for nuisances to actions at law.

Fleischner v. Citizens' Invest. Co. 25 Or. 119.

A court of equity has jurisdiction to prohibit, by injunction, a party from creating or erecting the public nuisance of a bawdy-house, upon a bill filed by private individuals, alleging that the close proximity of such nuisance will deprive the complainants of the comfortable enjoyment of their property, and greatly depreciate and lessen its value.

Hamilton v. Whitridge, 11 Md. 128, 69 Am. Dec. 184; Cranford v. Tyrrell, 128 N. Y. 341; Re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 39 L. ed. 1092; Hayden v. Tucker, 37 Mo. 214; Wood, Nuisances, §§ 30, 31; Williams v. Smith, 22 Wis. 596; Green v. Oakes, 17 Ill. 249.

The mere fact that an act is criminal does not divest the jurisdiction of equity to prevent it by injunction, if it be also a violation of property rights, and the party aggrieved has no other adequate remedy for the prevention of the irreparable injury which will result from the failure or inability of a court of law to redress such rights.

Port of Mobile v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 84 Ala. 115; Re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 39 L. ed. 1092; Cranford v. Tyrrell, 128 N. Y. 341.

Messrs. Hume & Hall and Gearin, Silverstone, & Brodie, for respondent:

This is simply a suit brought by a party considering himself aggrieved, and alleging that his property will be damaged by certain acts threatened to be done by the defendant, and asking for a restraining order.

The fact of nuisance or no nuisance should be decided by a jury first.

Roseburg v. Abraham, 8 Or. 509.

If the statute contain words negativing or expressly taking away the previous equitable jurisdiction, or even if upon a fair and reasonable interpretation, the whole scope of the statute shows by necessary intentment a clear legislative intention to abrogate such jurisdiction, then the former jurisdiction of equity is thereby ended.

1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 281; Stadler v. Grieben, 61 Wis. 504; Remington v. Foster, 42 Wis. 608; Cohn v. Wausau Boom Co. 47 Wis. 314; Pennoyer v. Allen, 51 Wis. 360; Lohmiller v. Indian Ford Water Power Co. 51 Wis. 688; Denner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 57 Wis. 221.

In order to obtain an injunction it must be shown that the injury complained of as present or impending is such as, by reason of its gravity, or its permanent character, or both, cannot be adequately compensated in damages.

16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 959; Wood, Nuisances, § 646; Duncan v. Hayes, 22 N. J. Eq. 27; Fogg v. Nevada-California Oregon R. Co. 20 Nev. 429.

Injunctions against threatened nuisances will seldom be granted except in extreme cases where the threatened use of property is clearly shown to be such as leaves no doubt of its injurious results. The bill must set forth such a state of facts as leaves no room for doubt upon the question of nuisance, for if there is any doubt upon that point the benefit of it will be given to defendant.

Wood, Nuisances, § 797; Shaubut v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co. 21 Minn. 502; Barnum v. Minnesota Transfer R. Co. 33 Minn. 365; High, Inj. 495, 496; Cleveland v. Citizens' Gaslight Co. 20 N. J. Eq. 206; Waupun Trustees v. Moore, 34 Wis. 450, 17 Am. Rep. 446; Zabriskie v. Jersey City & B. R. Co. 13 N. J. Eq. 314; Wolcott v. Melick, 11 N. J. Eq. 204, 66 Am. Dec. 790; San Jose Ranch Co. v. Brooks, 74 Cal. 465; McCowan v. Whitesides, 31 Ind. 237; Hartshorn v. South Reading, 3 Allen, 504; Clark v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 70 Wis. 597; Wesson v. Washburn Iron Co. 13 Allen, 101, 90 Am. Dec. 181; Proprietors of Quincy Canal v. Newcomb, 7 Met. 283, 39 Am. Dec. 778; Brainard v. Con- 44 L. R. A.

necticut River R. Co. 7 Cush. 510; Stetson v. Faxon, 19 Pick. 160, 31 Am. Dec. 123; Houck v. Wachter, 34 Md. 272, 6 Am. Rep. 332; Marini v. Graham, 67 Cal. 132.

Moore, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is contended by plaintiffs' counsel that the court erred in permitting defendant, over their objection, to introduce testimony outside the issues, and in making the findings thereon numbered, respectively, 10 and 11. Section 397, Hill's (Or.) Anno. Laws, as amended by the act of the legislative assembly approved February 20, 1893 (Or. Laws 1893, p. 26), in prescribing the manner in which findings shall be prepared in suits, reads as follows: "The court in rendering its decision shall set out in writing its findings of fact upon all material issues of fact presented by the pleadings, together with its conclusions of law thereon, but such findings of fact and conclusions of law shall be separate from the decree, and shall be filed with the clerk and incorporated in and constitute a part of the judgment roll of said cause; and such findings of fact shall have the same force and effect and be equally conclusive as the verdict of a jury in an action at law, except on appeal to the supreme court the cause shall be tried anew without reference to such findings." The transcript shows that counsel for defendant, on his cross-examination of W. C. Noon, referring to a period of two or three years prior to the commencement of the suit, propounded to him the following question: "Do you know, during that time, of such a place as the Bella Union Theater?" Whereupon the court, upon objection being made, said: "As to the injury of the property there, I think perhaps that would be admissible." The witness answered: "I think I have seen that on the door; yes." No exception to the ruling of the court upon the admission of this testimony was saved, nor can we find, from an inspection of the transcript, that any other objection was made or exception saved to the introduction of any of the testimony tending to support the findings complained of. This being so, and the cause coming before us for trial de novo, the question is presented whether, in the absence of any exception to the action of the court admitting testimony tending to show that houses of ill repute and other disreputable places of resort existed in the immediate vicinity of plaintiffs' property long before defendant constructed the cribs mentioned in the complaint, such testimony shall be considered on appeal, in view of the issues of fact to be tried. In Newby v. Myers, 44 Kan. 477, it is held that the findings of fact of a trial court must be based upon the issues made by the pleadings, and any finding outside such issues is a nullity. In Marks v. Sayward, 50 Cal. 57, it is held that findings of fact must be within the issues; otherwise, they will not be regarded. In Reinhart v. Lugo, 75 Cal. 639, it is held that the finding in an action of partition contrary to an admission made by the pleadings as to the plaintiff's interest in the lands in question is outside the issue and erroneous, and a judgment based thereon should be reversed. In Hall v. Arnott, 80 Cal. 348, it is held that findings upon issues not properly presented by the pleadings must be disregarded. There is no issue in the pleadings upon which findings numbered 10 and 11 can be predicated, nor was any motion made to amend the answer in this respect; and, this being so, the testimony introduced upon that subject was immaterial, and cannot be considered on appeal.

It is admitted by plaintiff's counsel that the cribs constructed by defendant and leased for immoral purposes constitute a public nuisance, notwithstanding which they contend that their clients suffered a special injury therefrom, distinct and different in kind from that sustained by the general public, and that the court therefore erred in not making the injunction perpetual; while defendant's counsel maintain that plaintiffs had a complete, speedy, and adequate remedy at law for the recovery of damages and the abatement of the nuisance, and hence a court of equity has no jurisdiction to grant the relief demanded, and that, such being the case, the decree should be affirmed.

The statute referred to as affording a legal remedy for the suppression of a nuisance substantially provides that any person whose property is affected by a private nuisance may maintain an action at law for damages therefor, and, if judgment be given for the plaintiff in such action, he may, in addition to the execution to enforce the same, on motion, have an order allowing a warrant to issue to the sheriff to abate such nuisance; and, if it appear on the hearing that such remedy is inadequate, the plaintiff may proceed in equity to have the defendant enjoined. Hill's (Or.) Anno. Laws, § 333. It will be seen that the remedy thus provided can be invoked only by the person whose property or right of possession and personal enjoyment thereof is affected by the maintenance of a private nuisance, and, as an incident to the compensation which the law awards for the injury sustained, the court may order a warrant to be issued, commanding the sheriff to abate the same, but the statute makes no provision whatever for any relief for an injury sustained from the maintenance of a public nuisance. It is urged with much reason that under the maxim, Expressio unius est exclusio alterius, the remedy prescribed by § 333, supra, is exclusive, and that the deduction is strengthened when the remedy thus afforded is considered with reference to the limitation placed thereon by § 380, Hill's (Or.) Anno. Laws, which, so far as applicable to the case at bar, reads: "The enforcement or protection of a private right, or the prevention of or redress for an injury thereto, shall be obtained by a suit in equity in all cases where there is not a plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law." In Fleischner v. Citizens' Invest. Co. 25 Or. 119, it was held that the remedy provided by the former section is not exclusive, and does not limit the relief for injury resulting from the maintenance of nuisances to actions at law; whenever a nuisance will cause irreparable injury, menace the life or health of the plaintiff or his family, or the guilty party is not able to respond in damages for the injury, or where numerous actions will be required, equity has "concurrent jurisdiction with courts of law," within the meaning of the latter section, and will enjoin the continuance of the objectionable conditions. "In regard to private nuisances," says Judge Story in his work on Equity Jurisprudence (vol. 2, § 925), "the interference of courts of equity by way of injunction is undoubtedly founded upon the ground of restraining irreparable mischief, or of suppressing oppressive and interminable litigation, or of preventing multiplicity of suits." This learned author, after illustrating the doctrine that equitable interposition in the cases of private nuisances ought not to be granted except where the right is clear, says in the following section: "On the other hand, where the injury is irreparable, as where loss of health, loss of trade, destruction of the means of subsistence, or permanent ruin to property, may or will ensue from the wrongful act or erection,—in every such case courts of equity will interfere by injunction in furtherance of justice and the violated rights of the party." The defendant against whom a judgment has been given in an action for damages resulting from a private nuisance may, upon motion therefor, obtain from the court or judge an order to stay the issuing of a warrant to abate the nuisance for such period as may be necessary, not exceeding six months, and allowing the defendant to abate the nuisance himself, upon giving the plaintiff an undertaking that he will abate it within the time specified in the order. Hill's (Or.) Anno. Laws, § 335. A private nuisance, however, may in some instances become so intolerable to the party whose property, or the enjoyment thereof, is affected thereby, that its discontinuance becomes an imperious necessity, in which case equity only can afford the immediate relief demanded, because the slow process of the law courts is not adequate to the occasion. It is the inadequacy of the legal remedy referred to in § 380, supra, that forms the exception to the general rule, and thereby confers upon a court of equity jurisdiction, in a case of private nuisance, to interfere in behalf of the injured party and to grant speedy relief.

Our statute having made no provision for the suppression of a public nuisance, except by indictment, any remedy beyond that, if it exist, must be found in the rules of the common law. "In regard to public nuisances, the jurisdiction of courts of equity," says Judge Story in his work on Equity Jurisprudence (vol. 2, § 921), "seems to be of a very ancient date, and has been distinctly traced back to the reign of Queen Elizabeth." A court of equity therefore has jurisdiction to restrain existing or threatened public nuisances by injunction, at the suit of a private person who suffers therefrom a special and peculiar injury, distinct from that suffered by him in common with the public at large. 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1349, and cases cited in note 4; 2 Wood, Nuisances, § 819. "A house of ill fame, or 'bawdy house,' as it is more commonly called in the law," says Mr. Wood in his work on Nuisances (vol. 1, § 29), "is a public nuisance, and the keeper thereof may be indicted therefor, whether the house is located in a city or a forest. It is malum in se, and the court does not need to be informed of its effects upon society, for the common experience of mankind shows that the probable and natural consequences of such an establishment will be detrimental to the moral and social welfare of the public." To the same effect, see also Givens v. Van Studdiford, 4 Mo. App. 498.

The plaintiffs having sought relief in the proper forum, and their complaint having stated facts sufficient to constitute a cause of suit, the remaining question to be considered is whether the evidence introduced at the trial conclusively shows that they are entitled to the relief which they invoke. The evidence tends to show, and the court below found, that the proximity of the cribs to Blagen's property may somewhat depreciate its value. The continuance of a nuisance, not such per se, which renders the adjacent property less salable, or prevents the owner from advantageously letting the premises, or limits his demise thereof to less reputable tenants, is not enough to entitle him to equitable relief; for the loss sustained in these particulars is capable of being compensated in an action for damages. 1 Wood, Nuisances, § 3; 2 Wood, Nuisances, § 789; Ryan v. Copes, 11 Rich. L. 217, 73 Am. Dec. 106; Lansing v. Smith, 8 Cow. 146; Gibson v. Donk, 7 Mo. App. 37; Ballentine v. Webb, 84 Mich. 38, 13 L. R. A. 321. In Hamilton v. Whitridge, 11 Md. 128, 69 Am. Dec. 184, it is held that a court of equity had jurisdiction to prohibit by injunction a party from erecting a bawdy house, upon a bill, filed by private parties, alleging that the close proximity of such a nuisance would deprive them of the comfortable enjoyment of their property, and greatly depreciate and lessen its value. In Cranford v. Tyrrell, 128 N. Y. 341, suit was instituted to restrain the defendant from keeping a house of ill fame; and it was held that an unlawful use of property which renders the premises of a neighbor unfit for comfortable or respectable occupation and enjoyment, is a private nuisance, against which the protection of a court of equity may be invoked, although the use complained of also constitutes a public nuisance. In Hayden v. Tucker, 37 Mo. 214, suit was brought to enjoin the defendant from keeping jacks and stallions for service in a yard adjoining and in full view of plaintiff's premises, whereby it was alleged that they were depreciated in value and rendered unfit for habitation, and it was held that a court of equity was competent to grant the relief demanded. Mr. Justice Wagner, in speaking for the court, says: "A right of action may lie against a party for a nuisance, where a court would not be justified in interfering to remove it by injunction. To authorize the extraordinary interference, there must be such an injury as from its very nature is not susceptible of being adequately compensated by damages at law, or such as from its continuance or permanent mischief must occasion a constantly recurring grievance, which cannot otherwise be prevented but by injunction. And this remedy will be allowed where the injury is material, and operates daily to destroy or diminish the comfort and use of a neighboring house, and the remedy by a multiplicity of actions for the continuance of it would furnish no substantial compensation." These cases, however, related to enjoining nuisances which were malum in se, and maintained or threatened to be carried on in a neighborhood chiefly devoted to family residences. A court of equity will not interfere with the continuance of a lawful business in a locality where the buildings are mainly occupied for business purposes, because a few families may reside in the neighborhood. Gilbert v. Showerman, 23 Mich. 448; Doellner v. Tynan, 38 How. Pr. 176. "Where the nuisance," says Chancellor Green in Holsman v. Boiling Spring Bleaching Co. 14 N. J. Eq. 335, "operates to destroy health or to diminish the comfort of a dwelling, an action at law furnishes no adequate remedy, and the party injured is entitled to protection by injunction." To the same effect, see also Ogletree v. McQuaggs, 67 Ala. 580, 42 Am. Rep. 112. These cases relate to nuisances which were not such per se, but the rule so announced can have no application, upon principle, to the continuance of a nuisance which is malum in se in a district devoted exclusively to business. If this were not so, a house of ill fame could be established and operated beside a church, in a district in which the buildings were devoted to business or trade, and a court of equity would be powerless to correct the evil. If it were possible for such a thing to exist unmolested in a civilized community, what measure of damages in an action at law would compensate outraged decency, dispel the blush of shame that flushes the cheek of modest virtue, or still the conscience of those who would worship in a sanctuary that was maintained in the least degree by money collected as indemnity from the maintenance of a brothel? All property in a city is affected by the maintenance of a bawdy house, just in proportion to its contiguity thereto, and the damage which such property sustains, while differing in degree, does not differ in kind; and, such being the case, the owner of any such property affected in the same general way as other property therein could not successfully invoke equitable relief to enjoin its continuance. But where, by reason of the proximity of such property to the public nuisance, disgusting scenes and sounds shock the sense of those whose property, or the enjoyment thereof, is affected thereby, the injury sustained is necessarily different in kind from that suffered by the public at large; and, this being so, such persons are entitled to an injunction restraining the same.

44 L. R. A.

One of the witnesses who appeared on plaintiffs' behalf, in speaking of the occupant of a crib in the immediate vicinity of Blagen's property, in answer to the question, "What would the appearance of these women indicate was their occupation?" says: "Why, it is self-evident that they are on the town. For instance, several weeks ago I was walking along there about half past six or seven, and the windows were out,—fully open,—and one of the Japanese women was standing around in undress uniform, and several Chinamen were standing around, negotiating, apparently, on the outside.”

This evidence, in our judgment, together with other like testimony, tends to show that plaintiffs are entitled to the relief demanded and hence the decree is reversed, and the temporary injunction made perpetual.

City of PORTLAND, Resp't.,
v.

PORTLAND BITUMINOUS PAVING & IMPROVEMENT COMPANY,
and
A. N. KING et al., Appts.

(.....Or.....)

1. A bond to a city by a street contractor, which constitutes an independent undertaking by the latter to keep the street and pavement in repair for five years, and which covers in effect all injuries liable to arise from whatsoever source, is not authorised by statutory power to take security by bonds for the performance of the contract.
2. The fact that the bond is voluntary and founded upon a valid consideration will not enable a city to enforce a bond by a street contractor to repair a street for five years, when the contract is entirely beyond the general scope of the powers of the city, even if it has been fully executed by the city.
3. A municipality will be estopped to enforce the performance of a contract under the same or like conditions that an individual will be estopped to proceed against it.
4. A contract invalid as to one of the parties is invalid also as to the other.

(February 7, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendants King et al., sureties on the bond of the corporation defendant, from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Multnomah County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover upon a bond conditioned to keep a certain street in the plaintiff City in repair. Reversed.

Statement by Wolverton, J.:

The complaint herein, after setting forth the corporate character of the plaintiff and the defendant company, alleges, in substance: That said paving and improvement company entered into a contract with the city, a copy of which is attached to the complaint, and marked "Exhibit A." That on June 29 and 30, 1891, Ordinance No. 6,718, providing for the improvement of Washington street from the west line of Second street to its intersection with B street, was passed and approved, § 3 of which treats of the general character of the work. Section 4 provides that the grading, sidewalks, and gutters shall conform, as nearly as practicable, to the requirements of §§ 6, 7, and 9 of Ordinance No. 2,839, and the paving, as nearly as practicable, to the provisions of Ordinance No. 6,715, relating to the manner of laying bituminous rock pavement, except as provided in § 3; and § 5, that the provisions of § 11 of said Ordinance No. 2,839 shall apply to lumber and all other material used in the improvement. Section 30 of said Ordinance No. 6,715 provides as follows: "The contractor shall give a good and sufficient bond to the city of Portland in an amount equal to the contract price of said improvement, conditioned that he will commence and complete the proposed improvement according to the specifications herein mentioned, and that, in addition to the foregoing, he will give a good and sufficient bond to the city of Portland, in amount equal to 25 per cent of the contract price of said improvement, conditioned that for the period of five years from the date of its completion, he will keep the payment in repair by immediately, upon proper notice, repairing at his own cost and expense any injuries or worn out places or other defects due to traffic, or on account of disintegration, or decay, or in any manner attributable to defective materials or workmanship. The sureties upon this bond shall justify to double the amount of such bond. Payment in full of the contract price shall not release the sureties until said period of five years shall have expired, said bonds to be approved as required by the city charter." That pursuant to the terms of said contract and the provisions of the ordinance therein referred to, and in consideration thereof, the said paving and improvement company, as principal, and the defendants A. N. King and D. P. Thompson as sureties, made, executed, and delivered their bond to the said city of Portland, a copy of which is attached, marked "Exhibit B," and made a part of the complaint. That the said company, pursuant to the terms of its agreement, completed said improvement on the 18th day of November, 1891. "That for a long time prior to the commencement of this action, and at the present time, the said pavement, NOTE.—Power of city to bind contractor to repair pavement which he makes.

- I. When the question arises.
- II. Agreements including repairs.
- III. Agreements constituting mere guaranty.
- IV. Single agreements for construction and repair.
- V. Separable agreements.
- VI. Express statutory authority.

I. When the question arises.

The question as to the power of a city to bind a contractor to repair a pavement which he makes, arises from the fact that the construction of pavements is generally regarded as a matter of local interest to be paid for by the owners of contiguous property benefited thereby, while the repair of streets is regarded as a matter of general interest which is to be paid for by a general tax upon the city in which the street is situated; and accordingly city charters and statutes under which cities are established have generally provided for payment for the construction of pavements by local assessments upon abutting property, and for payment for repairs upon streets by a general tax; and under such charters and statutes, when it is within the limits of said improvement, was injured and defective and has been and now is, completely worn out, and the said pavement is full of deep and dangerous holes, and is almost impassable; all of which is due to traffic, disintegration, decay, defective material used in the construction thereof, and the workmanship of the same. That on or about the 10th day of September, 1894, and prior thereto, and before the commencement of this action, the said plaintiff duly notified the said Portland Bituminous Paving & Improvement Company of the condition of the said street as aforesaid, and duly requested the said company to repair the same, but the said defendant has failed and refused, and now fails and refuses to repair the same, or any part thereof; that by reason of said failure and refusal of the said company to comply with the terms of said bond to keep the street in repair as aforesaid, the city is and will be compelled to repair the same, so as to make it safe and passable, and suitable for the travel over the same, and to expend large sums of money therefor; whereby the city is and has been damaged in the sum of $9,000."

The terms of the contract, marked "Exhibit A," are that the paving and improvement company shall, among other things, furnish the material and perform the labor necessary or required under the provisions of Ordinance No. 6,718 for the improvement of said Washington street, and complete said improvement on or before November 6, 1891, to the satisfaction of the city council, and do and perform all of said work in a good and workmanlike manner, and according to the provisions and requirements of said ordinance and other ordinances and parts of ordinances therein referred to. The consideration to be paid for such improvement is specifically stated, but it is further stipulated that the paving and improvement company shall be paid by warrants drawn upon a fund derived from local assessments upon the property adjoining and benefited, and it is expressly agreed that the said company shall look for payment only to such fund, and will not require the city to pay for the same out of any other fund by any process whatever. Exhibit B is in form a bond whereby the Portland Bituminous Paving & Improvement Company, as principal, and A. N. King and D. P. Thompson, as sureties, have bound themselves unto the city of Portland in the sum of $9,000, conditioned as follows: "Now, if said contractor shall, for the period of five years next following the date of completion of the work of improvement hereinabove referred to, keep the said street and pavement in repair from the said west line of Second street to the intersection of Washington and B streets, in said city, by immediately, upon proper notice, repairing, at its own cost and expense, any injuries or worn-out places, or other defects due to traffic, or on account of disintegration or decay, or in any manner attributable to defective materials or workmanship, then this obligation to be void; otherwise to remain in full force and virtue." A demurrer to the complaint was overruled, and judgment entered for plaintiff after trial before the court.

Messrs. J. O. Moreland, Richard Williams, and E. B. Williams, for appellants:

The charter is the measure of the city's power.

Hend v. Providence Ins. Co. 2 Cranch, 169, 2 L. ed. 243; McCracken v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 620; Dill. Mun. Corp. 3d ed. § 89; Webster v. People, Binkert, 98 Ill. 343.

It is a matter of law, and not of fact, whether an act to be done be within the power of the corporation.

Bissell v. Michigan, S. & N. I. R. Cos. 22 N. Y. 281.

Where a city is empowered by its charter to do a particular act in a particular way, authority and right to perform the act depend upon the strict observance of the thing specified necessary to be done.

Hitchcock v. Galveston, 96 U. S. 341, 24 L. ed. 669; Lake v. Williamsburgh, 4 Denio, 521.

A tax levied or authorized to be levied for one purpose cannot be collected or used for any other. The city having authority only at the time this was made to make the improvement cannot couple with it a bond or condition to repair.

Brown v. Jenks, 98 Cal. 10; Buckley v. Tacoma, 9 Wash. 253; Verdin v. St. Louis (Mo.) 27 S. W. 447; State, Wilson, v. Trenton, 60 N. J. L. 394; People, Hall, v. Maher, 56 Hun, 81; Verdin v. St. Louis, 131 Mo. 26; Excelsior Paving Co. v. Leach (Cal.) 34 Pac. 116; Fehler v. Gosnell, 99 Ky. 380; Boyd v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 456.

This is not an action for liquidated damages.

Kemble v. Farren, 6 Bing. 141; Burr v. Todd, 41 Pa. 206; Robeson v. Whitesides, 16 sought to bind a contractor to repair the pavement he makes, the question at once arises whether or not the burden of paying for repairs of streets which should rest upon the city is thereby imposed upon the abutting owners subject to assessment for construction of the pavement on the theory that, being bound to repair, the contractor must have included the estimated cost of repairs in the amount charged for construction. The question whether contracts and ordinances requiring the contractor to repair or maintain the pavement made by him is illegal or legal, therefore depends upon whether the contract or requirement is really one to correct and repair that which had formerly existed in proper condition, or is a mere guaranty that the work is properly done and will last as long as such pavement ought to last.

II. Agreements including repairs.

An agreement by a contractor constructing a pavement will not be deemed a mere warranty of the quality of his work as distinguished from an agreement to keep in repair so as to relieve it from invalidity, growing out of the fact that abutting owners were to pay for the pavement and the municipality was required to pay for repairs, where the contract expressly provided that he was to keep the street in good condition and repair. People, Hall, v. Maher, 56 Hun, 81, dictum.

Serg. & R. 320; Chase v. Allen, 13 Gray, 42; Spear v. Smith, 1 Denio, 464; in notes to Graham v. Bickham (Pa.) 1 Am. Dec. 331; Wilhelm v. Eaves, 21 Or. 194, 14 L. R. A. 297.

If liquidated damages were contemplated the whole amount would be forfeited for a single breach.

Sanford v. First Nat. Bank, 94 Iowa, 680; Cheddick v. Marsh, 21 N. J. L. 463.

Numerous breaches of the bond were contemplated; some might be serious, some trifling.

Parker v. Jeffery, 26 Or. 186; Colwell v. Lawrence, 38 N. Y. 71; Lampman v. Cochran, 16 N. Y. 275; Berry v. Wisdom, 3 Ohio St. 241.

It is not sufficient to aver a liability; actual payment must be averred and proved in order to entitle the plaintiff to recover.

Sedgw. Damages, 5th ed. 307, 311, 8th ed. § 393; 2 Sutherland, Damages, 602, note 4; Aberdeen v. Blackmar, 6 Hill, 324; Lott v. Mitchell, 32 Cal. 23; American Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Waleen, 52 Minn. 23; Proprietors of Locks & Canals v. Lovell Horse R. Corp. 109 Mass. 221; Little v. Little, 13 Pick. 426; Jeffers v. Johnson, 21 N. J. L. 73; Kelley v. Seay, 3 Okla. 527; Gilbert v. Wiman, 1 N. Y. 550, 49 Am. Dec. 359; Willson v. McBooy, 25 Cal. 169; Wicker v. Hoppock, 6 Wall. 94, 99, 18 L. ed. 752, 753.

If the obligee in the bond was under no obligation to repair the street, or to do the thing against which the indemnity is given, then it could suffer no injury by a failure to repair the street.

Trotter v. Hughes, 12 N. Y. 74, 62 Am. Dec. 137; King v. Whitely, 10 Paige, 465.

If the plaintiff can with trifling cost prevent damage or injury, and thus relieve a defendant from liability, it is its duty to do so.

1 Sutherland, Damages, 148.

Mr. W. M. Oake for respondent.

Wolverton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is important at the outset to ascertain and determine the proper interpretation to be given the language of the condition of the bond relating to repairs. The respondent contends that the condition is effective only as a guaranty that the work and materials will be done and furnished according to the stipulations of the contract and hence that the bond stands as security for the faithful performance thereof. The language of the ordinance and the condition are very nearly identical, so that the consideration of the purpose of the former must necessarily aid us in arriving at the true construction of the latter. By the ordinance the contractor is required in the first place to give a good and sufficient bond, in amount equal to the contract price, conditioned, among other things, that he will commence and complete the proposed improvement according to the specifications. In addition to this, another bond, in a sum equal to 25 per cent of the contract price, is required to be given, conditioned as is the one in suit. Now, the evident purpose of the common council in requiring the larger bond was to secure a faithful performance of the contract in all its details, as by its terms it is equivalent to a requirement that the improvement shall be completed according to specifications, and this, we assume, comprehends the quality of the materials stipulated for, as well as the manner of the workmanship. So there would appear to be no need of the lesser one, except to subserve some other purpose; and it is not reasonable to suppose that the two bonds were intended to afford to the city cumulative remedies for the accomplishment of one and the same end. The language and grammatical arrangement of the ordinance and condition are in harmony with this thought. The obligation is to repair injuries arising from several causes, among which are such as may arise from defective materials and workmanship. A guaranty against injuries for a reasonable time after completion, which may be attributable to these specific causes, might be regarded as a suitable, and perhaps proper, test of substantial compliance on the part of the contractor, and therefore might be held to operate as a guaranty of faithful performance, for it is sometimes argued that, if the work is well done, it would need no repairs within such

And a contract for paving a street, by which the contractor agrees to keep the pavement in repair for seven years, compels the property owners to pay the contract price, not only for laying the pavement, but also for seven years' repairs, and is invalid where it is the duty of the city to make repairs. Ibid.

So, a contract pursuant to an ordinance directing the paving of a street, requiring the contractor to keep the street in repair for five years, and retaining 10 per cent of the contract price as a guaranty or security for the faithful performance of that undertaking, is illegal, and the stipulation for keeping the street in repair is not enforceable, and the sum set apart for repairs cannot be collected from the abutting owners. Bullitt v. Selvaig, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 599.

A city bound to repair its streets cannot, by forcing a bargain on a contractor for a cheap rate of repairing as a condition for letting a contract for the reconstruction of a street, impose on the adjoining property as a special tax for reconstruction an uncertain and unascertainable portion of the expenses properly chargeable to the city for the repairs. Vardin v. St. Louis, 131 Mo. 26.

And an ordinance for the paving of a street, requiring the contractor to agree to keep the pavement in repair for seven years from and after its acceptance by the city, without expense to the city or abutting property owners, in effect imposes the cost of keeping the pavement in repair for that time upon the abutting property owners. Schenectady v. Union College, 66 Hun. 179, dictum.

And see PORTLAND V. PORTLAND BITUMINOUS PAVING & IMPROV. CO.

And a provision in a contract for paving a street binding the contractor to give bond to maintain the pavement in good order for five years after its completion and acceptance, and to make the repairs which may become necessary within such time by reason of any imperfection in the work or material, or which may become necessary by reason of any crumbling or disintegration of the material generally, without limiting it to any particular cause, where the duty of repairing a street once paved is time. Still it is not a felicitous way of stating the guaranty for sound and good work. Covington v. Boyle, 6 Bush, 204. However that may be, such could not be the purpose of the bond in suit, because the city took another looking to that end. The causes assigned are so broad and comprehensive in their scope as to include injuries arising from every substantial source, and, in effect, subjoins an independent condition, not covered by the contract. So that the undertaking is simply to keep and maintain the street and pavement in repair for a designated period of time, regardless of the quality of the material stipulated to be furnished or supplied, or the workmanship to be employed. Upon the other hand, it is urged that the bond is invalid, because it was given as a guaranty that the contractor shall make and keep up the repairs upon the street and pavement, the expenses for which the city has, without power or rightful authority, assessed against the adjoining property. The city is empowered by charter provisions to improve its streets, and to assess the cost thereof against the adjacent property. Charter City of Portland, §§ 94, 100. It may also repair any street, or part thereof, whenever it deems it expedient, and assess the cost against such property; but before doing the same it must be declared by ordinance whether the cost shall be so assessed or paid out of the general fund. When it is declared that the proposed repair shall be made at the cost of adjacent property, thereafter it is to be deemed an improvement, and shall be made accordingly. Id. §§ 122, 123. So that we find here authority to make both improvements and repairs, and to assess the expense thereof against adjacent property. The manner of procedure in either instance is somewhat different, but the power remains. The repair contemplated, however, is such as the council may deem expedient to be made; that is, the necessity therefor must exist by the consideration of that body. Like an improvement the probable cost of making it must be ascertained and determined, and this forms the basis for the assessment. As it pertains both to the improvement and repair, the council is empowered to make provisions for present exigencies, and it may charge the expense thereof against the property supposed to be benefited. Beyond this it would appear that it is not authorized to act. We have not been referred to any provision in the charter authorizing it to make contracts for keeping or maintaining streets or highways, or any improvements thereon, made or to be made, in repair, or to levy the estimated cost of anticipated future repairs against property of individuals. It is manifest that the letting of the contract upon condition that the contractor should bind himself to keep up repairs for a period of five years, due generally to traffic, disintegration, and decay, defective materials and workmanship, was calculated to increase the amount of the bid by the estimated cost of such repairs. At least, the condition imposed an additional burden, which would not be assumed or undertaken without compensation. And the contractor would very naturally be expected to demand a higher price, in consideration of the obligation to assume the additional burden. Thus, by exacting the bond, a burden was undeniably imposed upon the adjacent property beyond such as was authorized by the charter. Such, in effect, is the holding of the court in Brown v. Jenks, 98 Cal. 10, wherein the court says: "This act contains no grant of authority to the city council for keeping a street in repair. Section 2 authorizes the council to contract for different kinds of street work. In all cases the work authorized is such as is necessary to make and complete a street, or to repair existing defects. The bond is not only unauthorized by the words of the statute, but the requirement changes, and may increase, the burdens of the property owner. It is manifest that the obligation to keep the street in repair for five years is a burden which one would not undertake for nothing. Therefore a contractor would charge a higher price for the work when he was forced to contract also for repairs. The expense undertaken is indefinite, and the property owner must pay for them in advance, whereas the statute provides for repairs after the necessity for thrown upon the city at large, is not a mere guaranty that the work will be done in accordance with the terms of the contract, and a pavement constructed which will last five years without the necessity of repairs, but is a contract for repairs rendering the assessment against the abutting lotowners to pay the cost thereof illegal and void. Kansas City v. Hanson (Kan. App.) 55 Pac. 513.

And an ordinance and a contract pursuant thereto for the paving of a street, requiring that the contractor shall keep the pavement in good repair for a period of five years from the completion of the work and its acceptance by the city, and deposit bonds amounting to 10 per cent of the contract price as security therefor, charges the property holders with the cost of repairs to the street for that period in addition to the cost of original construction, and is therefore invalid under Ky. Stat. §§ 2833, 2834, providing that improvements by original construction are to be made at the cost of the owners of the abutting lots, and that improvements by reconstruction or repair are to be 44 L. R. A.

provided for out of taxation upon the city at large. Fehler v. Gosnell, 99 Ky. 380.

In the above case Louisville v. Henderson, 5 Bush, 520, infra, III., was distinguished upon the ground that that case was decided upon the theory that the thing stipulated was that the contractor would keep his work in repair, but not that he would repair all injuries to the street which might result from causes other than defects in his work, and Covington v. Dressman, 6 Bush, 214, infra, III., was distinguished upon the ground that the contract to keep in repair for six months in that case was simply a guaranty that the work was well done, so that it would not need repair in that time, though the method of expression of the guaranty was perhaps an unfortunate one.

So, a provision in a contract for paving a street, that the contractor will be required without additional compensation to keep in good order and repair all the work done thereunder for a period of five years after the date of completion, and to guarantee that during that time neither the authorities nor property owners them appears. Then it being contingent, he will be paying for repairs which may never be required." In People, Hall, v. Maher, 56 Hun, 81, it appears that by the provision of the charter of the city of Albany, New York, the expenses for ordinary repairs of a certain avenue to be paved with Trinidad asphalt were to be borne by the city. But the city council, in its ordinance providing for the pavement, required the contractor to agree "to keep the said pavement in repair for seven years from and after its acceptance by the city, without expense to said city or abutting property owners," which provision was inserted in the specifications under which bids were received for the work, and pursuant to which the contract was made. It was held, on the question of its validity, that the necessary effect of the contract was to charge upon property owners the cost of keeping the avenue in repair in violation of the charter regulations, and the contract was therefore adjudged to be illegal. To the same effect, see Fehler v. Goenell, 99 Ky. 380; McAllister v. Tucuma, 9 Wash. 272; Boyd v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 456; Verdin v. St. Louis (Mo.) 27 S. W. 447, 131 Mo. 26. Schenectady v. Union College, 66 Hun, 179, illustrates the distinction drawn by the authorities touching the effect of the condition. In that case the undertaking was to "do all the work required by such ordinance and this contract in such good and substantial manner that no repairs thereto shall be required for the term of five years after its completion." And it was held, distinguishing People, Hall, v. Maher, 56 Hun, 81, that the clause referred to had reference solely to the substantial character of the work performed and materials used in the performance of the contract. A like distinction is observed in Cole v. People, Barnewolt, 161 Ill. 16. But the bond in question is distinctly an independent undertaking to keep the street and pavement in repair, made so both by the ordinance and the language thereof, covering, in effect, all injuries liable to arise, from whatsoever source. It is clear that under the authorities, based upon what we believe to be sound reasoning, the assessment against property to meet the additional expense of such repairs was unwarranted by the charter. But it does not follow that, because the assessment is void in so far as it may provide for the especial fund which forms the consideration for the bond, the bond itself is invalid and illegal, and not capable of being enforced, if authority is found elsewhere for the city to enter into such a contract with the paving company. Portland Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. East Portland, 18 Or. 21, 6 L. R. A. 290. But there was an evident lack of statutory power for entering into a contract for keeping and maintaining the street and pavement in repair, and consequently a want of legal authority to use the public moneys for that purpose. Under the charter the council was required to provide for taking security by good and sufficient bonds for the faithful performance of any contract let under its authority. City Charter 1891, § 116. It was authorized to let contracts for the repair of streets where present necessities required, or which may have been deemed expedient by the common council, but not to expend the funds of the public or the property owners of the municipality, and let contracts for anticipated future repairs. And this is just what it has attempted to do. Upon the other hand, it is strongly urged by plaintiff that the bond can be enforced as a common-law obligation, and of this we will now inquire. It has been held by this court that bonds or undertakings intended to be given in compliance with statutes, although having failed in substantial compliance therewith, will, if entered into voluntarily, and founded upon a valid consideration, and they do not violate public policy or contravene any statute, be enforced as common-law obligations. Bunneman v. Wagner, 16 Or. 433. The rule is, perhaps, more tersely stated by the Supreme Court of the United States, that, if a contract is entered into by competent parties, and for a lawful purpose, not prohibited by law, and is founded upon a sufficient consideration, it is a valid contract at common law. United States v. Tingey, 5 Pet. 115, 8 L. ed. 66; United States v. Linn, 15 Pet. 290, 10 L. ed. 742. That the bond in question was entered into voluntarily cannot be gainsaid, and the sufficiency of the consideration must also be conceded.

The question remains, Is the obligation shall be under any expense whatever for repairs made necessary on account of any defective workmanship, material, or other reason, with certain specific exceptions, and that there will be retained until the expiration of such time out of the money payable to the contractor a designated per cent as a guaranty that he will conform to such requirements, is illegal, and an assessment based thereon is invalid, under a charter containing no provision for levying assessments against abutting property for repairs of a pavement or a street, but specifically providing that the expense of maintaining and keeping streets in repair shall be paid out of the ward fund. Boyd v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 456.

In the above case Morse v. West Port, 110 Mo. 502, infra, VI., was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the contract was held valid because the charter expressly authorized assessments upon adjoining lots for repairing streets, and Schenectady v. Union College, 66 Hun, 179, infra, III., was disapproved but distinguished upon the ground that the contract in 44 L. R. A.

question, though in somewhat similar terms, was not so broad and sweeping as the one in hand.

So, in the Verdin Case, 131 Mo. 26, it was held that a requirement by ordinance that a contractor should maintain a pavement built by him for a term of years could not be distinguished from a contract for repairs within the meaning of a charter provision that a contract for repairs is required to be let to the lowest bidder.

A requirement in a street-paving contract that the contractor shall keep the streets in repair for five years imposes an additional burden on the property owners, and so vitiates the assessment unless expressly authorized by statute. Excelsior Paving Co. v. Leach (Cal.) 34 Pac. 116.

And a contract by a board of public works for the construction of a street, exacting a bond from the contractor guaranteeing the pavement for five years, has the effect of making the abutting property owners pay for all repairs void as against the sureties of the obligor, for it is they who are prosecuting this appeal? It is a general rule of law that, where the obligor has obtained and availed himself of the benefits to be derived from the execution of the bond, neither he nor his sureties can defeat their liability because of some irregularity in the proceeding in which the bond originated. Having obtained the benefit, they are estopped from setting up the irregularity. Carlon v. Dixon, 12 Or. 148; Johnson v. Weatherwax, 9 Kan. 75; Nunn v. Goodlett, 10 Ark. 89. So it has been held that an obligor will not be permitted to defeat his liability by showing want of jurisdiction in the court before whom the action was pending, or the unconstitutionality of the law by virtue of which the bond or obligation had its inception. McDermitt v. Isbell, 4 Cal. 113; State, Cantwell, v. Stark, 75 Mo. 566; Daniels v. Tearney, 102 U. S. 415, 26 L. ed. 187. In the latter case an action was sustained upon a bond given under and by virtue of an ordinance of the state of Virginia, which was held by the national courts to be unconstitutional and invalid by reason of the unreasonable motive and purpose by which its authors were animated in passing it. Mr. Justice Swayne, speaking for the unanimous court, says: "It is well settled, as a general proposition, subject to certain exceptions, not necessary to be here noted, that where a party has availed himself for his benefit of an unconstitutional law, he cannot, in a subsequent litigation with others not in that position, aver its unconstitutionality as a defense, although such unconstitutionality may have been pronounced by a competent judicial tribunal in another suit. In such cases the principle of estoppel applies with full force and conclusive effect." The following, among other, cases are cited in support of the doctrine: Ferguson v. Landrum, 5 Bush, 230, 96 Am. Dec. 350; Burlington, C. B. & M. R. Co. v. Stewart, 39 Iowa, 267; Van Hook v. Whitlock, 26 Wend. 43; Burlington v. Gilbert, 31 Iowa, 356, 7 Am. Rep. 143; United States v. Hodson, 10 Wall. 409, 19 L. ed. 940. But here another and a different principle is involved. A municipality with limited and circumscribed powers and authority is a party to the contract, and the validity thereof depends for its support upon the requisite power of the city to enter into and enforce it. It is a doctrine of all the authorities that, if a municipality acts wholly beyond the scope of its express or implied authority, it is not estopped to set up that fact to defeat any alleged claim or demand arising by virtue of such unauthorized acts, and it is said that neither the doctrine of estoppel, of ratification, nor of bona fide holding can be invoked to support such a transaction. Sutro v. Pettit, 74 Cal. 332. "This doctrine," says Dillon, "grows out of the nature of such institutions, and rests upon reasonable and solid grounds." 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 457. It is essential to the welfare and protection of citizens and taxpayers who contribute to the revenues, and whose property is subject to the laws and ordinances of municipalities, that they should be held to the exercise of such powers only as have been delegated to them through legislative enactment. They possess no powers but such as are delegated, or may be necessary to their exercise, and thereby implied, and the courts have been solicitous that they exercise none that they do not possess. Their creation being by public statute, and for definite and legitimate objects, to which their funds are to be applied, contracts which have no connection with such purposes, or which, by natural intendment, will cause an illegal or wrongful application of their funds or the funds of their citizens with which they are intrusted by chartered powers, or an application to other or foreign objects, are ultra vires, and void. 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 936. In Newbery v. Fox, 37 Minn. 141, it is said: "The doctrine of ultra vires has, with good reason, been applied with greater strictness to municipal bodies than to private corporations, and, in general, a municipality is not estopped from denying the validity of a contract made by its officers, when there has been no authority for making such a contract. . . . A different rule of law would in effect, vastly enlarge the power of public agents to bind a municipality by contracts, not only unauthorized, but prohibited, by law.

in advance for five years, and is unauthorized where there is nothing in the charter on the subject of repairs, the presumption in such case being that ordinary repairs will be taken care of by the city. McAllister v. Tacoma, 9 Wash. 272.

In the above case, Schenectady v. Union College, 66 Hun, 179, infra, III., was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the contract was that the work should be done in such a manner that no repairs would be needed for five years, and that if any should be required the contractor would make them, which was held to be a mere guaranty of the quality of the work.

So, an obligation imposed upon a contractor for the paving of a street to give a bond to keep the street so improved in thorough repair for a term of five years from the completion of the contract, is a burden which would lead a contractor to charge a higher price for the work than he would do if he were not also forced to contract for repairs; and as the amount of repairs required is unknown, and the expense is indefinite and contingent, and the property owner must pay for them in advance, and possibly might be required to pay for repairs which were never needed, it is invalid under a statute providing that needed repairs shall be made by the owners of frontage when the repairs are required. Brown v. Jenks, 98 Cal. 10.

A city council cannot provide for repairs by requiring a contractor paying a street to give bond conditioned for its maintenance in good order for a designated time after its acceptance, and to make all repairs which may be necessary from imperfection in the work or material in anticipation of their necessity, but can only provide therefor as the necessity arises. Kansas City v. Hanson (Kan. App.) 55 Pac. 513.

And the fact that a bid for the construction of a pavement in a street did not include any item for repairs does not relieve an ordinance providing for the construction of such pavement, requiring the contractor to agree to keep it in repair for seven years, from invalidity on account of such agreement, as other bidders

It would tend to nullify the limitations and restrictions imposed with respect to the powers of such agents, and to a dangerous extent expose the public to the very evils and abuses which such limitations are designed to prevent." A distinction is recognized between acts of the municipality or governing body, which are not within the scope of their general powers, and such as may be open to the objection that they are lacking in some technical and formal regularity in their adoption, or that there has been a nonobservance of some collateral act or formality prescribed, not jurisdictional in its character. The former are clearly and always void, while the latter, if they lead to a perpetration of a fraud upon contracting parties acting upon the faith of laws and ordinances apparently regular and valid, will be held to bind the municipality upon the principle of having received and appropriated benefits derived on account of them, and it will be estopped to deny their validity. Moore v. New York, 73 N. Y. 245, 29 Am. Rep. 134. Thus, in Hitchcock v. Galveston, 96 U. S. 541, 24 L. ed. 659, it was held that, where the municipality had the power to contract for the improvement of the sidewalks, but in making such a contract it agreed to pay by giving its bonds, which it had no authority to do, and, having received benefits at the expense of the other contracting party, it could not object that it was not empowered to make payment in the mode sought to be adopted, and that, while the city could not be held to a specific performance of its undertaking, yet that it was liable to pay the contractor under the contract. The principle is recognized, and pertinently discussed, by Mr. Justice Strahan in Portland Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. East Portland, 18 Or. 21, 6 L. R. A. 290, wherein a technical defect in a notice required by the statutory procedure in levying a local assessment was urged as a defense. He says: "I do not think, under the charter, this technical defect in the notice destroyed or impaired the power of the city to contract. . . . The defendant's claim is not that the general power did not exist, but there was a slight departure from the authority conferred in the particular already pointed out, and for that reason the whole proceeding was ultra vires and void. Under the circumstances of this case, I am unable to accede to this argument." It must be conceded that a municipality will be estopped to enforce the performance of a contract under the same or like conditions that an individual will be estopped to proceed against it. If it has exceeded its general powers in attempting to enter into contractual relations with an individual, and if, because of its exercise of such excess of authority, the individual, who is charged with knowledge of its just powers, is left without remedy, there is no good or sufficient reason why the city should not, under like circumstances, be estopped to proceed against the individual. The contract is invalid by reason of the lack of power to enter into it, and, if invalid as to one of the contracting parties, it is also invalid as to the other. "So, on the other hand," says Mr. Dillon, "a party making with a city a contract which is ultra vires is not estopped, when sued thereon by the corporation for damages, to set up its want of authority to make it." 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 458. It is sometimes asserted that a contract made by a municipal corporation, where there exists a defect of power, or even a want of power to so contract, yet if not made in violation of charter regulations of any statute prohibiting, is not illegal; and, if such a contract has been executed, and benefits have been received and appropriated, the party receiving them is estopped to deny its validity. St. Louis v. Davidson, 102 Mo. 149; State Bd. of Agri. v. Citizens Street R. Co. 47 Ind. 407, 17 Am. Rep. 702, is to the same effect as applied to a private corporation. This doctrine has been criticised as too broad and unsound, and contrary to the great weight of authority. 1 Beach, Pub. Corp. §§ 217, 218. But, however this may be, it is not thought to be entirely applicable to the case at bar. It, as we have seen, was clearly beyond the express or implied powers granted to the city to contract for keeping and maintaining the street and pavement in repair against injuries that might arise from all causes for the period may have thought it necessary to make their prices higher because of such requirement, and if no such requirement had been made they might have made proposals lower than that of the contractor whose bid was accepted. People, Hall, v. Maher, 56 Hun. 81; Excelsior Paving Co. v. Leach (Cal.) 34 Pac. 116; Brown v. Jenks, 98 Cal. 10.

A provision in a contract for the paving of a street requiring the contractor to give bond for keeping the street in repair for a term of five years, cannot be upheld as a guaranty that the work would be well done and would not require repairs, as such a requirement might increase the charge for which the work is undertaken. Brown v. Jenks, 98 Cal. 10.

And a proprietor of a lot abutting upon a street cannot be made to pay for a guaranty by a contractor paving the street that it shall last for a designated number of years and an agreement to keep it in repair for that time, where such guaranty may become worthless before the time has elapsed, and it is the duty of the officers of the city to see that the work is properly done. Kansas City v. Hanson (Kan. App.) 55 Pac. 513; Brown v. Jenks, 98 Cal. 10.

III. Agreements constituting mere guaranty.

A contract for paving, requiring the contractor to keep the pavement in repair for a year, might not be held invalid, since a year might reasonably be considered a reasonable time within which to test the pavement, as defects may not appear immediately. People, Hall, v. Maher, 56 Hun. 81, dictum.

And such a contract to keep the work in repair for six months merely binds the contractor to make good any work which may have been defectively done, and is not invalid. Louisville v. Henderson, 5 Bush, 521.

And that case was followed in a case of a contract to keep in repair for two years, in Covington v. Dressman, 6 Bush, 210.

So, an agreement by the contractor, in a paving contract in which the pavement was guaranteed for five years, to keep the pavement in repair for an additional term of five years at a fixed price, and to turn the pavement over to the

of five years. If it could contract for this length of time in the future, why not for a much longer, or even an indefinite, time, and use the funds of the city or abutting property owners for payment in advance? It is undoubtedly a duty which is due to the public, and enjoined upon the city, to see that the streets are kept in reasonable repair. But the mode of making repairs is specifically pointed out, and limited to present necessities, and thereby constitutes the measure of power; and, being the only manner designated, must be construed as a prohibition of any other method. That is to say, the city is not only powerless to adopt any other mode or method, or to expend the public moneys in its promotion, but it is prohibited from proceeding in any other manner. While the contract has been fully executed on the part of the city, yet it cannot, by reason of its invalidity, recover damages on account of a breach thereof. In further support of these views, see McDon- ald v. New York, 68 N. Y. 23, 23 Am. Rep. 144; Miners' Ditch Co. v. Zellerbach, 37 Cal. 543, 99 Am. Dec. 30; Nash v. St. Paul, 8 Minn. 172 (Gil. 143); Covington & M. R. Co. v. Athens, 35 Ga. 367; 1 Beach, Pub. Corp. § 217; Durango v. Pennington, 8 Colo. 257.

We have come to this conclusion after much and careful deliberation, because of the importance of the matters involved, but we are satisfied that the rule adopted touching the invalidity of the acts of a municipal corporation where entirely beyond the general scope of its powers is the only safe one, in view of the safeguards which should always be maintained against the unauthorized acts of the authorities and the illegal use of the funds of municipalities.

The judgment must, therefore, be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to sustain the demurrer.

Rehearing denied.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

Edward L. ROBERTSON, et al., Appts.,
v.

City of OMAHA et al.

(55 Neb. 718.)

- *1. Under the provisions of § 69, chap. 12a, Comp. Stat. 1891, the costs of making "ordinary repairs" in street pavements cannot be assessed against the abutting lotowner, but must be paid by the city.
2. A paving contract which binds the contractor to bear the expense for the term of ten years of "all repairs which may, from any imperfection in the said work or material, become necessary within that time" does not include "ordinary repairs," nor is said stipulation in violation of said chapter 12a.
3. The contract mentioned in the opinion construed, and held not to cast the burden on the abutting lotowner to make "ordinary repairs."

*Headnotes by NORVAL, J.

city at the end of such additional term in good order and condition, forms no barrier to the collection of a special tax imposed for the first cost of the improvement, where it is not shown that such provision for additional maintenance had any bearing on the original cost, or that it added in any way to the expenses properly authorized by charter to be imposed as a special tax on neighboring property. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Ullman, 137 Mo. 543.

And a requirement in an ordinance and a contract for the improvement of a street pursuant thereto, that the pavement and materials composing it should be kept in good repair for a period of five years from the completion and acceptance of the work, binds the contractor to remedy defects in his work, as they may appear or develop, but does not require him to keep the street in repair, as he cannot be presumed to have added the expense of repairs to his estimate, and the assessment therefor is not illegal as the abutting owner will not be deemed to have been required to pay either directly or indirectly for repairs. Gosnell v. Louisville, 14 44 L. R. A.

4. This court will not disturb a finding of fact based upon conflicting evidence.

5. Where, in case of a street paved with wooden blocks laid on a concrete base, such blocks have become worthless, and are entirely removed in pursuance of a contract entered into with the city, and replaced with vitrified brick laid on the old base, such new improvement is not an "ordinary repair," within the meaning of the statute, but is a repavement of the street, and to pay the costs thereof a special assessment may be made against the abutting real estate.

(September 23, 1898.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a decree of the District Court for Douglas County in favor of defendants in a proceeding to restrain the levying of a special tax upon the plaintiff's property for the cost of repaving a certain street. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Ky. L. Rep. 719. And see also ROBERTSON v. OMAHA.

So, a provision in an ordinance for the paving of a street that the contractor shall furnish a bond as a guaranty that he will faithfully perform the work in accordance with the agreement, and, without further compensation, keep in continuous good repair all pavements laid thereunder for a period of five years, will be deemed a mere warranty or a guaranty of the fitness of the material for the use intended, where there is nothing to indicate that any of the money raised by special taxation was to be applied to the purposes of maintaining the pavement and keeping it in repair. Cole v. People, Barnewolt, 161 Ill. 16.

And the fact that the plans and specifications for the improvement of a street are, by reference, made a part of the ordinance, and that one of the specifications requires the contractors to furnish a bond to faithfully perform the work and to keep the pavement laid by them in good repair for five years, does not necessarily make the ordinance one which provides for the main-

Messrs. J. C. Cowin and W. D. McHugh for appellants.

Mr. E. H. Scott, for appellees:

Repairs which may from any imperfection in the said work or material become necessary are not ordinary repairs.

People, Hall, v. Maher, 56 Hun, 81; Schenectady v. Union College, 66 Hun, 179; State, Wilson, v. Trenton, 60 N. J. L. 394.

There being no evidence of fraud or corruption on the part of the city officials in accepting the pavement in question, the court will not inquire as to whether the same was or was not in conformity with the requirement of the contract, or as to whether the same was or was not a satisfactory pavement.

Liebstein v. Newark, 24 N. J. Eq. 201; State, Vanderbeck, v. Jersey City, 29 N. J. L. 441; Cooley, Taxn. 1st ed. p. 468; Ricketts v. Hyde Park, 85 Ill. 113; Powers v. Grand Rapids, 98 Mich. 393.

This action is brought to enjoin the city council from levying an assessment against the property of the plaintiffs to pay the cost of the paving in question. The passage of the contemplated ordinance would constitute an exercise of the legislative function of the municipal body with which the court as a co-ordinate branch of the government will not interfere. Courts have no jurisdiction or power to restrain the passage of an ordinance, nor can they interfere with the legislative discretion of the mayor and city council.

Des Moines Gas Co. v. Des Moines, 44 Iowa, 508, 24 Am. Rep. 756; Stevens v. St. Mary's Training School, 144 Ill. 336, 18 L. R. A. 832; Alpers v. San Francisco, 32 Fed. Rep. 505; Beach, Modern Eq. Jur. § 677; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. p. 308, note p. 387; Montgomery Gaslight Co. v. Montgomery, 87 Ala. 245, 4 L. R. A. 616.

Mr. W. J. Connell also for appellees.

Norval, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The object of this action is to perpetually restrain the city of Omaha from levying a special assessment or special tax upon the premises described in the petition to pay the costs of repaving Leavenworth street, in said city, between Sixteenth street and Twenty-Ninth avenue. From a decree for the city, plaintiffs appeal.

It is disclosed by the record that there was duly created in said city street improvement or paving district No. 447, including Leavenworth street, and the property abutting thereon on each side to the distance of 132 feet, between Sixteenth street and Twenty-Ninth avenue, and that said Leavenworth street in said improvement district was paved with cedar blocks, laid on a concrete foundation. Prior to April 12, 1892, this pavement had become in such a dilapidated and worthless condition as to require said portion of Leavenworth street to be repaved, and on said date an ordinance was duly passed declaring the necessity of repaving said portion of the street, and authorizing the property owners in said improvement district within thirty days to designate the kind of material to be used in making the improvement. A petition was filed with the city clerk, signed by plaintiffs and other owners of lots abutting upon Leavenworth street within said improvement district No. 447, and representing a majority of the feet frontage thereon, and a majority of the area within said district, asking the repavement of said street in said improvement district, and designating vitrified brick as the material desired to be used in such repaving. An ordinance was subsequently passed and approved, providing for the repavement of said Leavenworth street with vitrified brick, and ordering the board of public works to contract therefor. A contract was duly made with one Hugh Murphy to repave said street, who performed the work, and the city authorities accepted the improvement. Afterwards the city council sat as a board of equalization, due and legal notice thereof first having been given, for the purpose of equalizing the proposed levy of special taxes to meet the costs of said improvement, and at such meeting adopted a plan of assessment. This suit was instituted to prevent the levy of the special taxes in accordtenance and repair of the street for five years by special taxation, and therefore invalid as imposing upon abutting owners a burden which should be borne by the city at large. Ibid.

And specifications in a contract for paving, curbing, and improving a street, providing that the contractor shall without any extra compensation keep in repair the curb and gutter for a period of two years after final acceptance by making good any settlement or derangement of lines or grades of curbs, gutters, and crossings, and by replacing defective materials or work in curbs, gutters, crossings, and pavements, is no more than a guaranty that the work has been properly done and that the contractor will repair it if defective, where in estimating the cost of the improvement, the cost of repair was not taken into consideration, and such provision is not invalid as imposing on abutting owners the cost of repairs which should be paid for by the city. Latham v. Wilmette, 168 Ill. 153.

But see Kansas City v. Hanson (Kan. App.) 55 Pac. 513; Fehler v. Gosnell, 99 Ky. 380; Boyd v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 456; Excelsior Paving Co. v. Leach (Cal.) 34 Pac. 116; Brown v. 14 L. R. A.

Jenks, 98 Cal. 10; McAllister v. Tacoma, 9 Wash. 272. — supra, II.

So, a provision in a contract for paving a street by which the contractor guarantees to put down a pavement which shall remain in good condition for at least five years, and if it gets out of order during that period he will restore it at his own expense, is merely an added precaution for insuring good workmanship and the use of good material, and a method of enforcing the guaranty of the contractor by a speedier and less expensive method than by suit, and does not have the effect of imposing upon abutting owners any burden other than that of having the pavement well constructed at the outset, and is not subject to the objection that they are thereby required to pay for repairs which are chargeable generally to the city. State, Wilson, v. Trenton, 60 N. J. L. 394. Affirmed on appeal, STATE, WILSON, v. TRENTON.

And a provision in a contract for paving, curbing, and guttering a street that the contractor will be required at any time within two years after the acceptance of the work with-ance with such plan. The contract with Hugh Murphy, under which the improvement was made, contained the provisions following: "(15) The contracting party of the second part hereby expressly guarantees the above work for the full period of ten years from approved acceptance of the work, and said party binds himself and his heirs and assigns for the entire expense of all repairs which may, from any imperfection in the said work or material, become necessary within that time. (16) And it is hereby agreed that the amount reserved, and accruing interest, by the city of Omaha, as guaranty, for the maintenance of the work herein specified, shall be used as a special fund for making repairs or reconstruction as deemed necessary by the board of public works, in the manner provided, as follows: If at any time within the period of guaranty, after the completion and acceptance of the work herein contracted for, the said work shall, in the judgment of the city engineer and board of public works, require to be repaired and resurfaced or reconstructed, the board of public works shall notify the said second party to make the repairs required, and, if the said second party shall neglect to proceed with such repairs within three days from the date of the service of such notice, then the board of public works shall have the right to cause such repairs or reconstruction to be made in such manner as they and the city engineer shall deem best; and the whole cost thereof, both for labor and material, shall be paid out of the special fund before mentioned, or, if necessary, at the expense of the contractor and sureties. (17) Failure or neglect on the part of the inspector to condemn inferior work or material at the time it is being supplied or done shall not be construed to imply an acceptance of any work. If it becomes evident to the board of public works, at any time prior to the payment of the 15 per cent reserve, that improper material has been furnished or inferior work done upon said improvement, it shall have the right to order the removal of such material or work, and to require that suitable material be supplied, and proper work done in lieu thereof by said contractor, out an additional compensation to replace any soft, disintegrated, or defective tile, curbing, or brick, or any material which proves to be inferior in quality, and to make good any settlement or derangement in the surface of the roadway, gutter, or curbing which may occur within such period, is simply a guaranty of the work and durability of the materials, and not a provision for repairs, the expense of which is imposed upon the city by the provisions of Iowa Code 1873, § 465. Allen v. Davenport, 107 Iowa, 90.

And a provision in such a contract by which the contractor guarantees that the curbing, guttering, and paving shall be done and completed according to contract, and that the same shall remain, except as to certain defects not caused by the contractor or his employees, at the end of five years in as good condition as when completed, and that any necessary repairs, with the same exception, shall be made by the contractor, is not a provision for repairs within the provision of a statute requiring the city to pay for repairs, but is in effect a guaranty that the without expense to the city. (18) As a basis of interpretation of the acceptable condition of pavements at the expiration of the period of guaranty, it is hereby agreed and understood that, if the paving material is found, and the wearing surface of the roadway shall possess no less than 75 per cent in the thickness of the specified depth of the original paving material, in a reasonably smooth condition for travel, it shall be considered as meeting the requirements for final acceptance." The contract, under the head of "Guaranties," contains this stipulation: "All pavements embraced in these specifications and bidding specifications are based upon a guaranty that the pavements will be well and substantially constructed, as heretofore provided, and that such pavements will be maintained by the contractor in a condition of continuous good order and repair for the period of ten years from and after the date of their approved acceptance. All securities held as reserves, and accruing interest thereon, shall be subject to use for such maintenance and repairs by the city of Omaha in the event of the failure of the contractor to keep such pavements in proper condition, it being expressly understood and agreed that the board of public works and city engineer shall determine when repairs or reconstruction are necessary; and failure by contractor to comply with a written order, or to enter upon such work within ten days, and complete the same within a reasonable time, shall be held as sufficient authority on the part of the city of Omaha to execute the work, and draw upon the reserve fund to defray the expenses thereof, or at the expense of the contractor and sureties or both. . . . It is distinctly understood, and hereby agreed, that all guaranteed pavements shall receive prompt attention in their maintenance, and, when repairs shall fail to be made within twenty days of written notice from the board of public works, a charge of ten cents per square yard of the entire area within the block requiring repairs shall be made against the contractor for every month or fraction thereof that the repairs of said pavement shall be neglected."

It is argued by counsel for plaintiffs that improvement shall be of such a character that it will remain in the condition it was in when first completed for the term of five years, and does not therefore vitiate the contract. Osburn v. Lyons, 104 Iowa, 160.

In the above case, Boyd v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 466; Brown v. Jenks, 98 Cal. 10; Verdin v. St. Louis, 131 Mo. 26; and Fehler v. Gosnell, 99 Ky. 380, supra, II.,—were distinguished upon the ground that the contract in those cases was held to include a charge for repairs, and to that extent to have been unauthorized.

So, a covenant by a contractor in a contract for the paving of a street that he will do all the work required by the ordinance authorizing the contract, and in such good and substantial manner that no repairs thereto shall be required for a term of five years after its completion, is a mere guaranty that the work shall conform to the requirement of the ordinance, and not an independent obligation, and is not therefore unauthorized as imposing upon the abutting property owners the burden of paying for keeping the pavement in repair for the design-the proposed levy of the special taxes in question is illegal, for the reason that it includes the costs and expenses of repairing the pavement for ten years. This argument is predicated upon the provisions of the contract already set out, and a clause contained in § 69, chap. 12a, Comp. Stat. 1891. This section, after authorizing the levy and collection of special taxes and assessments upon the lots or pieces of ground abutting upon or adjacent to any street to defray the costs and expenses of improving or repairing such street, declares "that the above provision shall not apply to ordinary repairs of streets or alleys, and one half of the expense of bringing streets, avenues, alleys, or parts thereof to the established grade shall be paid out of the general fund of the city except as otherwise hereinafter provided." It would seem that this clause places the burden upon the entire city to make ordinary street repairs, and that special assessments cannot be levied upon the real estate abutting upon any street to cover the expenses of making the ordinary or usual repairs of the pavements thereon. If, therefore, the contract with Murphy obligated him to make the ordinary repairs required to maintain in good condition the pavement laid by him on Leavenworth street, in said district No. 447, there would be much force to the argument of plaintiffs that this special assessment is invalid, at least to the extent that such assessment included the costs of all ordinary repairs, since the expense of making them is a burden assumed by the city, and cannot be assessed upon adjacent lotowners. An examination and consideration of the paving contract entered into by the city with Murphy are necessary to determine whether the proposed assessment requires the property owners to pay more than can be properly chargeable to them under the law. It will be observed that paragraph 15 of said contract merely makes it the duty of the contractor to bear "the entire expense of all the repairs which may, from any imperfection in said work or material, become necessary." It requires no argument to show that this provision does not cover usual or ordinary repairs, or the expenses incident to the natural wear of the pavement, or its destruction by floods or causes other than those resulting from defective workmanship or materials. Manifestly, said paragraph was merely a guaranty on the part of the contractor for the faithful performance of his contract, and required him merely to make good any defects arising from bad materials or the improper manner in which the work was performed. Such stipulation or guaranty cast no unlawful burden upon the adjacent property owners. They are required to pay for the kind of materials and workmanship designated in the contract, and it is perfectly proper for the city to stipulate that the contractor shall be at the expense of making all the repairs occasioned by the improper construction of the pavement, either in work or materials, or both, so that the abutting lotowner shall receive what he is required to pay for. There are other provisions in the contract, other than those found in paragraph 15, quoted above, which relate to the subject of repairs, but it would be a strained and unnatural construction to hold that they refer to what is termed "ordinary repairs." If it had been the intention to require the contractor to bear the expense of all the repairs, whether resulting from use of the pavement or defective materials, or any other cause, then language expressive of such purpose doubtless would have been employed, instead of the stipulation found in said paragraph 15. Applying the usual rules of interpretation to the contract, and construing all the provisions together, it is reasonably certain that no obligation was nated time. Schenectady v. Union College, 66 Hun, 179.

In the above case, People, Hall, v. Maher, 56 Hun, 81, supra, II., was distinguished upon the ground that in that case there was an express contract to keep the pavement in repair for seven years.

And a guaranty in a paving contract of the pavement for five years, and an agreement by the contractor to keep the same in repair during the period of such guaranty, and at the end of said period of five years to turn it over to the city in good order and condition, is not an agreement to repair which would charge the abutting owners with the cost of repairs properly chargeable to the city, but a mere guaranty that the work shall be properly done, where it appears that the guaranty involves no extra charge against the abutting property otherwise than would be justly payable for a lasting pavement, and that the term for keeping the agreed work in repair free of cost is no longer than the reasonable period such work should last if properly done at the outset. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Ullman, 137 Mo. 543.

In the above case, Verdin v. St. Louis, 131 Mo. 26, supra, II., was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the petition for injunction made a showing which was considered to substantially charge a scheme for forcing a bargain on the contractor for a cheap rate of 44 L. R. A.

repairs as a condition of letting a contract for reconstruction of a street.

So, in Brookfield v. Reed, 152 Mass. 568, an agreement made by individuals with a town that they would raise a road and the abutments of a bridge to a designated height, and keep and maintain said road and abutments in good repair free of all expenses to the town forever, in consideration for which the town on its part agreed to build and forever maintain a suitable bridge over and upon said abutments, was upheld; but the question as to the effect of the agreement to keep in repair, or whether it had any effect, was not raised.

It is to be observed that as between the cases in this subdivision and those of the one preceding it there is an apparently irreconcilable conflict of authority, opposite decisions having been made in different states upon contracts almost, if not exactly, alike, and in cases involving nearly, if not quite, the same state of facts. But a close study of the cases leads to the conclusion that one uniform principle has been applied in all cases, and the diversity has arisen from the application of the principle to the facts of the different cases, the rule being that where the contract amounts to no more than an agreement to make the work what it ought to have been if properly done in the first instance, it is a mere guaranty of the quality of the work, and is not unauthorized, but anything in excess imposed upon Murphy to make what is denominated "ordinary repairs." As suggested by counsel for the city, by paragraph 15 he guaranteed the work for a specified period, and was to bear the whole expense of replacing defective work and material during the time; and the references elsewhere in the contract on the subject of repairs should be read in the light of said guaranty, since they are intended to secure the enforcement of the stipulation against defective workmanship and materials. The conclusion is irresistible that the contract does not contemplate the making of ordinary repairs such as the act incorporating metropolitan cities relieves the abutting lotowner from making. Upon this branch of the case counsel for plaintiffs and appellants have cited, to support their position that the contract we are considering is void, the decisions in People, Hall, v. Maher, 56 Hun, 81; Brown v. Jenks, 98 Cal. 10, and Verdin v. St. Louis (Mo.) 27 S. W. 447. An examination of those cases will disclose that each was based upon a provision in the contract materially different from those in the one we have been considering, in that in those cases the stipulation relating to repairs was independent in character, covering usual repairs, and not intended merely as a guaranty of the faithful execution of the paving contract by the contractor. The proposition that the contract with Murphy is not rendered void by the provisions therein relating to repairs is sustained by the adjudications elsewhere. In Schenectady v. Union College, 66 Hun, 179, the stipulation of the paving contract there under consideration by the court was essentially the same as the one before us, and the court, in the opinion, says: "The provision to which objection was made reads as follows: 'The party of the second part hereby covenants and agrees that it will do all the work required by such ordinance and this contract in such good and substantial manner that no repairs thereto shall be required for the term of five years after its completion.' If the contract had stopped here, it would hardly be claimed that the contract went further than the ordinance and was anything more than a guaranty that the work should conform to the requirements of the ordinance, and no one would doubt the power of the common council to prescribe the quality of the work to be done by an ordinance; and yet, if the contract had stopped there, it can hardly be doubted that the contractor would be liable to the city to keep and make good to the city the conditions of the warranty that no repairs thereto shall be required in five years after its completion. The covenant, therefore, to keep in repair for five years is not an independent obligation, but only a guaranty of the quality of the work contracted to be done. In this respect we think it essentially different from the contract under consideration in People, Hall, v. Maher, 56 Hun, 81, and that this case does not come under the condemnation of that decision." The precise question was passed upon by the supreme court of New Jersey in an able opinion rendered in State, Wilson, v. Trenton, 60 N. J. L. 394. The court observed: "The first ground upon which it is urged that this contract should be declared invalid is that, by its terms, Montgomery is made to guarantee the endurance of the pavement for a period not less than five years from the date of its completion and acceptance by the city, and to maintain the pavement in good condition at the finished grade of the street at his own cost and expense during said period, and that, upon his failure to do so, the city is authorized to make such repairs as may become necessary, and deduct the cost thereof from such moneys as it may have in hand belonging to

of this would be a contract for repairs which would be unauthorized if the duty to repair rested upon the municipality at large.

IV. Single agreements for construction and repair.

The action of a city in letting a contract for the reconstruction of a street and for its maintenance together is unlawful where the cost of construction is to be assessed against the property owners, while the cost of maintenance is to be paid by the city, as in such case the lettings must necessarily be separate and upon different estimates. Verdin v. St. Louis, 131 Mo. 26.

And such a contract is invalid as to the part with reference to the maintenance, where it fails to specify the material to be used in such repairs and include an estimate of the cost of such maintenance, under a charter provision requiring such specification and estimate in an ordinance for a public work. Ibid.

And the fact that a contractor is required by his contract for the construction of a pavement to give bond for its maintenance for a period of years does not legalize a contract for both the construction and maintenance, as the construction of a street and its maintenance after construction are entirely different matters, having no immediate or necessary connection with each other. Ibid.
44 L. R. A.

But letting a contract for paving a street and one for maintaining it under one bid under a charter provision making property adjacent to a street chargeable with the cost of the constructed pavement, and providing that the costs of repairs are payable out of the general revenue of the city, is not subject to the objection that it gives the contractor and the city the opportunity by collusion to impose upon the property a part of the cost of maintenance in the absence of evidence tending to prove that the contract price for reconstruction was not fair and reasonable, where provision was made for separating the cost of construction and the cost of maintenance, and separate bids or estimates were required for each. Seaboard Nat. Bank v. Woesten (Mo.) 48 S. W. 939.

In the above case, the Verdin Case, 131 Mo. 26, supra, was distinguished in the fact that the evidence shows that the word "maintenance" as used in the ordinance and contract has not the same application as the word "repairs" used in the charter, the obligation to maintain as required by the ordinance being imposed as a mere guaranty of the perfection of the work when completed, and the duty to preserve from decay and ordinary use, and that the work of repairs required by the charter to be let to the lowest bidder is a restoration of a street already defective from use and decay. And it was also distinguished upon the ground the contractor. This provision of the contract, it is claimed, imposes upon the abutting owners, who are liable to assessment for the cost of this work in proportion to the benefit received by them therefrom, not only the burden of paying for the improvement, but also the cost of keeping it in repair for a period of five years after its completion. If this be the effect of the provision, it is clearly illegal, for, by the 87th section of the charter of the city of Trenton, 'after any street shall have once been paved, then the city shall take charge of and keep the same in repair at the general expense.' Pamph. Laws 1874, p. 376. We are referred to the following cases, which it is said support the prosecutors' contention: People, Hall, v. Maher, 66 Hun, 81; Verdin v. St. Louis, 131 Mo. 26; Brown v. Jenks, 98 Cal. 10; Excelsior Paving Co. v. Leach (Cal.) 34 Pac. 116; Fehler v. Gosnell, 99 Ky. 380; Boyd v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 456. The theory upon which these cases are decided is that when by the terms of the contract the contractor is required, not only to lay the pavement, but also to maintain and keep it in repair for a certain period after its completion, the abutting owners are necessarily required to pay a higher price by reason of the provision to maintain and keep in repair, and that a contract which throws upon abutting owners anything more than the burden of having the pavement well constructed in the outset is invalid, so far as they are concerned. The contract in each of the cases referred to differed, however, in an important particular from that now before us. In those cases the provision for maintaining or repairing was treated as an independent one, while in the one under consideration it is merely an appendant to the guaranty of the durability of the pavement. What the contract, in effect, says, is this: The contractor guarantees to put down a pavement which shall remain in good condition for at least five years. If it gets out of order during that period, the contractor must restore it at his own expense; and, if he fails to do so, the city may make the repairs, and retain the cost thereof out of the contract price. It does not require him to make all the repairs which shall become necessary during the period named, but only those which arise from lack of durability of the pavement. Certainly, it cannot, with reason, be contended that a provision in the contract requiring the contractor to guarantee the durability of his work for a reasonable period imposes upon the adjacent property owners the burden of keeping the street in repair. It is merely an added precaution for insuring good workmanship, and the use of good material. And if the contractor, notwithstanding the guaranty, failed to lay a durable pavement, it cannot be doubted that the city would have a right to recover from him, in a suit for breach of his guaranty, the cost of restoring the same to a good condition. It seems to me that the provision in the contract relating to the maintenance of the pavement is a mere method of enforcing the guaranty of the contractor by a speedier and less expensive method than by suit, and that it does not have the effect of imposing upon abutting owners any burden other than that of having the pavement well constructed at the outset. In the case of Schenectady v. Union College, 66 Hun, 179, a similar view was taken by the supreme court of New York to that here expressed in construing a contract like that now before us; and, although the judgment in that case was afterwards reversed by the court of appeals (144 N. Y. 241, 26 L. R. A. 614, it was on another ground altogether, nothing being said by the appellate tribunal which casts doubt upon the correctness of the construction put by the lower court on the contract in that case."

It is also insisted that the pavement in that it does not appear from the evidence in this case that the bid for construction was higher on account of the maximum bid fixed by the board for maintenance than it would have been for perfect work without the guaranty.

V. Separable agreements.

A provision in an ordinance for the improvement of a street requiring the contractor to give bond to perform the work in accordance with the agreement, and keep it in good repair for five years, if regarded as objectionable, will not invalidate the ordinance where it is complete in itself and detachable from the objectionable provision. Cole v. People, Barnswell, 161 Ill. 16.

And where an agreement in a paving contract to keep the street in repair for a designated number of years is not so interwoven with other provisions as to be inseparable and vitiate the whole, the contractor may recover except to the extent that the assessment is increased on account of the provision for repairs; and he will recover for the whole amount claimed where there is nothing to show that there has been an increase. Gosnell v. Louisville, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 719.

And where an ordinance and contract are made for the paving of a street, providing that the contractor shall keep the street in repair 44 L. R. A.

for five years after its completion at the expense of the lotowners, judgment against them for the actual cost of the construction, omitting the cost of repairs, may be rendered in an action by the contractors against them to recover on such contract, under Ky. Stat. § 2834, providing that no error in the proceedings of the general council shall exempt from payment after the work has been required, either by ordinance or contract, but the general council or the court in which the suit is pending may make all corrections, rules, and orders to do justice to all parties, and make the necessary corrections in apportionment warrants. Louisville v. Clark, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1265.

Such a provision in such a contract, which is not so interwoven with the contract as to be inseparable, will not invalidate the whole under that statute. The contractor is still entitled to recover except to the extent that assessments therefor have been increased on account of the provision for repairs, and where there is nothing to show that there has been an increase on that account a full recovery may be had. Fehler v. Gosnell, 99 Ky. 380.

But where a contract is made for the reconstruction of a street and its subsequent maintenance for a period of years, and the two charges for reconstruction and maintenance are so blended by the scheme of taxation adopted question was so worthless that it would be a fraud upon the property owners to compel them to pay the assessment. The evidence adduced on the trial on this issue, as well as to establish collusion between the contractor and the city authorities in the matter of the construction and approval of the work, is conflicting and irreconcilable. Suffice it to say that the lower court specially found that the material was furnished and used in the construction of the improvement in question in substantial conformity with the terms of the contract; that the repavement, after it had been finished, was accepted by the city engineer, the board of public works, and the city authorities; that in doing so they acted in the utmost good faith, without either fraud or collusion; and the bill of exceptions contains ample proof to repel all inference of fraud, and to establish that the pavement was constructed in conformity with the terms of the contract. In declining to disturb a finding of fact made upon conflicting testimony, we merely observe a well-settled rule, which has been frequently applied.

The final argument presented is that the work done by Murphy under the contract was not a repavement of Leavenworth street but was merely a repair of an existing pavement, and, therefore, the city was liable therefor, and it possessed no authority to impose a special assessment against the real estate of plaintiffs to pay the same. This contention is grounded upon the single fact that the concrete foundation of the former cedar-block pavement was utilized in making the improvement in controversy. The entire wearing surface of wood of the old pavement was removed, and replaced with vitrified brick, and the mere using of the old base of concrete did not constitute the work an "ordinary repair," within the meaning and contemplation of the statute.

The assessment assailed was made for the repavement of the street, and, the invalidity thereof not having been shown, the decree is accordingly affirmed.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

STATE of New Jersey, ex rel. Samuel K. WILSON, Plff. in Err.,
v.

Inhabitants of TRENTON et al.

(.....N. J.....)

*1. It is not unlawful for municipal authorities, contracting for paving a street, to embody in the same contract provisions binding the contractor to guarantee the durability of the pavement for five years, and to repave at a stated price all openings made in the street during the same time.

*Headnotes by DIXON, J.

that the valid charge for reconstruction cannot be definitely ascertained and severed from the invalid charge for repairs, the assessment for reconstruction cannot be enforced. Verdin v. St. Louis, 131 Mo. 28.

VI. Express statutory authority.

An ordinance and contract in pursuance thereof for the paving of a street are not invalid because they require that the work shall be executed with a guaranty to keep and maintain it in a state of perfect repair for a period of five years from and after the completion and acceptance of the same, under Mo. Laws 1889, p. 42, § 4902, which gives express authority for levying taxes for repairing streets, etc., as well as for grading, curbing, and paving. Morse v. West Port, 110 Mo. 502.

In the above case People, Hall, v. Maher, 56 Ill., 81, infra, II., was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the charter distinctly provided that the repairing should be charged against the city.

So, a contract for the construction of a street, containing a provision that the contractor should keep the curbing and guttering in good repair and in proper position for six months after the acceptance of the work, is not rendered invalid by such provision where the cost was a charge upon the abutting owners, and under the laws in force at the time the cost of repairs of curbing and guttering was chargeable against 44 L. R. A.

2. When a special assessment is levied for the pavement laid under such a contract, property owners may show that the price nominally charged for paving was really charged in part for the guaranty and the repaving, and thus may keep the assessment within the fair value of the paving itself, beyond which they are not chargeable.

3. The decision of municipal authorities, as to who, among several bidders, is the lowest, cannot, if resting on legal evidence, be reviewed in this court.

(May 16, 1898.)

ERROR to the Supreme Court to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an abutting property. Gibson v. Owens, 115 Mo. 258.

And requiring a guaranty from a contractor in a contract to pave a street, for the maintenance of the pavement constructed by him for a reasonable number of years, rests within the discretion of the mayor and assembly of the city in the exercise of sound business sagacity, under a charter conferring power upon them generally to pave or otherwise improve streets and provide for the payment of the cost thereof, and also to provide for cleaning and repairing the same. Barber-Asphalt Paving Co. v. Hesel, 76 Mo. App. 135.

In the above case, the Verdin Case, 131 Mo. 28, supra, II., was distinguished on the ground that it does not appear from the evidence that the bid for reconstruction was higher on account of a maximum bid fixed by the board of public improvements for maintenance than it would have been for perfect work without the bid for maintenance.

So, an assessment for a street improvement is not void because the contract under which the work to be paid for was done contained a provision requiring the contractor to keep the pavement and foundations in perfect repair for five years from the time of its completion, and providing that the compensation for such keeping in repair should be included in the contract price on the ground that it imposes on abutting property expenses for the repair of streets which should be payable out of the funds of the action brought to set aside a contract for the paving of Hamilton Avenue, in defendant City. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John H. Baekes, for plaintiff in error:

The contract adds an additional and unlawful burden upon the property owners by requiring the contractor to keep the street in repair for a term not less than five years after the completion of the contract.

The power of the city to "improve an owner out of his property" extends only to the charge for the costs of the original construction.

People, Hall, v. Maher, 56 Hun, 81; Verdin v. St. Louis, 131 Mo. 26; Brown v. Jenks, 98 Cal. 10; Excelsior Paving Co. v. Leach (Cal.) 34 Pac. 116; Fehler v. Gosnell, 99 Ky. 380; Boyd v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 456.

The contract was not awarded to the lowest bidder.

The proposals were referred to the street committee of council, who, without offering to receive proof of the lowest bidder's statutory qualifications, and without an examination into the facts, and without a semi-judicial consideration, recommended to council, without assigning a reason therefor, to award the contract to one not the lowest bidder.

This action was unreasonable, arbitrary, and in violation of the charter.

State, Shaw, v. Trenton, 49 N. J. L. 339.

The specifications are uncertain in that they do not state definitely the kind of asphaltum required.

State, Van Reipen, v. Jersey City, 58 N. J. L. 262.

The specifications are uncertain in that they do not definitely state the period during which the work was to be guaranteed.

State, Shaw, v. Trenton, 49 N. J. L. 339.

Messrs. John Bellstab and George W. Macpherson for defendants in error.

Dixon, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in error, owning land on city at large, where under the charter the city council was authorized to raise a sum by taxation to repair city streets, one half of which was to be expended on paving streets, and it does not appear that the common council would not have the right to provide that for making all other and necessary repairs to pave streets requiring more than such one half, the expense should be assessed upon the property benefited. Gilmore v. Utica, 131 N. Y. 27.

In the above case, People, Hall, v. Maher, 56 Hun, 81, supra, II., was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the law provided that the city should make all repairs to pavements in streets paved with a certain kind of pavement, and that the language was not the same nor necessarily of the same import.

And a guaranty in a paving contract to maintain at grade and surface in good order the work of reconstruction for a period of nine years commencing one year after the work of reconstruction is completed and accepted, and to make all repairs necessary within that time from any imperfection in such work or materials, is not prohibited by a charter provision that the assembly shall have no power directly

Hamilton avenue, in the city of Trenton, sued out a writ of certiorari to set aside a contract which the city had made for paving that avenue with Trinidad Lake asphaltum. The supreme court having adjudged the contract legal, he has brought the matter to this court by writ of error.

The first reason urged by counsel for the plaintiff for holding the contract unlawful is that, besides requiring the contractor to lay a good pavement, it binds him to guarantee the durability of the pavement for five years, and during that period to maintain the pavement in good condition, and also binds him to repave, at a price stated, all openings made in the street during the same time. The effect of these provisions, it is argued, has been to enhance the price nominally charged for laying a good pavement, by making it cover the cost of maintenance and the cost of repaving beyond the stated price, which is said to be inadequate, and thus will be to increase the assessment to be levied upon the property owners, who are legally assessable for laying the pavement, but not for maintaining or relaying it. This contention, we think, ignores the principle on which assessments for municipal improvements are levied in this state. Property owners are not chargeable with the price of such improvements, but only with an equivalent for the special benefits they derive therefrom. Such an equivalent cannot exceed the reasonable value of the improvement, and hence the municipality itself, not the assessable property owners, must bear the excess of price beyond fair cost. If, therefore, the commissioners, who levy an assessment for this improvement, charge upon the property owners anything beyond the fair cost of laying a good pavement, their assessment will to that extent be illegal. The same evidence which would now show that the nominal price for paving includes compensation for the guaranty and for repaving will be then available for the same purpose, and, if produced, will result in reducing the assessment to such sum as would have secured a proper pavement with-to contract for any public work or improvements or repairs thereof contemplated by such charter, or to fix the price or rate therefore, but the board of public improvements shall in all cases, except of necessary repairs, requiring prompt action, prepare and submit to the assembly estimates of costs of any proposed work, and under direction of an ordinance shall advertise for bids and let out said work by contract to the lowest bidder. Seaboard Nat. Bank v. Woesten (Mo.) 48 S. W. 930.

In the above case, it was said that the Ullman Case, 137 Mo. 543, supra, III., was distinguishable from it in that the landowner is not chargeable with the cost of maintenance.

A bond required of a contractor for the paving of a street, conditioned to keep the street so improved in thorough repair for the term of five years from the completion of the contract, however, is unauthorized by Cal. act March 18, 1885, § 2, authorizing the city council to contract for different kinds of street work, the work authorized being such as is necessary to make and complete a street or to repair existing defects. Brown v. Jenks, 98 Cal. 10.

F. H. B.

out the added stipulations. The plaintiff's complaint, if well founded in fact, must be reserved until the assessment is levied.

This point being thus decided, we see no reason for denying the power of the municipal authorities to include in the same contract the three stipulations above mentioned. The preparation and laying of asphaltum as a pavement require special skill, and the quality of the pavement cannot well be ascertained by municipal authorities without the test of time. It is therefore reasonable that those who lay such pavement should submit it to this test in order to insure its goodness. And since the contractors who engage in this kind of work obtain their crude asphaltum from different sources, and subject it to various processes of preparation, there is a manifest fitness in providing that those who lay the original pavement should relay it whenever openings are made, so that uniformity of work and materials may be secured. It thus appears that the guaranty of durability and the stipulation for repaving are but incidents of the principal object of the bargain, dictated by prudence, and therefore rightly included with it in a single contract.

Another contention of the plaintiff is that the contract was not awarded to the lowest bidder, as section 107 of the city charter, with some reservations, requires. It appears from the evidence in the case that the contract was awarded to the person whom the city authorities, taking into consideration all the provisions of the agreement, found to be the lowest bidder. This determination of fact the supreme court did not overturn, and, on examining the testimony, we cannot say that it is without legal support. The question who was the lowest bidder was primarily submitted by the law to the city authorities, and their decision must stand until legally reversed. On writ of error this court does not interfere with lawful conclusions on disputed questions of fact, and therefore we must accept it as settled that this contract was awarded to the lowest bidder. Hence we need not consider under what circumstances a contract may be given to one who is not the lowest bidder.

With regard to the other objection, that the specifications on which bids were invited were uncertain, we think the specifications are reasonably definite, in view of the desirability of competition among the various pavements in use.

The judgment of the Supreme Court is affirmed.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

C. Colket WILSON and Wife

v.

Joseph W. ANDERSON et al., Appts.

(186 Pa. 531.)

1. A trust deed prompted by intemperate and improvident habits of the grantor, creating a trust to pay the income to him during life and at his death to convey to certain persons, without reserving any power of revocation, makes an irrevocable trust.
2. An intent to revoke a trust created by deed is not shown by a will which does not mention it but revokes "all other wills," where the testator has for years treated the deed as in full force, and has other real and personal estate not covered by the deed on which the will operates.
3. Loose declarations of a grantor, made twenty years after the date of a deed, cannot be proved to impeach it.

(July 21, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Montgomery County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to enforce rights under an alleged deed of trust. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. Whittaker Thompson and N. H. Larzelere, for appellants:

The deed of trust of 1868 was in effect a will so far as the provisions taking effect after the grantor's death were concerned, and as such was duly revoked at the grantor's death by the will of 1877.

Whatever the form of the instrument, if it vests no present interest, but only appoints what is to be done after the death of the maker, it is a testamentary instrument. Turner v. Scott, 51 Pa. 126; Frew v. Clarke, 80 Pa. 170; Wilson v. Van Leer, 103 Pa. 600; Tozer v. Jackson, 164 Pa. 373; Frederick's Appeal, 52 Pa. 338, 91 Am. Dec. 159; Nace v. Boyer, 30 Pa. 99; Rife's Appeal, 110 Pa. 232.

There is a distinction between the doctrine in Frederick's Appeal and those cases where a present beneficial interest is given to third persons, and it will be found that in no case in which the instrument was parallel with that of the case in hand, was it doubted that such an instrument was testamentary.

Rick's Appeal, 105 Pa. 528; Mack's Appeal, 68 Pa. 231; Ritter's Appeal, 59 Pa. 9; Fellows's Appeal, 93 Pa. 470; Merriman v. Munson, 134 Pa. 114; Neal v. Black, 177 Pa. 83, 34 L. R. A. 707; Reidy v. Small, 154 Pa. 505, 20 L. R. A. 362; Ashhurst's Appeal, 77 Pa. 464; Ash's Appeal, 50 Pa. 500; Wilson v. Van Leer, 103 Pa. 601; Cable v. Cable, 146 Pa. 451; Tozer v. Jackson, 164 Pa. 373; Frew v. Clarke, 80 Pa. 170; Wolford v. Morgenthal, 91 Pa. 30; Rife's Appeal, 110 Pa. 232; Dreisbach v. Serfass, 126 Pa. 32, 3 L. R. A. 836; Scott v. Scott, 70 Pa. 244; Jordan v. McClure, 85 Pa. 495; Meck's Appeal, 97 Pa. 313.

The testator explicitly revoked all wills

NOTE.—As to revocability of voluntary trust, see note to Ewing v. Jones (Ind.) 15 L. R. A. 75; Reidy v. Small (Pa.) 20 L. R. A. 363; and Neal v. Black (Pa.) 34 L. R. A. 707. 44 L. R. A.

theretofore made by him, and if the conveyance of 1868 was a will it would be included in those general terms.

Hancock's Appeal, 112 Pa. 532; Ellis's Appeal, 22 W. N. C. 135; Weidman's Appeal, 42 Phila. Leg. Int. 338; Teacle's Estate, 153 Pa. 219; Price v. Maxwell, 28 Pa. 23; 1 Jarman, Wills, 153-333.

Dr. Anderson's treatment of the will would have no bearing whatever on the intent of the testator.

Magee's Estate, 30 W. N. C. 478.

Dr. Joseph W. Anderson and Corona Anderson were competent witnesses.

Karns v. Tanner, 66 Pa. 297; Bowen v. Goranflo, 73 Pa. 357; Greenawalt v. McCauley, 85 Pa. 352; King v. Humphreys, 138 Pa. 310; Crothers v. Crothers, 149 Pa. 201; Van Horne v. Clark, 126 Pa. 411; Frew v. Clarke, 80 Pa. 170; Brose's Estate, 155 Pa. 619; Waltman v. Herdic, 90 Pa. 459; Royer v. Ephrata, 171 Pa. 429.

The declarations of the settlor, Ultimus Adjutor Anderson, as to the circumstances under which he made the deed of trust and its purposes, and the advice under which he was acting, are clearly evidence.

Smith v. Loafman, 145 Pa. 628; Rice v. Rice, 127 Pa. 181; Chess v. Chess, 1 Penn. & W. 32, 21 Am. Dec. 350; Irish v. Smith, 8 Serg. & R. 573, 11 Am. Dec. 648; Wilkinson v. Pearson, 23 Pa. 117.

Messrs. Montgomery Evans and Louis M. Childs for appellees.

Dean, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In 1858 Dr. James Anderson died, leaving to survive him a widow, who was his second wife, and children by her as follows: Joseph W. Anderson, John F., A. Jackson, Ultimus Adjutor, and Corona B. By his last will he devised all his land in Montgomery county, consisting of about 100 acres at what is now Ardmore, in that county, with the personal property on it, to his widow, for life, and at her death to his two sons, John F. and Ultimus Adjutor. All his other estate, which was considerable, was given in equal shares to all his children. The widow declined to take under the will, and after some litigation a family settlement was had, by which the Ardmore land passed to John F. and Ultimus Adjutor, subject to a dower interest of one third to their mother for life. Afterwards, in 1866, John F. Anderson conveyed his interest in the Ardmore tract to his brother Dr. Joseph W. Anderson. On April 8, 1868, Ultimus Adjutor conveyed his undivided half to his brother in trust as follows: (1) Joseph to collect the income, and pay it over, less expenses, to the grantor, during his lifetime. (2) After the death of the grantor, to convey the land to his brothers and sisters of the whole blood, or, if any were deceased, then to their descendants, in equal shares, per stirpes. (3) The trustee to convey during the life of the grantor, with his written consent, any part or the whole of the land; the proceeds of such sales to be invested or held for the purposes of the trust. The deed contained no power of revocation. Ultimus Adjutor did not marry. With his brother Joseph and his sister, Corona, he lived on the property until his death, December 28, 1895. His brother managed the property in the meantime, and, so far as appears, kept account of, and paid over, the income. Sales were made also of small parts of the land in lots by the trustee, and Ultimus Adjutor signified his approval by formally, in writing, assenting to the conveyances. He had other property, outside the land,—of the value, probably, of $5,000 to $7,000. At his death the land had greatly appreciated in value, and was worth then about 150,000. About nine years after the date of the trust deed (in February, 1877), Ultimus Adjutor formally executed a will, in which, after directing payment of his debts and funeral expenses, he devised and bequeathed all the rest and residue of his estate to his brother Joseph W., his trustee in the deed, and to his sister, Corona, and appointed them his executors; further, by express words, revoked all former wills by him theretofore made. The will was proved, and letters thereon issued, after the death of testator. About a year afterwards, on petition of this plaintiff, Mrs. Wilson, a daughter of A. J. Anderson, one of the beneficiaries of the trust, averring the liability of Joseph W. to account as trustee up until the death of Ultimus Adjutor, a citation was issued to him to file his account. He answered by admitting his accountability, but prayed for time, and afterwards did file his account as trustee up until 1890. Not long after, Mrs. Wilson filed this bill against Joseph W., the trustee, and Corona Anderson; averring the trust deed, the death of her father and John F. Anderson, and praying for partition. The defendants filed an answer admitting the execution of the trust deed, but averring that it was made by Ultimus Adjutor at the suggestion of A. J. Anderson, who had neglected to advise him of the importance of inserting a power of revocation, and that the grantor never had surrendered possession or power over the property to the trustee, the latter being a mere agent for his brother; then averred that the will revoked the deed, and that no estate passed to plaintiff by reason of the provisions of the latter, but that the entire interest in the land passed by the will to defendants. This constituted, in substance, the issue between the parties. After full hearing and consideration of all the evidence the court below concluded that the deed was made with a full knowledge of its effect, and was a conveyance in the nature of a spendthrift trust, irrevocable, and not a testamentary disposition of the settlor's property; that by the will there was no intention to revoke the prior deed, even if the latter was testamentary. Two very material facts in aid of this construction of the papers are found by the court; First, that the deed was prompted by intemperate and improvident habits of the grantor at the date of it, when he was a young man, only twenty-six years of age, which habits continued without reformation until his death, twenty-eight years afterwards; second, that at the dates of both deed and will he was possessed of very considerable property, both real and personal, on which the will would operate without affecting the grant specified in the deed. The appellants allege manifest error in both these findings of fact. But we think taking into view the other evidence in the case, with the testimony of Dr. Joseph W. Anderson, one of the respondents, it is sufficient to establish both findings. These being facts, the only question remaining, under the assignments of error, is, Were the legal conclusions warranted? On the answer to this interrogatory hinges appellants' case.

The deed contains no power of revocation. By its terms, the legal estate at once vested in the trustee, with a power of alienation, subject to the approval of the settlor, but no power to convey by the settlor himself was reserved. Nor, in case of conveyance of the whole or any part of the land, were the proceeds to pass to the control of the grantor. On the contrary, by its express terms the subject of the trust was still to remain in the hands of the trustee for investment and reinvestment to abide the purpose of the trust. There was an absolute vesting of the equitable estate in his brothers and sister, subject only to his life enjoyment of the income. This estate did not depend on a contingency,—something which might or might not happen. The commencement of the period of enjoyment was uncertain only because, while the fact of his death was certain, the date of it was not. A present equitable title vested in the beneficiaries immediately, which in the future would merge with the legal title, which latter was to be conveyed to them on the grantor's death. Every word in the deed is an apt one, as expressing a present intention to irrevocably convey a present estate to be enjoyed in the future. There is no ambulatory quality in a deed. The postponement of enjoyment does not make the instrument ambulatory, when such postponement is in express terms, and does not result from the nature of the instrument. A will is ambulatory, revocable, subject to change, because it is a will, and takes effect only at death of testator. A deed takes effect when delivered to the grantee. And the estate granted vests at once in the beneficiaries, in the absence of negative words, even if the period of enjoyment be postponed. In this case the grantor could have reserved a power of revocation, but he did not. Considering the absence of this power in connection with the motive which prompted the execution of the deed, and the language of it, we think the court was clearly right in its conclusion that the instrument was an irrevocable deed, and intended to be such by the grantor. The case relied on by the appellant as determining that this deed should be construed a will (Frederick's Appeal, 52 Pa. 338, 91 Am. Dec. 159) does not by any means hold that a deed of trust, reserving to the grantor the income of the trust estate for life, and postponing until his death the enjoyment by the beneficiaries of the principal, is necessarily testamentary, without regard to the manifest intent of the grantor. The decision in that case proceeds wholly upon an ascertainment of the intention of the testator from the instrument itself. After a careful analysis of the expressed purpose, in view of the surroundings, and the fact that during his lifetime the grantor had, by a second formal deed, revoked the first, a subsequent testamentary disposition was sustained. The deed was not made to preserve the estate of the grantor from depletion by vicious habits. From his express language, it was made for his own convenience merely. He was old and feeble, and, in the preamble to the deed, declares that it is made to exempt him from the vexation of management and sales of his property to pay debts. Therefore he appoints three trustees, who are to make sales of his land, apply the money received to his debts, account to him annually, and any balance remaining in their hands is to be securely invested; the grantor to be maintained therefrom during his life, and any balance remaining at his death to be divided equally among his children. The deed was not intended by the grantor to be irrevocable. That there would be any estate for the children at the grantor's death was altogether uncertain; for that depended on the value of the estate, amount of his debts, the expenses of administration, and the cost of his support during the remainder of his life. Chief Justice Woodward, who rendered the opinion, expressly says he declines to consider the authorities bearing on the subject of voluntary trusts, because the deed was made for the grantor's personal convenience merely, and therefore revocable. He follows this with a remark that "a disposition of property, to take effect after the grantor's death, is testamentary, and therefore revocable." But this was unnecessary in the disposition of the case, for it was the very subject (that is, whether it was a testamentary disposition of the property, or an irrevocable trust deed) which he had declined to discuss or consider in the former part of his opinion. A careful reading of the opinion will show that the judgment was based on the fact that the deed was made wholly for the convenience of the grantor, in that it relieved him from the management of his estate. Besides, there was nothing in the deed itself, or in the circumstances attending its execution, manifesting an intention that it should be irrevocable. On its peculiar facts, that case stands by itself. It is not authority, as argued by appellants, for the sweeping proposition that every voluntary trust conveyance of property, which reserves to the grantor a life interest, with a direction to convey to others the principal of the estate at his death, is a testamentary instrument, and therefore revocable by a subsequent will. In Rick's Appeal, 105 Pa. 528, also cited by appellants, the decision is rested on the ground that the deed was obtained by undue solicitation from an aged woman on the part of the beneficiary, and was actually improvident. In Rife's Appeal, 110 Pa. 232, also cited by appellants, the intent of the testator that the instrument, in form a deed, should constitute his will, in case he made none other, is manifested by his language in the deed. The decision in Chestnut Street Nat. Bank v. Fidelity Ins., Trust & S. D. Co. 186 Pa. 333, is put upon the ground that testatrix intended the instrument to be revocable, and, if she had been advised of its importance, would have inserted a power of revocation.

We do not favor an extension of the doctrine of Frederick's Appeal, 52 Pa. 338, 91 Am. Dec. 159,—an exceptional case,—to cases not clearly within it on their facts. The general rule, commencing with Reese v. Ruth, 13 Serg. & R. 435, and adhered to through all the subsequent cases, of voluntary deeds of trust intended to be irrevocable by the grantor, is the one within which falls this case. In the case last cited, the grantor, because of intemperate habits, conveyed all her property to trustees, reserving to herself such comfortable support therefrom during life as the trustees should judge proper; to be transferred after her decease to such parties as she might by will appoint, and, in default of appointment, to such persons as by law were entitled thereto. Alleging failure on part of trustees to support her, she sought to annul the deed. This court held she could not avoid the deed, unless fraudulently procured; nevertheless holding that she could recover for her support. This was followed by Greenfield's Estate, 14 Pa. 489. There an absolute deed was accompanied by a declaration of trust on part of the grantees, that they held the same to apply the income as directed by the grantor during her life, and at her death to apply proceeds of the trust property to payment of certain legacies and annuities. The trustees took charge of the estate under the trust, and managed it from the date of the deed (December 15, 1834) until her death, on July 9, 1845. About two years before her death, she executed a will making a different disposition of her property than provided in the trust, of which will she appointed an executor, who filed bill against the trustees to have the trust declared void,—among other complaints, alleging the deed and declaration of trust constituted a testamentary disposition of her estate, which was revoked by the subsequent formal will. The case was heard by Gibson, Ch. J., at visi prius, who as to this averment, speaks thus: "As to its being in fact a testamentary act, and therefore revocable, the argument is scarce worth an answer. 'Tis true a deed containing a posthumous disposition has been proved as a will; but here the trust was not entirely posthumous, for the legal title was vested in the trustees, in order to let them manage the property in her lifetime, and to pay as much of the produce as she should desire into her hands. There was nothing testamentary in that. But, according to all the proofs, the very object of resorting to a trust deed was to make disposition unalterable. And, if the owner of property cannot tie up his hands in regard to it by such an instrument, he cannot do it at all." On appeal to this court, these remarks were approved, and it was said there was not "the slightest pretense for saying the settlement must be accepted as a testamentary disposition." This case has been followed in a large number of cases since, down to Knowlson v. Fleming, 165 Pa. 10. The general rule is that, if the intention of the grantor at the time he delivered the deed was to part with the legal title, the trust will be enforced in favor of the beneficiaries, even though their enjoyment of the estate is postponed until the death of their benefactor. Equity, because of exceptional facts, in rare cases, has revoked the trust, or held it revocable by the grantor, because plainly a testamentary instrument; but the general rule has remained without change. But not only is this instrument, by its terms and purpose, not revocable by a subsequent will, but it is manifest the grantor never intended to revoke it. After its execution, in 1869, for a period of nine years both grantor and trustee acted under it, assuming it was a deed. Then, on 7th of February, 1877, the grantor made a will, in which he devises and bequeathes, after payment of debts and funeral expenses, all the rest and residue of his estate to these two defendants, and declares, "I hereby revoke all other wills at any time by me heretofore made." Plainly, by his conduct, he had not considered the first instrument a will, but a deed; but he also indicates, by the absence of any mention of it, an absence of intention to revoke it. But, still further, he and his trustee, after this alleged revocation, go on for eighteen years, until the grantor's death, acting under this revoked deed, and treating it as in full force. Even after his death, when cited, the trustee files his account as if the trust continued in existence up until the grantor's death. An intention not to revoke could not have been manifested by more significant conduct. But as further indicating that the grantor intended the deed and will as distinct and separate instruments, operating on different property, the court, on ample evidence, has found as a fact that the grantor was possessed of both real and personal estate not covered by the deed to the value of between $5,000 and $7,000. Hence, in view of all the facts, and the expressions of both instruments, is it not obvious that he intended the will not to revoke the deed which had disposed of the particular land described in it, but to operate only on that property which was still in his power? We think, in any impartial view of the testimony and the law, the decree of the learned judge of the court below was right.

As to the assignments of error covering the rejection of testimony of Joseph W. Anderson and his sister, Corona: As concerns that of Joseph, the objection was withdrawn, and the testimony considered by the court. The testimony of Corona, without regard to her competency or incompetency as a witness, was inadmissible, because it consisted of loose declarations of the grantor made twenty years after the date of the deed, and tending to impeach it. Such testimony is inadmissible.

All the assignments of error are overruled, and the decree affirmed, at costs of appellants.

Susan KEATOR et al.

v.

SCRANTON TRACTION COMPANY, Appt.

(191 Pa. 102.)

1. The breaking of a trolley pole while being manipulated in the usual way to reverse the direction of the car imposes upon the carrier the burden of proving its lack of negligence in an action by a passenger injured by the accident.
2. A woman with a transfer ticket, approaching a street car to get on, when she is struck by a piece of the trolley pole, which breaks while the motorman is trying to change it to the other end of the car, is a passenger to whom the high degree of care which a common carrier owes to passengers is due.

(April 24, 1899.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Lackawanna County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Edward N. Willard, Everett Warren, and Henry A. Knapp for appellant.

Mr. S. B. Price, for appellees:

The appellee was a passenger.

Hutchinson, Carr. § 559, p. 637, § 560, p. 638, 2d ed. § 561; Keokuk Northern Line Packet Co. v. True, 88 Ill. 608; Patterson, Railway Accident Law, § 220, p. 214.

Dean, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant operates two lines of electric passenger cars running out from the city of Scranton,—one north, the other south. The terminus of the one running north was at the corner of Penn and Lackawanna avenues; of that running south, in front of the Wyoming House, a block distant. The company provided a continuous passage on both lines by transfer tickets. On August 30, 1894, Susan Keator, plaintiff, got upon a car of the north line to go to Mountain Lake, a pleasure resort on the south line. She paid her fare, and, when the car stopped at the corner of Penn and Lackawanna avenues, got off. Before she left the car, the conductor gave her a transfer ticket, which read: "Good upon next south-side car within thirty minutes from nine o'clock." She then walked to the starting point of the south-side car, in front of the Wyoming House. While standing on the pavement, the trolley car pulled up, and stopped. As it would proceed to its destination in an opposite direction, the motorman attempted to change the trolley pole to the other end of the car. In doing so it broke, and a piece of it struck Mrs. Keator on the head and shoulder, inflicting a severe injury. When struck, she had moved from the pavement to a point midway between the curb and car. The distance from car to curb was about 10 feet. At the time, the seats had been reversed in the car, which was an open one, and she was approaching it to get on. On the trial in the court below, two questions arose,—one of law for the court, and one of fact for the jury. On the undisputed facts, was plaintiff, at the time of the injury, in a legal sense, a passenger on defendant's road? If so, then she was entitled to recover, for defendant adduced no evidence of that high degree of care such as is incumbent on a common carrier of passengers when one has been injured by any of the machinery or attachments of the car or other vehicle in which the passenger is being transported. If she was not a passenger, then did the company exercise that ordinary care in manipulating its machinery which it owed to others occupying and using a common highway? The court decided the first question in favor of plaintiff, but, to save a second trial if such ruling should be error, it submitted the evidence bearing on the second question to the jury, directing them to make a special finding as to that branch of the case. On this question, the jury answered that defendant had not exercised ordinary care in changing the trolley: consequently there was a finding for plaintiff on both grounds. Her damages were assessed at $4,670.83. Afterwards, in a very full opinion filed, the court overruled a motion for a new trial, and entered judgment on the verdict.

The case turns here on whether the court below was correct in holding, on the undisputed facts, that plaintiff, at the time she received the injury, was a passenger. We think grave injustice might have been done defendant by the method of trial, if its liability had depended on the answer of the jury to the second question. The court pointedly decided, and explicitly announced, as matter of law, that defendant owed to plaintiff, as a passenger, extraordinary care, and then submitted to them the evidence, to determine whether it had exercised towards her, as a traveler on the highway, ordinary care. A jury of lawyers would doubtless have clearly perceived the distinction so perspicuously pointed out by the court; but, with the large majority of laymen, it would not be comprehended, and, if comprehended, would in many cases not be heeded. In considering the second question, the jury would start with the conviction that defendant had violated its lawful duty to its own passenger, and probably, therefore, had neglected a less rigorous one to the general public. In the face of the law, as declared by the court on the first question, a corporation's chance for a favorable verdict on the second was a very remote one with the ordinary jury. We would hesitate to sustain the court's method of reaching a verdict, however commendable the motive, if the correctness of the judgment depended on the jury's answer to the second question. Defendant was entitled, in fairness, to an answer on the second from a jury unprejudiced by a decision against it on the first.

NOTE.—On the question when a person intending to enter a vehicle becomes a passenger, see note to Webster v. Fitchburg R. Co. (Mass.) 24 L. R. A. 521; also Wood v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Pa.) 35 L. R. A. 109; Western & A. R. Co. 44 L. R. A.

v. Vails (Ga.) 85 L. R. A. 655; Illinois C. R. Co. v. O'Keefe (Ill.) 39 L. R. A. 148; Young v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (Mass.) 41 L. R. A. 193.

But, taking the undisputed facts, was the plaintiff's relation to defendant, at the time of the injury, that of a passenger? If so, then the burden was on defendant to show it had exercised a high degree of care towards her because of that relation. It offered no evidence as to the strength of the trolley pole,—whether it had been subject to inspection at any time, whether age and constant use had destroyed the tenacity of its fiber, or even whether it was ever safe for its purpose. The fact stood out, undisputed, that, in manipulating the pole in the usual way, it broke, and injured plaintiff. Unquestionably, defendant failed in its duty to her, if she was a passenger. It must be conceded, we think, that the transfer ticket, on its face, was an undertaking to carry her from the point where the car started, in front of the Wyoming House, to her destination on the south-side line. She was not a passenger while on the sidewalk going from one point to the other. Thus far the construction of the carrier's contract, from the undisputed circumstances and the ticket, is palpable. When did the obligation of the contract end with regard to her at this interval? It must be borne in mind, as so clearly pointed out by the learned judge of the court below, that the injury to her was from a defect in an indispensable attachment of the very vehicle in which defendant had undertaken to carry her. It was not a side-tracked car, or an unused one, which she had no right to get on, but, in the common phrase, it was "her car," that had been provided by defendant to carry her to her destination, which caused the injury. There is no definition of the duty of defendant to plaintiff which fits the facts of this case. That cited and relied on by appellant (1 Fetter, Carr. Pass. p. 605, § 233) applies to a different state of facts. The author says: "One who steps from a street car to the street ceases to be a passenger when he alights. The street is in no sense a passenger station, for the safety of which the street railway is responsible. When a passenger steps from the car upon the street, he becomes a traveler upon the highway, and terminates his relations and rights as a passenger, and the railway company is not responsible to him as a carrier for the condition of the street, or for his safe passage from the car to the sidewalk." And, again, on page 598, § 229, of the same book: "The special duty of a carrier to exercise a high degree of care begins only when, by coming upon his premises, or in the act of entering his vehicle, the actual relation of the passenger to carrier is assumed." The cases cited by the author amply sustain the text, but 44 L. R. A.

not one of them is a case where the passenger was injured by a defective attachment to the vehicle from which the passenger alighted or which he was about to enter. Unquestionably, the carrier is not answerable for the condition of the highway on which the passenger alights, or from which he stands or steps before entering the car; nor is it answerable for the conduct of third persons who, by neglect, cause injury in such situation to the passenger. But, in the case of these particular conveyances,—electric cars,—necessarily, and immediately on the car stopping at the end of the route, the motorman proceeds to reverse the trolley. Ordinarily, this is attended with no danger to anyone. The act is performed while some of the passengers have alighted and are on the sidewalk, out of reach of the trolley pole, some are between the curb and the car, and probably some yet in the car. Can it be argued with any plausibility that, in changing the trolley pole, the carrier owes no duty to its passengers who are not out of reach of danger from a part of the very vehicle in which they have been carried. Clearly the duty to the passenger, under such circumstances, with that kind of vehicle, does not end the moment the passenger's foot touches the street. And so with the next starting car. She has traversed the sidewalk, and is on the pavement in front of the Wyoming House; the car moves up to the end of the line in front of her, and stops; she steps outside the curb, and moves towards it; the seats are being reversed; two or three passengers are already in the car; when within 4 or 5 feet of it, she is struck by the broken pole, which of necessity is being changed. Why is she within reach of this peril? She is not a traveler on the highway, is not a resident who desires to cross the street, is not a mere spectator who, from curiosity or idleness, stands in that situation with reference to the car. She is there because, under the stipulations of the contract then in her possession, she has a right to take passage on that particular car at that point. In no sense is she one of the general public on the highway. She is at that point, at that particular juncture, because she could not receive the consideration of her contract, a passage to Mountain Lake, if she were anywhere else. If it were not for her contract, she would not be there at all. Surely, in such situation, under such circumstances, the carrier's duty to her was what it owed to a passenger,—as much so as if her injury had been caused by a rotten step on the car. When she came within reach of the vehicle provided for her transportation, the carrier's duty was that she should not be injured by the vehicle, if the highest degree of care could prevent it. Such care appellant was bound to show affirmatively. It did not attempt to show it. Therefore it is answerable in damages for her injury.

The judgment is affirmed.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

Harry WISE et al., Pliffs. in Err.,
v.

L. C. MORGAN Admr., etc., of Ella Morgan, Deceased.

(.....Tenn.....)

1. Questions made on a demurrer need not be embodied in a motion for a new trial in order to be saved for appeal.
2. Negligence in failing to put on a bottle a label marked "Poison" is the proximate cause of the death of an irresponsible child who gets the bottle from the mantel where its mother has left it, not knowing of its dangerous character, and drinks the contents.
3. The duty to put a label containing the word "Poison" on every poisonous liquid or substance, which is imposed on druggists by Shannon's Code, § 6745, does not extend to medicines compounded upon the prescription of a physician, though they contain poison.

(October 1, 1898.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Hamilton County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to hold defendants responsible for the death of plaintiff's intestate because of their failure to label a prescription which they put up as poison by reason of which it was left where it was obtained and drank by plaintiff's intestate causing her death. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Pritchard & Sizer, for plaintiffs in error:

It is not every result of a wrongful act that will give a right of action against the wrongdoer. To give such right of action it must appear, (1) that the injury was the natural consequence of the wrongful act, and (2) that the independent act of a third party has not interrupted the chain of causation set in motion by the wrongful act.

Sedgw. Damages, pp. 47-53.

In the present case neither of these conditions exists.

Consequences that by some unusual and extraordinary accident follow the doing of the wrongful or negligent act cannot be the ground of recovery.

Jackson v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 13 Lea, 491, 49 Am. Rep. 663.

In each of the cases where it has been held that the druggist was liable for negligence he was held liable for the consequences that naturally followed from his negligent mistake.

McOubbin v. Hastings, 27 La. Ann. 713; Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 455; Norton v. Sewall, 106 Mass. 143, 8 Am. Rep. 298; Brown v. Marshall, 47 Mich. 576, 41 Am. Rep. 728; George v. Skivington, L. R. 5 Exch. 1.

NOTE.—As to negligence in sale of drugs, see note to Craft v. Parker (Mich.) 21 L. R. A. 139; also Meyer v. King (Miss.) 35 L. R. A. 474.
44 L. R. A.

One who does a negligent act is not responsible for consequences that do not naturally or probably follow such an act.

Davidson v. Nichols, 11 Allen, 514; Poland v. Earhart, 70 Iowa, 285; Wood v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 177 Pa. 306, 35 L. R. A. 199; Meyer v. King, 72 Miss. 1, 35 L. R. A. 474; Mathiason v. Mayer, 90 Mo. 585; Phillips v. Dickerson, 85 Ill. 11, 28 Am. Rep. 607; Enoch v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 145 Ind. 635; Henderson v. Dade Coal Co. 100 Ga. 568, 40 L. R. A. 95; Coley v. Statesville, 121 N. C. 301.

In the absence of a provision making it so, a failure to comply with a statutory requirement is not negligence per se, but simply evidence tending to establish negligence.

16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 420 et seq.

Mr. William T. Murray, for defendant in error:

Section 4830, Code 1858, provides: "Any person who sells and delivers any poisonous substances, without having the word 'Poison' written or printed on the label attached to the vial, box, or parcel in which the same is sold, shall, on conviction, be fined not less than twenty or more than one hundred dollars."

Chapter 4, p. 14, act of 1870, 2d Sess., provides: "An Act to Preserve Life and Protect Property: § 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the state of Tennessee, that any person who sells or delivers any poisonous liquid or substance, in addition to having the word 'Poison' printed or written on the label thereof as now required by law, shall note in a book kept by such person for that purpose the name of the person to whom such poison was delivered, the date of delivery, and the kind and amount of such poison so delivered, and shall keep such book open for public inspection. § 2. Be it further enacted, That any person violating the provisions of this act shall on conviction be fined not less than twenty nor more than one hundred dollars; Provided, that the provisions of this act shall not apply to the prescriptions of regular practising physicians."

The act of 1870 was properly carried into T. & S. Code as § 4830 "a," and § 4830 "b."

In Mill. & V. Code the compilers correctly quote the original section from the Code of 1858, the same being carried into this Code as § 5634. They then correctly set out the 1st section of the act of 1870 as § 5635. They then follow with § 5636, in which they report the 2d section of the act of 1870 incorrectly, as follows: Mill. & V. Code, § 5636. "Any person violating the provision of this article shall be fined not less than twenty nor more than one hundred dollars. This article shall not apply to the prescriptions of regular practising physicians."

No Code of the state of Tennessee has ever been adopted as the law of the land except the Code of 1858, hence this section of Mill. & V. Code is not the law, they not being able to change the act of the legislature.

Mr. Shannon brings this last section of the act of 1870 into his Code as § 6747 and it reads as follows: Shannon's Code (6747). "Any person violating the provisions of the last section shall, on conviction, be fined not less than twenty nor more than one hundred dollars. This and the last section shall not apply to the prescriptions of regular practising physicians."

The law of Tennessee requires the vendor of poison without regard to the method of sale to label the package with the word "Poison."

When a statute requires a person to perform a duty which he omits to do with due care, he is liable for all of the consequences of his omission.

Whittaker's Smith, Neg. p. 18; 1 Jaggard, Torts, pp. 78, 95, 98, 348, 372; Queen v. Day-ton Coal & I. Co. 95 Tenn. 458, 30 L. R. A. 82; Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 401, note.

The rule with reference to torts founded upon the violation of law is different from the rule where negligence only is alleged.

1 Jaggard, Torts, p. 75; Whittaker's Smith, Neg. p. 18; King's Dig. §§ 50-71; Fleet v. Hollenkemp, 13 B. Mon. 219, 56 Am. Dec. 563; Norton v. Sevcoll, 106 Mass. 143, 8 Am. Rep. 298; Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 455.

The doctrine of proximate cause applicable in general to mere negligence does not apply in this case.

Jaggard, Torts, p. 372.

A party is liable for the consequences of his unlawful acts even to a third party.

Whittaker's Smith, Neg. pp. 9-11, and note.

The death of this child was proximately caused by the wrongful and unlawful omission of the defendant.

Scott v. Shepherd, 3 Wils. 403; Vandenburg v. Truax, 4 Denio, 464, 47 Am. Dec. 268.

Proximate cause is a question for the jury.

1 Jaggard, Torts, p. 77.

The cause was the want of label, though it was not the active agent.

Campbell v. Stillwater, 32 Minn. 308, 50 Am. Rep. 569, note; White v. Conly, 14 Lea, 51, 52 Am. Rep. 157, note; Magony v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 1 Story, 161; Ashby v. White, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 132, note; King v. Moore, 3 Barn. & Ad. 184; Tonawanda R. Co. v. Nungesser, 5 Denio, 266, 49 Am. Dec. 239; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Laack, 143 Ill. 242, 18 L. R. A. 215; Louisville, N. A. & O. R. Co. v. Lucas, 119 Ind. 583, 6 L. R. A. 193; Campbell v. Lunsford, 83 Ala. 513.

When the unlawful act is in its nature likely to produce the very events which have followed, the author of it may be treated as having caused each succeeding event, though they consist of the acts of third persons.

Guille v. Swan, 19 Johns. 381, 10 Am. Dec. 234; Vandenburg v. Truax, 4 Denio, 464, 47 Am. Dec. 268; Scott v. Shepherd, 2 W. Bl. 892; Broom, Legal Maxims, 1st ed. pp. 168, 169; Dixon v. Bell, 5 Maule & S. 198; Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 30; Illidge v. Goodwin, 5 Car. & P. 190; King v. Moore, 3 Barn. & Ad. 184; King v. Pedly, 1 Ad. & 44 L. R. A.

El. 822; Roswell v. Prior, 12 Mod. 639; Wright v. Wilcox, 19 Wend. 345, 32 Am. Dec. 507; Fish v. Dodge, 4 Denio, 317, 47 Am. Dec. 254; Benton v. Pratt, 2 Wend. 385, 20 Am. Dec. 623; Lobdell v. Baker, 3 Met. 469; Langridge v. Levy, 2 Mees. & W. 519; Allen v. Addington, 7 Wend. 9; Addington v. Allen, 11 Wend. 374; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Laack, 143 Ill. 242, 18 L. R. A. 215; Wright v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 27 Ill. App. 200; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Stanford, 12 Kan. 354, 15 Am. Rep. 362; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Laack, 41 Ill. App. 34; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 489, 24 L. ed. 253; Harriman v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. 45 Ohio St. 11; Seale v. Gulf, O. & S. F. R. Co. 65 Tex. 274, 57 Am. Rep. 602.

The want of a label was not only likely to mislead druggists and others into the mistakes which have followed in this instance, but such was its direct and almost inevitable tendency.

Southern v. How, Cro. Jac. 471; King v. Moore, 3 Barn. & Ad. 184; Lobdell v. Baker, 3 Met. 469.

If the defendant's act had been done willfully, he would have been chargeable with the consequences, including the mistake of all third persons superinduced by his act, on the legal presumption that he intended them.

1 Greenl. Ev. § 18; King v. Dixon, 3 Maule & S. 14; 3 Inst. 348; Gough v. St. John, 16 Wend. 649.

The sphere of responsibility is the same when the wrong consists of negligent acts, though the measure of indemnity and punishment may be different.

Archbold, Crim. Pr. & Pl. ed. 1846, pp. 421, 422; Rea v. Huggins, 2 Ld. Raym. 1582; King v. Moore, 3 Barn. & Ad. 184; King v. Dixon, 3 Maule & S. 14; 2 Starkie, Ev. Am. ed. 1837, p. 528; Dixon v. Bell, 5 Maule & S. 198; Broom, Legal Maxims, 1st ed. pp. 168, 169; Vandenburg v. Truax, 4 Denio, 464, 47 Am. Dec. 268; Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 30; Illidge v. Goodwin, 5 Car. & P. 190; Wright v. Wilcox, 19 Wend. 345, 32 Am. Dec. 507.

The rule as to intervening cause does not apply where the intervening wrong, though actionable, is the natural and probable consequence of the defendant's act.

Ashby v. White, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 132, note; Broom, Legal Maxims, 1st ed. pp. 168, 169; King v. Moore, 3 Barn. & Ad. 184; Guille v. Swan, 19 Johns. 381, 10 Am. Dec. 234; Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 30; Illidge v. Goodwin, 5 Car. & P. 190; Dixon v. Bell, 5 Maule & S. 198; Wright v. Wilcox, 19 Wend. 345, 32 Am. Dec. 507; Langridge v. Levy, 2 Mees. & W. 519; Tonawanda R. Co. v. Munger, 5 Denio, 266, 49 Am. Dec. 239; Vaughan v. Menlove, 3 Bing. N. C. 468; White v. Conly, 14 Lea, 51, 52 Am. Rep. 157, notes; Campbell v. Stillwater, 32 Minn. 308, 50 Am. Rep. 569, note.

The injury being sufficiently connected with the defendant's wrongful act, it is no defense that he had parted with the poison under a formal sale, and placed it in the custody of others; this being the very mode by which he caused the injury, and one of the reasons for his obligation to indemnify.

Roswell v. Prior, 12 Mod. 639; Broom, Legal Maxims, 1st ed. pp. 168, 169; Dixon v. Bell, 5 Maule & S. 198; Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 30; Langridge v. Levy, 2 Mees. & W. 519; Wright v. Wilcox, 19 Wend. 345, 32 Am. Dec. 507; Illidge v. Goodwin, 5 Car. & P. 190.

The inability of the defendant to prevent the injury at the time is not an excuse, but a part of the wrong.

Roswell v. Prior, 12 Mod. 639; Fish v. Dodge, 4 Denio, 311, 47 Am. Dec. 254; King v. Moore, 3 Barn. & Ad. 184; Thompson v. Gibson, 7 Mees. & W. 456; King v. Pedly, 1 Ad. & El. 822.

Besides, the want of a label was a continuing authority or direction by the defendant for the use of the poison, and he was bound to indemnify against the acts which it was likely to cause if left in that condition exposed.

Southern v. How, Cro. Jac. 471; King v. Moore, 3 Barn. & Ad. 184; Loddell v. Baker, 3 Met. 469; Roswell v. Prior, 12 Mod. 639; Albany v. Cunliff, 2 N. Y. 180; Fish v. Dodge, 4 Denio, 311, 47 Am. Dec. 254; King v. Pedly, 1 Ad. & El. 822; Wright v. Wilcox, 19 Wend. 345, 32 Am. Dec. 507.

Wrongful and negligent sale of poisonous drugs renders the vendor liable to third parties for damages consequent.

Whittaker's Smith, Neg. pp. 9-11, note, pp. 232-234; Wellington v. Downer Kerosene Oil Co. 104 Mass. 64; Norton v. Sewall, 106 Mass. 143, 8 Am. Rep. 298; Walton v. Booth, 34 La. Ann. 913; Quin v. Moore, 15 N. Y. 432; Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 455; Henry v. Dennis, 92 Ind. 452, 47 Am. Rep. 378.

Affixing a false label to the poison, and sending it into market in that condition, so as thereby to mislead others and endanger human life, was an unlawful act, for which the defendant is responsible, whether he did it wilfully or negligently.

Dixon v. Bell, 5 Maule & S. 198; Vandenburg v. Truax, 4 Denio, 464, 47 Am. Dec. 268; Myers v. Malcolm, 6 Hill, 292, 41 Am. Dec. 744; King v. Moore, 3 Barn. & Ad. 184; Scott v. Shepherd, 2 W. Bl. 892; Guille v. Swan, 19 Johns. 381, 10 Am. Dec. 234; King v. Dixon, 3 Maule & S. 11; Loomis v. Terry, 17 Wend. 409, 31 Am. Dec. 306; Cole v. Fisher, 11 Mass. 139.

On rehearing.

If the language of the statute is plain and free from ambiguity, and expresses a single, definite, and sensible meaning, the meaning is conclusively presumed to be the meaning which the legislature intended to convey.

Black, Interpretation of Laws, pp. 35, 36, 56; Keener v. State, 18 Ga. 194, 63 Am. Dec. 209; Coffin v. Rich, 45 Me. 507, 71 Am. Dec. 559; United States v. Fisher, 2 Cranch, 358, 2 L. ed. 304; Doe, Poor, v. Considine, 6 Wall. 458, 18 L. ed. 869; Woodbury v. Berry, 18 Ohio St. 456; Newell Universal Mill Co. v. Muslow, 115 N. Y. 170; Bradbury v. Wagenhorst, 54 Pa. 180; Carfoss v. State, 42 Md. 403; Allen v. Mutual F. Ins. Co. 2 Md. 111; Ezekiel v. Dixon, 3 Ga. 146.
44 L. R. A.

The rule applicable to this class of statutes under consideration in this case is much more strict and rigid than the general rules quoted.

Carberry v. People, 39 Ill. App. 506; Gunter v. Leckey, 30 Ala. 591; New Orleans v. Lockett, 3 La. Ann. 99; Ramsey v. Gould, 57 Barb. 398; Harrison v. Leach, 4 W. Va. 383; Harrison v. Smith, 4 W. Va. 97; Pendleton v. Barton, 4 W. Va. 496; Coleman v. Hart, 37 Wis. 180; Sprague v. Birdsall, 2 Cow. 419; Webb v. Baird, 6 Ind. 13.

Courts have nothing to do with the policy, necessity, or expediency of the law. This is a matter for the consideration of the legislature.

Bepley v. State, 4 Ind. 264, 58 Am. Dec. 628; Bow v. Stanford, 13 Smedes & M. 93, 51 Am. Dec. 142.

A statute adopted from a sister state, or from England, which has received a settled and uniform construction by the courts of the country from which it has been taken, must be given a similar construction by the state adopting it. Such interpretation becomes part of the statute itself in effect.

Munson v. Hollowell, 26 Tex. 475, 84 Am. Dec. 582; Doswell v. Buchanan, 3 Leigh, 365, 23 Am. Dec. 280; Woolsey v. Cade, 54 Ala. 378, 25 Am. Rep. 711; Myrick v. Hasey, 27 Me. 9, 46 Am. Dec. 583; Ballance v. Rankin, 12 Ill. 420, 54 Am. Dec. 412.

The statute in question in this case was taken from the Alabama Code and by the Alabama Code from Code of New York. The construction placed upon the statute in New York, from whence it originally came, makes no exception whatever.

McAlister, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant in error recovered a verdict and judgment in the circuit court of Hamilton county against Harry Wise & Co. for the sum of $3,000 damages for the negligent killing of his daughter, Ella Morgan, a child about three years old. The facts of the case are few, and practically undisputed. In August, 1894, the child, being troubled with her eyes, was taken by her mother to an oculist for treatment. After an examination of the child's eyes, the oculist handed her mother the following prescription, to wit: "Sulphate of atropia, one grain; acid boracic, two grains; water, two drachms. Mix. Label: Two drops in right eye, three times a day. Dr. F. T. S." This prescription was filled by the firm of Harry Wise & Co., druggists of experience and established reputation in the city of Chattanooga. It was filled in exact conformity with the formula, and a label was pasted on the bottle showing the ingredients of the prescription, its number, and the date it was filled. This bottle was taken home by the mother, and placed on the mantelpiece, some three or four feet from the floor. The medicine was used by the mother for four or five days in the treatment of the child's eye, and was then discontinued, but the bottle was still left on the mantelpiece. About two weeks after the treatment with this medicine was discontinued, the child, in the absence of its mother, and while left alone in the room, got a chair, climbed up to the mantel, procured the bottle, and poured a portion of the mixture in a cup and drank it. In a short time thereafter she developed all the symptoms of atropia, or belladonna poison, and died on the following day. The father thereupon brought this suit as administrator against the defendants to recover damages for the death of the child. The gravamen of the action is that defendants failed to label the bottle "Poison," as required by the statute, and that the death of the child was the proximate result of this negligence or breach of duty on the part of defendants. The cause has been three times tried. The first verdict was for $1,000, which was set aside by the circuit judge upon the ground that the negligence of defendants was not the proximate cause of the child's death. The second trial resulted in a verdict for $500, which was set aside for the same reason. On the third and last trial plaintiff recovered a verdict for $5,000, and pending the motion for a new trial he entered a remittitur of $2,000, and thereupon the circuit judge overruled the motion for a new trial, and pronounced judgment for the sum of $3,000. Wise & Co. appealed, and have assigned errors.

Plaintiff insists that assignments of error Nos. 1, 2, 4, 10, and part of 11 cannot be considered by this court, because not assigned on the motion for a new trial in the court below, as required by the rule of that court. The first assignment in this court is that the circuit court erred in overruling the demurrer to plaintiff's declaration; second, in sustaining plaintiff's demurrer to defendants' second and third pleas. Counsel are in error in supposing that it was necessary to embody the questions made on the demurrer in the motion for a new trial. The demurrers had been acted on prior to the trial, and the action of the court entered upon the minutes. Since the action of the court upon the demurrers was in no wise connected with the trial of the cause, it was not necessary that such matters should again be brought to the attention of the court on motion for a new trial. It is true that the matters presented in assignments Nos. 4, 10, and part of 11 were not presented on the motion for a new trial, as required by the rule of court, and they will not be considered by this court. Bruce v. Hale (Knoxville; Sept. term, 1898) — S. W. —.

The fifth assignment is that the court erred in refusing the following request, namely: "If, taking into consideration the intelligence of the person to whom the substance was sold, and the purpose for which it was intended to be used, the druggist had no reason to anticipate or presume that it would be taken internally, then the taking of it internally, and the death resulting therefrom, would not be such a probable or natural result of the failure to label the bottle as would make the defendant liable." The sixth assignment is that the court erred in refusing the following request, namely: "If the mother put this bottle where she thought the child would not get it, and the child, unexpectedly to the mother, got a chair, and climbed up to the mantelpiece, procured the medicine, and drank it, then the drinking of the medicine and the death of the child were not the natural or probable result of the failure to put the poison label on the bottle, and the defendant would not be liable." The seventh assignment is that the court erred in refusing the following request, namely: "If the obtaining of the medicine by the child was not due to any fault or negligence of the plaintiff, and if the presence of the poison label would not have deterred the child from drinking the substance, then the failure to put on such label would not be the proximate cause of the child's death, and defendant would not be liable." The eighth assignment is that the court erred in refusing the following request, namely: "If the substance sold to Mrs. Morgan, from the drinking of which her child died, was not poisonous or dangerous when used for the purpose, or in the manner it was intended, as indicated by the prescription on which it was sold, then the defendant was not required, under the statute, to put a poison label on the bottle in which it was contained, and his failure to do so would not be negligence." It is argued in support of these propositions that, if it be conceded that the failure to affix the poison label was negligence per se, yet that act was not the proximate cause of the injury, for the reason that the chain of causation was broken, — First, by the fact that the drinking of the substance, was not the natural or probable result of the failure to put on the label; and, second, by the intervening negligence of the mother in leaving the bottle accessible to the child. It is well settled that a failure to perform a statutory duty is negligence per se, and, if the injury is the proximate result or consequence of the negligent act, there is liability. 2 Thomp. Neg. p. 1232, § 5; Queen v. Dayton Coal & I. Co. 95 Tenn. 458, 30 L. R. A. 82. But it is insisted that the mother's negligence in leaving the bottle accessible to the child was such intervening negligence on the part of a responsible agent as broke the chain of causation, and became itself the juridical cause. This might be so, if the mother had been aware of the poisonous character of the substance; but it is not claimed she had such knowledge, and her testimony is quite positive that she was ignorant of it. If the bottle had been labeled "Poison," the mother would thereby have been admonished of its dangerous character, and doubtless would not have left it exposed. The fact that the mother was ignorant of the ingredients in the mixture is made clear by the fact that when she discovered the child had swallowed it she was not alarmed, and did not deem it necessary at once to call in a physician. If the bottle had been labeled "Poison," the mother, on discovering the child had taken it, would have immediately taken steps to counteract the deadly potion. Nor can the act of the child in getting down the mixture from the mantelpiece, and drinking it, be invoked as an intervening and independent juridical cause. The child was an irresponsible agent. It had not reached years of discretion, and negligence was not imputable to it. The case of Meyer v. King, 72 Miss. 1, 35 L. R. A. 474, cited by counsel for plaintiffs in error, and other like cases are easily distinguished from this one, in the important feature that each presented an intervening, responsible agent, that broke the chain of causation, so that the death could not be concatenated with the breach of the statute.

It is insisted, however, that the statute requiring druggists to label all poisonous substances does not apply to every substance that contains any amount of poison, regardless of the purpose for which it was intended, and that it does not apply where the substance is furnished on the prescription of a physician, which does not call for such a label. The statute is, viz.: "Any person who sells and delivers any poisonous liquid, or substance, without having the word 'Poison' written or printed on the label attached to the vial, box, or parcel in which the same is sold, shall, on conviction, be fined not less than twenty, nor more than one hundred dollars." Shannon's Code, § 6745. Does this statute apply to medicine, containing any ingredient of poison, compounded upon the prescription of a physician, or is it to be limited in its operation to the sale of poisons in original form? It is in proof that a large proportion of medicines and druggists' compounds contain ingredients of poison; and it is argued that if all medicines containing poison, no matter how minute in quantity, must be labeled "Poison," nervous and excitable persons would refuse to take the remedy prescribed, for fear of the consequences, or, if taken, its therapeutic efficacy would be destroyed by the mental excitement and uneasiness thus aroused. The question presented in respect of the proper construction of this act arose in the common pleas of Ohio on a similar statute. That act provided that whoever sells or gives away any poison without first having marked the word "Poison" upon the label or wrapper containing the same, etc., shall be fined, etc. The defendant in that case was a druggist, and was indicted for violating the statute in a sale of morphine then and there contained in a certain bottle, labeled "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," without having the word "Poison" on the label or wrapper containing said article. The court said, viz.: "The construction given to this statute by the state was that it prohibited the sale, without the label 'Poison,' of any quantity of morphine, whether the same was sold in a free state, or in a mechanical mixture, or in the form of a proprietary medicine, or under prescription of a doctor, without regard to whether the mixture containing the morphine was a medicine, or was poisonous or nonpoisonous. By the construction contended for it would be impossible for the wit of man to conceive of the sale of any article belonging to the class usually denominated 'poison,' in any quantity, however small, or in any sort of a mechanical combination, if unlabeled, without violating the statute. . . . The construction adopted by the court below renders criminal millions of transactions that have occurred in Ohio 44 L. R. A.

during the past fifty years, and are occurring daily; for the prescription of every physician, containing morphine or opium or strychnine or arsenic, that is given as a medicine, and that is filled by the druggist, would have to be labeled 'Poison.' If the mixture or medicine so sold contains so little of the poison, the effects of which were beneficial, and not injurious, the statute would still be violated. Every sale of many a remedy that has been in use for years would have to be stamped 'Poison.' I instance Dover's powders and paregoric and syrup of ipecac. Others might be given. Is it possible that this statute is to be so construed that prescriptions of physicians and these ordinary remedies are to be labeled 'Poison'? Clearly not. Wherever a statute admits of two constructions, we are bound to presume that the legislature intended to do that which is clear, manifest, and just. The presumption against absurdity in the provision of a legislative enactment is probably a more powerful guide in construction than the presumption against unreasonable inconvenience or injustice. The legislature cannot be supposed to intend its own stultification. When, therefore, to follow the words of an act leads to absurdity in its consequences, that constitutes sufficient authority to depart from them. Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, §§ 258-264. A construction leading to absurd consequences will be deemed not intended, and language will be restrained accordingly. Moore v. Given, 39 Ohio St. 661; Toledo & O. C. R. Co. v. Jump, 50 Ohio St. 651. The practical construction given to § 6957, Rev. Stat., for now nearly half a century, has been directly contrary to the construction urged. Until this case was prosecuted, no one ever thought that the law required the numerous prescriptions which druggists of Ohio have filled, containing morphine or other poisons, to be labeled as poisons, and a record to be kept as required by this statute. It is a fact beyond dispute that nearly one third—at least fully one fourth—of all the prescriptions given by physicians in Ohio contain poison; morphine and opium being common poisons prescribed. It is a fact, further, that these prescriptions, as a rule, contain more of such poisons, relatively, than the mixture sold by Marvin. There is scarcely a cough syrup prescribed by any physician which does not contain morphine or opium, or some other form of such poisons, which is the equivalent of morphine, in an equal proportion or greater than that contained in this mixture. No one has ever construed this statute as prohibiting the sale of such mixtures as poisons. Dover's powders have been a well-known medicine and remedy for one hundred and fifty years. The dose of Dover's powder is from five to fifteen grains. If we take the middle dose,—say, ten grains,—it is composed of one grain of opium, one grain of ipecac, eight grains of sugar of milk. U. S. Pharmacopœia, last edition. The U. S. Dispensatory gives one grain of opium, ordinarily, to be the equivalent of one tenth of a grain of morphine. Therefore a ten-grain Dover's powder contains exactly as much poison, the equivalent of morphine, as an ounce of this mixture. The druggists of Ohio never construed this statute as requiring them to label Dover's powder a poison. Take another very common household remedy,—paregoric. It is prescribed by the most eminent physicians. The Pharmacopœia says that it is composed of opium, benzoic acid, camphor, oil of anise, alcohol, and glycerin. There are two grains of opium to every fluid ounce of the mixture. Therefore every fluid ounce of paregoric contains the equivalent in poison of one fifth of a grain of morphine, which is double the poison in an ounce of this soothing syrup. Has it ever been thought that the sale of paregoric by a citizen of Ohio without labeling it poison was a criminal act? Other instances could be given. These are all facts of common knowledge, and all proper for the court to consider in giving construction to this statute. Courts will take judicial notice of facts of common knowledge. The conclusion reached is that the statute in question is not a statute governing the sale of mixtures compounded as medicines, whether proprietary or prescribed by a physician, even though such medicines contain poisons in solution or in a free state. This is a statute regulating the sale of poisons, and it governs the ordinary and common transactions of people in the selling of poisons in Ohio, and does not apply to the selling of poison in harmless mechanical mixtures, or in proprietary mixtures that are beneficial medicines, or to poisons contained in medicines prescribed by physicians for the cure of disease. It is never permitted—it is intolerable—to create offenses by mere construction. Com. v. Cooke, 50 Pa. 207."

We have thus quoted at length from the foregoing opinion, not that it is authoritative or controlling, but for the manifest good sense it contains, and as illustrating the reductio ad absurdum if the literalism of the statute should be followed. We cannot assent to the construction of the statute given by the circuit judge, and hold that it does not apply to medicines compounded by druggists upon the prescriptions of physicians. In this view, there is no evidence to support the verdict of the jury.

The judgment is therefore, reversed, and the cause remanded.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

GALVESTON, HARRISBURG, & SAN ANTONIO RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.,

v.
V. F. ZANTZINGER et al.

(.....Tex.....)

1. The very question to be decided which the court of civil appeals is by statute authorized to certify to the supreme court is not an abstract question which may determine the issue as presented to that court, but the issue itself.
2. A boy upon whom a locomotive engineer throws hot water and steam to drive him off from the engine is entitled to recover from the railroad company for the assault regardless of injuries which resulted from his attempt to get off in consequence of such act.
3. The question of right of a boy to recover from a railroad company whose engineer turns hot water and steam on him to drive him from the engine, for the loss of his leg in attempting to get off, in the event that his action succeeding the assault was negligent, does not arise upon an instruction to find for plaintiff if the engineer's act was negligent without specifying whether the recovery was to be for loss of leg or for the assault so that it can be certified by the court of civil appeals to the supreme court, but the right of his mother to recover does so arise, since her recovery, if any, must be based on the loss of the leg.
4. The act of a locomotive engineer in throwing steam and water upon a trespasser standing upon a foot board between the engine and a flat car, in order to make him get off, must be deemed to be wilful so that the negligence of the trespasser in placing himself there cannot deprive him of the right to recover for an injury received in attempting to get off.

5. One on whom a wilful injury is inflicted is not precluded by his mere failure to exercise reasonable care to avoid the consequences of the injury, from recovering for so much of the damage as results from that failure.

(December 22, 1898.)

QUESTIONS CERTIFIED by the Court of Civil Appeals for the First Supreme Judicial District for the opinion of the Supreme Court which arose upon an appeal by defendant from a judgment of the District Court of Wharton County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Answers favorable to appellees.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. L. Jackson for appellant.

Messrs. J. V. Meek, O. T. Holt, and J. H. Davenport, for appellees:

Where an allegation is defective, and the defendant fails to except to it, or to offer objection to the evidence offered thereunder, a trial and verdict cure the allegation, and it will be presumed that the court would not have charged the jury thereon unless it had been proved, the omissions in the allegations being such as can be implied from the other allegations by a fair and reasonable intendment. When there are two counts

NOTE.—For master's liability on account of servant's tort toward person having no contractual relations with the master, see note 44 L. R. A.

See also 44 L. R. A. 316.

to Ritchie v. Waller (Conn.) 27 L. R. A. 161. See also Pierce v. North Carolina R. Co. (N. C.) ante, 316.

in a petition, one defective and the other good, there being no exceptions to the defective count, a general verdict for the plaintiff cures the defective count.

Tex. Rev. Stat. 1895, art. 1453; Gillies v. Wofford, 26 Tex. 77; Carter v. Wallace, 2 Tex. 206; Schuster v. Frendenthal, 74 Tex. 53; 1 Chitty, Pl. 705; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Kirk, 62 Tex. 232; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. George, 85 Tex. 155; Davis v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 44; Smith v. Montes, 11 Tex. 25; Lambert v. Weir, 27 Tex. 359; O'Connor v. Towns, 1 Tex. 107.

When the petition and answer, or either of them, and the evidence raises an issue in the case, it is the duty of the court to submit it in its charge to the jury.

Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 1317; Blum v. Whitworth, 86 Tex. 350.

It being shown that the engineer was in exclusive charge of the locomotive engine, and that he was responsible for its proper operation and preservation, he had implied authority to eject persons riding thereon, and it was not error for the court to submit the issue to the jury as to whether or not he had authority to eject persons riding upon the engine, and there could be no injury to appellant in submitting the question as a controverted fact, rather than in charging the existence of the authority as a matter of law.

International & G. N. R. Co. v. Anderson, 82 Tex. 516; Carter v. Louisville, N. A. & O. R. Co. 98 Ind. 552, 49 Am. Rep. 780.

The court charged upon the feature of contributory negligence as the same was raised under the pleadings and evidence in the case.

Texas & P. R. Co. v. Bredow, 90 Tex. 27; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Staggs, 90 Tex. 458; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Watkins, 88 Tex. 20; Hays v. Gainesville Street R. Co. 70 Tex. 602; Sweeney v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. 84 Tex. 433; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Cooke, 64 Tex. 168; Houston & T. O. R. Co. v. Smith, 52 Tex. 184; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Neff, 87 Tex. 303; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Watkins, 88 Tex. 20; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. chap. 3; Cooley, Torts, p. 674; Whittaker's Smith, Neg. p. 373.

Gaines, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The court of civil appeals for the first supreme judicial district has certified for our decision the following questions:

"The plaintiffs, Mrs. E. S. Zantzinger, who is joined in this action by her husband, is the mother of Almer Campbell, a minor; and the suit is in her own behalf, as well as in behalf of her son, to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by him, as it is claimed, through the negligence of the appellant, who was defendant below. The evidence adduced at the trial showed that defendant had a train of cars attached to the front end of a switch engine, which was running backwards, pulling the cars after it, into the city of Houston, from a neighboring station. The switch engine had no pilot or cowcatcher in front of it, but attached at 44 L. R. A.

each end was a footboard, extending across the track. The car nearest the engine was a flat car, several feet intervening between it and the footboard. While the train was slowly moving, Almer Campbell, without permission of anyone, and contrary to the rules of the company, entered upon the footboard, for the purpose of riding into Houston, and stood upon it, between the engine and flat car. After he had ridden a short distance the cylinder cock of the engine was opened by the engineer, and hot water and steam were thereby thrown upon his legs and feet, whereupon he sprang from the footboard towards the flat car, intending to get upon the latter, but missed it and fell upon the track, and was run over and injured. There is evidence tending to show that the cylinder cock was opened by the engineer for the purpose of throwing the steam and water upon the boy, in order to make him get off the engine; but the evidence does not warrant the conclusion that the engineer intended more than this, or that he intended to injure Campbell in the way in which he was injured. The engineer had authority to eject persons wrongfully riding upon the engine. There is also evidence tending to show that the fright and pain caused to Campbell by the steam and water also caused him to lose his presence of mind, and to make the leap in order to escape. The steam and water caused pain and fright, but did not injure the skin. He testified that he was facing the engineer, with his back to the flat car, and that after the escape of steam and water commenced he turned and made the leap, calculating to reach the flat car with his feet, but not his hands; that after he fell between the cars he crawled forty or fifty feet in the direction in which the train was moving, in order to avoid the brake beam under the flat car, and then attempted to get across the rail, and was caught. There is also evidence tending to show that the engineer saw Campbell fall between the cars, knew his danger, and could have stopped the train in time to have avoided the injury. This we do not regard as affecting the questions certified. The evidence is uncontradicted that in getting upon the footboard Campbell was a trespasser, and was guilty of negligence, and the court below so instructed the jury. He was nearly seventeen years of age, and understood the dangers and risks of the situation. The charge given below submitted only two grounds upon which the plaintiffs could recover, and carefully restricted the jury to them. The first is stated in the charge set out below, and the second submits the question whether or not the engineer, after discovering Campbell's danger, used proper care to prevent the injury. As to the latter we deem it unnecessary to state more. The charge referred to is as follows: 'You are instructed that if you find from the evidence that, at the time and place stated in plaintiffs' petition, Almer Campbell got upon the footboard or runningboard attached to the engine then being operated on defendant's line of railway by its agents and servants, and that while the said Almer Campbell was standing upon said footboard, and while said engine and train of cars were in motion, the defendant's engineer in charge of said engine, by means of the cylinder cocks attached to said engine, caused hot water or steam to be thrown upon said Almer Campbell's person for the purpose of frightening or scaring him off the engine, and that the opening of the cylinder cocks for the purpose of letting out the hot water or steam was done for the purpose of throwing the water upon said Almer Campbell, and not in the operation of the engine; and you further find that to eject Almer Campbell from his position on the footboard of the engine was within the scope of the duty of said engineer in operating the engine, and that he had implied authority to do so, and that said act on his part, of throwing the water or steam on Almer Campbell, was negligence, as herein defined; and if you further find that hot water or steam so thrown on said Almer Campbell so frightened him, or caused him such pain, that in order to escape therefrom he made an attempt to jump upon the flat car in front of the engine, and fell upon the track, where the wheels of said car passed over his leg, injuring him substantially as set out in the petition; and you further believe that the said act of the engineer in turning the hot water or steam upon the said Almer Campbell was negligence, as hereinafter defined, and was the proximate cause of the said accident,—you will find for the plaintiffs.'

"The questions certified are as follows: First. Should the act of the engineer in throwing out the steam and water for the purpose of ejecting Campbell from the engine be deemed wilful, in its relation to the result which actually followed, but was not intended, so that the negligence of Campbell in placing himself in such a position, without which he would not have received his injury, cannot be considered contributory negligence, or should such act of the engineer be regarded as only a negligent cause of such injuries, with which the negligence of Campbell may be considered as contributing to the result? Second. Should the court, in applying to the facts of this case as above stated the rule announced in International & G. N. R. Co. v. Neff, 87 Tex. 303, have assumed that Campbell's act in making the leap described was not contributory negligence, and that he was excused by the act of the engineer and the other facts of the situation from the exercise of ordinary prudence, or should it have submitted to the jury the question of the adequacy of such facts to produce a state of mind in which ordinary prudence should not be expected of him, and the further question whether or not such state of mind was produced?"

The statute which authorizes a court of civil appeals to refer an issue of law to this court for determination makes it the duty of the chief justice of that court "to certify the very question to be decided." Rev. Stat. 1895, art. 1043. By "the very question" we do not understand is meant an abstract question which may determine the issue as presented in that court, but the issue itself as there presented. For example, if it be the correctness of the ruling of the court in sustaining or overruling an exception to a pleading, the substance, at least, of the pleading and of the exception ought to be set out in the statement, and not merely an abstract question submitted, which may, in the opinion of that court, determine the point. Such, as we think, is the rule, also, as to the giving or refusal of instructions, the admission or exclusion of evidence, and, in general, to all the issues of law which may be presented upon the appeal. It is the precise question ruled upon in the trial court, as shown by the record in the court of civil appeals, which that court is authorized to certify, and which we have jurisdiction to determine. In the certificate before us a portion of the charge of the court is set forth, and the questions certified seem to bear upon the correctness of the instruction quoted. It resolves itself, as it seems to us, into a question whether or not the charge be correct in the particulars indicated by the inquiry. We infer from the statement accompanying the questions that the action of the minor son to recover damages for his injuries, and that of his mother to recover for the loss resulting to her from the same cause, were prosecuted together in one proceeding without objection. We have had some doubt whether we ought to answer the second question, and we are now of opinion that, if we had the case of the son only, that question would be abstract, and should not be determined. So far as he is concerned, upon the hypothesis stated in the instruction he was entitled to recover, at least, for the assault made upon him, without reference to the injuries which subsequently resulted; and, therefore, as to him the charge was correct. The jury were not told that he had a right to recover for the injury to his leg. If such instruction was elsewhere given, the court of civil appeals has not so stated. Therefore it seems to us that the question of his right to recover for the loss of his leg, in the event that his action succeeding the assault upon him was negligent, does not arise out of the very question before the court of civil appeals. But the case of the mother is different. It is apparent from the statement of the case that no injury resulted to her simply from the throwing of the hot water upon her son. If it had stopped there, no loss would have resulted to her. Her right of action, if it exists at all, results from the injury to his leg, and the consequent expenses and loss of service. Therefore, unless, upon the facts hypothetically stated in the instruction of the court, she was entitled to recover the damages resulting to her from that injury, the charge is not correct as a whole. The charge makes no distinction as to the respective rights of the mother and the son, but instructs the jury that, if they find the facts as stated, to find "for the plaintiffs." We conclude that, in this aspect of the case, the question of the correctness of the charge presents both points upon which it seems the court of civil appeals desired to elicit our opinion, and we therefore proceed to answer the question:

1. If the servants of the appellant company purposely threw the hot water upon Campbell, it was an intentional, and not a negligent, wrong. The fact that he was a trespasser upon the train did not justify the engineer's conduct. The latter had the right to remove him, and for that purpose to put his hands upon him, and to use such force as was necessary to accomplish that end. But the means adopted resulted in an assault. We answer the first question, in its first form, in the affirmative; and in its second form, in the negative.

2. The second question presents a novel and difficult point, and one upon which we have found no direct authority. It must be resolved upon principle. When the negligence of the plaintiff concurs with that of the defendant, and contributes to produce the damage for which he sues, he cannot recover. It is not so if the act of the defendant be wilful. In speaking of the rule of contributory negligence, the supreme court of Indiana says: "The doctrine, however, can have no application to the case of an intentional and unlawful assault and battery, for the reason that the person thus assaulted is under no obligation to exercise any care to avoid the same, by retreating or otherwise, and for the further reason that his want of care can in no just sense be said to contribute to the injury inflicted upon him by such assault and battery." Steinmetz v. Kelly, 72 Ind. 442, 37 Am. Rep. 170. See also Ruter v. Foy, 46 Iowa, 132; Brownell v. Flagler, 5 Hill, 282. The principles announced apply to the question of the original right of action. The question under consideration, however, involves rather an inquiry as to the duty of a party who has been injured by the fault of another to use reasonable precautions to avoid the consequences of his injury. 1 Sedgw. Damages, § 202. In negligence cases such duty is usually regarded as a part of the law of contributory negligence. The rule is that if a plaintiff, who has been injured by the negligent conduct of the defendant, fails to exercise reasonable care to avoid the consequences of his injury, he cannot recover for so much of his damage as results from that failure. But does this rule apply to the case of a wilful injury? We are of opinion that it does not. Since one who has committed an assault and battery upon another cannot urge in his defense that the plaintiff might by the use of due care have avoided the battery, we think where the injury is intentional he should not be permitted to say, in reduction of the damages, that the plaintiff might have prevented them, at least in part, by careful conduct on his part. If negligence contributing to the injury cannot be set up to defeat the action when the act of the defendant was wilful, by a parity of reasoning the defendant in such a case should not be permitted to say that, but for the negligence of the plaintiff in failing to avoid the consequences of the wrong, he would have suffered no damage, or only a part of the damages for which he claims a recovery. We apprehend that a plaintiff cannot make a case by intentionally contributing to the injury which the defendant wilfully intends to inflict upon him. For example, should one intentionally hurl a missile at another, with the intent to injure, and should the other voluntarily place himself in its way, and thereby receive a battery which he would otherwise have escaped, the person so struck could not recover. So, when he has been intentionally injured, he should not be permitted to recover damages which might have resulted from his wilful omission to take reasonable precautions to avoid the consequences of the wrong. Since a negligent act of the plaintiff, contributing to a result brought about by the concurring negligent act of the defendant, exonerates the defendant from the consequences of his wrong,—pro tanto, at least,—so a wilful act of the plaintiff should have a like effect in case of an intentional injury. Loker v. Damon, 17 Pick. 284. In the case cited, Chief Justice Shaw says: "In assessing damages, the direct and immediate consequences of the injurious act are to be regarded, and not the remote, speculative, and contingent consequences, which the party injured might easily have avoided by his own act. Suppose a man should enter his neighbor's field unlawfully, and leave the gate open; if, before the owner knows it, cattle enter and destroy the crop, the trespasser is responsible. But if the owner sees the gate open, and passes it frequently, and wilfully and obstinately, or through gross negligence, leaves it open all summer, and cattle get in, it is his own folly. So, if one throw a stone and break a window, the cost of repairing the window is the ordinary measure of damage. But if the owner suffers the window to remain, without repairing, a great length of time after notice of the fact, and his furniture or pictures, or other valuable articles, sustain damage, or the rain beats in and rots the window, this damage would be too remote. We think the jury were rightly instructed that, as the trespass consisted in moving a few rods of fence, the proper measure of damage was the cost of repairing it, and not the loss of a subsequent year's crop, arising from the want of such fence. I do not mean to say that other damages may not be given for injury in breaking the plaintiff's close, but I mean only to say that, in the actual circumstances of this case, the cost of replacing the fence, and not the loss of an ensuing year's crop, is to be taken as the rule of damages for that part of the injury which consisted in removing the fence and leaving the close exposed." Where, in cases of an intentional tort, the plaintiff has purposely omitted to take reasonable steps to prevent an aggravation of his damages, or has been so grossly negligent in that regard as to be deemed guilty of a wilful omission on his part, he ought not to recover for the damages which might have been prevented by proper care; but, on the other hand, we think that he should recover his full damages where he has been guilty of ordinary negligence only. A party cannot voluntarily inflict an injury upon another, and then claim that the party injured owes him the duty to exercise ordinary care to protect him from the consequences of his act. We answer the second question by saying that, in our opinion, the trial court did not err in failing to submit the question of Campbell's contributory negligence in the charge set out in the statement.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

Maurice K. SMITH, Respt.,

v.

NORTH AMERICAN TRANSPORTATION
& TRADING COMPANY, Appt.

(.....Wash.....)

1. A steamer compelled to abandon for the season its trip from Seattle to Dawson after it reaches Ft. Yukon, because of the low stage of the water in the Yukon river, owes to a passenger whom it has agreed to transport to Dawson by September 15 of the current year the duty of bringing him back to Seattle without charge, and has no right to leave him where he will be forced to remain over winter in the Alaskan climate; to await the convenience of the carrier for completing the transportation the following summer.
2. It is the duty of a transportation company legitimately to inform itself concerning the stages of water on a route over which it contracts to transport a passenger, and he may rely upon the carrier's information concerning the practicability and feasibility of the trip.
3. To excuse nonperformance of a contract on the ground of an act of God, there must be no mixture of negligence or want of diligence, judgment, or skill on the part of the promisor.

(February 23, 1899.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for breach of a transportation contract. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Bausman, Kelleher, & Emory, for appellant:

Low water is the act of God.

Bennett v. Bryam, 38 Miss. 17, 75 Am. Dec. 90; Silver v. Hale, 2 Mo. App. 557; Boner v. Merchants' S. B. Co. 46 N. C. (1 Jones L.) 217.

The freezing of canals has always been held the act of God.

Beckwith v. Frisbie, 32 Vt. 559; Parsons v. Hardy, 14 Wend. 215, 28 Am. Dec. 521; Bowman v. Teall, 23 Wend. 306, 35 Am. Dec. 502; Empire Transp. Co. v. Wallace, 68 Pa. 302, 8 Am. Rep. 178; West v. The Berlin, 3 Iowa, 532.

So of a snowstorm.

Ballentine v. North Missouri R. Co. 40 Mo. 491, 93 Am. Dec. 315.

NOTE.—As to effect of intervening impossibility of performance, to relieve from the obligation of a contract, see note to Stewart v. Stone (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 215.

As to act of God affecting carriers, see also Wald v. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. (Ill.) 35 L. R. A. 356; Pierce v. Southern P. Co. 44 L. R. A.

The ticket is wholly silent as to time. If it is a contract, the law implies a reasonable time, conclusively presumes it, and will not permit an express date to be fixed by evidence.

2 Parsons, Contr. p. 661.

Is a ticket a contract? If it be a signed ticket, if the purchaser affixes his name to it, then it is a contract just like any other document that is signed.

Mosher v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 127 U. S. 390, 32 L. ed. 249; Boylan v. Hot Springs R. Co. 132 U. S. 146, 33 L. ed. 290.

The ticket, then, was a contract, the contract was silent as to time, the law allows no specific time to be fixed, and, if the time for performance was not fixed, a reasonable time is the result, and the carrier is entitled to the allowance for the act of God.

1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 598, note 2, p. 599.

The carrier shows the act of God—the burden of proof that the carrier's negligence contributed to it or that he could have gotten through nevertheless devolves upon the passenger.

Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Reeves, 10 Wall. 176, 19 L. ed. 909.

Messrs. Byers & Byers, for respondent:

The act of God is not an excuse for a failure to perform a contract when the performance of the contract is possible or when the impossibility is one of the probable contingencies which a prudent man should have foreseen and provided for.

2 Parsons, Contr. 7th ed. p. 672; Harmony v. Bingham, 12 N. Y. 99, 62 Am. Dec. 142; Mississippi River Logging Co. v. Robson, 32 U. S. App. 520, 69 Fed. Rep. 773, 16 C. C. A. 400; Central Trust Co. v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 31 Fed. Rep. 440.

A contract for passage is an entire contract for the voyage, and if the voyage is broken up, and the passenger is not able to reach his destination, he is entitled to recover his passage money at least.

Fetter, Carr. § 274; Brown v. Harris, 2 Gray, 359.

In support of the judgment, see—

Williams v. Vanderbilt, 28 N. Y. 217, 84 Am. Dec. 333; Turner v. Great Northern R. Co. 15 Wash. 213; Wilmington Transp. Co. v. O'Neil, 98 Cal. 1; Angell, Carr. § 331; Hutchinson, Carr. §§ 604, 608, 612; Fetter, (Cal.) 40 L. R. A. 350; Smith v. Western Railway of Ala. (Ala.) 11 L. R. A. 619; Long v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Pa.) 14 L. R. A. 741; Lang v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Pa.) 20 L. R. A. 860; and Libby v. Maine C. R. Co. (Me.) 20 L. R. A. 812.

Carr. § 535, and cases; Ryan v. Rogers, 96 Cal. 349; School Dist. No. 1 v. Dauchy, 25 Conn. 530, 68 Am. Dec. 371.

Dunbar, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The respondent sued the appellant, the North American Transportation & Trading Company, alleging an agreement by the defendant to take him from Seattle to Dawson by September 15, 1897, by way of St. Michael and the Yukon river. When the steamer Cleveland, on which he took passage, arrived at Ft. Yukon, it proceeded no further. It was claimed by defendant's officers that it could not proceed further by reason of low water, and the respondent was returned by the company to St. Michael, from whence, at his own expense he returned to Seattle, the respondent paying to appellant for passage money from Seattle to Dawson City the sum of $200. The suit is to recover the passage money, the expense he was put to in returning to Seattle, and damages for loss of time. The jury returned a verdict in the sum of $380.50 in favor of plaintiff. He was awarded $200, the passage money; $52.50, expense of return to Seattle; $8, board paid by respondent at St. Michael; and $120, for loss of time. Judgment was entered on this verdict, and an appeal was taken here.

It is alleged that the court erred in charging the jury that it was the duty of the company, if it could not take the respondent through, to bring him back to Seattle without charge. We think that, under the circumstances, this instruction correctly stated the law. This is not a parallel case with those in which passengers are delayed on railroads where cars are running on frequent and regular time, and delays are presumed to be and are purely temporary. There is no contention by the appellant in this case that the delay here would have been a temporary one, or that there was any probability that the passengers could have been forwarded before the next summer. There is no case that holds—and we would not follow it if there were—that passengers could be discharged from a steamer on which they had taken passage, and forced to remain over winter in an Alaskan climate, to await the convenience of a transportation company for their removal the next summer.

The second assignment of error embraces the same proposition, viz., the court directed the jury that the company had no right to compel or require the passengers to get off and stop at Ft. Yukon or Munook, if they were not willing to do so.

The third assignment is that the court erred in refusing to give the following instruction asked by the defendant: "I instruct you, gentlemen, that if you shall find that the defendant company carried plaintiff to Ft. Yukon without any unreasonable delay, and at that place encountered a stage of water so low as to make a continuance of navigation towards Dawson impossible, that this constitutes the act of God, and that the company was excused from carrying him further towards Dawson until the stage of water should be sufficient." Conceding, without deciding, that low water, under the circumstances mentioned in the instruction, is an act of God, this instruction does not contain the qualifications necessary to constitute it the law as applicable to this case. There is eliminated from the instruction the question of the duty of the transportation company to legitimately inform itself concerning the stages of water on the route. The passenger, when he buys transportation of a company, must necessarily rely upon the company's information concerning the practicability and feasibility of the trip contracted for. It is for the company to put on foot inquiries concerning the feasibility of the trip or probability of its being able to carry out its contract. For aught that appears in this instruction, it might have been known to the company that these passengers could not have been transported any further than the Yukon river; and yet, under the theory of the instruction, it would be justified in taking from travelers the full fare to Dawson, and leaving its passengers stranded on the route. This qualification was understood by the appellant, and acted upon in its answer to the complaint; for subdivision 3 of the answer is to the effect that the Yukon river was at that time so low as to be impossible of navigation between Ft. Yukon and Dawson City by the John J. Healy or any other craft plying in those waters propelled by steam, and engaged in the carriage of freight and passengers for hire; that this stage of the water between those places was utterly unforeseen by appellant, and could not have been foreseen, and was wholly unexampled. This qualification should have been incorporated in the instruction. But these instructions, together with the others, the refusal to give which is assigned as error here, are all rendered inapplicable by the undisputed testimony in the case. The court instructed the jury as follows: "Now, the defense here, really and strictly speaking, is that the defendant was prevented from taking the plaintiff from Ft. Yukon to Dawson City, by circumstances over which it had no control; in other words, it bases it upon the ground of an act of God. Now, I am not going to read to you the more accurate statement that I gave to you of another case of what constitutes the act of God. In order to excuse nonperformance of a contract on the ground of an act of God, there must be no mixture in that, first, of want of diligence; there must be no admixture of negligence; there must be no admixture of want of judgment or skill. In an act of God no amount of judgment or skill or wisdom can prevent the damage or injury. That is what distinguishes it from other things that have connected with them the agency of man." This instruction, while brief, we think, was explicit and correct; and the other instructions asked, as we have said before, are not applicable, for the reason that this was the only real contest in the case, viz., whether the expedition failed by reason of the act of God. There is no pretext that there was any opportunity for this passenger to have reached Dawson by any other boat during the season of 1897. There was virtually an-abandonment of the trip by the company. This is shown by the testimony of the captain of the boat, Capt. Barr. His testimony is to the effect that the water was so low in the Yukon river that the boat could not proceed, and that there was no probability or expectation of any boat getting up the river that fall. In fact, it is conceded that the passengers understood that they had to disembark either at Munook, Tanana, Ft. Yukon, or Rampart City. Indeed, the captain stated that he posted a bulletin up showing the passengers how many pounds of provisions they could buy to sustain them during the winter; that they could get them there or at Rampart City; and he stated that, if they got off at either of those places, he would give them each their proportion of the load of the boat that consisted of provisions, divide the cargo up, and allow each passenger to take a ticket or an order for transportation on the boat the next trip it would make. And, showing conclusively that the next trip which was contemplated was the next season, and that it was not expected by the company that that or any other boat belonging to the company could go up the river later in that season, he stated that ice had already begun to form in the river. He testified on page 64 of the record as follows: "Why, they asked to see Mr. Weare, and Mr. Weare had a talk with them in the cabin of the boat. Took occasion to reprimand me for giving them tickets for next season." So that it plainly appears that the trip was abandoned at least for that year; and, that being the case, the instructions asked for by the appellant, even if otherwise constituting the law, were not in point, under the undisputed testimony in the case.

The last error assigned is for the sustaining of an objection to a question propounded to witness Barr, in which he stated that they had agreed to release the boat from all responsibility in case they were taken back to St. Michael. This statement was alleged to have been made to a Mr. Weare, and it was objected to on the ground that it was not responsive to the question asked. It is contended that this conversation should have been admitted by this witness, for the reason that it was testified to by the complainant's witnesses Overstreet and Lambert; but we think the testimony was properly ruled out by the trial court, for the reason that this conversation was not the conversation which had been testified to by the witnesses for the respondent. At least, it was not identified as such, and it was not shown that the respondent here had anything to do with or was in any way concerned in the propositions that were discussed in that conversation.

We think there were no prejudicial errors committed by the court in the trial of this cause, and the judgment will be affirmed.

Gordon, Ch. J., and Fullerton, Anders, and Reavis, JJ., concur.

Rehearing denied.

44 L. R. A.

PHILADELPHIA MORTGAGE & TRUST COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

P. B. M. MILLER, Respt.

(.....Wash.....)

1. Evidence that a declaration of homestead was made is not admissible as tending to prove the intention with which articles in controversy, claimed to be fixtures, were affixed to the premises.
2. Stock mantels sold separately and made adaptive to any kind of a house, and which support themselves without any fastenings, or may be fastened merely by screws to render them more stable, and bath tubs resting upon legs and attachable to any heating system, and a hot-water heater attached to a building only by its plumbing connections, do not constitute fixtures as matter of law, but may be found by a jury to be removable.

(February 27, 1899.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover possession of certain articles which were alleged to have been fixtures to a mortgaged house and to have been wrongfully removed by the mortgagor. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Smith & Cole, for appellant:

The manner, purpose, and effect of annexation to the freehold must be regarded. If a building is erected for a definite purpose, or to enhance its value for occupation, whatever is built into it to further these objects becomes a part of it, even though there be no permanent fastenings, such as would cause permanent injury, if removed.

Cherry v. Arthur, 5 Wash. 788; Wade v. Donau Brewing Co. 10 Wash. 284; McConnell v. Blood, 123 Mass. 47, 25 Am. Rep. 12; German Sav. & L. Soc. v. Weber, 16 Wash. 95, 38 L. R. A. 267.

The intention with which the annexation is made is a controlling element in the decision of this question.

Washington Nat. Bank v. Smith, 15 Wash. 169.

The jury could have returned the verdict that it did only on the assumption that these articles were pieces of furniture. Neither authority, precedent, nor common sense will sustain this view.

Capehart v. Foster, 61 Minn. 132; Woodham v. First Nat. Bank, 48 Minn. 67.

Messrs. William C. Keith and Preston, Carr, & Gilman, for respondent:

The mortgagor's intention must be gathered from the circumstances surrounding the transaction, and from what was said and done at the time, and cannot be affected by his state of mind retained as a secret.

NOTE.—As to what part of the finishing of house will be regarded as removable fixtures, see also German Sav. & L. Soc. v. Weber (Wash.) 38 L. R. A. 267.

Washington Nat. Bank v. Smith, 15 Wash. 169.

This question of intent, and consequently the question whether a particular article is a fixture or not, is a mixed question of law and fact the determination of which must be left to the jury under proper instructions from the court.

9 Enc. of Pl. & Pr. p. 17; Scobell v. Block, 82 Hun, 223; Traders' Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 6 Kan. App. 400; Ames v. Trenton Brew. Co. 56 N. J. Eq. 309; Seeger v. Pettit, 77 Pa. 437, 18 Am. Rep. 452; National Bank v. North, 160 Pa. 303.

The time, manner, and purpose of annexation, the use to which the property is to be put, the relationship of the various parties, and above all the intention with which the property is attached, are elements which must be taken into consideration.

Washington Nat. Bank v. Smith, 15 Wash. 169; Chase v. Tacoma Box Co. 11 Wash. 377; Cherry v. Arthur, 5 Wash. 787; Loan v. Gregg, 55 Mo. App. 581; McKeage v. Hancock F. Ins. Co. 81 N. Y. 38, 37 Am. Rep. 471.

In National Bank v. North, 160 Pa. 303, it was held that radiators and valves, which may be readily detached from the distributing pipes by which heat is supplied to a dwelling house, are not part of the realty, though the owner of the house when he put them in had an undisclosed intention of making them such.

Dunbar, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The respondent borrowed $6,000 from appellant, and secured payment of same by mortgage upon two lots in Seattle, on which was at the time a residence in which were domiciled respondent and family. At the time of the execution of the mortgage, there were in the residence four mantels. These mantels were of hardwood, the frames standing above the brick projection of the fireplace, and extending down each side to the floor. They were about 7 or 8 feet high, consisting of a large center plate mirror, and a series of small mirrors, brackets, and shelves. Subsequent to the execution of the mortgage, there was also placed in the residence a porcelain bathtub standing on four legs, and connected in the usual manner with the soil pipes. A hot-water heater was also connected with the building by the usual methods of plumbing. Appellant foreclosed its mortgage, and, upon the vacation of the premises by the respondent, he took from the house the mantels, the hot-water boiler, and the bathtub above described. The present action was brought to replevin the said mantels, bathtub, and heater. The matter was submitted to a jury, and a verdict was rendered in favor of the respondent. Judgment was entered, from which this appeal was taken. So that it will be seen that the question to determine here is whether or not these articles in dispute were fixtures or chattels.

There are three assignments of error: (1) That the court erred in refusing to allow the declaration of homestead to be admitted in evidence; (2) that the court erred in not 44 L. R. A.

permitting testimony as to whether said residence was a finished residence without said articles annexed to it, and whether the value of the premises as a residence was impaired by their removal; and (3) that the evidence did not sustain the verdict. Plaintiff offered in evidence a certified copy of the record of declaration of homestead made by Eva J. Miller, wife of the respondent, which instrument, it is alleged, was offered for the purpose of indicating the intention of the respondent and wife to make said premises their homestead and any fixtures attached thereto permanent fixtures. To this offer counsel for respondent objected, and the objection was sustained. It seems to us that this evidence was incompetent and immaterial. There was no controversy over the fact that the house was built for the permanent residence of the respondent; and, if there had been, the fact of having filed a declaration of homestead would not tend to prove the intention with which the articles in controversy were affixed. The homestead declaration might have been filed at any time, and it might have been filed prior to or subsequent to the affixing of the hot-water boiler or bathtub to the building. We think that the evidence offered was absolutely immaterial, and was properly refused. Neither was it material under the theory that the intention of the mortgagor must govern whether the residence was a finished residence, without these disputed articles being annexed to it or not. The condition of the house was testified to, and the jury, if it was material to determine the question of whether the house was or was not finished, must have determined that question from the testimony submitted. And the offer to prove that the value of the premises as a residence was impaired by their removal was equally immaterial and irrelevant, for it is self-evident that the house would be of less value after the furniture was taken out than it would be with the furniture, conceding that the furniture was worth anything, and that concession or rather allegation of value is made by the complaint. So that the only remaining question is as to the character of these pieces of furniture.

There is a wilderness of authority on this question of fixtures, and a hopeless conflict of decision. We have examined the cases cited by the appellant which have been decided by this court, and are unable to conclude that they tend to sustain its contention; and other cases, as we have before indicated, are so conflicting that it would be profitless to undertake to review or harmonize them. The question of whether or not the particular piece of furniture or machinery is a chattel or fixture has been held by a majority of the courts to be a mixed question of law and fact. In this case the court instructed the jury. These instructions were not excepted to, and must be presumed to have correctly stated the law; and, the jury having found the facts in favor of the respondent, we would be loath to disturb their findings, unless we were compelled to say that, as a matter of law, the property sued for was a part of the realty. In investigating a question of this kind, we cannot shut our eyes to the many changes that have been wrought by time in the fashion and character of household furnishings. Anciently, mantels were uniformly built as a part of the house, and therefore became a fixture to the realty. The house was built with reference to the mantel, and the mantel with reference to the house. It was a part of the plans and specifications of the house, and could not have been removed without materially affecting, not only the appearance, but the real usefulness, of the house. But advancing mechanical science and taste have evolved an altogether differently constructed mantel, and mantels such as are described by the testimony in this case are now constructed without reference to any particular house or particular fireplace. They are what are called "stock" mantels, and are sold separately, and made adaptive to any kind of a house. They are, in fact, as much a separate article of merchandise as a bedstead or a table. So that, regarding the changed conditions in this respect, the rules of law must be changed and adapted to the changed character of the furniture. A few years ago, sideboards were constructed in, and were made a part of, the house, and were, of necessity, fixtures; while now they are ordinarily separate pieces of furniture, and, by common consent, are moved from one house to another. The same advancement has been made in bathtubs. The old-fashioned bathtub, that was sealed in and actually made a part of the bathroom, has largely given place to the more convenient bathtub, that rests upon legs, and can be attached to any heating system that happens to prevail in the house where it is used. And so with heaters or boilers. In this instance the boiler is in no way attached to the building, excepting by its plumbing connections. It could be detached without in any way injuring the realty; and we see no reason why it should be considered a fixture any more than the ordinary stove which is connected by pipes to the boiler and to the plumbing system generally. One could be as easily detached as the other, and yet we think it has never been held by any court or contended by anyone that a stove, though connected by pipes to the plumbing system, was a fixture which could not be removed. In this instance the testimony was to the effect that these articles were not placed in the building at the time of its erection and completion, nor for a long time thereafter; that the mantels were not contemplated in the plans or drawings for the erection of the premises, nor included in the specifications under which said building was afterwards completed; nor was there any provision made for the reception in said building of said articles. The testimony shows that the building back of the mantels, or that portion of it which was concealed by the mantels, was plastered and calcimined; that for about three years the mantels were not fastened to the wall in any way, but supported themselves in the position they occupied; and that, after that time, they were fastened to the wall by screws, to render them more stable, and keep them from toppling. The boiler and bathtub were not placed in the building for several years after the mortgage was given.

The question of fact having been submitted to the jury under proper instructions, and a verdict having been rendered in favor of the respondent, the judgment will be affirmed.

Gordon, Ch. J., and Anders, Reavis, and Fullerton, JJ., concur.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

Walter J. LAMBERT, Appt.,
v.

P. NICKLAS et al.

(.....W. Va.....)

- *1. One who keeps a horse or other live stock for compensation has a lien thereon for such compensation by Code 1891, chap. 100, § 15.
- *2. An innkeeper or keeper of livestock who has a lien on the property does not lose the lien by levying an attachment upon the property.

(December 7, 1898.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Circuit Court for Berkeley County in fa-

*Headnotes by BRANNON, P.

NOTE.—The authorities on the effect of an attachment as a waiver of a lien are few and are well presented by the opinion and briefs of the above case. That levying an execution on avor of defendants in an action brought to enjoin the levying of an execution upon property upon which plaintiff claimed a lien. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. H. Travers and Wisner & Woods, for appellant:

The first principle laid down by the courts was that whenever the law compelled a bailee to receive property, and made him responsible for it, it gave him a lien upon it for his charges.

M'Intyre v. Carter, 2 Watts & S. 392, 37 Am. Dec. 519, and note on 522; Grinnell v. Cook, 3 Hill, 485, 38 Am. Dec. 667, and note.

The inn-keeper and the common carrier were about the only bailees who could claim a lien upon this principle.

1 Jones, Liens, §§ 262, 498; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 590.

mortgaged chattels, where the mortgage constituted only a lien, will not waive the lien upon exempt property included in the mortgage, see Barchard v. Kohn (Ill.) 29 L. R. A. 803.

The courts, however, soon extended the rule so as to give a lien to every bailee for hire, who by his labor and skill had added value to the property bailed to him.

2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 12, and note 2; Steinman v. Wilkins, 7 Watts & S. 466, 42 Am. Dec. 254.

This included the bailee for hire of live stock who, by any means within his control, had added to the value of the live stock.

13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 944; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 13; Steinman v. Wilkins, 7 Watts & S. 466, 42 Am. Dec. 254.

But it did not include the bailee of live stock for hire who merely fed such live stock, but did not add to its value.

2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 12, and note; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 943; Kelsey v. Layne, 28 Kan. 218, 42 Am. Rep. 158; Grinnell v. Cook, 3 Hill, 485, 38 Am. Dec. 663; 1 Jones, Liens, § 641.

The evident object of the statute, therefore, is to give to the bailee of live stock for hire the same lien that all other bailees for hire had, irrespective of the question of value added to the live stock. Statutes with like object have also been enacted in many other states.

1 Jones, Liens, §§ 646, etc.; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 945, and note 5; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 13; Kelsey v. Layne, 28 Kan. 218, 42 Am. Rep. 158.

The statute gives an inn-keeper's lien which extends to all goods brought to the inn by the guest.

1 Jones, Liens, §§ 498, 518; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. pp. 45, 46; Cook v. Karne, 13 Or. 482, 57 Am. Rep. 30.

The lien of the plaintiff, therefore, extends to all of Brown's property kept at his stables.

1 Jones, Liens, § 698; Browne, Bailm. 49; Am. Dig. (1891) 2808. § 2; Caldwell v. Tutt, 10 Lea, 258, 43 Am. Rep. 307.

The question of waiver is one of intention.

28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. pp. 526, 528; 1 Jones, Liens, §§ 999, 1013; Warren v. Branch, 15 W. Va. 38; Bansimer v. Fell, 39 W. Va. 454; Hoxie v. Home Ins. Co. 32 Conn. 21, 85 Am. Dec. 240; Townsend v. Newell, 14 Pick. 332; Brennan v. Swasey, 16 Cal. 140, 76 Am. Dec. 507; Kirkwood v. Hoxie, 95 Mich. 62.

The circumstances surrounding the plaintiff show that he did not intend to waive his lien by his attempt to attach the property upon which it rested.

1 Jones, Liens, § 999; Townsend v. Newell, 14 Pick. 332.

The mere taking of security for the amount of a debt for which a lien is claimed does not destroy the lien, unless there is something in the facts of the case, or in the nature of the security taken, which is inconsistent with the existence of the lien and destructive of it.

Singer Mfg. Co. v. Miller (Minn.) 21 L. R. A. 231, note; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 49; 1 Jones, Liens, § 1011.

Plaintiff merely had a right to detain the property from its owner until certain charges upon it were paid.

44 L. R. A.

1 Jones, Liens, §§ 335, 1033, and note 1; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 46; Doane v. Russell, 3 Gray, 382.

A waiver must operate by estoppel, or under an agreement based upon a valuable consideration.

1 Jones, Liens, § 999; 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 531, and note; Muhleman v. National Ins. Co. 6 W. Va. 510; Ripley v. Aetna Ins. Co. 30 N. Y. 136, 86 Am. Dec. 362; Lantz v. Vermont L. Ins. Co. 139 Pa. 546, 10 L. R. A. 577.

To constitute a waiver, or loss, of the lien the change of possession must be from the holder of the lien to the owner of the property. It must be a delivery to the owner.

1 Jones, Liens, § 907; Moore v. Hitchcock, 4 Wend. 295; Stickney v. Allen, 10 Gray, 352; Sears v. Wills, 4 Allen, 212; McFarland v. Wheeler, 26 Wend. 467.

The true principle underlying the doctrine of the lien is not that the inn-keeper and the common carrier have a lien because they are compelled to receive goods and insure their safety.

The lien is not a consequence of the compulsion, nor of the insurance. Moreover, the inn-keeper and the common carrier may each demand payment of their charges before receiving the goods.

3 Minor, Inst. 289; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 37, note 5; Browne, Bailm. 95.

Nor is it that all bailees who have added value to the property bailed to them have a lien upon it.

Steinman v. Wilkins, 7 Watts & S. 466, 42 Am. Dec. 254; Kelsey v. Layne, 28 Kan. 218, 42 Am. Rep. 158.

The true principle is, that the lien grows out of a contract of sale.

Ibid.

The seller of personal property has his lien until the property is delivered to the buyer.

2 Benjamin, Sales, §§ 1125, 1186; 1 Benjamin, Sales, § 351; 1 Jones, Liens, §§ 806, 821; Parks v. Hall, 2 Pick. 206; Arnold v. Delano, 4 Cush. 33, 50 Am. Dec. 754; Haskins v. Warren, 115 Mass. 514; Freeman v. Nichols, 116 Mass. 309; Goodwin v. Boston & L. R. Co. 111 Mass. 487; Gregory v. Morris, 96 U. S. 619, 623, 24 L. ed. 740, 741.

The plaintiff having the same lien as the seller of personal property, would not have lost it until the property was delivered to the owner.

Steinman v. Wilkins, 7 Watts & S. 466, 42 Am. Dec. 256.

The plaintiff should not be prejudiced because of his futile effort to attach the property held by his lien.

1 Jones, Liens, § 1013; Lord v. Jones, 24 Me. 439, 41 Am. Dec. 391; Bansimer v. Fell, 39 W. Va. 454.

Messrs. Flick, Westenhaver, & Baker, for appellees:

The term "livery-stable keeper" is a term of definite meaning and in general use; and means a place where horses are groomed, fed, and hired, and vehicles are let.

13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 935; Anderson, Law Dict. 44; Grinnell v. Cook, 3 Hill, 485, 38 Am. Dec. 663, and note.

Such persons have no lien on the property placed with them; because it is essential to the existence of such a lien that the person claiming it shall remain in the exclusive and continuous possession of it. If the owner gets the property into his own hands without fraud, or the lienor voluntarily parts with the property, the lien is at an end, and will not revive on a return of the goods.

Grinnell v. Cook, 3 Hill, 485, 38 Am. Dec. 663; Bevan v. Waters, 3 Car. & P. 520; Jones v. Thurloc, 8 Mod. 172; Jones v. Pearle, 1 Strange, 556; Sweet v. Pym, 1 East, 4.

Whenever the relation between the persons is such that the owner has the right at all times to take the property into possession, and exercises the right, the lien does not arise, or, if so, it is severed each and every time the owner uses it.

1 Jones, Liens, §§ 20-23.

Only the common-law lien of inn-keepers is conferred by the statute, that is a lien which can only be created and kept alive by an exclusive possession of the lienor.

1 Jones, Liens, §§ 647-682.

Special privileges such as this statute creates, like the liens of mechanics, are not extended by implication.

McGugin v. Ohio River R. Co. 33 W. Va. 68.

Plaintiff has merged or waived his lien:

First, by reducing to judgment and suing out an attachment for all of his bill, which had accrued prior to our execution lien, he merged all his antecedent rights, growing out of the same cause of action.

2 Black, Judgm. § 674; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 336; Freeman, Judgm. 3d ed. § 216; Drake, Attachm. 6th ed. p. 224, a.

Second, in seeking a lien by attachment, he made his election of remedies, and waived his right to a retaining lien.

Central R. Co. v. New Jersey West Line R. Co. 32 N. J. Eq. 67, and note; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 247, 250; 2 Black, Judgm. §§ 678, 632.

Third, his action in seeking to subject this property by attachment, is inconsistent with the present theory of his rights, and, having adopted one claim of right, he cannot, when it proves unsuccessful, fall back on an inconsistent one.

2 Black, Judgm. 632; 1 Jones, Liens, §§ 1014, 1019, 1118; Hanna v. Phelps, 7 Ind. 21, 63 Am. Dec. 410, note, p. 414.

Parting with possession destroys liens.

Poking v. Flanagan, 41 W. Va. 191; Bullitt v. Winston, 1 Munf. 269; Dorrier v. Masters, 53 Va. 459; Herman, Executions, p. 244, § 172; Very v. Watkins, 23 How. 473, 16 L. ed. 522; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 450.

A lien of this sort is defined to be "a right in one man to detain that which is in his possession, belonging to another, till certain demands of him, the person in possession, are satisfied."

13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 574; 1 Jones, Liens, § 3; McFarland v. Wheeler, 26 Wend. 472.

As the lien is simply a right to hold or detain property till a demand is satisfied, it 41 L. R. A.

follows that in order to create or continue the lien, possession is essential.

1 Jones, Liens, §§ 20, 21; Bigelow v. Heaton, 4 Denio, 496; Sweet v. Pym, 1 East, 4; Kruger v. Wilcox, 1 Ambl. 252; Wheeler v. McFarland, 26 Wend. 472; Grinnell v. Cook, 3 Hill, 485, 38 Am. Dec. 663, and note.

Whenever, therefore, the person claiming the lien delivers possession of the property, and such delivery is without fraud, he loses his lien.

11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 47; Perkins v. Boardman, 14 Gray, 481; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 585; 1 Jones, Liens, § 308; Wingard v. Banning, 39 Cal. 516; Jacobs v. Latour, 5 Bing. 130, 2 Moore & P. 201; Re Coumbe, 24 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 519.

Brannon, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

Lambert kept a horse and buggy for Brown, claiming a lien for the keeping, refusing to let Brown take them without payment. Brown agreed that they should stand good for their keeping. Brown became insolvent, and assigned for the benefit of creditors, but did not include this property in his assignment. Lambert sued for keeping the property, levied an attachment on it, the officer leaving it in his possession. The attachment was quashed, but personal judgment was rendered for the debt. Afterwards, Nicklas Bros. & Co. levied an execution against Brown on the property, and Lambert procured an injunction against selling, and the court held that Lambert had no lien, dissolved the injunction, and gave the execution preference over Lambert's lien, and Lambert appealed.

Lambert claims a lien for keeping a horse and buggy at his stable belonging to Brown, under § 15, chap. 100, Code, that "persons keeping live stock for hire shall have the same rights and remedies for the recovery of their charges therefor as inn-keepers have." It is questioned by counsel whether Lambert ever had any lien. Counsel say that agisters and liverymen have no lien at common law, as is true. 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 943. They say that an inn-keeper has a lien on the goods of his guest, as he has sole and exclusive possession, not concurrently with the owner; but that one who merely feeds and takes care of a horse has not sole possession, but one concurrent with the possession of the owner; that only exclusive possession gives a lien. Now, I see little difference as to possession. The transient guest sometimes takes his horse and uses him during his stay at the inn, as does one who merely keeps his horse at the stable. It is the keeping the guest and the keeping the horse that gives rise to the lien, not alone possession, that being only the means of enforcing pay. It is very plain to me that the statute intended to remedy the defect of the common law, and give anyone keeping live stock for compensation a lien for such compensation,—a lien like that of the inn-keeper. Of course, it does not mean one who keeps stock to be hired, as there the compensation goes to the other party for use of the stock; but it means to give a lien to anyone who, for hire or compensation, keeps stock. Lambert clearly had a lien.

But it is said Lambert waived or forfeited his lien by bringing action for the same demand before a justice, and levying an attachment upon the property. First, it is argued that judgment in this action merged and destroyed the lien. Judgment does merge the cause of action, so that it cannot be sued on again; but I understand that in law the debt is one thing and its lien on given property another thing, and that judgment does not destroy the lien. The creditor may enforce both, and his election of one does not exclude the other as a remedy. "Though the debt is merged in the judgment, its nature is not destroyed or affected; and, if the debt was one for which a lien was given at common law or by statute, the lien continues after judgment." 1 Jones, Liens, § 1032a.

But it is claimed with more confidence by counsel for appellees that the lien given by this statute is like that given an inn-keeper by common law, and that, as loss of possession destroys the inn-keeper's lien, so the levy of the attachment took away from Lambert the possession, and gave the officer possession, and thus lost Lambert's lien. There is quoted to us the passage from Jones on Liens, § 1014, saying: "An attachment of goods by one who claims a lien upon them to secure the same debt for which the lien is claimed, is a waiver of the lien. The attachment is in effect an assertion that the property attached belongs to the defendant. Having made the attachment, he is estopped from afterwards asserting the contrary." Also Herman's Law of Executions, § 172, saying: "Taking property in execution at the suit of a party having a lien thereon destroys the lien by changing the possession from the bailee to the officer, even though the property is left with the party. The possession must of necessity vest in the officer in order to enable him to sell the property." And citations from 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 586, and Jones, Liens, § 328, to the effect that a carrier's lien is lost by his attaching property. As to the clause from Jones, that "the attachment is in effect an assertion that the property attached belongs to the defendant," I will say that there is no force in it, because by claiming a lien the plaintiff asserts that it belongs to the defendant as much as by attaching it. He asserts the same thing by both lien and attachment, and no estoppel can, therefore, be based upon any contradiction between the two. Very little authority is cited for the above-cited doctrine; the same is cited for all the propositions above given. Regarding it unreasonable, I have sought to trace its origin and find it in an English decision in 1828 (Jacobs v. Lattour, 5 Bing. 130), holding that where one entitled to a lien as stable keeper and trainer sued, and sold and bought the horses under execution, he could claim, in trover against him by an assignee in bankruptcy, only under the execution, not under his lien, his lien being waived by the execution. Legg v. Willard, 17 Pick. 140, 28 Am. Dec. 44 L. R. A.

282, seems to hold that when one has a lien, and attaches for the same debt, his lien is gone; but it is a mere assertion, and no discussion of any authority. Wingard v. Banning, 39 Cal. 543, is cited for the proposition; but there the affidavit declared the creditor had no lien, which was an express renunciation of it. It seems only three out of five judges concurred in the opinion. In Arendale v. Morgan, 5 Sneed, 703, the question is considered, and the court refused to follow that doctrine, and held that where one has property in pledge for debt, and parts with possession with intent to abandon the lien, as if he agrees that it be attached at the suit of a third person, it is gone; but not so where he attaches for his own debt. This is the true position.

To sustain this loss of lien we must place it on one or the other of two ideas,—intentional waiver, or from loss of possession. As to the first, authority is abundant to show that one will not be held to waive a lien unless the intent be express or very plain and clear. The presumption is always against it. Merely taking a new security does not. Bansimer v. Fell, 39 W. Va. 448; Hopkins v. Detweiler, 25 W. Va. 734, 748; Hess v. Dille, 23 W. Va. 97. So with the innkeeper's lien; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 49.

And as to loss of lien by loss of possession: An innkeeper having a lien has no right to sell the property without a judicial proceeding. If he does, he is liable to an action of trover for its unlawful conversion, besides losing his lien. His only remedy is to hold it till payment. Unreasonable this is; but, where no statute can be found providing for a sale, it is so, by much authority. 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. 46; Jones, Liens, § 523. In fact, on the mere strength of lien, he can sue neither at law nor in equity, if there is no statute to allow it. It is different from a pledge or pawn. 13 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 127; 1 Jones, Liens, §§ 1033, 1038. The horse is in the innkeeper's stable eating its head off, and he has no remedy. Suppose, however, by reason of nonresidence or other cause, the innkeeper can sue out an attachment, why shall he not do so? He is not thus waiving, but enforcing, his lien. Why it should be said that, when the officer levies on the property to enforce this lien, the innkeeper loses his lien because he gives up possession, I cannot see. The officer is his agent for this purpose. To say so is technical in the highest degree, and defeats justice. The innkeeper is not surrendering possession to the owner, nor to an officer acting in furtherance of his demand. He could bring a suit, as shown above, without forfeiting his lien; and by resorting to an attachment he simply availed himself of a fact giving him right to attachment to enforce a debt for which there was a lien, using a cumulative remedy. Houck on Mechanics' Lien Law, § 6, says: "If possession is relinquished after the lien attached, the lien is gone; for, by parting with possession, the creditor shows that he trusts to the personal credit of the debtor," and cites numerous authorities. This is so where he lets the owner or an officer under process for debts of others have possession. Then you can fairly say that he looks to the debtor only; and that, as Houck says, is the reason why surrender of possession destroys the lien. But how can we say that Lambert intended to look to the personal credit of Brown by an act which told the very reverse, and told that he looked to the property for pay, not to Brown? Furthermore, Brown expressly pledged the horse to Lambert for his keep. Lambert could sell it as a pawn. This he could do by agent, and the agent's possession would be his. Is the officer anything but his agent? He is responsible for the officer's trespass, because he acts for him. Judge Story condemns this doctrine as not well established, and says the Massachusetts ruling was local to it. Story, Bailm. § 366. In Townsend v. Newell, 14 Pick. 332, one had goods, with right to lien, and an attachment was levied in favor of a creditor, and he refused to give them up, but kept possession, and gave a receipt to the officer for them. Later he levied an attachment for his own lien debt, still retaining possession, but receipting to the officer for the goods. It was held that the lien was not lost. There, as in this case, the officer let the lien owner keep the goods in his custody. In that case, it is true, he expressly claimed his lien; but who imagines that Lambert intended to give up his lien? His attachment itself speaks the negative. In that case, after levy, it was as much the officer's possession as in this, and the court did not give it the force of forfeiture of lien, but said, as the party did not intend to surrender it, it still held good. There is no evidence that Lambert intended to give up his lien, and if it stands on intention, and not on loss of possession, he who asserts such intention must make it clear. In Whitaker v. Sumner, 20 Pick. 399, where one having a pledge allowed a levy for a debt once owned by him and debts of strangers, he was held to have lost the lien; but Chief Justice Shaw was careful to say, "We would not be understood hereby to hold that an attachment under all circumstances, though made by the party holding the pledge, or by his consent, would be a waiver of his lien." I have not said anything about jurisdiction in equity, as the question was not raised or discussed.

Decree reversed, and the case is remanded, with direction to the circuit court to enter a decree allowing Lambert's debt as a lien to be paid out of the proceeds of the property, in preference to the execution of Nicklas Bros. & Co.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

City of MARSHFIELD, Respt.,

v.

WISCONSIN TELEPHONE COMPANY,
Appt.

(.....Wis.....)

1. An injunction is properly granted in a suit by a city against an unauthorized obstruction of a street by telephone poles.
2. Placing telephone poles in a city street without any permit or direction from the city authorities, and without even giving the board of public works, to which the city charter gave authority in the matter, any time to act on an application for a permit, is not justified by the fact that there were no ordinances of the common council or regulations of the board of public works in relation to pole setting.

(April 4, 1899.)

NOTE.—Injunctions by municipalities against nuisances by railroads and electrical companies.

I. Railroads.

II. Telegraph and telephone poles.

The question of municipal control over railroads and other electrical companies as nuisances upon streets is treated in note to Cape May v. Cape May, D. B. & S. P. R. Co. (N. J. L.) 39 L. R. A. 608.

Upon the question of equity jurisdiction over nuisances in general at the instance of municipalities, see note to — L. R. A. —.

The general question of municipal control by injunction over nuisances upon highways and streets will be found in note to Drew v. Geneva, 42 L. R. A. 814.
44 L. R. A.

See also 47 L. R. A. 104.

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the Circuit Court for Wood County refusing to dissolve a temporary injunction which had been granted to restrain defendant from setting poles in a street in the plaintiff city without its consent. Affirmed.

Statement by Bardeen, J.:

The defendant, the Wisconsin Telephone Company, is a corporation organized under the laws of this state, and is authorized by its charter to build telephone lines and to conduct a telephone business in this state. It maintains seventy-five different telephone exchanges in the cities and towns of Wisconsin, with wires, strung on poles, connecting said exchanges with each other and with exchanges in other states. It has constructed a line from the city of Stevens Point, westerly, to the city of Chippewa Falls, passing just outside the northerly limits of the city

I. Railroads.

In Metropolitan City R. Co. v. Chicago, 96 Ill. 620, 628, it is said the state has a like control over highways, streets, and public grounds as is exercised by the Crown in England, and may have like remedies against persons unlawfully obstructing the same. A portion of the political power of the state is committed to municipalities. The general assembly of this state has vested in cities, villages, and towns the right to control the use of highways, streets, and public grounds within their respective limits, and they are invested with the authority of the Crown and of the state, in this respect, to file bills to prevent and remove obstructions from the streets, highways, and public grounds of Marshfield, which was completed in the spring of 1898. It was desirous of establishing a public station in said city, and proposed to construct a line of poles along Central avenue to some convenient point where the station was to be located. Central avenue is the main business street of the city, and has been paved along the business portion thereof, and upon it the greater portion of the travel and business of the city is done. It has been the policy of the city to keep that portion of this street between D and Sixth streets clear of all obstructions, and for more than five years it has uniformly denied to all persons the privilege of placing telephone, telegraph, electric light, or other poles in or along the same. In February, 1898, the city granted to R. L. Kraus and K. W. Doege an exclusive permit for fifteen years to erect and maintain a system of wires and poles upon the streets of said city, for the purpose of establishing a telephone exchange therein, upon certain conditions, specified in the ordinance, and under the direction of the board of public works. On October 14, 1898, the defendant with a force of men commenced the erection of a run of poles from the intersection of its main line with Central avenue southerly along said avenue, towards the central and main portion of the city, and placed and set a number of poles therein, without permission of any of the city authorities. The latter objected to this procedure, and under their direction the poles so set were chopped down and removed. Thereupon the city commenced this action to restrain defendants from placing any poles on Central avenue, or in any of the streets of the city, except under the direction and with the consent of the board of public works; claiming that the digging up of the soil and pavement, and the placing of poles in said street, would be a permanent injury and obstrucunder their control. To the same effect, see Watertown v. Cowen, 4 Paige, 510, 27 Am. Dec. 80; Jacksonville v. Jacksonville R. Co. 67 Ill. 540.

So, in a case wherein the municipal authorities sought to restrain a railroad as a nuisance upon the streets, it was said that the public right over streets is subject to the legislative control over them, and, as to the public, the legislature can authorize the abandonment of a street in toto, or turn it in part over to a private enterprise, so it may legalize the operation of a steam railroad transversely or longitudinally over or along a highway, but the legislative authority must appear either in express terms, or must flow as a necessary implication from powers expressly granted. Burlington v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 56 N. J. Eq. 259.

It may be asserted, as a general rule, that a railroad company, built by authority of law, is not a nuisance, and therefore, if such a company is acting within its authority, and what it threatens to do is authorized by law, there is no equity to interfere, and its actions can work no legal injury to the public, or to private individuals, and although inconvenience or loss may be suffered it is damnum absque injuria. It is essential to a nuisance, either public or private, that it be a thing done or suffered contrary to law. Faust v. Passenger R. Co. 3 Phila. 164. In such cases, therefore, neither a private person, nor, it would seem, a municipal corporation, can enjoin the same as a nuisance.

And an injunction at the instance of a municipality to prevent an alleged irreparable injury, such as a public nuisance, is properly refused, when neither the petition nor the evidence sets forth facts sufficient to enable the court to determine the necessity for such injunction. Burris v. Columbus, 105 Ga. 42.

A railroad company duly authorized by an act of the general assembly to construct and operate a side track of its railroad in a given street of the city, the fee of which is in the state, will not be enjoined at the instance of the public authorities from so doing, merely upon the theory that the laying and operating of such track will be a nuisance which will subject the property to irreparable injury, where such injunction is merely sought to prevent consequential damages to property located upon such street. Ibid.

So, in Atty. Gen. v. Pope, N. B. Eq. Cas. 272, the construction of a railroad in accordance with a statute authorizing its construction was held not enjoinable, on the ground that a nusance was thereby caused because of the interference with the public highway where such interference was temporary and not of a serious nature, and the statute authorizing the construction of the road contemplated that portions of the highway should be taken for the purpose of constructing the road.

Where power is vested in a railroad or other corporation to erect bridges and other works necessary for the completion of its road, such power must be exercised discreetly, and with a due regard to the privileges of others, and if an injurious and wanton exercise of it be shown to the court, it will interfere and regulate it upon proper principles, but to warrant such interference the exercise of power must be shown to be not only injurious, but wilfully and wantonly so, a mere mistake in judgment not being sufficient, as such is remedial at law. Atty. Gen., Pettee, v. Stevens, 1 N. J. Eq. 369, 384, 22 Am. Dec. 526. In this case relief was sought by citizens at the instance of the attorney general.

And where land is donated or dedicated to the public for certain specific and defined purposes, and such purposes are unmistakable, as soon as the lot is recorded, the statute, vesting the same in the municipal authorities in trust to and for the uses and purposes expressed or intended, declares the trust that the property shall be held for such use and no other, and the city accepting the trust has power to apply in equity to restrain the use of such property, for the street railways or other purposes contrary to the trust. Jacksonville v. Jacksonville R. Co. 67 Ill. 540, 544.

In this case it is said that a court of equity has the right to enforce the execution of a plainly declared trust, either upon the application of the owners of lots abutting on a public square, or upon the application of the city, the trustee, and the legislature cannot pervert the trust, and give the land to a private corporation such as a railroad company.

In the above case, an act of the legislature gave the corporation authority to construct and operate a railroad "in, over, across, and along any and all the avenues, streets, public grounds, squares, and alleys within the present and future corporate limits of the town." The company claimed the right to construct the track across a public square, operate its road there, and thus frustrate the original purposes for which the grant was dedicated, and destroy its future benefit and enjoyment as a public park. The court perpetually enjoined the company tion thereto. A temporary injunction was obtained and served. Thereupon defendants obtained an order to show cause why the injunctive order should not be vacated. On the hearing the defendants submitted a modified motion, to the effect that, if the court should be of opinion that the defendants should be restrained from constructing their line upon Central avenue, then that the order be so modified as to permit the line to be constructed upon some other streets in said city. Both motions were denied, and the original order was allowed to stand. This appeal is to review the order denying the motion to dissolve the injunction.

Messrs. Miller, Noyes, Miller, & Wahl, for appellant:

The streets in the city of Marshfield belong to the public, not to the city of Marshfield.

from all attempts to lay down the track of its road through or across the enclosed public square, and held that the attempted use of the square by the defendant, for the track of its road, was a manifest perversion of the trust created and declared, and would operate injuriously to the public and the abutting lotowners, and would mar the beauty of the road, and destroy it as a place of public recreation, which acts could not be justified.

Where, by a city charter, the complainants are given the control and supervision of the streets within the city limits, charged with the duty of keeping and maintaining them in a condition constantly fit for use, free and convenient for the public, a neglect of which duty is a crime for which they may be indicted and punished, the city has a right to file a bill for an injunction restraining the obstruction and destruction of the street by a street railway company in a manner rendering it extremely dangerous for a prudent man to use it. Newark v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 42 N. J. Eq. 196.

And, inasmuch as a town is responsible for the construction and amendment of highways, and town ways, and for damages to travelers for losses occasioned by obstructions and defects, it has the right to invoke the equity power vested in the court in cases of nuisances, to determine whether such a use of ways as claimed is, or is not, a justifiable act, under the provisions granted to a railroad company by its charter. Easton & A. R. Co. v. Greenwich Twp. 25 N. J. Eq. 565, 567, Affirming 24 N. J. Eq. 217; Springfield v. Connecticut River R. Co. 4 Cush. 63, 68.

So, when the power and authority to control and supervise its streets is conferred on a municipal corporation, it may, in its corporate name, institute appropriate judicial proceedings to prevent or remove such obstructions, and therefore, where it is not plainly shown that such power is not conferred by the act of incorporation of a city, the court will not say that it has not the right to institute and maintain, in its corporate name, a suit in equity to restrain a railroad company, in its use of the streets of the city, beyond the power conferred upon it by its franchise. Rio Grande R. Co. v. Brownsville, 45 Tex. 88, 92.

In Grey v. New York & P. Traction Co. (N. J. Eq.) 40 Atl. 21, 22, the defendant contended that the remedy by indictment would afford adequate relief, and that therefore the court should not interfere, even so far as to prevent the permanent completion and the continued

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 656, 675; Paine Lumber Co. v. Oshkosh, 89 Wis. 460.

The city of Marshfield has no proprietary interest in Central avenue or any other street.

Milwaukee v. Milwaukee & B. R. Co. 7 Wis. 85; Sheboygan v. Sheboygan & F. du L. R. Co. 21 Wis. 668; Janesville v. Carpenter, 77 Wis. 297, 8 L. R. A. 508; Waukesha Hygeia Mineral Spring Co. v. Waukesha, 83 Wis. 480; Neshkoro v. Nest, 85 Wis. 128.

Legislative authority given to a city "to lease, purchase, and hold" real property, and to sell and convey the same, does not authorize the purchase of a street.

Trester v. Sheboygan, 87 Wis. 500; State, Domestic Teleg. & Teleph. Co., v. Newark, 49 N. J. L. 344; Booth, Street Railway Law, p. 19, note.

Power to regulate and control streets does operation of the road, but the court held that in such a case the power of the court of equity might be justly called into requisition, upon the ground that a preliminary injunction was necessary for the full protection of the statutory rights of municipalities, the case resting upon the same basis as the right of a court of equity to interfere by preliminary injunction, where a public company, under cover of statutory authority, attempted to appropriate the lands of another without complying with the legal conditions precedent, either constitutional or statutory, and upon the further ground that, as the statutory right was clear, it would imperil the public control of highways, and deprive municipalities of the powers and advantages intended to be given their statutes, if, on the mere claim of right to occupy the streets without consent, the court should decline to interfere pending the final determination upon the claim.

Although a railroad company may be authorized to locate and construct its road at the termini mentioned in its charter, by such route as it may deem expedient, it will nevertheless be confined to a reasonable exercise of its charter powers, so as to avoid unnecessary or unreasonable injury to the other public highways, and for any plain abuse of its powers in this regard it may be restrained by injunction. Stroudsburg v. Wilkes-Barre & E. R. Co. 2 Pa. Dist. R. 507; Philadelphia, G. & N. R. Co. 2 Walker, 291, Cited in 2 Pa. Dist. R. 507. In these cases the injunction was sought at the instance of the municipal authorities.

Where the petition for an injunction was presented in the name of the state, at the instance or relation of citizens and trustees of the township, the court stated that the obligation imposed upon the railroad company to place the highway in such condition as not to impair its former usefulness to the public is a condition inseparable to the right or franchise granted to the company to cross the highway with its railroad, or to divert it from its location for the accommodation of the railroad, and while the company continues in the exercise of its franchise the state has a right to compel it to perform the condition upon which the franchise was granted, and this may be done by petition in chancery prosecuted by the attorney general in the name of the state. State, Little, v. Dayton & S. E. R. Co. 36 Ohio St. 434.

In granting an injunction to restrain the defendant company from making an illegal use of, and creating a public nuisance by constructing, not authorize the common council to grant telephone or other franchises.

Davis v. New York, 14 N. Y. 506, 67 Am. Dec. 186; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. ¶ 715-717, and cases there cited.

The city of Marshfield, under its charter, had not only no authority to grant any telephone franchise, but particularly not an exclusive franchise to Kraus & Doege.

Jackson County Horse R. Co. v. Interstate Rapid Transit R. Co. 24 Fed. Rep. 306; Wright v. Nagle, 101 U. S. 791, 25 L. ed. 921; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Louisiana Light & H. P. & Mfg. Co. 115 U. S. 653, 29 L. ed. 518; Saginaw Gaslight Co. v. Saginaw, 28 Fed. Rep. 534; State v. Milwaukee Gaslight Co. 29 Wis. 454, 9 Am. Rep. 598.

By the general statutes of the state, authority is given to all telephone companies to place poles along the streets and highways of the state.

Wis. Rev. Stat. § 1778.

a proposed double track upon certain streets of the city, the court stated that the right of the city to interfere in such cases ought to be considered as at rest, even though there was no complaint of injury to the immediate property of the corporation, the wrong being done to the citizens of the municipality and of the commonwealth generally. Philadelphia v. Thirteenth & F. Streets Pass. R. Co. 8 Phila. 648.

Where one has a license to interfere with the highway, as where a railroad company has authority to lay its track along, under, or over a highway, the terms of the license, so far as it directs the manner of such interference, must be complied with, and an interference in any other mode is a public nuisance, over which equity has jurisdiction in a suit by a city. Moundsville v. Ohio River R. Co. 37 W. Va. 92, 100, 20 L. R. A. 161, 163.

So, a license from a city council to a railroad company to build its road across, along, or upon a public street, gives it no power to destroy the street, and the company is bound to restore the street to its former state, or to such state as not unnecessarily to impair its usefulness to the public, and also to build proper crossings over the railroad and keep them in good repair, and if it fails to do so, the company may be compelled to do it by mandamus, and, as the company is guilty of maintaining a nuisance, equity may entertain a bill by a city to abate such nuisance, and may compel the company to perform its duty. Moundsville v. Ohio River R. Co. 37 W. Va. 92, 100, 20 L. R. A. 161.

And, though a railroad company may be authorized to cross a street on the same level as the street, and to raise or lower the highway for that purpose, nevertheless if they so execute it as they may deem to be their duty, but so as to create a public nuisance, a court of equity may interfere by way of injunction at the instance of a town council, and, if they proceed to do so, may restrain them thereby. Johnston v. Providence & S. R. Co. 10 R. I. 365.

In all suits by a municipality to restrain a nuisance by a railroad company in the use of the streets, where there is a grant of authority the grant is construed most liberally in favor of the public, and most rigidly against the company. Moundsville v. Ohio River R. Co. 37 W. Va. 92, 100, 20 L. R. A. 161.

It is contumacious and wrongful conduct for the officers of a railroad corporation to occupy a public highway with its track, practically destroying the street for purposes of public travel, and then defy or disregard all law and all au-

The authority granted by this statute is not conditioned upon the procurement of any consent or subordinate franchise from local authorities.

Young v. Yarmouth, 9 Gray, 388; Roberts v. Wisconsin Teleph. Co. 77 Wis. 589.

This statute applies to telephone companies.

Wisconsin Teleph. Co. v. Oshkosh, 62 Wis. 32; Roberts v. Wisconsin Teleph. Co. 77 Wis. 589; State, Wisconsin Teleph. Co., v. Janesville Street R. Co. 87 Wis. 78, 22 L. R. A. 759.

Section 1778, authorizing the construction of telephone lines upon the streets of a city, does not deprive the city of its police control.

State, Wisconsin Teleph. Co., v. Janesville Street R. Co. 87 Wis. 79, 22 L. R. A. 759; Wisconsin Teleph. Co. v. Oshkosh, 62 Wis. 40.

Section 7 of chapter 11 of the Marshfield city charter does not change the general rule thority invoked to compel them to repair the wrong which they have done to the public, and the courts would be impotent indeed if they could not correct such flagrant invasion of public right. Oshkosh v. Milwaukee & L. W. R. Co. 74 Wis. 534.

Where it is shown that the work of a railroad company, in erecting its road beyond the banks of a river, would obstruct navigation in a manner beyond what is reasonably necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of its enabling act, equity will restrain its work as a public nuisance. Newark Pl. Road & Ferry Co. v. Elmer, Van Wagenen, 9 N. J. Eq. 754, 758. In this case the attorney general brought suit at the instance of others, but whether on behalf of private parties or of the town or city authorities, does not clearly appear.

And, if the extension of a street railroad company, which it is sought to enjoin as a public nuisance and an obstruction to the street, is found to be a public nuisance, the remedy by way of injunction is complete, although no damage be shown. People v. Third Ave. R. Co. 45 Barb. 63, 68, 80 How. Pr. 121. In this case the injunction was sought by the people, but whether at the instance of the inhabitants or municipal authorities, does not appear.

The wrongful placing of abutments in the line of a highway by a railroad company cannot become a right, or be legalized by length of time, the same being a wrong, and a nuisance which no length of time will legalize, and the obstruction and nuisance thus created is restrainable by the municipality. Blakely v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 2 Lack. L. News, 59.

So, a railroad placed longitudinally in a street without statutory authority expressly given or arising from necessary implication is a nuisance, restrainable in equity by municipal authorities. Hurlington v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 56 N. J. Eq. 259.

And the invasion of a highway without authority is a public nuisance, and the track itself in such a case is an obstruction and a nuisance, and the bad street it leaves, and the bad crossing, is a nuisance, abatable by suit in equity at the instance of the city authorities. Moundsville v. Ohio River R. Co. 37 W. Va. 92, 100, 20 L. R. A. 161.

Again, an unauthorized occupation of a street by railroad tracks is a nuisance per se, and its use, as well as the removal of the tracks, may be controlled by injunction at the suit of any member of the public. Musser v. Fairmount & A. Street R. Co. 5 Clark (Pa.) 466. In this that telephone companies can construct their lines along streets without first obtaining permission from the local authorities.

Mr. B. R. Goggins, with Mr. P. A. Williams, for respondent:

While the streets in the city of Marshfield belong to the public, the city of Marshfield has nevertheless control of its streets, and in this respect represents the public in relation thereto.

Waukesha Hygeia Mineral Spring Co. v. Waukesha, 83 Wis. 475; Jamestown v. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. 69 Wis. 648; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 659, p. 783; Madison v. Mayers, 97 Wis. 399, 40 L. R. A. 536; Eau Claire v. Matzke, 86 Wis. 291; Neshkoro v. Nest, 85 Wis. 126.

The erection of a run of poles along a public street not only results in the temporary digging up and disturbance of its soil and pavement, but also results in its permanent obstruction, and is a nuisance per se.

case the defendant's charter provided for the consent of the city council before laying the tracks. The consent was obtained, but was subsequently withdrawn, and again conditionally renewed, but the renewal was held invalid as the council had exhausted its powers of election, and the injunction was therefore granted.

And the construction of a railway along the public streets of a city, if unauthorized by law, is a nuisance restrainable by injunction. Faust v. City Pass. R. Co. 3 Phila. 164. In this case, however, the injunction was granted at the instance of certain property owners.

So, although an unauthorized railroad track across a street in a city at grade is not irreparable injury, yet the court will restrain trains on such tracks on the application of the city authorities, until a trial at law, as it is for the time being an exclusive damage not ascertainable in money, and is thus in a sense irreparable. Cincinnati N. R. Co. v. Cincinnati, 8 Ohio L. J. 334, 1 Bates' Digest, 1243.

In Atty. Gen. v. Lombard & S. Streets Pass. R. Co. 10 Phila. 352, the court restrained the unauthorized occupation of a street by the railroad company as a nuisance per se, and held that in such a case equity had a right to grant relief without a trial at law, and would also relieve where the case merely showed a temporary use of the street for such purposes without a right. In this case, however, the suit was brought at the instance of the attorney general, and was on behalf of the commonwealth.

So, in Grey v. New York & P. Traction Co. (N. J. Eq.) 40 Atl. 21, the court restrained the defendant company at the instance of the municipal authorities, until final hearing, from constructing and operating its railroad upon a certain highway without having complied with the requirements of the statute making it compulsory for such company to obtain the consent of the governing body of the township, before proceeding to construct its railroad. The court, however, intimated that if the consent of the township committee was obtained before final hearing an application might be made by the defendant company to dissolve the injunction.

A railroad placed longitudinally in a street is regarded as practically an exclusive appropriation of that part of the street which it occupies to a use inconsistent with the legitimate use of the street by the public, and its presence in the street is as repugnant to the rights of the public as would be the presence of a church or a market house, or any other structure devoted to private objects. Burlington v. Pennsylvania 44 L. R. A.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 698; Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 478, and cases cited; Keasbey, Electric Wires, p. 45.

Public highways belong from side to side and end to end to the public.

State v. Berdette, 73 Ind. 185; St. Louis v. Western U. Tele. Co. 148 U. S. 92, 37 L. ed. 380.

The power to grant franchises to particular persons or corporations is now under general laws vested absolutely, fully, and completely in cities and other municipalities.

Ashland v. Wheeler, 88 Wis. 616.

The statute authorizing the use of highways does not permit the use of streets generally, but simply gives the right of way through the municipality.

State Home Teleph. Co., v. New Brunswick (N. J.) 40 Atl. 628.

It cannot be contended but that the city has the power to contract for those things

R. Co. 56 N. J. Eq. 259. In this case, therefore, the court granted relief in equity at the suit of the city authorities.

And equity will enjoin a plank-road company from rendering the road dangerous and unsafe, at the instance of officers charged with the duty of seeing that it is maintained and kept in good repair, safe for travel. Detroit & E. Pl. Road Co. v. Macomb Circuit Judge, 109 Mich. 371.

An injunction was granted at the instance of the corporate authorities, calling upon the railroad company to reduce its bridge across a street so as to conform to the grade thereon, in Jersey City v. Central R. Co. 40 N. J. Eq. 417, 422.

So, in Thompson v. Paterson & H. R. R. Co. 9 N. J. Eq. 526, an injunction was granted, at the relation of numerous citizens and property owners, restraining the defendants from erecting a permanent railroad bridge on a line of great and increasing travel in an unusual and unnatural position, and in a manner that would not do as little injury to navigation as possible. The injunction, however, only extended to the restraint of the defendant until the question of the proper position of the piers and draws could be determined at law.

In Moundsville v. Ohio River R. Co. 37 W. Va. 92, 100, 20 L. R. A. 161, the city sought to compel the street-railroad company to put a street in certain order, according to the terms of a municipal ordinance, and the question was whether such a suit could be maintained in equity, the contention being that it could not, because the damage at law would affect the whole remedy. The court held that such was not the case, as a city had the right to move in the matter, the state statutes and decisions giving it control over streets, and making it liable for defects, and in so doing it represented the public interest, the act of the railroad company in so dealing with the street, and not putting it in repair, constituting a nuisance.

In Jacksonville v. Jacksonville R. Co. 67 Ill. 541, 544, in granting an injunction perpetually enjoining the railroad company from laying down its track through or across a public square, the court stated that a court of equity had the right to enforce the execution of the plainly declared trust, either upon the application of the owners of lots abutting upon the square, or upon the application of the city as trustees, as the legislature could not pervert the trust, and give the land to the private corporation, as such an act would be bad faith to resulting to its special benefit in the administration of its affairs. The Kraus and Doege franchise confers special benefits upon the city.

It is an executed contract on the part of the city, the consideration for which is the benefit which the public will derive from its use and exercise.

Ashland v. Wheeler, 86 Wis. 615; New Orleans v. Great Southern Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 40 La. Ann. 41; St. Louis v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 148 U. S. 92, 37 L. ed. 380.

This is not, however, an exclusive franchise. It is exclusive only for a very limited time.

Des Moines Street R. Co. v. Des Moines Broad Gauge Street R. Co. 73 Iowa, 513.

Telephone companies are authorized by law to enter upon the highways and streets of the state of Wisconsin only upon condition that they obtain from the respective towns, cities, and other municipalities the consent of their governing bodies.

the original proprietors as well as to the public, the square being valuable property intended for the public use, and appurtenant to the estate of the abutting lotowners; and the trustees of the city must be permitted to preserve it for the express and intended purposes of the trust.

Where the remedy sought by the complainant in equity, by way of injunction, was one to judicially determine whether the defendant railroad company had complied with its obligation of duty with respect to the streets of the city, and if it had not performed its duty, then to abate the nuisance by requiring a cessation of the present state and the performance of such duty, it was held a court had jurisdiction to adjudicate on the question whether the company had fulfilled its obligation, and if not to make an order for it to do so, as courts of equity exercise a very salutary jurisdiction in matters of nuisances, to adjudge the question of nuisances, and to abate them, and, though the remedy by way of mandamus would be adequate, yet it was more formal, and not as flexible, as that in equity. Moundsville v. Ohio River R. Co. 37 W. Va. 92, 106, 20 L. R. A. 161.

And it is no defense to an action for a mandatory injunction to compel a railroad company to restore the highway or street to its former condition of usefulness, to allege that the city should so restore the street, and then by action at law recover the expenses thereof from such company. Oshkosh v. Milwaukee & L. W. R. Co. 74 Wis. 534.

In District Attorney v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 16 Gray, 242, the selectmen of the town through the district attorney sought to restrain defendant company from laying a track for a horse railroad within the limits of the town. The court upheld the authority of the attorney general, or other law officer empowered to represent that government, to file an information in equity to restrain and prevent a public nuisance, stating that such steps might be taken by him either ex officio, or upon the relation of persons who had an interest in the subject-matter of the bill, and whose private rights were to be protected by the decree, which was sought mainly on the ground of public injury, the court seeing no serious objection to such method of reaching and restraining a public nuisance.

In Windsor v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 92 Hun, 127, 133, the defendants had constructed an overhead crossing. It was alleged that such crossing materially and unnecessarily impaired the usefulness of the highway; that no

Eels v. American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 143 N. Y. 133, 25 L. R. A. 540; Zehron v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. 99 Wis. 83, 41 L. R. A. 575; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Milwaukee, R. & K. Electric R. Co. 95 Wis. 561, 37 L. R. A. 856.

A telegraph or telephone line cannot be constructed on a public highway or street except with the consent of the state.

2 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, No. 730, p. 1594, No. 731, pp. 1595, 1596; People's Pass. R. Co. v. Memphis City R. Co. 10 Wall. 38, 19 L. ed. 844; Cater v. Northwestern Teleph. Exchange Co. 60 Minn. 530, 28 L. R. A. 310.

The legislature may delegate to municipal or local bodies the right to grant or refuse such authority.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 724; 2 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, No. 913, pp. 1551, 1552; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. §§ 658, 698, 708, 719; People, Third Ave. R. Co., v. Newton, 112 N. Y. 397, 3 L. R. A. 174.

Even where the power of the municipality necessity existed for a passageway as narrow as that maintained by the defendant corporation; that the requirements and safety of the traveling public demanded an enlargement of such passageway, and also that the defendant did not, in constructing its railroad across such highway, restore the same to its former state or to such a state as not to unnecessarily impair its usefulness. The court held that, under N. Y. Stat. 1890, an action was properly maintained in the name of the town to enjoin the railroad company, and it was not necessary for the highway commissioners in the first instance to declare an encroachment and institute proceedings given by the statute for its removal.

Again, in Stearns County v. St. Cloud, M. & A. R. Co. 36 Minn. 425, 426, an injunction was granted at the instance of a board of management to enjoin the railroad company from constructing and maintaining its road without any lawful authority, along and through an established and traveled road in two towns, so as to entirely destroy the road for the purposes for which it was established.

So, without the aid of special statute a municipal corporation can prevent by injunction the erection of a nuisance upon lands dedicated to the use of its inhabitants, and therefore an injunction will be granted at the instance of the municipality to restrain the defendant railroad from laying an additional railroad track in a public street in the city without the permission of the proper authorities. Cohoes v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 134 N. Y. 397, 408. Reversing 54 Hun, 558.

In Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Quincy, 136 Ill. 489, the court, at the instance of the city, enjoined the defendant company from depositing dirt, cinders, and other material upon certain portions of the streets, although the defendant contended that the acts complained of amounted to a mere trespass, and that equity would not assume jurisdiction by injunction to prevent the placing of obstructions in a public street. The court followed its prior decision in Metro-politan City R. Co. v. Chicago, 96 Ill. 620, wherein it held that, as the legislature had committed a portion of its sovereignty to municipalities, in respect to streets, highways, and public grounds within their limits, they had the authority of the state in that respect, and might maintain such a bill in equity.

So, in Northern C. R. Co. v. Baltimore, 21 Md. 95, 105, an injunction was allowed at the instance of the corporate authorities, restrain-is, by the legislature, restricted to the designation of the streets and of the manner of placing the poles therein, proper application to the proper authorities is held to be a condition precedent to the right to set up poles.

New York & N. J. Teleph. Co. v. East Orange, 42 N. J. Eq. 490; State, Broome, v. New York & N. J. Teleph. Co. 49 N. J. L. 624, 50 N. J. L. 432; State, Winter, v. New York & N. J. Teleph. Co. 51 N. J. L. 83; Suburban Light & Power Co. v. Boston, 153 Mass. 200, 10 L. R. A. 497; Pierce v. Drew, 136 Mass. 75, 49 Am. Rep. 7.

Bardeen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Both parties admit the public character of the streets of a city and the almost omnipotent control of the legislature over their use. The city does not own, and cannot alien, its streets. It cannot rightfully au-ing the railroad company from constructing, grading, or laying with rails its branch railroad upon, along, or across certain streets in the city, or from altering the grade of the same, or from proceeding with the work of the building without the consent, and under the supervision, of the mayor of the city and city commissioners, as provided by city ordinance, the provisions of the ordinance being well known to the company, the mere fact that the city authorities did not invoke the interposition of the court sooner being no defense.

And in Detroit & E. Pl. Road Co. v. Macomb Circuit Judge, 109 Mich. 371, the court refused an application for a writ of mandamus to compel the circuit judge to dissolve an injunction restraining the defendant company from proceeding in the construction of its road in a manner not pointed out by the act granting its franchise, and pointed out that it was competent for the highway commissioners, and for the township, to commence the proceeding, and for the circuit judge to issue the injunction, and also for the circuit judge to modify the injunction if he was satisfied, from the showing made before him, that to do so would be to the advantage of the public, and would not result in the creation of a threatened nuisance dangerous to the traveling public, the right to issue the injunction and to modify it arising from the fact that it was a proper exercise of the power of the court to see that the police regulation given by the Michigan statute over highways was enforced.

In Burlington v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 56 N. J. Eq. 259, where a bill was filed by the city authorities to restrain the company from laying an additional track through a street in the city, and also to remove a part of a track already laid in such street, the question was whether the municipal consent was sufficient to legalize the structure. The facts showed that another company laid its route through, and built a single line upon, the street upwards of sixty years previously, and that the city authorities granted to the company the right to construct the railroad authorized by the incorporating act at, upon, through, and along the street from east to west, and that the city had covenanted that it should be lawful for the company to enter upon the street and grade the same, lay rails thereon, and do other acts and things necessary for the proper and effectual completion of the road, and for keeping the same in repair, doing no unnecessary damage or injury either to the street or adjoining property, the thorize obstructions therein without legislative authority. Its duties and obligations with respect thereto are defined in its charter. The general law grants powers and privileges to persons or corporations like the defendant company, to be exercised by municipal consent or subject to municipal limitations. Section 1773, Rev. Stat. 1898, under the interpretation of this court, authorizes the use of the highways of this state by corporations like the defendant, by their poles and wires, provided they are so set as not to obstruct or incommode the public use thereof. Wisconsin Teleph. Co. v. Oshkosh, 62 Wis. 32; Roberts v. Wisconsin Teleph. Co. 77 Wis. 589. And see State, Wisconsin Teleph. Co., v. Janesville Street R. Co. 87 Wis. 72, 22 L. R. A. 759. It is conceded by appellant that this section does not deprive cities of their power of police control over the manner in which such work shall be done, and that they may adopt, by ordiroad to be constructed as near as possible in the middle of the street, leaving ample and sufficient carriage way along the street on each side of such railroad. The court enjoined the construction of the additional track, and also issued a mandatory injunction for the removal of such parts of it as had been already laid.

Where the corporate authorities alleged that the defendant company tore up the pavement, and laid down and constructed, through the entire length of a certain section of a street and diagonally over the same in a certain direction, a portion of their railroad being a double-track road, occupying a strip of almost 15 feet in width, and with the overhanging of the cars used by them upon the said tracks occupied a strip of 21 feet, and that there was no necessity for the construction of the road in such manner, nor was it reasonably necessary that such double track should be laid so as to infringe upon a certain street upon an acute angle, the court held that such averment showed a substantial equity as the company had no right to occupy any portion of the streets of the city for the purposes of their road, except to such extent as was reasonably necessary, and that such facts exhibited a prima facie case for the action of a court of equity. Newark & N. Y. R. Co. v. Newark, 23 N. J. Eq. 515, 522.

So, in Philadelphia v. Lombard & S. Streets Pass. R. Co. 3 Grant, Cas. 403, an injunction was granted restraining the defendant company from removing a cobble pavement in the street for the purpose of building their own roads thereon, contrary to the provisions contained in their charter, to the effect that the company shall be subject to all the ordinances of the city council, an ordinance of the city prohibiting them from so doing without consent of the common council.

And, where a railroad company, licensed by the city authorities to construct its road upon the streets of the city within a given time, failed to construct the same within such time, and the city authorities thereupon revoked the license, and sought to enjoin the company from so constructing its road, it was held that the proceedings were rightly brought in equity at the instance of the city authorities to restrain the construction of such road. Plymouth Twp. v. Chestnut Hill & N. R. Co. 168 Pa. 181. The bona fides of the company in so continuing to construct its road, and the hardship of the revocation of the consent, were declared to be no reason for the court's declining to grant the injunction.

nance, all reasonable regulations for the location and use of telephone poles and wires in the streets. Section 4, subc. 4, chap. 160, Laws 1891 (plaintiff's charter), provides that "the common council shall have authority by ordinances, resolutions, by-laws, or regulations: . . . (26) To lay out, make, open, and keep in repair, alter or discontinue, any highways, streets, lanes, or alleys, and to keep them free from encumbrances and to protect them from injury. (27) To establish and alter the grades of streets, and to regulate the manner of using the streets in said city, and to protect the same from injury by vehicles used thereon." Construing similar provisions in the charter of the city of Janesville, this court, in 87 Wis. 72, 22 L. R. A. 759, before cited, said: "There can be no question, at this late day but that our municipal corporations may make all reasonable regulations for the location and use of electric wires in the street, and require all reasonable safeguards for the same. The question is virtually so settled in this state by our own decisions." The authorities and decisions there cited seem fully to warrant that conclusion. That, in the exercise of this power, the city authorities may go so far as to prohibit the encumbering by telephone poles of certain of its streets, in the exercise of a reasonable discretion, is equally clear. Such right necessarily follows from the grant of the power to regulate. It is also implied from the fact that the dominant purpose of a street is for public passage, and any appropriation of it by a legislative sanction to other objects must be deemed to be in subordination to this use, unless a contrary intent is clearly expressed. Hudson River Teleph. Co. v. Waterliet Turnp. & R. Co. 135 N. Y. 393, 17 L. R. A. 674; Utica v. Utica Teleph. Co. 24 App. Div. 361. Or, to state the rule in another way: "All legislative grants to

In Stroudsburg v. Wilkes-Barre & E. R. Co. 2 Pa. Dist. R. 507, the railroad company had located its road, and was about to build its track on the part of a certain highway in the borough, occupying the road for a distance longitudinally and obliquely. The evidence showed that the proposed location of the railroad company on the carriage road would occupy the whole width thereof, so as to render travel upon the same with wagons and other vehicles impossible, unless the track of the railroad was used for such passage, and there was no necessity for the company to occupy the said street, and that if there was the nature of the territory was such that another road could have been easily located on as favorable ground as the existing road. The court continued the injunction until such time as the company made proper provisions for the convenience of the public, as the company had no right to occupy the street to the exclusion of the public, or in such a manner that the safety of travelers should be endangered by requiring them to seek passage on or along the railroad track longitudinally.

Where a railroad company had commenced the destruction of the road or public highway two years prior to the commencement of the action, and had been required by the town authorities to restore the same to its former state of usefulness, and had neglected to do so, it was held that ample time had been given them to perform such duty, and the court therefore granted the mandatory injunction to compel the performance of such duty. Jamestown v. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. 69 Wis. 648, 651.

So, in Jamestown v. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. 69 Wis. 648, 651, the court allowed the injunction, as the statute gave the railroad authorities power to construct such road, and imposed the express condition that it should restore the road to its former state of usefulness. The court stated that the town had redress for the destruction of such road, and might maintain an action to compel the railroad company to restore it to its former usefulness, where it had impaired it by building such track, the town having suffered special injury by the destruction of the highway.

The court distinguished this case from the prior cases of Milwaukee v. Milwaukee & B. R. Co. 7 Wis. 85, and Sheboygan v. Sheboygan & F. du L. R. Co. 21 Wis. 668, infra, upon the ground that in the first of those cases the city, by virtue of its interest or property in the streets, attempted to enjoin a railroad company from building its road in the street, and it was held that the city had no property or interest in the street which would authorize it to maintain the suit; but the question in the case then before the court was not considered or even alluded to in that case, and therefore not decided, while in the Sheboygan case it was not clear whether the acts complained of were authorized by the charter or not, and, as the right to the injunction depended upon the disputed question, it was held that no injunction should issue until the acts of the company were shown to be illegal by an action at law, the court in the latter case intimating that, as the state statutes imposed upon towns the obligation of keeping in repair all public highways and bridges within their respective limits, the town had an interest of a certain kind in preventing acts destructive of public highways within its limits, not common to the people at large, and impliedly stated that the town had a right in such a case to invoke the equity powers of the court by injunction.

And the doctrine established in Jamestown v. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. 69 Wis. 648, was upheld in the later case of Oshkosh v. Milwaukee & L. W. R. Co. 74 Wis. 534, wherein the court stated that a mandatory injunction would seem to be the only adequate remedy to redress the wrong to the public rights, in a case showing that the street in question had been materially impaired, injured, and obstructed by raising an embankment thereon, above the grade of the street, so as to make it impracticable to drive over the track in certain places, or even to turn with an ordinary team or vehicle, thereby destroying the use of the street.

Where a deed, entered into between the city and the railroad company, formed the contract governing the manner in which the railroad company must grade and use the portions of certain streets mentioned therein, and its terms were plain and unambiguous, and conferred upon the company a right to grade, improve, and use a certain specified portion of the street in such a manner as might suit the convenience of the company, and the company had also the right to construct thereon such tracks, side-tracks, switches, and frogs as it might desire, and to use the same in the transaction of its business as the convenience of the company might require, and the only restrictions and limitations imposed were that the railroad company had no right to erect in parts of the street in question any building or buildings, nor to appropriate the streets to any private use ex-private corporations to occupy streets with electrical appliances are made impliedly, if not expressly, subject to the police powers of the municipality, both to dictate and to change the location of such plant." Monongahela City v. Monongahela Electric Light Co. 4 Am. Electrical Cas. 53, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 529.

But, it is said, the city of Marshfield has never passed any ordinance or by-law regulating the placing of poles in its streets, and it is argued that, as defendants were not violating any regulation in that respect, this action cannot be maintained. Section 7, chap. 11, of the charter provides: "No building shall be moved through the streets or obstructions be placed therein without a written permit therefor granted by the board of public works. Said board shall have the power to determine the time and manner of using the streets for laying or changing water pipes, or placing and maintaining electric lights, telegraph and telephone poles: Pro-cept to the uses therein mentioned, and the streets were to be so graded by the company, and the tracks so laid, that carriages and other vehicles might conveniently cross the same, the court held that, if the company in occupying the streets undertook to disregard such duties, it might be enjoined in that regard, but not otherwise, and that the company was at liberty to grade and improve the parts of streets as it might desire, but that the improvement must be so made that wagons and vehicles of all kinds might cross over the same conveniently, the occupation of the streets by the company under the powers conferred, of necessity, to some extent, obstructing the free use of the streets so that the public would not have that free use thereof which would have otherwise existed. The court therefore reversed the decree of the court below, and dismissed the case, with directions to enter a decree enjoining the railroad company from grading the parts of the street in such a manner as would prevent wagons, etc., of all kinds conveniently passing over the said parts of the street to the water's edge, and refused to extend the injunction to an obstruction of the streets amounting to a prevention of the free uses by the public, the right to occupy and use the streets in that case not depending on the general power conferred upon cities and towns to control and regulate the streets and the use thereof. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Quincy, 136 Ill. 489.

In Stockton v. Atlantic Highlands R. B. & L. B. Electric R. Co. 53 N. J. Eq. 418, 424, the court applied the principles discussed by the court in Franklin Twp. v. Nutley Water Co. 53 N. J. Eq. 601, in granting a preliminary injunction restraining the water company from laying its pipes in the streets of the township without the consent of the township authorities, which was by a statute made a condition precedent to such work. The case then before the court was that of a street railroad laying its tracks operated by electricity supplied by overhead wires in the streets of the township, but the action was brought by the attorney general on behalf of certain property owners whose consent had not been obtained as provided by the statute. The court stated that the rights of such parties were equal to those of the township authorities.

The principles laid down in the above-mentioned case of Franklin Twp. v. Nutley Water Co. 53 N. J. Eq. 601, are as follows: "For the full protection of the statutory rights of the municipalities, a preliminary injunction is necessary, however, that the decision of said board in this regard may be appealed to the common council." This provision gives to the board of public works ample power to exercise control over the streets of the city, subject to appeal to the council. Whether it gives them the power to totally prohibit the encumbering of the streets of the city by telephone poles is not necessary to decide. The city makes no such claim, but it does insist that its streets shall not be so encumbered except under the direction of the proper officers. The record shows that the defendant Gallagher, representing the company, went to Mr. Hoffman, the chairman of the board of public works, at about 11 o'clock A. M. of October 14, and said he was ready with a crew of men, and wished the consent of the board to set a line of poles along Central avenue, from its main line to the business part of the city. He was informed that the chairman had no power to give such consent, that some of the members were out of essary, and in this respect the case rests upon the same basis as the right of the court of equity to interfere by preliminary injunction where a public company, under cover of statutory authority, attempts to appropriate the lands of another without complying with the legal conditions precedent, either constitutional or statutory. . . . Where the statutory right is clear, . . . it would imperil the public control of highways, and deprive municipalities of the powers and advantages intended to be given by statutes, if, on the mere claim of right to occupy the streets without consent, this court should decline to interfere pending the final determination upon the claim."

In Fenelon Falls v. Victoria R. Co. 29 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 4, it was held that a municipality might file a bill to compel a railroad company to put streets and highways, not properly traversed by such road, in good repair, and that the corporate powers will not be restricted to proceeding by way of indictment or information.

So, in Atty. Gen., Nepean Twp., v. Bytown & N. R. Co. 2 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 626, it was held that a municipality had the right of prohibiting the proceeding with any road within the limits of the jurisdiction, the making or improving of which by a road company formed under the statute 12 Vict. chap. 84, was commenced, before any opposition was made thereto, without the permission of such municipality; and that notice of such opposition, if duly given before the work was commenced according to the 2d section of that statute, had the effect of an interim injunction to restrain the commencement of the road; but if such notice was not given in time for that purpose, the power of prohibition conferred upon a municipal council was not forfeited.

And where plaintiffs, a municipal corporation, sought to restrain defendants, a railroad company, from trespassing by running their track along one of the streets of the municipality without consent, in contravention of the railway act (C. S. C. chap. 66, § 12, subsec. 1), it was held that by virtue of the municipal act there was such power of management, control, etc. bestowed upon municipalities, and such a responsibility cast upon them, as to justify them in intervening on behalf of the inhabitants for the preservation of their rights, and to restrain bodies like the defendants from transgressing the statutory regulations imposed upon them, although the court stated that but for the language in the early chancery dethe city, but that a meeting of the board would be called not later than the evening of that day to act upon such request. Gallagher replied that he was ready with his men to set the poles, and would not wait for such meeting; that his instructions were to set the poles immediately, and he would do so, independent of the board or the other city authorities, which he forthwith proceeded to do until forced to stop. It is such conduct as this that creates and fosters feelings of prejudice against corporations. It was in utter disregard of the city's rights. The city had theretofore granted a franchise for a local exchange. Under it the local company had a right to use certain of the streets for its poles, under the direction of the board. It cuts no figure in this case that the franchise was exclusive for a limited time. If it was wrong, it did not justify the defendant in committing another wrong. The fact that the common council had adopted no ordinances, or the board of public works had passed no regulations, in relation to pole setting, affords the defendant no justification for its procedure. While it is true the city might have enacted ordinances on the general subject of the encumbering of the streets yet from the very nature of the situation it was impossible to anticipate the needs or desires of a company coming in as the defendant did. Before the board could act intelligently, it was necessary for them to know something about the desires and intentions of parties desiring to use the streets. When the situation had sufficiently developed that the board could act understandingly, it became its duty to act, and to act reasonably. It was likewise incumbent upon the defendant to make its purposes and wishes known to the board, and to give them a reasonable time to take action. The defendant had no right to enter upon the streets of the city, even though no prohibitory ordinances had been passed, and occupy them as it pleased, and set up poles that were obstructions, at will. Its right to go upon the streets with its structures was limclisions it would have preferred to hold that the proper frame of suit in that case was by way of information in the name of the attorney general with the corporations as relators; the court adopting the language used by the vice chancellor in Guelph v. Canada Co. 4 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 632, wherein he said: "I think that the suit is not improperly constituted." Fenelon Falls v. Victoria R. Co. 29 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 4.

In Devonport v. Plymouth D. & Dist. Tramways Co. 52 L. T. N. S. 161, 49 J. P. 405, the defendant company was authorized by act of Parliament to make tramways in the public streets of certain boroughs. The act provided that the defendant should not, without consent of the corporations of such boroughs, use for public traffic any of the tramways mentioned in the act until the whole system was completed, and if either corporation should at any time complain to the board of trade that the company were not carrying out such permission, the board might direct an inquiry in the manner prescribed by the act, and the company must abide by every order made consequent on such inquiry by the board. The company had opened and worked a tramway in a borough without the requisite consent, and the corporation of an adjoining borough moved for an interim injunction to restrain the company from working the section opened until the whole system in both boroughs was complete. The court held that the injunction could be granted as there was nothing in the section of the private act to take the case out of the jurisdiction of the court, under the judicature acts of 1873, to grant an injunction, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to complain of the breach of the conditions imposed by the private act without showing that they had thereby sustained any actual damage.

In some cases, however, equity has refused relief at the instance of municipalities. Thus in Savannah & T. R. Co. v. Savannah, 45 Ga. 602, 609, 610, an incorporated company was invested by act of a general assembly with power to lay a railroad track through certain streets in the city. The court held that the state had the right of eminent domain over the streets and squares of the city, dedicated to the use of the inhabitants by the act of general assembly of 1760, and might lay additional servitude thereon by granting the defendants the right to run the railway through them, without the consent of the city authorities; and further, that the mayor and aldermen of the city had no such 44 L. R. A.

power in the streets and squares, under the act or any act amending it, as entitled them to a pecuniary compensation for the additional servitude so placed upon the streets, nor had they a right to an injunction restraining the construction of the railway for the benefit of the residents along such streets and squares, and that if any of the residents were damaged by the construction of such a road they would be heard upon a proper case. The injunction was therefore refused.

So, in Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Joliet, 79 Ill. 25, the court refused relief by way of injunction, restraining the railroad company from using the tracks, in a public square, in the city, for purposes of its road, in violation of a city ordinance declaring the same to be a nuisance, as the city cannot by a mere declaration make such structure a nuisance, especially when the city authorities only have power by ordinances to regulate the use of the public streets and squares by a company having authority from the legislature to lay its road upon a public street.

And in Waterloo v. Waterloo Street R. Co. 71 Iowa, 193, the city was refused an injunction to restrain the defendant from laying down a street-railway track in one of the streets of the city. An ordinance of the city had granted the defendant the exclusive privilege of constructing, in the streets and alleys of the city, necessary tracks of a railway. Subsequently the city council passed an ordinance repealing the former grant, but granting the same privilege as to streets then occupied by the defendant. The petition sought to restrain the defendant in constructing its track in a certain street without authority or right, and it was contended that the defendant was using, in the construction of such track, a rail different from that ordinarily used in street railroads, but the ordinance did not provide as to the kind of rail to be used or the gauge of the road. The court refused relief upon the ground that the plaintiffs had full power to regulate the construction of such roads without proceeding in equity, and such powers were not affected by the city's contract with the defendant company.

Again, where a corporation owned the fee on both sides of the street, and laid railroad tracks thereon, and the supervisors of the highway, at the instance of the attorney general, sought to restrain the same as an obstruction to public travel and a nuisance, the relief was refused ited by the charter provisions mentioned, and, until it had complied with their requirements, it was without legal justification. Here was a city of 5,000 people, with water-works, electric lights, a local exchange, and paved streets. Considerations of local pride seemed to demand that their main business street, in the business center, should be kept clear of obstructions or encumbrances. The board had an undoubted right, in the exercise of a reasonable discretion, to prohibit the encumbering of Central avenue with wires and poles. The discretion of that body could be controlled by the council on appeal. It was not within the power of the council to determine the time when or the manner in which defendant might set up its line, except in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction over the board. We do not say that the city has the right to entirely exclude the defendant from entering the city, because, under the facts, that question is not before us. We do hold, however, that before the defendant can occupy any of the streets, application should be made to the board of public works, and a reasonable time given for that body to act. Its action is subject to review by the council, on appeal, if not satisfactory. In the exercise of its powers, the council may consider that the rights of the defendant under the general law are in subordination to the police powers vested in the city authorities, and may adopt all reasonable regulations necessary to prevent its streets from being obstructed or encumbered. If it acts contrary to law, no doubt an ample remedy exists.

Defendant's so-called "modified motion" must also fail. The court will not assume to control the action of the board of public works. When a proper and timely application has been made to the board, they may be compelled to act. Until then the court has no right to interfere.

The order of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

upon the ground that it was not of such a nature as to require the extraordinary process of injunction, as the same were placed thereon by the town authorities. Atty. Gen. v. Bay State Brick Co. 115 Mass. 481.

Where it was not alleged that the defendant intended or threatened to construct its railroad in, upon, or across any common highway or street in the town without permission of the selectmen thereof, as required under the state statute by which the defendant was incorporated, but the proceedings showed that it proposed only to construct its track over and upon a certain turnpike, constructed and maintained by a corporation duly authorized for that purpose, and charged by law with the care, safety, and suitable repairs thereof; and it also appeared that the defendant was acting in the construction of its track with the sanction and consent of the turnpike corporation, according to a contract entered into with the corporation, pursuant to a power expressly given to them by the act of incorporation, to the exercise of which power the consent or sanction of the selectmen of the town was not required,—the court refused the injunction as there was no ground for the position that the defendant's acts were unauthorized or illegal, neither was there evidence to prove that the construction of the proposed railroad over the turnpike would create any serious or continued hindrance or obstruction to public travel, the evidence not being sufficient to overcome the presumption that the company would perform its legal duty in the construction of the road, or to lead to the inference that a nuisance or public wrong would be committed in the exercise of its rights and privileges. District Attorney v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 16 Gray, 242. In this case, however, the refusal was without prejudice.

The ground upon which the injunction was refused in the case of Atty. Gen. v. New Jersey R. & Transp. Co. 3 N. J. Eq. 136, would seem to be that the nuisance complained of already existed, and the act which occasioned it had been done, the court considering the application too late and unavailing even if granted.

So, where the obstruction of a street by a railroad company, by reason of abutments, was not such as seriously to impede public travel, and it was shown that the travel over the highway in question was merely nominal, the roadway consisting of a single wagon track, the highway on either side of which was overgrown by underbrush and weeds, so that for all practical purposes a sufficient space between the abutments was ample for the public accommodation, it was held that the remedy by indictment was sufficient to abate the nuisance and to restore to the public the use of the highway. The court therefore refused the injunction, at the instance of the township, restraining the railroad company from so obstructing the road. Raritan Twp. v. Port Reading R. Co. 49 N. J. Eq. 11, 16, 17.

Again, such relief was refused in Morris & E. R. Co. v. Prudden, 20 N. J. Eq. 530, 536, 539, where the object of the bill was to enjoin the laying of a second track of a railroad through a certain street in the village, and the intervention of the attorney general on behalf of property owners was sought to be justified upon the ground that the street was a public highway, and that the proposed construction of an additional track by the defendants through the streets longitudinally would be such an interference with public rights as to be a public nuisance, the complainant and the relators presenting their right to relief in two aspects: the first was based upon the public rights, and the other upon the private rights. It did not appear that the street was ever laid out as a public road, but it was claimed to be such by virtue of a dedication alleged to be made by a survey and map, followed up by sales and conveyances of lots designated on the map. The court stated that the remedy by indictment was so efficacious, that courts of equity entertain jurisdiction over public nuisances with great reluctance, whether their intervention was invoked at the instance of the attorney general or of a private individual who suffered some injury therefrom distinct from that of the public, and that whether the question was viewed in the aspect of a proceeding by the attorney general to protect the rights of the public, or of a suit by the complainant and the individual relators to protect their private rights, yet the most cogent reasons existed for courts of equity abstaining from drawing the controversy within its jurisdiction, until the rights of the parties were settled in a court of law; and therefore, there being ample remedy for the invasion of any public right by indictment, and it not being shown that there was any pressing necessity to relieve the public travel from an immediate and serious inconvenience, the retention of the injunction at the instance of the attorney general was held to be inconsistent with the principles upon which courts of equity employ process of injunction as a purely preventive remedy.

The New Jersey statute of 1896 (Pamph. Laws 1896, p. 228), provides that "any city of this state, except cities of the first class, be and they are hereby authorized and empowered to enter into contracts with any of the railroad companies whose roads now enter or lie within their cities respectively, or whose routes have been located therein, granting the said railroad companies or any of them the right to lay their road and construct their tracks in, through, along, and upon any of the roads or streets of said cities upon such terms. . . . And any such contracts heretofore or hereafter made by said cities or any of them with any railroad company or companies as aforesaid are hereby fully authorized, ratified, and confirmed; provided, that thereafter no road shall be laid, or track constructed, in, through, or upon any of said roads or streets, other than such as have been authorized by any such contract heretofore made, until said railroad company shall have acquired the rights of the abutting owners on said road or street, either by agreement, purchase, or condemnation proceedings."

Under the above statute it was held, in Burlington v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 56 N. J. Eq. 259, that although such an act regulated the internal affairs of cities, and conferred power upon cities to grant licenses to railroad companies to use the streets, which were a matter of strictly municipal concern, yet it was unconstitutional, as being special, inasmuch as the legislature cannot confine the affairs of its enactment to the condition of affairs existing at the date of the act, if similar conditions were likely to arise thereafter. In this case the city authorities sought to restrain the defendants' acts in constructing the railroad upon the public streets so as to obstruct the same and create a nuisance.

In North Manheim Twp.'s Appeal, 22 W. N. C. 149, the bill seeking to restrain the railroad company from operating its road in a manner contrary to the provisions of the statutes, and so as to cause an obstruction in the street and a nuisance, was dismissed, upon the defendant fencing in its line of road within a reasonable time, and paying the costs of the proceedings.

So, where the question was a close one, whether the defendant had the right to salt its tracks for the purpose of melting accumulations of snow that had gathered thereon, when not done wantonly, even at the expense of the convenience of the general traveling public, although the right might not be expressly conferred by its charter, and the evidence showed that at certain times salting the tracks became necessary to the full enjoyment of the franchise and such implied power conferred by the charter, the court refused to interfere by way of preliminary injunction in equity, to restrain the defendant from so using its tracks until the question had been determined in a court of law, as the plaintiff had not established his claim that the salting of the tracks by the defendant worked a detriment to the traveling public, or, in other words, that it created a public nuisance by trial at law. the court not taking upon itself the decision of that question. Easton v. Passenger R. Co. 2 Pa. Co. Ct. 639.

In the above case, it was, however, held that a bill for an injunction to restrain a company from salting its tracks was well brought in the name of the borough, without intervention of the attorney general, the use of the salt at a time when the tracks of the company were covered with snow, for the purpose of removing it, rendering the streets through which the railroad passed, burdensome, dangerous, and injurious to the traveling public.

In Johnston v. Providence & S. R. Co. 10 R. I. 365, 367, the bill for an injunction against a railroad company stated that such company, incorporated under act of general assembly for the purposes of constructing a railroad, had under its charter located its road in the city through a village which was partly in the plaintiff town, and so located it as to intersect and cross a street and public highway in such village and town at even grade with the street, which highway the town was by law bound to repair; and that such corporation was proceeding to build and construct such railroad to cross the said highway at such grade, and that the highway between the proposed crossing was in a compact part of the village, and was the principal street for public travel to and from a certain city, and there was no other highway by which such travel could be accommodated; that the travel there was very large with loaded teams, carriages, and foot passengers, all which travel would be much incommoded, and the safety endangered, by the crossings of such railroad at the grade as then located. The court refused the injunction, as the defendant company, having brought the highway to the same grade as their road, and crossing at the same level, had not committed a nuisance to the highway, neither was there under the authority existing for the use of the streets any evidence of a nuisance, the charter merely requiring them, whenever their road crossed a highway, to so construct their road as not to impede or obstruct the safe and convenient use of the highway, the only ground upon which such an action could be sustained being the violation of the duty imposed upon such company.

So, in Milwaukee v. Milwaukee & B. R. Co. 7 Wis. 85, the bill sought to perpetually enjoin and restrain the company from laying and constructing its track along certain streets and across a public square in the city. It was held that, inasmuch as the city in its corporate capacity had not such an interest or property in the streets and public squares across and along which the railroad company was building its road, as to authorize it to maintain such action, the relief must be refused, although it was alleged that the fee in the streets and public squares was vested in the city by dedication from the owners of the land, the court stating that it could not see how it was possible for the city to become the owner of the fee by dedication: although land might be dedicated to public uses, and the public might, by the dedication, acquire a right to the use, yet the fee of the land could not be vested in anyone by that act.

Again, in Sheboygan v. Sheboygan & F. du L. R. Co. 21 Wis. 608, it was sought to enjoin the railroad company and its employees from placing or erecting piles, posts, timbers, or other obstructions at the railroad bridge constructed where the track crossed the river in the town; and further, to have the piles and obstructions removed from the river upon the ground that they greatly hindered the natural flow of the water through and under the span of the bridge, and, in cases of high water, caused the waters to dam up and flow back, thereby overflowing and greatly injuring and destroying the public highway near the river, and also injuring and destroying bridges, thereby impeding the public travel. The court said it was very questionable whether, upon principle or authority, the town would be entitled to a perpetual injunction to restrain the commission of acts which constitute a public nuisance, unless it showed that it sustained some special injury from those acts not common to the public in general or to a large class of the community, for, when the act complained of was injurious to the whole state, and not specially to the rights of an individual, the general remedy was by prosecution or action on behalf of the state.

In the above case the court stated that the prior case of Milwaukee v. Milwaukee & B. R. Co. 7 Wis. 85, had a strong bearing on the question of the right of the town to have an injunction to restrain the commission of such acts; and further, that, even assuming that the town had suffered special injury in consequence of the overflow of the public highway, and bridges, not common to the whole community, no injunction should be granted until it had been established, by an action at law, that the acts of the company were not authorized by its charter.

In Fredericksburgh Twp. v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 6 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 655, the bill alleged the defendants had carried its railway across several public highways and diverted them from their proper course, and that though the operation of the railroad was completed they had not replaced the highways, but had obstructed and continued to obstruct the same so as to render them impassable, and that the defendants had been requested to remove such obstructions but had refused. The court held that, as the evidence was conflicting as to the injury done to the highways and the manner in which the railway was constructed, the parties must be left to their legal remedy. The injunction was therefore refused.

II. Telegraph and telephone poles, etc.

Where the poles, erected by a telegraph company, are such as are necessary either in size or height, and the right to erect and maintain them is given by the legislature, so far as they are within that authority they cannot be alleged to be a nuisance or an unlawful obstruction on the street, and to that extent the right to maintain them is legalized; but wherever such right is exceeded either by reason of the size or height of such poles the act is unauthorized, and violates the implied restraint created by the statute, and is the legal subject for an action of redress. People v. Metropolitan Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 31 Hun, 596. In this case the public sought to restrain the erection of the poles in the city streets, and the court upheld the right of the public to enjoin the nuisance and obstruction.

Yet, in order to secure the interposition of a court of equity to restrain the completion of a telephone line in the public streets, and to remove the incomplete line as a nuisance, and to restore the street to its original condition, there must be some gravity to the complaint presented as the subject-matter of the action, for equity will only intervene to prevent irreparable injury, or to avoid multiplicity of suits. People v. Metropolitan Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 31 Hun, 596, 604.

So, there should be a finding in some form showing which of the poles and to what extent they exceeded the necessary bounds prescribed by statute; and if there is no evidence by which the defendant can be denied the right to erect and maintain them, no authority can be given to a court to direct them to be taken down and removed. People v. Metropolitan Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 31 Hun, 596.

In Summit Twp. v. New York & N. J. Teleph. Co. (N. J. Ch.) 41 Atl. 146, it was sought to enjoin a telephone company, which had obtained the consent of landowners to erect its poles, from carrying its wires thereon across a street of an incorporated town at an elevation which it was not shown would interfere with public travel, upon the ground that the consent of the township committee had not been obtained as required by the local ordinance, but the court refused the relief sought.

So, in Brigantine v. Holland Trust Co. No. 2 (N. J. Ch.) 37 Atl. 438, an injunction was refused at the instance of a municipal corporation which based its rights solely upon its general supervision and control of the streets to restrain the stringing of wires over the street at a height of 20 feet, where peculiar circumstances did not render such wires a serious impediment to travel.

If, however, the evidence sustains an allegation that the telegraph poles have been improperly erected in the street, and incommode and interfere with its use as a public highway, a right of action for damages, as well as for the abatement and removal of the poles, is made out and established, for the reason that a purpose or unauthorized appropriation of a portion of the street will in that case be made, and for its correction and removal an action to restrain the same will afford a proper remedy, and the case will be one wherein relief may be sought in equity. People v. Metropolitan Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 31 Hun, 596, 604.

The terms of a state statute, which enact that "the use of the public streets in any of the incorporated towns (by any corporation organized under this act) shall be subject to such regulations and restrictions as may be imposed by the corporate authorities," comprehend any use that may be made of them by a telegraph company, and therefore include overhead wires over the road, the public easement not being limited to the use of the soil of the highway, but extending upward indefinitely, for the same reason that a barrier, stretched above a highway, or a bough of a tree overhanging it, may constitute a nuisance. American U. Teleg. Co. v. Harrison, 81 N. J. Eq. 627, 630, wherein the town sought relief against the nuisance.

Under the above clause it was held that the town authorities might adopt regulations fixing the elevation at which telegraph wires should cross the street, and might also prescribe such other precautions as might be reasonable and necessary for the safety of travel, but where such regulations had not been adopted, and the town authorities had never entered into the consideration of the question whether it was expedient or not to exercise such power, and there was no reason to believe that the wires as then overhanging the street did in the slightest degree impede or interfere with the full and free use of the same, the company erecting their poles on private property and hanging their wires at an elevation of 25 feet above the roadway, did nothing but what they had a legal right to do. Therefore, the court restrained the corporate authorities from cutting the wires or otherwise unlawfully interfering with them as a public nuisance. American U. Teleg. Co. v. Harrison, 81 N. J. Eq. 627, 630.

Where the telephone poles complained of had been erected some three years, and the damages found to have been sustained by reason of their exceeding the necessary size prescribed by law were merely nominal, and no serious injury had arisen, it was held that the court would not be at liberty to restrain the maintenance of the poles, even if they were all intended to be included in the verdict of the jury, for the reason that the damages resulting from the injury were so trifling in their amount as to deprive the action of every serious attribute which could be made the subject of equitable complaint, equity not interfering to remedy a mere technical or theoretical injury to land. People v. Metropolitan Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 31 Hun, 596, 604.

Where the telephone poles in question had been erected by the defendants as a telegraph company under authority of chap. 265, N. Y. Laws 1848, as amended by chap. 471, Laws 1853, and the company was incorporated under the first-named statute, and had authority to erect the poles for the support of its wires and fixtures, and the transaction of its business was restricted to the erection of such as were necessary for that purpose, in a manner that would not incommode the public use of the street, the court stated that if the right had been exceeded, and the public incommoded thereby, then, so far as that excess was extended, an unlawful appropriation of the street had been made by it which would constitute a purpresture calling for the interference of a court of equity for its correction. People v. Metropolitan Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 31 Hun, 596.

Notwithstanding the telegraph act of 1869, § 8, a telephone company registered under the English company's act of 1862, and not incorporated under any special act, does not fall within the phrase "the company" as used in the English telegraph act of 1863, and it is not forbidden by § 12 of such last-mentioned act to erect its wires across a street unless the consent of the body having control of the street is obtained, and therefore the court will not grant an injunction, at the instance of a board of works, or vestry, restraining the placing of a wire at a great height, and causing no appreciable danger to the public, or to the traffic in the street. Wandsworth Dist. Bd. of Works v. United Teleph. Co. L. R. 13 Q. B. Div. 904. Following Coverdale v. Charlton, L. R. 4 Q. B. Div. 104, 48 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 128, 40 L. T. N. S. 88, 27 Week. Rep. 257.

In Utica v. Utica Teleph. Co. 24 App. Div. 361, action was brought by the city to restrain the defendant company from erecting and maintaining its poles and wires in the streets of the city without the consent of the public authorities and in violation of a city ordinance. The defendant claimed the right to construct and operate the telephone lines without the consent of the city, under § 102 of the transportation corporation law, chap. 566, N. Y. Laws 1890, which provides that such corporations may erect, construct, and maintain the necessary fixtures for its lines upon, over, or under any of the public roads, streets, and highways, and through or across or under any of the public waters within the limits of the state, and upon, through, or over any other land, subject to the right of the owner thereof to full compensation for the same, and upon the ground that in so doing it acted pursuant to an acquired right to act under the franchise of another company. The right of the latter company, however, was limited to stretching wires across the streets, and along the housetops where the owners consented, and averred no authority to put structures on the street, or to do any of the acts complained of by the city in that action. The court therefore held that it was no protection to the defendant in doing any act beyond the limited permission given to the late company by the city council.

The main question in the above case, however, was whether, under the statute, the legislature intended to permit any such corporation, organized under the transportation corporation act, to occupy the streets of the city, and to leave the city powerless to prevent it. The court pointed out that the question, which was a new one, must be decided, not only upon the consideration of the statute in question, but upon the powers and duties of the municipal corporation with reference to the streets of the city as created by the charter and ordinances thereof, and also the principles governing the rights of the public in streets and highways, as well as corporations exercising special privileges in the streets. Utica v. Utica Teleph. Co. 24 App. Div. 361.

In that case the charter of the city gave the common council power to perform the duties of, and be subject to the liabilities of, commissioners of highways in towns, and also empowered them to lay out, open, discontinue, etc., highways, and also to require the removal of buildings, fences, or other obstructions upon the line of the street, and § 35 of such charter gave it power, inter alia, to make, alter, and modify and repeal ordinances, not repugnant to the Constitution and laws of the state, as it deemed expedient for the good government of the city, preservation of peace and good order, the suppression of vice and immorality, the benefit of trade and commerce, and the health of the inhabitants, and such ordinances, rules, and regulations as might be necessary to carry such power into effect, particular power being given to it to determine what are nuisances, and prevent, abate, and remove the same, and to ascertain the settled boundaries of the city, and all streets, alleys, and highways therein, and to remove and prevent all encroachments thereon. Pursuant to such 35th section of the charter, the city adopted ordinances abating the placing in any street of any obstruction thereof without a permission of the mayor, etc., and forbidding the placing in the street of any wood, lumber, or material or property of value, and also forbid any person to take up any pavement in any street or side or cross walk, or dig any hole or ditch in the street without such permission, and also provided that the sidewalks, etc., should be kept and reserved free from all obstructions, and also that all telegraph and telephone wires should be placed beneath the fire-alarm telegraph of the city. The court granted the injunction upon the ground that the common council were acting in a quasi judicial, or discretionary, character, with which the courts could not ordinarily interfere, and that the transportation act gave the defendants no interest in the streets of the city, as it was only intended to protect such companies from indictment for maintaining public nuisances in putting their poles in the street; and further, as the city charter was a local law, it could not be presumed that the legislature intended by the general telephone act to repeal or nullify the provisions of the charter governing the admission of such lines into the city, especially in the absence of legislative declarations to that effect, the provisions of the telephone act not being so inconsistent with the city charter as to create a repeal by implication. Utica v. Utica Teleph. Co. 24 App. Div. 361.

From the above opinion, however, there were dissenting opinions by Hardin, P. J., and Adams, J., to the effect that the injunction, in so far as it enjoined and restrained the defendant "from erecting any poles or stringing any wires," was too broad, and in that respect should be modified, and allowed to remain so as to restrain the placing of obstructions or digging any holes in, upon, or over the streets or sidewalks of the city which might "incommode the public use of the streets," the injunction as granted being an arbitrary and improper attempt to interfere with the rights which the defendant acquired under the act, and one which ought not to be sanctioned.

So, the city authorities have power to restrain by way of injunction the replacing of telegraph wires in the public streets, where the time limited by the city ordinance for the use of the streets in that manner has expired, they having power to regulate and control the manner in which the telegraph lines shall enter or pass through the city. Mutual Union Tele. Co. v. Chicago, 16 Fed. Rep. 309.

In Wandsworth Dist. Bd. of Works v. United Teleph. Co. L. R. 13 Q. B. Div. 904, an action for an injunction to restrain the defendants from retaining or building any poles or wires for the purpose of telegraphic and telephone communications or otherwise, over, along, or across any street vested in, or under the control of, the plaintiffs except in cases where the defendants had received, or might receive, the plaintiffs' consent to retain or place the same, it was held that the metropolis management act of 1855 did not, by § 96, confer upon a vestry, or a board of works constituted under that statute, such a property in the streets situated in their district as entitled them to maintain such action against the erection of a telephone wire across a street, erected at a great height and causing no appreciable danger to the public or to the traffic in the street, the court following the prior decision in Coverdale v. Charlton, L. R. 4 Q. B. Div. 104, 48 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 128, 40 L. T. N. S. 88, 27 Week. Rep. 257, et supra.

As to municipal control over telegraph and telephone poles, etc., as nuisances, see note to Cape May v. Cape May, D. B. & S. P. R. Co. (N. J. L.) 39 L. R. A. 609, 619.

E. W.

Charles N. BROWN, Admr., etc., of August ZILMER, Deceased, Appt.,
v.

CHICAGO & NORTHWESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Resp't.

(.....Wis.....)

1. Wrongful death under such circumstances that had death not ensued decedent could have proceeded against the wrongdoer for damages is not sufficient of itself to uphold an action in favor of his survivors under a statute providing such action and naming the beneficiaries; but the existence of beneficiaries within the provisions of the statute must be shown.
2. Causes of action for personal injuries which survive the death of the persons injured under Rev. Stat. § 4253, are not limited to cases where death does not ensue from the injury although other sections of the statute provide a right of action for relatives injured by wrongful death.

3. A cause of action for personal injuries which survives by force of Rev. Stat. § 4253, is separate and distinct from the cause of action in favor of surviving relatives under § 4255.

On rehearing.

4. Propositions assumed by the court to be within the case, and questions presented, considered, and deliberately decided by the court, leading up to the final conclusion reached, are not obiter dicta, but, if dicta at all, are judicial dicta, and are as effectually passed upon as the ultimate questions solved.
5. The maxim Noscitur a sociis has no application to a statute which is too plain to admit of construction.

(December 16, 1898.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the Circuit Court for Dane County sustaining a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to recover damages for alleged wrongful killing of plaintiff's intestate. Reversed.

Statement by Marshall, J.:

Action to recover damages for a personal injury to August Zilmer, deceased, and also damages for his death. The complaint states all formal matters, and, in substance, that on the 29th day of August, 1895, at the incorporated village of Deerfield in this state, at a crossing of defendant's railroad with a public street in such village, August Zilmer was traveling on the street with due care, riding in a wagon drawn by a horse, and while so circumstanced defendant's servants caused one of its locomotives to approach and go onto and over the crossing at an unlawful rate of speed, to wit, 40 miles an hour, without in any manner signaling such approach, whereby, without contributory fault of Zilmer, the locomotive struck his horse and wagon, and threw him with great force and violence on the ground, bruising and wounding him upon his head, body and limbs, thereby causing him to suffer great mental and physical pain, from the effects of which he on the same day died, to the plaintiff's damages in the sum of $5,000. The complaint further stated that the deceased left no wife, or father or mother or children, but left some brothers and sisters, and stated facts showing that a pecuniary loss was sustained by them by reason of his wrongful death, to the extent of $5,000. The defendant demurred generally to the complaint, which demurrer was sustained, and from the order accordingly entered this appeal was taken.

Messrs. Bushnell, Rogers, & Hall, for appellant:

The intention of Rev. Stat. § 4253, is to work the survival of such causes of action as this.

NOTE.—As to the right to more than one action for injuries resulting in death, see note to Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McElwain 44 L. R. A.

(Ky.) 84 L. R. A. 788; also Hill v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Pa.) 35 L. R. A. 196; Sweetland v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. (Mich.) 43 L. R. A. 568.

Scott v. Shepherd, 2 W. Bl. 892, 3 Wils. 403; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 953.

If there could be any doubt about the meaning of Rev. Stat. § 4253, as to the survival of this right of action, that doubt is set at rest by Rev. Stat. § 3252, which provides that "for wrongs done to the property, rights, or interests of another, for which an action might be maintained against the wrongdoer, an action may be brought by the executors or administrators of the person injured after his death against such wrongdoer, and, after his death, against his executors or administrators.

Revised Statutes, § 4255, gives a right of action for damages against the wrongful slayer without any reference to relatives or next of kin left surviving.

These statutes are remedial ones, and "should be construed, not strictly, but so as to advance the remedy, and suppress the supposed wrong and injustice existing under the former condition of the law."

Rudiger v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 94 Wis. 191.

Section 4253 provides for the survival of a "cause of action," as well as for the survival of an "action" already begun.

Plumer v. McDonald Lumber Co. 74 Wis. 137; Lehmann v. Farwell, 95 Wis. 185, 37 L. R. A. 333; Webber v. Quauo, 46 Wis. 118; Rudiger v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 94 Wis. 191; Hollenbeck v. Berkshire R. Co. 9 Cush. 480.

On rehearing.

The sole purpose and intent of Lord Campbell's act was to give further rights of action in cases of wrongful death, and not to take away any part of the rights of action theretofore existing in such cases.

8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 857; Bradshaw v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. L. R. 10 C. P. 189.

Messrs. Fish, Cary, Upham, & Black, for respondent:

Section 4253, Rev. Stat., relates only to actions, and makes no reference to cause of action.

The distinction between an action and a cause of action or right of action is obvious, and is clearly recognized in various sections of our statutes.

Section 3252 relates solely to rights and interests in property.

Both sections 4253 and 3252, if their language is open to construction at all, must be construed strictly against effecting the survival of any cause of action which did not survive at the common law, because to that extent they would be in derogation of the common law.

Farrall v. Shea, 66 Wis. 561; Eilers v. Wood, 64 Wis. 422; Ean v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 95 Wis. 69.

By the common law no recovery of damages was permitted for the death of a human being caused by negligence. By sections 44 L. R. A.

4255 and 4256, Wis. Rev. Stat., this defect was remedied, and in all such cases a recovery was authorized. Even then there existed this defect in the law; if a person suffered injuries from the negligence of another and died from some other cause and not by reason of such injuries, his cause of action, or his action if he had commenced it, died with him. The purpose of § 4253, Wis. Rev. Stat., as amended by chapter 280, Laws 1887, clearly and reasonably is to remedy this last defect, at least in so far as to prevent the abatement of an action already commenced.

In all cases where a person suffers injuries through the negligence of another person, and such injuries do not result in his death, § 4253 permits an action to be maintained therefor, which shall survive his death from other causes.

Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. O'Connor, 119 Ill. 586.

In all cases where a person suffers injuries through the negligence of another person, which result in his death, an action therefor may be maintained under §§ 4255 and 4256, Wis. Stat. 1898, and no action therefor can be maintained except as provided by those sections.

Holton v. Daly, 106 Ill. 131; Rudiger v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 94 Wis. 191; Ean v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 95 Wis. 69; Lubrano v. Atlantic Mills, 19 R. I. 129, 34 L. R. A. 797.

The complaint must allege, and upon the trial the proof must show, that some beneficiary within the classes enumerated by § 4256, Wis. Rev. Stat. is in existence.

Woodward v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 23 Wis. 400; Regan v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 51 Wis. 599; Schmidt v. Menasha Wooden-Ware Co. 99 Wis. 300.

On rehearing.

General expressions, in every opinion, are to be taken in connection with the case in which those expressions are used.

Cohen v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 5 L. ed. 257.

In Lehmann v. Farwell, 95 Wis. 185, 37 L. R. A. 333, the learned judge who wrote the opinion in considering the question whether the verdict was assignable, discussed collaterally the question whether an action for damage to the person survived under § 4253, and correctly concluded that it did. The opinion is as general as the language of the statute. There was no attempt to construe the statute with reference to the question here presented.

In Hulbert v. Topeka, 34 Fed. Rep. 510, the precise question here presented was raised. Justice Brewer, then circuit judge, delivered the opinion of the court, and held that the right of action in favor of the personal representative was exclusive and such representative had no right of action for injuries to the person where the injuries were such as to cause death.

McCarthy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 18

Kan. 46, 26 Am. Rep. 742; Legg v. Britton, 64 Vt. 652; Griffiths v. Dudley, L. R. 9 Q. B. Div. 357; Read v. Great Eastern R. Co. L. R. 3 Q. B. 555; Sweetland v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. (Mich.) 43 L. R. A. 568.

"Assault and battery or false imprisonment" do not imply a killing, and "other damage to the person" simply means, like damage—"or other" means further, by negligence or wilful, wrongful act, producing a like injury.

Hiner v. Fond du Lac, 71 Wis. 82.

Our position is sustained by Ean v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 95 Wis. 69; Randall v. Northwestern Tele. Co. 54 Wis. 140, 41 Am. Rep. 17; Meese v. Fond du Lac, 48 Wis. 323; Gibbs v. Larrabee, 23 Wis. 495; Rudiger v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 94 Wis. 191; Holton v. Daly, 106 Ill. 131; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. O'Connor, 119 Ill. 586; McCarthy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 18 Kan. 46, 26 Am. Rep. 742; Eureka v. Merrifield, 53 Kan. 794; Martin v. Missouri P. R. Co. 58 Kan. 475; Bigelow v. Anderson, 34 U. S. App. 261; Bigelow v. Nickerson, 70 Fed. Rep. 113, 17 C. C. A. 1, 30 L. R. A. 336.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Two questions are presented on this appeal: (1) Can brothers and sisters of one wrongfully killed recover damages from the wrongdoer to compensate them for the pecuniary loss thereby sustained? (2) Does a cause of action for damages to a person, because of an injury from the effects of which death ensues, survive to his administrator for the benefit of his estate? The decision of either of these questions in favor of the appellant must result in a reversal of the order appealed from.

Actions for death losses sustained by surviving relatives are wholly statutory, and therefore, unless clearly thus given, do not exist at all. The subject in this state is covered by §§ 4255, 4256, Rev. Stat. 1898, which provide that if the death of a person be caused by the wrongful act of another under such circumstances that if death had not ensued such person could have recovered of such other damages for his injury, such other shall be liable to an action for damages notwithstanding the death, such action to be brought and prosecuted in the name of the personal representative of the deceased person for the benefit of the husband or widow of such person if there be such surviving, otherwise for the benefit of such person's lineal descendants, or, in default of such descendants, such person's lineal ancestors. We are asked to hold that by such statutes the right of action for the wrongful death of a person is conditional only upon the circumstances being such that if death had not ensued the decedent could have proceeded against the wrongdoer for damages. If the statute were susceptible of that construction, in any reasonable view of the language used, and we think it is not, the contrary view has been too long established as its true meaning to leave the matter open to question at this time. In Woodward v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 23 Wis. 400, decided thirty years ago, it was held that unless a person named in the statute as entitled to the benefit of a recovery when obtained, be shown to be in being by the allegations of the complaint, the calls of the statute are not satisfied and the action for damages for the death cannot be sustained. That is in line with the numerous decisions in this country and England where similar statutes exist, as abundantly appears in the opinion of the learned chief justice in the case cited, and the numerous authorities cited there by counsel. It has never been since questioned successfully in this court, but on the contrary has been repeatedly affirmed. Topping v. St. Lawrence, 86 Wis. 528; Regan v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 51 Wis. 599; Gores v. Graff, 77 Wis. 174; Schmidt v. Menasha Wooden-Ware Co. 99 Wis. 300. The reasonableness of that construction is fully realized when one considers, as the fact is, that the action for a death loss to a surviving relative is not a right by survivorship to the claim which existed in favor of the injured person in his lifetime. If that right of action exist at all, it is for the benefit of the estate under the statute, to be hereafter considered under the second point made by appellant. The death loss act of the English statute (9 & 10 Vict. 93), commonly called "Lord Campbell's Act," and the various laws of a similar kind that have been modeled after it, gave a new cause of action unknown to the common law, for the benefit of certain designated classes of surviving relatives. Such relatives do not take the cause of action for damages to the deceased by transfer to them by operation of law, or otherwise, but are enabled by statute to recover the pecuniary loss to themselves caused by the wrongful taking off of the decedent, the continuation of whose life would have been beneficial to them. As was said by Mr. Justice Orton, in Topping v. St. Lawrence, 86 Wis. 526, the action accrues to the surviving beneficiary mentioned in the statute by reason of the death of the injured person caused by the wrongful act of another. It is strictly not proper to say that it is a cause of action which survives; it is rather a new action by §§ 4255 and 4256, which can be brought, not for the benefit of the estate, but solely for the benefit of the beneficiaries named in the statute. Counsel's contention is that the liability is made absolute by § 4255, and therefore is not limited by the following section which designates who shall be the beneficiaries. As before indicated, that question has long been foreclosed in this court, contrary to counsel's contention; nevertheless, if the question were now presented for the first time, in view of the fact that the section giving the right is coupled with the section for its enforcement, it would appear to be a very plain proposition that such remedy is exclusive, and necessarily limits the right to those for whose benefit it may be enforced, i. e., to the particular beneficiaries named and in their order, that is, husband or widow, if there be such, otherwise lineal descendants, and, in default of such, lineal ancestors.

On the question of whether a cause of action for injury to the person survive to his personal representative in case death ensue therefrom, this court held in the affirmative in Lehmann v. Farwell, 95 Wis. 185, 37 L. R. A. 333, construing what is now § 4253, Rev. Stat. 1898, which provides generally that actions for the recovery of damages to the person shall survive. The subject there received most careful consideration, and no reason is perceived now for changing the ruling there made.

The learned counsel for respondent contend, with much learning, that the section last referred to, and §§ 4255 and 4256 of the statutes giving a right of action to relatives in certain circumstances specified, should be construed together, so as to limit actions that survive under § 4253 to cases where death does not ensue from the injury. That claim has the merit of being supported by decisions elsewhere under similar laws, but looking only to the language of the statutes, no good reason is perceived for resorting to construction at all to determine their meaning. The language seems too plain to allow that. We have not even good reason for saying, as some courts have, that the statutes were enacted at the same time, or went into effect at the same time, and it is therefore unreasonable to hold that the legislature intended to give two rights of action at the same time for one injury. The law of this state conferring upon surviving relatives the right to recover their pecuniary loss caused by the wrongful taking off by death of a husband, wife, child, father, or mother, has existed for over forty years, while the law reviving the right, in favor of the personal representatives of a deceased person, to his claims for damages to his person, was not enacted till 1887. But independent of that circumstance, as before observed, the language of the two provisions is plain. They refer to entirely distinct losses recoverable in different rights: The one in the right of the deceased for the loss occasioned to him; the other in the right of the surviving relatives for the loss to them. Both are dependent on the injury but only one dependent on the death with surviving relatives to take under the statute. The language of one provision is that "actions for personal injuries shall survive," and of the other, "in case of the death of a person by the wrongful act of another," under certain circumstances named, the wrongdoer "shall be liable to an action for damages notwithstanding the death of the person injured, if the death be caused in this state." The only condition of the right of action in the former case is the existence of the actionable claim for damages at the time of the death of the injured party. The statute creates no new liability, but prevents the lapsing by death of an old one. The only condition of liability under the other provision is the existence of an actionable claim in the right of the injured party at the time of his death and the existence of the beneficiaries mentioned in the statute. The liability of the wrongdoer, while dependent on the condition named, is not on the actionable claim called for to satisfy such condition, but on a new right created by the statute,—the right of the surviving relatives to compensation for the loss which falls upon them. The language of the statutes, when viewed in the light of the evident legislative purpose, is too plain to justify courts in interpolating into them language not there by necessary implication from the context, in order to make them accord with the ideas of judges as to the best legislative policy. The judicial function, we need not say here, does not extend so far. It calls for a firm adherence to the law as written, if valid, without regard to individual opinions as to its being good or bad. In this we do not intend to suggest that the law in question, as construed here, is a bad law. On the contrary there appears to be much wisdom in providing that a person who wrongfully causes a personal injury to another shall not profit by that other's death, so far as actual damages go, either to the deceased person or to the wife, husband, or lineal descendants or ancestors of such person.

True, as claimed by the learned counsel for respondent, and before indicated, several courts, for whose judgment we entertain high regard, in construing similar statutes have decided that the right of action to surviving relatives is exclusive, and that the personal injury action that survives under § 4253, does not include those where death ensues from the injury. A good example, among others cited in counsel's brief, is Holton v. Daly, 106 Ill. 131. That learned court reasons that there is but one ground of liability: the wrongful act; and as all claims for damages grow out of the one wrong it is unreasonable to say the legislature intended there shall be two causes of action based upon it; that the more reasonable view is that the act making causes of action for personal injuries survive should be considered as referring to a special class of actions, not included in those named in the general provision giving a right of action to surviving relatives; that without that construction there would be a repugnance between the two provisions. The fallacy of that reasoning is easily apparent. True, in the circumstances named, there is but one wrongful act, but that is not the sole ground of action in the right of the deceased or the survivor. It takes the wrongful act and the loss to make the complete cause of action, and as the loss to the person upon whom the injury is inflicted must be recovered by or in his right, and the loss to the surviving relatives by or in their right, the causes of action are clearly distinct. It does not require, apparently, much clearness of mental perception to discover that if several persons are made to suffer pecuniary loss by one wrongful act, each may very properly have his independent cause of action and remedy for the loss resulting to him, and that, generally, in order to do complete justice, in the absence of some provision for a recovery for the benefit of all and a distribution of the proceeds, separate causes of action must necessarily exist.

The views of the Illinois court accord with the judgment of the supreme court of Kansas. McCarthy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 18 Kan. 46, 26 Am. Rep. 742; Eureka v. Merrifield, 53 Kan. 794; Martin v. Missouri P. R. Co. 58 Kan. 475. It is significant that the former treats the act for the survivorship of the right to recover damages to the deceased for the benefit of his estate, as a special provision, and that for the benefit of surviving relatives as a general act, and that, giving them a literal interpretation, they are repugnant to each other in part; while the latter reverses the situation, treating the act of the claim for damages to the deceased as general, and that for the benefit of surviving relatives as special, the latter being intended to take away the right of survivorship for the benefit of the estate, which would otherwise be given by a literal reading of the former provision. The fallacy of both processes of reasoning grows out of a failure to observe the distinction between the wrong and the resulting loss; that though there be but one wrongful act and one physical injury, there may be several persons that suffer distinct losses, some of which are actionable at common law and some actionable dependent on the statute. Justice Brewer, who was a member of the Kansas court at the time the first decision there was rendered, and concurred in it, referred to the subject when he was later called upon to consider the matter as a member of the Federal bench, in the case of Hulbert v. Topeka, reported in 34 Fed. Rep. 510, and said, substantially, that he doubted the correctness of his former opinion, and followed it only in deference to the settled judicial policy of Kansas, the cause being one that arose there; that the basis of recovery under the two provisions of law under consideration, the one for the benefit of the estate of the decedent and the other for the benefit of his surviving relatives, are entirely distinct, the former being based on survivorship of the claim of the deceased, taking no note of the pecuniary loss to relatives, and the other on survivorship of relatives mentioned in the statute, taking no note of damages to the decedent; that the latter proceed regardless of whether the death was instantaneous or followed after months of pain and suffering, being damages to relatives by death to be measured by their pecuniary loss caused thereby; while the former is for loss that would otherwise be a permanent injury to the estate itself. For further illustrations of the distinction, the following in Mr. Justice Wilson's opinion in Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 38 Vt. 294, 44 L. R. A.

is quoted by Justice Brewer: "The principles on which the intestate's cause of action rested at common law are the same, irrespective of the cause of his death." It "died with his person but is revived by the statute in favor of his administrator." It includes "nothing more than his intestate's cause of action. That section simply revives but does not enlarge the common-law right of the intestate." The provision for surviving relatives "introduced principles wholly unknown to the common law, . . . namely, that the value of a man's life to his wife and next of kin constitutes a part of his estate." "Such damages to the widow and next of kin begin where the damages of the intestate ended, viz., with his death."

The weakness of the theory that the action for injuries to the person, which survive, includes only those not covered by the statute for the benefit of surviving relatives, is further illustrated by the fact that courts adhering to that view uniformly refer to Read v. Great Eastern R. Co. L. R. 3 Q. B. 555. The decision there is only to the effect that if an injured person have satisfaction of his claim before death, the subsequent death from the injuries does not confer a right of action upon surviving relatives; that such right exists only where there is an injury to a person and there is an existing claim for damages therefor at the time of his death. Justice Blackburn, who delivered the opinion, said, in substance, that the proper construction of the statute is that it gives a right of action to certain surviving relatives of a person when death was caused by the wrongful act of another, where he had not received satisfaction in his lifetime, and that to go further would be straining the language of the law. That seems plain. The language of our statute is that liability of the wrongdoer exists where the deceased could have recovered if death had not ensued. That clearly excludes the idea that where the decedent receives satisfaction for his injuries, the conditions requisite to the right of surviving relatives may exist notwithstanding. There is nothing in Read v. Great Eastern R. Co. in conflict with Blake v. Midland R. Co. 10 Eng. L. & Eq. 443, where in a very instructive opinion by Coleridge, J., it is said that Lord Campbell's act does not transfer to the surviving relatives mentioned the claim for damages previously possessed by the deceased, but gives to them an independent cause of action for damages peculiarly incident to their relation to the deceased. The two cases are often cited to opposite views, but are in fact, when correctly understood, in perfect harmony. The one holds that the right of the relatives named in the statutes is separate and distinct from that possessed by the deceased; the other, that the right of the relatives is contingent on the death of the injured person without having satisfied his claim for damages.

With proper regard for the argument of the learned counsel for respondent, we cannot well close this discussion without some review of the decision of the supreme court of Rhode Island in Lubrano v. Atlantic Mills, reported in 19 R. I. 129, 34 L. R. A. 797, which is cited to our attention with great confidence. The case expressly holds with the Illinois court and the Kansas court, that the statute giving the right of action to personal representatives of a person wrongfully killed, for the benefit of certain relatives named, is exclusive. The case does not throw any new light on the subject under consideration, except as to the inherent weakness of the reasoning indulged in to support the theory which the distinguished court adopts. Read v. Great Eastern R. Co. L. R. 3 Q. B. 555, is cited without perceiving, apparently, that, as before indicated, it only holds that where the claim of the deceased person is extinguished, one of the conditions requisite to the cause of action for damages under Lord Campbell's act is impossible, therefore statutes on that subject have no office to perform; that it has no bearing on the question of whether, in the absence of such extinguishment, there are two rights or causes of action for distinct and separate losses. Again, the learned court falls into an error heretofore mentioned, in referring to the two statutes as one being general and the other special, and that the two in part refer to the same subject, viewing the liability of the wrongdoer as entire merely because based on a single wrong. As we have seen, each treats of a distinct species of loss, and for that is general. There is no question of repugnancy or implied repeal of one provision by another on the same subject, or the substitution of one right for another, to be considered, if we give effect to the plain reading of the law and not attempt to vary it because of consequences which to some minds may appear to throw unreasonable burdens upon the wrongdoer. It must be presumed that the legislature had all these matters in mind, and from its judgment there is no appeal.

The Rhode Island court, further discussing the subject, speaks of the right of survivorship as a mere remedy given as a substitute for that which existed in the right of the decedent. Here again, there is a confusion between rights and remedies. To say that § 4255 of our statutes gives a remedy for the one that at common law lapsed with the death of the decedent, is to say that it gives a new remedy for a pre-existing right. But there was no such pre-existing right of the surviving relatives to recover their loss caused by the wrongful death. The right or cause of action itself is new, and the remedy to enforce it as well, as observed, in effect, in Topping v. St. Lawrence, 86 Wis. 526. The court further, in support of its decision, refers to Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 38 Vt. 300, stating that the Vermont court later, in Legg v. Britton, 64 Vt. 652, overruled its former judgment on the subject of whether there were two causes of action in the circumstances under discussion. A careful reading of the opinion in the later Vermont case discloses the fact that it is there held, in perfect harmony with the early case, that two causes of action exist: one in the right of the estate; and the other in the right of the surviving relatives where the cause of action of the deceased is not extinguished before his death. The court said that the extinguishment of the cause of action in the right of the deceased was a bar to that in favor of the surviving relatives. There, the action for damages to the injured person was brought in his lifetime and prosecuted to judgment and satisfaction after his death, and the court said that under such circumstances the right of the deceased was extinguished with the same effect as if satisfaction had occurred before death, therefore that the circumstances requisite to the application of the statute, giving the right of action to the widow and next of kin, did not exist. Using substantially the language of the court there was left no proper office for the act for the benefit of the widow and next of kin to perform.

44 L. R. A.

There are many other cases bearing on the subject before us, but they do not add anything to what has been said, or call for further discussion, so we shall not further extend this opinion by referring to them. We are well satisfied that § 4253 preserves for the benefit of the estate of a deceased person the cause of action possessed by him in his lifetime for an injury resulting in his death, and that it is not affected in any way by the other right or cause of action given by §§ 4255 and 4256 to his surviving relatives to recover for the loss sustained by them; that such is the plain meaning of the statutes, and that if the language used were open to construction at all, the view we have adopted is supported by far the better reasoning and the greater weight of authority. The supreme court of Michigan, in Hurst v. Detroit City R. Co. 84 Mich. 539, quite recently had the same subject under consideration, with the same result at which we have arrived. That court said, in effect, that a pecuniary loss sustained by a surviving relative resulting from a wrongful death, recoverable under the statute, is one thing; and that damages for the injury to the deceased, is another; and that a recovery for the former is no bar to an action for the latter.

Of course, there is no question as to whether a recovery on one claim will bar an action for the other; therefore, what is said should not be taken as deciding that question. We have referred to cases holding that a satisfaction of a claim in the right of the estate leaves the statute giving the other right of action no office to perform, merely in support of the position that the two statutes deal with separate and distinct rights.

The complaint demurred to, by sufficient allegations, shows that plaintiff's intestate was injured by actionable negligence of the defendant, and that he lived thereafter some period of time. The length of time he survived the injury is not stated and is not material except as to the damages recoverable and that does not go to the cause of action. Bancroft v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 11 Allen. 34; Hollenbeck v. Berkshire R. Co. 9 Cush. 118; Tully v. Fitchburg R. Co. 134 Mass. 499; Chandler v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 159 Mass. 589; Corcoran v. Boston & A. R. Co. 133 Mass. 507; Kellow v. Central Iowa R. Co. 68 Iowa, 470, 56 Am. Rep. 858.

Within the principles stated the complaint states one cause of action, and that for the recovery of damages which the deceased sustained and which he might have recovered for had he lived. Therefore the decision of the trial court sustaining the demurrer to the complaint must be reversed.

The order appealed from is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings according to law.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Marshall, J., on February 21, 1899, handed down the following response:

The motion for a rehearing, made on behalf of the respondent, has received careful, tireless, and patient consideration as did the case when originally considered, notwithstanding some suggestion to the contrary made in the second argument of the distinguished counsel who made such motion. It is not considered that there was any warrant for such suggestions. They had no proper place in counsel's argument. The importance of the case furnished a sufficient excuse for the motion, and counsel's resources for legitimate argument are too well known to warrant the belief that there was any necessity of resorting to other means of enforcing their logic, even by way of emphasis. Calm, fair consideration of legal questions, while not as necessary to the proper performance of the duties of counsel as those of the court, is quite as helpful in the one case as in the other. It would be well to bear that in mind, especially in presenting motions for reargument. The situation of counsel at such a time, especially where great interests are involved, and the decision disappoints hopes and convictions born of much careful study of a subject, is well suited to test to the utmost their power of calm consideration and courteous review of reasons and authorities judicially declared to lead to and require the decision objected to. But whether counsel stand successfully such test or not, the duty of the court to carefully and dispassionately consider, and judicially determine, the questions presented, uninfluenced by any other consideration than to discover and pronounce the law correctly, remains the same.

The suggestion of the learned counsel as to the importance of this case, and the far-reaching character of the decision rendered, is fully appreciated, and was from the start. It is also fully appreciated that the result of the decision will probably be additional labor for the court, but it is not perceived why that can by any possibility change the law. Legislative enactments are to be rigidly enforced within constitutional limitations, according to the legislative will. If courts were permitted to read them so as to minimize to any degree judicial labor or to adapt them to individual notions of judges as to the best governmental policy, it would be very easy to nullify or change the written law so as to defeat the people's will and destroy the very foundation of a government by the people. So, the menace of an increase of judicial labor, and the difficulties of administering the law as we have declared it to be, does not appear at all weighty in favor of changing the decision heretofore rendered.

We should say in passing that the suggested difficulties in administering the law, and danger of injustice to defendants, are largely imaginary, and will gradually disappear as we adapt ourselves to the new conditions which the revived statute creates. The trial judge can easily, by proper instructions, limit the recovery in a revived action to the loss actually caused to the deceased prior to his death; and in the action under § 4255, Rev. Stat., to the pecuniary loss sustained by the surviving relatives entitled to the benefits of that provision. If the two causes of action are joined, the court can readily require the jury to make separate findings as to damages. As the elements entering into each are entirely distinct, it will readily be seen that there is no more danger of a double recovery under such circumstances than in any one of the numerous cases that might be suggested where two causes of action result from a single wrong. The injustice of two recoveries for distinct grievances, suggested by the learned counsel, and by some courts that have taken the view pressed upon us, is not perceived. A little dispassionate reflection on the subject, it would seem, would prevent unqualified condemnation of the legislative wisdom, that says, if a person be wrongfully injured, the pain and suffering and expenses to him in consequence thereof shall not be lost to his estate by the circumstance of his death from the injury before receiving satisfaction for his damages, even though the damages to his surviving relatives, to satisfy their own grievance, may be recovered.

What has been said sufficiently meets the preliminary observations and reasons given in the argument for the rehearing. We will now endeavor to take up in their order the objections to the decision, relied upon.

It will not be necessary to go over, to any great length, the subjects discussed in the former opinion. As before indicated, they have all been once considered with all the deliberation and care that should characterize the work of a tribunal of last resort, whose judgments must stand as the infallible truth, there being no power under our system by which such judgments can be changed after the brief time for review allowed by the Code shall have expired.

Our attention is called to the rule stated in the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall in Cohen v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 5 L. ed. 257, to the effect that, though general expressions in an opinion which go beyond the case may be respected, they ought not to control the judgment in a subsequent suit. That proposition is familiar, and is not liable to be forgotten by judges who have been called upon to apply it in their daily work for a series of years. The trouble with the learned counsel's argument is that he applies the rule, as it seems, to everything in a legal opinion not a part of the final conclusion reached,—to what is judicial dictum and even to the reasons upon which the decision is based and are essentially a part of it, when that seems necessary to dispose of authorities that are clearly opposed to their contention; and again, treat mere observation by a judge in writing an opinion by way of illustration or argument, referring to collateral topics for that purpose, as a part of the deliberate judgment of the court, when, if so considered, they support counsel's contention. There are few decisions of any court but that might be successfully attacked if such a method were permissible. What is here said will be borne out, in our judgment, by what follows.

It is conceded by the learned counsel that if we were right as to what was decided in Lehmann v. Farwell, 95 Wis. 185, 37 L. R. A. 333, the decision heretofore reached in this case rests on authority. The question there was, whether a claim for a personal injury, based on actionable negligence, is assignable. The court decided that the question turned on whether a cause of action to enforce such a claim survives the death of the original owner; that by the common law the answer must be in the negative, but under § 4253, as it now stands, making all causes of action for false imprisonment, assault and battery, or other damages to the person, survivable, all bodily injuries resulting from actionable negligence are included, and therefore the question must be answered in the affirmative. Said Mr. Justice Winslow, the statute "includes every action the substantial cause of which is bodily injury," and the language in that regard is too plain to leave any room for rules of construction to operate. To support that, the decisions of the Massachusetts court, made under a similar statute adopted in 1842, the first act of its kind in this country, and from which our own was doubtless taken, holding the same, were cited. It needs no discussion to show that the familiar rule stated by Chief Justice Marshall, with which the learned counsel prefaced his review of Lehmann v. Farwell, has no application to it whatever. The expression, that the survival statute includes every actionable personal injury, and is too plain to that effect to require construction, was not obiter,—it was not even judicial dictum. It was the very groundwork of the opinion itself and governs this case beyond reasonable controversy, unless we are to overrule it.

It is a mistaken opinion that nothing is decided in a case except the result arrived at. All the propositions assumed by the court to be within the case, and all the questions presented and considered, and deliberately decided by the court, leading up to the final conclusion reached, are as effectually passed upon as the ultimate questions solved. School Dist. No. 23 v. Stooker, 42 N. J. L. 115. The judgment is authority upon all points assumed to be within the issues which the record shows the court deliberately considered and decided in reaching it. Quackenbush v. Wisconsin & M. R. Co. 71 Wis. 472; Pray v. Hegeman, 98 N. Y. 351. Nothing is obiter, strictly so called, except matters not within the questions presented,—mere statements or observations by the judge who is writing the opinion, the result of turning aside for the time to some collateral matter by way of illustration. Buchner v. Chicago, M. & N. W. R. Co. 60 Wis. 264; Rohrbach v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 62 N. Y. 47, 20 Am. Rep. 451; Michael v. Morey, 26 Md. 239, 90 Am. Dec. 106; Clark v. Thomas, 4 Heisk. 419; State, Nourse, v. Clarke, 3 Nev. 566; Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137, 2 L. ed. 60. The test of what is obiter by means of which counsel confidently brush aside the decisions of this court on the very point at issue, and the deliberate decisions of many other courts on the same point, or on questions essentially involved, was pressed upon our attention in Buchner v. Chicago, M. & N. W. R. Co. 60 Wis. 264, was there fully considered, and was rejected. A study of the opinion in that case, written by the present chief justice, is commended as the most effectual remedy for the mistaken notion, not only that a decision is not authority except upon the very point necessary to it, but that obiter is to be rejected, always, as entirely without authority. The opinion quotes the rigorous rule by which counsel test authorities fatal to their contention: then the observation of an eminent text writer, whose writings stand as authority in every country where the common law to any extent prevails, that "it is . . . difficult to see why, in a philosophical point of view, the opinion of the court is not as persuasive on all the points which were so involved in the cause that it was the duty of counsel to argue them, and which were deliberately passed over by the court, as if the decision had hung upon but one point," and adds: "Such dictum, if dictum it is, should . . . be regarded as 'judicial dictum,' in contradistinction to mere obiter dictum,"—that is, an expression originating from the judge alone, while passing, by the way, in writing his opinion, as an argument or illustration drawn from some collateral question." And further adds that even such expressions are by no means to be rejected as not entitled to be regarded at all; that while they are not binding, they are not without authority; neither is their use reprehensible, as evidenced by the fact that "some of the most sacred canons of the common law have their origin in the mere dicta of judges."

At this point a suggestion should be noticed, that in considering § 4253 we overlooked the familiar rule of Noscitur a sociis. Hiner v. Fond du Lac, 71 Wis. 82, where there is an intimation that such maxim may play an important part in determining the meaning of the statute under consideration, is referred to. Why the discovery of such a serious omission in this case, and not in Lehmann v. Farwell, 95 Wis. 185, 37 L. R. A. 333, where the statute was first considered and its meaning judicially determined, or in the multitude of cases in other courts where similar statutes were construed, in none of which was it supposed that the rule was applicable! That is not easily comprehended. The maxim Noscitur a sociis is not a rule of interpretation by which the meaning of one word or designation, or that of several such, used in close connection, governs in determining the meaning of other words or designations used in the same connection. You may know a person by the company he keeps. You may know the meaning of a term by its associates,—what precedes and what follows it. When? Not in every case; but when not apparent from the language itself. It is a rule of construction to be resorted to where there is use for construction, not otherwise. The court said in Lehmann v. Farwell, that the statute is too plain to admit of construction, hence no rule to that end has any application. The latter familiar rule was evidently not in mind when it occurred that, through forgetfulness in writing the former opinion, the maxim Noscitur a sociis was overlooked. To seek to apply it in determining the meaning of the statute under consideration, in view of the fact that similar statutes have existed in other states for nearly half a century, and been universally supposed to cover injuries from actionable negligence, and thereby reach a different conclusion, would be what might be called judicial recklessness.

The idea that our statute (§ 4255, Rev. Stat.) does not grant a new right of action, but continues an old one, with different beneficiaries and different rules for assessing damages, is urged, as correct, with such confidence that we are called upon to go over the subject anew. No attempt will be made to harmonize all the conflicting observations found in decisions elsewhere regarding the nature of Lord Campbell's act. That cannot be done, and it is not necessary, for most of the conflicts will disappear as one applies judicial observations to the particular facts in regard to which they were made. We said in the former opinion that the view that the statute for the benefit of surviving relatives confers a new right of action for a grievance separate and distinct from that of the injured person, is supported by the better reasoning and the greater weight of authority. That is adhered to, and it is considered that what follows leaves little or no room for reasonable controversy as to its soundness, if reliance can be placed upon the evident purpose of the statute of authorities elsewhere. It is suggested that the conclusion was reached by illogical reasoning based upon obiter observations in judicial decisions. We will consider that.

We said that the cause of action of the injured party, which survives, is separate and distinct from the cause of action in favor of surviving relatives under § 4255; that a cause of action unsatisfied at the death of the injured party, for compensation for his injuries, is a condition of the operation of such section so as to give a right of action to the survivors therein named; that the extinguishment of the primary cause of action leaves the statute with no office to perform; that in the absence of such extinguishment, there are two rights or causes of action for distinct and separate losses. That was supposed to be supported by numerous authorities cited in the opinion, and it does not seem to have occurred to the courts where such decisions were rendered that the reasoning was illogical or the conclusion arrived at a non sequitur. That characterization was made of the reasoning and conclusion referred to. How one can draw from such reasoning and conclusion the idea that the premises reasoned from contemplated the existence of two causes of action before the death of the injured party, and that the idea expressed was that the satisfaction of one of such existing causes of action satisfied the other, as counsel seems to have assumed in designating the conclusion reached as a non sequitur, is not perceived. It seems perfectly clear that the idea expressed was, that before the death of the injured party there is but one cause of action; that if that be not extinguished before such death, by the operation of § 4255 there may be another cause of action; that while before the death there can be but one such cause, if that survive there may be two. The learned counsel evidently forgot for the moment that the reasoning, though clothed in the language of the writer of the opinion, was based on the same premises, and proceeded by the same mental process, with language definite and clear, to the same conclusion as that in the opinion of Justice Coleridge in Blake v. Midland R. Co. 10 Eng. L. & Eq. 443, Justice Brewer in Hulbert v. Topeka, 34 Fed. Rep. 510, Justice Wilson in Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 38 Vt. 294, and many others in numerous opinions in cases cited, and still others that will be cited in this opinion, which on account of counsel's labor, must be assumed not to have escaped their notice.

Our attention is again called to Read v. Great Eastern R. Co. L. R. 3 Q. B. 555, decided in 1868, and Griffiths v. Dudley, L. R. 9 Q. B. Div. 357, in support of the continuation of the old cause of action theory. The question in both cases was, Does the satisfaction of the claim of the injured party in his lifetime leave Lord Campbell's act still applicable to the situation created by the death of such party? The nature of the statute otherwise, particularly its proper construction in connection with a statute preserving for the benefit of the estate, the common-law right of action for damages to the injured person, was not thought of. What is said as to the statutory right not being new, but a right conferred in place of an old right, is much nearer pure obiter than what is called such in the argument on the motion for rehearing in reviewing decisions cited by this court as authority. In neither of the cases is Blake v. Midland R. Co. 10 Eng. L. & Eq. 443, decided in 1852, referred to, where the exact nature of the statutory action was considered, and, in the learned opinion given by Justice Coleridge, said to be a new right and not a right by transfer or continuation of the claim of the deceased, which opinion has been referred to as an authority in many courts and by many text writers since that time. "The statute does not," said Justice Coleridge, "transfer the right of action [of the deceased] to his representative, but gives to his representative a totally new right of action on different principles." The three cases are, really, in perfect harmony when rightly understood. On the one hand it is said Lord Campbell's act is in the nature of a survival statute and does not confer a new right. That is true in the sense the English court doubtless understood its own language; that is, that the compensation to surviving relatives was conferred in place of that of the injured person, which, by the common law, was extinguished by death. On the other hand, it is said Lord Campbell's act confers an entirely new right, which, too, is obviously true in the sense that it is a right of recovery by different persons, for different losses, on different principles than were known to the common law. That there is any such material variance between the two ideas as courts in some jurisdictions have discovered and assigned as a justification for holding that plain language in the legislative act, making survivable all claims based on actionable negligence, does not mean that but something else, is not perceived. Lush, J., said (Read v. Great Eastern R. Co. L. R. 3 Q. B. 555), that it was not the intention of the English statutes to make the wrongdoer pay twice for the same injury, so the right was there spoken of as not new and independent, but a right in substitution for the lapsed right. That does not conflict with the other ideas that none of the elements of damage, of the right which lapsed by common-law rules, are transferred by this statute to the beneficiaries therein named, and in that sense that the right conferred by statute is new. Therefore, the purpose of Lord Campbell's act was not to make the wrongdoer pay damages twice for the same wrong; it was to give to the surviving relatives a right on condition. That condition, in case of survival of the right of action, which fails by the common law, exists nevertheless; and if the original inducement for granting of the new right be removed by preserving the old right under another statute, that does not by any means affect the situation, for the sufficient inducement is yet left to uphold the statutory right.

44 L. R. A.

That we have expressed correctly the views of the English courts is abundantly borne out by numerous cases, some decided before and some after Griffiths v. Dudley, not before cited, including a very recent case passing directly on the question, which was not before us when the previous opinion was prepared and which has evidently not received the attention of respondent's counsel. Leggott v. Great Northern R. Co. (1876) L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 599; Bradshaw v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. (1875) L. R. 10 C. P. 189; Barnett v. Lucas (1872) Ir. Rep. 6 C. L. 247; Robinson v. Canadian P. R. Co. (1892) A. C. 481; Robinson v. London & S. W. R. Co. 19 C. B. N. S. 51; Seward v. The Vera Cruz, L. R. 10 App. Cas. 59; Pym v. Great Northern R. Co. 4 Best & S. 396.

In Leggott v. Great Northern R. Co. the question was, Does a recovery under Lord Campbell's act preclude a recovery for the benefit of the estate, of damages to the injured person?—the precise question in this case. The affirmative, unless barred by a recovery under Lord Campbell's act, was conceded for the purposes of the case, though the rule generally as to that was otherwise. The direct question left was the one indicated, namely, Does a recovery after death in one right bar a recovery in the other? And on that the court decided in the negative. Quain, J., in deciding the case said, the two actions are entirely different things, one for the loss the estate has suffered and the other under Lord Campbell's act, which "enables an action to be brought in a case where it could not have been brought before that act, namely, when the man has suffered a personal injury and dies in consequence. After his death, before Lord Campbell's act, no such action could have been maintained, because the death destroyed it. It fell with the life of the individual injured. Now Lord Campbell's act gives an entirely new action, not an action connected with the estate of the deceased in the slightest degree, and the damages recoverable in it would be no part of the estate of the deceased. . . . I therefore feel clear upon the point that these actions are not brought in the same right, and that, therefore, the finding in the one does not constitute an estoppel in the other."

If the foregoing leaves doubt in the minds of the most skeptical, as to the position of the English courts, it will be removed by Robinson v. Canadian P. R. Co. decided by the house of lords in 1892. That is probably the most recent expression of such courts on the subject. The case arose in Canada. The statute is similar to our § 4255, except it requires, as a condition of its operation, death of the injured person without having satisfied his claim. The word "satisfied" does not occur in our statute, but words equivalent so far as relates to the extinguishment of the claim. The Canadian act further provides that the beneficiary may bring the action direct. There is a limitation of the right of the injured person to commence an action to enforce his claim for damages, to one year after the happening of his injury. In the given case the period was allowed to lapse and death then occurred. Action was then commenced to enforce the statutory liability to surviving relatives. The loss by prescription of the primary claim was urged in bar of the statutory right. The Canadian supreme court sustained that, and by special leave the cause was carried to the house of lords where, all the members of the privy council who heard it concurring, Lords Watson, Macnaghten, Morris, Hannen, Shand and Sir Richard Couch, the judgment of the lower court was reversed upon the ground that the right of action of surviving relatives, contingent on the death of the injured person without having satisfied his claim, is a new and independent right which vests on the happening of the contingency mentioned in the statute; and that such contingency is death from the negligent injury without the injured party having satisfied his claim; that an extinguishment of such claim by prescription is not the satisfaction thereof contemplated by the act, which requires the active participation of the injured party, and is not satisfaction by mere operation of law. There was no difference of opinion between the last decision and the one reversed, except as to the scope of the word "satisfied" used in the Canadian act. Both courts held that the statutory action was to enforce a new right. Justice Strong [19 Can. S. C. 303], in delivering the opinion of the lower court, said: "It has been determined in England that the action under Lord Campbell's act is not the same action as that which the deceased person would have himself had at common law, if he had survived, but a new action given by the statute." Again he said: "As I have before said, I am of opinion that the action, being of the same nature, and indeed the same action in all respects, as that conferred by Lord Campbell's act, it must, as an action on that statute is considered in England, be deemed to be a new action, but still a new action dependent on the condition that the action of the deceased had not at the time of his death been barred or extinguished." With this we rest the subject under discussion as to the holdings of the English courts.

In support of what was formerly said, that the great weight of authority in this country is in favor of the doctrine that there may be two independent causes of action for distinct losses for a single injury, in the circumstances presented by this case, the following additional authorities are referred to: Safford v. Drew, 3 Duer, 627; Chicago v. Major, 18 Ill. 349, 68 Am. Dec. 553; Davis v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 53 Ark. 117, 7 L. R. A. 283; Whitford v. Panama R. Co. 23 N. Y. 465; Hedrick v. Iowaco R. & Nav. Co. 4 Wash. 400; Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. Phillips, 64 Miss. 693; Connors v. Burlington, O. R. & N. R. Co. 71 Iowa, 490, 60 Am. Rep. 314; Putman v. Southern P. Co. 21 Or. 230; Mulchahey v. Washburn Car Wheel Co. 145 Mass. 281; Belding v. Black Hills & Ft. P. R. 44 L. R. A.

Co. 3 S. D. 369; Hamilton v. Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. 42 La. Ann. 824. They are all to the effect that the right under statutes similar to our § 4255 is new and independent, subject only to the conditions therein named, and that if the primary cause of action survive, both may be enforced, and at the same time. Said Denio, J., in Whitford v. Panama R. Co. 23 N. Y. 465, speaking of a situation where there was no survival statute: "At . . . common law . . . the right of action for damages on account of his bodily injuries which belonged to the deceased while he lived, was extinguished by his death. The statute does not profess to revive his cause of action in favor of the executor or administrator. The compensation for the bodily injuries remains extinct, but a new grievance of a distinct nature, namely, the deprivation suffered by the wife and children or other relatives of their natural support and protection, arises upon his death and is made by the statute the subject of a new cause of action—in favor of these surviving relatives, but to be prosecuted in point of form by the executor or administrator."

In Davis v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 53 Ark. 117, the court by Cockrill, Ch. J., speaking of statutes similar to our §§ 4255 and 4253, said: "The English rule, which is commonly followed by the courts of the states whose statutes embody the provisions of Lord Campbell's act, is that the right of action, given by the latter statute to the personal representative of one whose death has been caused by the default of another, is created by the statute, and is not a continuation of the right of action which the deceased had in his lifetime, although the new right . . . arises only by preserving the cause of action which was in the deceased. If the deceased never had a cause of action, none accrues to his representative or next of kin. The right which accrued to the deceased revives to his administrator by virtue of the former statute (Mansf. Dig. § 5223) [our § 4253] the newly-created right [our § 4255] results from, and accrues on, the death of the injured party. Both actions are prosecuted in the name of the personal representative, where there is one, and may proceed pari passu, without a recovery in the one having the effect of barring a recovery in the other, because the suits are prosecuted in different rights and the damages are given upon different principles to compensate different injuries. One is for the loss sustained by the estate and for the suffering from the personal injury in the lifetime of the decedent, the recovery in which goes to the benefit of the decedent's creditors, if there are any; the other takes no account of the wrong done to the decedent, but is for the pecuniary loss to the next of kin occasioned by the death alone. The death is the end of the period of recovery in one case and the beginning in the other. In one case the administrator sues as legal representative of the state for what belonged to the deceased, in the other he acts as trustee for those upon whom the act confers the right of recovery for the pecuniary loss inflicted upon them."

Further quotation from opinions would only unnecessarily prolong this opinion. Those given are in line with the other decisions cited. It is quite likely that the lapsing of the cause of action in favor of an injured party by his death, according to the rule of the common law, was the inducement for the passage of Lord Campbell's act,—the very bottom of it, as said in Hecht v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 132 Ind. 507, and from that we find some judges regarding the new cause of action as a continuation of the old, and others holding that the cause of action under the statute is an entirely different cause of action for the benefit of different persons, recoverable in a different right, and including entirely different elements of damage. That the actual loss sustained by the surviving relatives was ample inducement for the passage of the act for their benefit, and that in providing for the survival of the cause of action of the injured party for the benefit of the estate, it was so deemed, is too clear from the unmistakable language used to admit of a contrary view. We leave this branch of the subject, suggesting, in closing, that our statutes are substantially the same as those of Massachusetts, so long back as 1842, the survival statute there having been adopted at that date as before indicated. The decisions which subsequently followed, construing such statutes, are all in accordance with the conclusion we have reached.

We proceed now to show that what the learned counsel was pleased to call loose talk and obiter, in opinions of other courts cited in our former opinion, was the deliberate judicial determination of such courts, or such judicial dicta as should be regarded as authority on the subjects treated.

We referred to the language of Justice Brewer in pronouncing judgment in the United States circuit court for the district of Kansas, in Hulbert v. Topeka, 34 Fed. Rep. 510. Counsel call that obiter, and suggest that the justice's idea was based on obiter observations of other courts. Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 38 Vt. 294, and Blake v. Midland R. Co. 10 Eng. L. & Eq. 443, were cited by Justice Brewer. As to the English decision sufficient has already been said. Reference is had to that at this point. Justice Brewer was called upon to judicially consider what the situation was under the Kansas statutes, which are similar to ours, in circumstances similar to those we have in this case. As a member of the supreme court of Kansas he had participated in a decision to the effect that if death ensue from an injury, no cause of action for the benefit of the estate survives; that the right of action to the surviving relatives is exclusive. As an original proposition the learned judge clearly indicated that he deemed such decision wrong, but that it was binding on the Federal court in a case arising in Kansas. His expressions of opinion were properly made 44 L. R. A.

in the case and undoubtedly such as he felt bound to make, in order that the court might not be embarrassed by the decision rendered, in the event of a case being thereafter presented where the court would be free to decide according to its judgment of the law, unbridled by the decision of some other court. What was said should be treated with more deference than loose talk. So far as other courts are concerned, it is entitled to consideration quite equal with the Kansas decision to which it refers.

Now a few words in regard to the Vermont case, Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 38 Vt. 294, which will be considered in the light of Legg v. Britton, 64 Vt. 652. What is said in the former on the subject before us, in the argument for the rehearing here is called obiter and said to have been disapproved as such in the latter case. True, the question of whether the right of action to surviving relatives is a new and independent right, and whether the right of the deceased may survive and under any circumstances the two rights be enforced independent of each other, was not necessarily decided in the Needham Case; yet the subject was considered, was unquestionably presented by counsel on both sides, was supposed at the time to be a question proper for determination, and was deliberately determined. As we have before shown, what was said in making that determination is not obiter. It is at least judicial dictum. The case has been regarded as authority by courts and text writers generally. With but few exceptions it has been given all the force of an adjudication by the court on the very point referred to. Of course it was not controlling on the Vermont court, neither would it be here, even if the case had depended on the question. It was not discredited, but rather was affirmed, in the subsequent decision in Legg v. Britton. All there said is that the language of the former decision, on the subject here discussed, was not controlling, because the question was not necessarily decided in reaching the final conclusion on the point at issue in the case. There is no intimation that the point was not deliberately passed upon, or but that what was said in regard to it was entitled to respect. The idea expressed was that the court was free to consider the subject in the subsequent case as an original question, not disregarding, however, as without authority, the early case. After reaching that conclusion the question was considered anew, and a result reached, as said in our former opinion, substantially the same as before. Chief Justice Ross, who delivered the opinion, met the contention respondent supports here, by saying, in substance, that the statutes conferred separate and distinct rights, one by survival, and the other a new right dependent on conditions mentioned in the statute. "In conferring this new right of recovery," said the chief justice, "for the same wrongful act, the legislature could place such limitations upon it as it judged expedient. . . . The same wrongful act frequently furnishes two independent rights of recovery, as in the case of an injury to the wife, or an injury to a servant. . . . Hence whether the damages recovered, if two actions are given, may, to some trifling extent be double, or whether the same injury sometimes gives two independent legal rights of recovery, throws very little light upon the intention of the legislature in passing the act of 1849 [the survival statute]. A wrongful injury resulting in the death of the person injured . . . may work serious loss and damage to him while living, and to his estate, and, at the same time, deprive his widow and next of kin of what he would have earned and saved, but for the injury." There is nothing new in the decision. It is in perfect harmony with Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. which, instead of being considered overruled, should be considered as affirmed; and so it is considered by other courts that have reviewed the subject. The case is referred to by Rapallo, J., in Littlewood v. New York, 89 N. Y. 24, 42 Am. Rep. 271, as being the necessary result of a situation where there is a statute reviving the cause of action of the injured person in favor of his estate, and a statute conferring a cause of action upon his surviving relatives.

A word is required in regard to Hurst v. Detroit City R. Co. 84 Mich. 539, wherein it is said that the cause of action which survives is a separate thing from the new cause of action given to surviving relatives under the statute. Counsel quotes the language of Justice Long in that case, and follows with the observation that it needs no argument to show that it is pure obiter. The mis-called obiter states one of the principal reasons given by the court for the conclusion finally reached, and is by no means obiter within the proper significance of the term, as we have before remarked. Instead of the later case of Sweetland v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. (Mich.) 43 L. R. A. 568, to which our attention was earnestly invited, changing the rule of the Hurst Case, it stands as a clear affirmation of it. The two cases, together, are very much in the situation of the two Vermont cases. If the first, by itself, is not to be regarded as a clear adjudication upon the points under discussion, it should be so regarded in connection with the affirmation of the principle in the latter case. True, Justice Long, Justice Grant concurring, said that the language of his former opinion was obiter, but it was not such within the rule stated in this opinion, and was not so considered by the majority of the Michigan court. The opinion of the court, given by Mr. Justice Grant, is to the effect that no cause of action accrued to the injured person in the absence of conscious existence after the injury; that there was no evidence warranting a finding that there was such conscious existence; hence the recovery of damages to the deceased was reversed. Justice Montgomery dissented, because, in his judgment, the question of conscious existence was for the jury on the evidence. Justice Hooker dissented, because, in his judgment, life after the injury was all that was necessary to a survival of the cause of action. On the whole, how anything can be seen in the case to weaken what was said in the Hurst Case is not understood. True, the court was divided on the question, but the majority of the justices held to the doctrine that the cause of action of the injured person is not lost by his death. That seems plain beyond reasonable controversy.

We now come to a suggestion that this court has expressly decided that in case of death from actionable negligence, no cause of action survives. At this point the significance of the term obiter dictum suddenly changes, as it seems. Formerly everything was included not necessary to the conclusion reached, but when Ean v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 95 Wis. 69, is reached, an observation regarding the subject beyond the case, —something far less entitled to the weight than those mere general expressions based on correct premises but beyond the case, covered by the maxim to which Chief Justice Marshall alluded in Cohen v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 5 L. ed. 257, to which counsel referred in the opinion, as the test to be applied to the authorities cited by this court, a statement made in passing regarding an outside and not even collateral topic, the purest kind of obiter and worse, because the premises upon which it was based omitted the change in the statute regarding revival of actions, which varied the whole situation, and had not theretofore been passed upon by this court as affecting negligent injuries,—is cited to us as the deliberate judgment of the court on the very point covered by the observation. The question was, if death happened to an employee from the negligence of a co-employee under such circumstances that, had death not ensued, he would have had, by statute, a cause of action against the common employer to recover damages for his injury, may surviving relatives recover their loss under § 4255? That was the sole question considered and decided. Section 4253, as it now exists, was not thought of, nor was it in any way involved, even collaterally. In making the observation, decisions were in mind made before the change in the statute in regard to the survival of causes of action for injury to the person. All this is so obvious, even by a casual reading of the case, that it is not seen why it was cited to our attention as authority, especially in view of Lehmann v. Farwell, subsequently decided, where the survival statute was fully considered and it was said that it covered every cause of action for a bodily injury based on actionable negligence, and in view of the further fact that we have heretofore said in this case that the court decided that way in the Lehmann Case, and that it rules here. There are many cases where a contention regarding what has been decided is justifiable, but when once made and considered, and the court deliberately passes judgment as to what it before decided, that at least should set the matter at rest.

There are some references, made in the argument for a rehearing, to statutes of other states and decisions under them. That field was covered in the former opinion. It was recognized that those decisions, and some others, are in conflict with our conclusion. No reason is perceived why that can have any greater weight now than before, or why we should again consider them.

We have now referred point by point to every suggestion found in the argument in support of the motion for a rehearing, and have treated anew those considered of importance, with as much care as if the subjects were before us for the first time. Notwithstanding the result reached is the same as before, the motion and this opinion upon it will add strength and stability to the judicial declaration of the law originally made. The labor of counsel for respondent has not been without good results. It has placed before us all suggestions, liable to occur to members of the profession, why a different result should have been reached. The court has been enabled thereby to consider such suggestions and pass upon them as a part of this case instead of their being left for consideration in future cases. That adds to the authority of a decision, and may rightly be considered fortunate.

To recapitulate why the motion for a rehearing should be denied, notwithstanding the reasons urged to the contrary:

(1) The statute (Rev. Stat. § 4253) we were called upon to construe, is too plain to admit of any other consideration than that which the ordinary meaning of the words suggests.

(2) The statute is not open to construe—
44 L. R. A.

tion in this case, because the subject was fully covered in Lehmann v. Farwell.

(3) The suggestion that the maxim Non oītur a sociis should be applied to the statute cannot be adopted, because a rule for construction is not applicable where there is no use for construction.

(4) The contention that the illustration used in the former opinion, to make apparent the false theory drawn by some courts from the English decisions, is illogical and involved a non sequitur, is based on a misconception of the premises on which the conclusion was based.

(5) The contention that language in judicial opinions cited in support of the decision, are obiter expressions is based on a misconception of the cases where such opinions were given, and what is properly considered obiter in a judicial decision.

(6) The assumed conflict in English decisions as to the character of the lord chancellor's act is not there when they are viewed from the situations of judges who delivered the opinions.

(7) If the conflict mentioned does exist, that does not change the situation where the legislative purpose is plain to preserve the cause of action of the injured person without prejudice to the cause of action to surviving relatives.

(8) The imagined menace of a double recovery in the situation as we find it does not exist in fact, as the damages in one right are limited to the loss which accrues to the injured person before death, and the damages in the other to the pecuniary loss of surviving relatives, as before the survival statute. The two rights in no way overlap each other.

Motion for rehearing is denied.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

John L. LUNNEY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
Leslie J. HEALEY.

(..... N3b.....)

- *1. This court will not reverse the judgment in a case tried to the court without a jury, merely because of the admission of improper evidence.
2. Where a real-estate broker contracts to produce a purchaser who shall actually buy, he has performed his contract by the production of one financially able, with whom the owner actually makes an enforceable contract of sale. The failure to carry out that contract, even if the default be that of the purchaser, does not deprive the broker of his right to commissions.
3. Evidence in such a case examined, and held to sustain a finding for the broker.

(October 5, 1898.)

•Headnotes by IRVINE, C.

NOTE.—Performance by a real-estate broker of his contract to find a purchaser or effect an exchange of his principal's property.

- I. General rule.
- II. Custom as affecting performance.
- III. The necessity of a written contract.
- IV. Necessity of consummated sale.
- V. Time of performance.
- VI. In case of a special contract.
- VII. In case of an exchange.
- VIII. Negotiations by principal.
- IX. Acceptance of purchaser by principal.
- X. Broker's presence at sale by principal.
- XI. Ratification of broker's acts.
- XII. Position of purchaser found.
- XIII. Effect of purchaser's default.
- XIV. Failure of broker to report purchaser.
- XV. Acts held sufficient performance.
- XVI. Acts held not to constitute performance.

The subject of a real-estate broker as the procuring cause of the sale, and his right when the principal makes the sale, is treated of in a note to Hooley v. Savings Bank of Danbury (Conn.) ante, 321.

The subject of real-estate broker's commissions as affected by the negligence, fraud, or default of the principal and a defective title will be found discussed in the note to Brackenridge v. Claridge (Tex.) 43 L. R. A. 593.

The question of real-estate broker's commissions as affected by his negligence, or fraud, or other acts or agreements on his part respecting the sale or exchange of real estate will be found discussed in note to Leathers v. Canfield, and Friar v. Smith (Mich.) —L. R. A.—.

I. General rule.

Generally it may be stated that a broker's commissions are the compensation for the services of the broker, and when the service stipulated for has been rendered he will be entitled to his commissions. Glider v. Davis, 137 N. Y. 504, 20 L. R. A. 398.

The question what constitutes a sale which amounts to performance of a contract to effect a sale or procure a purchaser has arisen in some cases.

The case of Watson v. Brooks, 8 Sawy. 316, 318, held that a sale of real property was an 44 L. R. A.

ERROR to the District Court for Seward County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover commissions alleged to have been earned as a real-estate broker. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Biggs & Thomas, for plaintiff in error:

In an action to recover commissions for the sale of land, alleged to have fallen through on account of the principal's failure to procure a patent to the land within the time agreed on, the intended purchaser being unable to complete the purchase when the patent was secured, the agent cannot recover unless he affirmatively proves that the purchaser had during the time the actual cash to make the payment, it not being sufficient to show that he had the property out of which the price could have been made by suit.

Dent v. Powell, 93 Iowa, 711; Mattingly v. Pennie, 105 Cal. 514.

agreement by the vendor to convey the title thereto, or an estate therein, to the vendee for a certain valuable consideration then or thereafter to be paid, and was complete without the conveyance, although the legal title remained in the vendor.

The business of a real-estate broker or agent, generally, is only to find a purchaser, and the settled rule as stated by the courts is that, in the absence of an express contract between the broker and his principal, the implication generally is that the broker becomes entitled to the usual commissions whenever he brings to his principal a party who is able and willing to take the property and enter into a valid contract upon the terms then named by the principal, although the particulars may be arranged and the matter negotiated and completed between the principal and the purchaser directly. Hill v. Jebb, 55 Ark. 574, 576; Zelmer v. Antisell, 75 Cal. 509; Phelan v. Gardner, 43 Cal. 311; Armstrong v. Lowe, 76 Cal. 616; Smith v. Schiele, 93 Cal. 144, 149; Duffy v. Hobson, 40 Cal. 244, 6 Am. Rep. 617; Rutenberg v. Main, 47 Cal. 219; Dolan v. Scanlan, 57 Cal. 266; Phelps v. Prusch, 83 Cal. 628; Babcock v. Merritt, 1 Colo. App. 84, 87; Howe v. Werner, 7 Colo. App. 530, 532; Collins v. McClurg, 1 Colo. App. 348; Hungerford v. Hlicks, 39 Conn. 259; Davis v. Morgan, 96 Ga. 518, 520; Rees v. Spruance, 45 Ill. 308, 310; Wilson v. Mason, 158 Ill. 304; Fischer v. Bell, 91 Ind. 243, 244; Hopwood v. Corbin, 63 Iowa, 218; Cassady v. Seeley, 69 Iowa, 509; Iselin v. Griffith, 62 Iowa, 668, 670; Blodgett v. Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. 63 Iowa, 606, 609; Van Gorder v. Sherman, 81 Iowa, 403; Gillett v. Corum, 7 Kan. 159; Coleman v. Meade, 13 Bush, 358, 360; Garcelon v. Tibbetts, 84 Me. 148; Kimberly v. Henderson, 29 Md. 512; Jones v. Adler, 34 Md. 440; Tombs v. Alexander, 101 Mass. 255, 3 Am. Rep. 343; Burke v. Cogswell, 39 Minn. 344; Hamlin v. Schultz, 31 Minn. 486, 34 Minn. 534; Armstrong v. Wann, 20 Minn. 126; Francis v. Baker, 45 Minn. 83; Barringer v. Stoltz, 39 Minn. 63; Plister v. Gove, 48 Mo. App. 455; Chiple v. Leathe, 60 Mo. App. 15, 20; Wright v. Brown, 68 Mo. App. 577; Nesbitt v. Hiesler, 49 Mo. 383, 385; Woods v. Stephens, 46 Mo. 556, 557; Beauchamp v. Higgins, 20 Mo. App. 514; Hayden v. Grilo, 26 Mo. App. 293; Millan v. Porter, 31 Mo. App. 563, 576; Tyler

There is a wide difference between the case at bar and the case where the seller puts the contract in motion by accepting a payment or making a contract with the buyer for payment. In that class of cases the agent is entitled to his commission, but, where the buyer is to make a payment as earnest money and he does not do so and wholly fails to do the primary thing which he is to do by his contract, then there is not, in fact, a contract, and it would be a fraud upon the seller, if, as in the case at bar, the seller would be compelled to go into court to compel the buyer to do the first thing which he agreed to do.

Pearson v. Mason, 120 Mass. 53; Rice v. Mayo, 107 Mass. 550; Love v. Miller, 53 Ind. 294, 21 Am. Rep. 192; Keys v. Johnson, 68 Pa. 43.

The purchaser must do the thing which he is to do which will commence the contract.

v. Parr, 52 Mo. 249; Timberman v. Craddock, 70 Mo. 638; Bell v. Kaiser, 50 Mo. 151; Goffe v. Gibson, 18 Mo. App. 1; Gaty v. Sack, 19 Mo. App. 477; Love v. Owens, 31 Mo. App. 501; Stinde v. Scharff, 36 Mo. App. 15, 19; Collins v. Fowler, 8 Mo. App. 588, Appx.; Ramsey v. West, 31 Mo. App. 685; Christensen v. Wooley, 41 Mo. App. 53; Carpenter v. Rynders, 52 Mo. 278; Balley v. Chapman, 41 Mo. 536; Gaty v. Foster, 18 Mo. App. 639; Hayden v. Grillo, 35 Mo. App. 653; Yoder v. White, 75 Mo. App. 155; Traynor v. Morse (Neb.) 75 N. W. 1103; Jones v. Stevens, 36 Neb. 849; Potvin v. Curran, 13 Neb. 302; Barber v. Hildebrand, 42 Neb. 400; Slemssen v. Homan, 35 Neb. 802; Stewart v. Smith, 50 Neb. 631; Hinds v. Henry, 36 N. J. L. 328, 332; McClave v. Paine, 49 N. Y. 561, 10 Am. Rep. 431, 432; Glentworth v. Luther, 21 Barb. 145; Mulenhoff v. Gensler, 39 N. Y. S. R. 441; Condict v. Cowdrey, 46 N. Y. S. R. 806, 898; Duclos v. Cunningham, 102 N. Y. 678; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co. 83 N. Y. 373, 22 Am. Rep. 441; Ware v. Dos Passos, 4 App. Div. 32, 35; Gerdling v. Haskin, 141 N. Y. 514; Montgomery v. Knickerbacker, 27 App. Div. 117; Powell v. Lamb, 1 N. Y. Supp. 431, 432; McComb v. Von Ellert, 7 Misc. 59, 60; Moses v. Helmke, 18 Misc. 857; Smith v. Nicoll, 91 Hun, 173, 174; Curtiss v. Mott, 90 Hun, 439; Felner v. Kobre, 13 Misc. 499, 500; Gilder v. Davis, 137 N. Y. 506, 20 L. R. A. 398; Fraser v. Wyckoff, 63 N. Y. 445, 448; Douglass v. Halsted, 81 Hun, 65, 69; Landsberger v. Murray, 6 Misc. 605; Folsom v. Hesse, 24 Misc. 713; Hay v. Platt, 68 Hun, 488; Smith v. Seattle, L. S. & E. R. Co. 72 Hun, 202; Wooley v. Lowenstein, 83 Hun, 155; Condict v. Cowdrey, 139 N. Y. 273; Levy v. Ruff, 4 Misc. 180, Affirming 3 Misc. 147; Mooney v. Elder, 56 N. Y. 238; Bennett v. Egan, 3 Misc. 421, 422; Barnard v. Monnot, 33 How. Pr. 440, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 108, 3 Keys, 203; Hamilton v. Gillender, 26 App. Div. 156; Coleman v. Garrigues, 18 Barb. 60, 66; Goodwin v. Brennecke, 21 App. Div. 138, 139; Freedman v. Havemeyer, 37 App. Div. 518; Redfield v. Tegg, 38 N. Y. 212; Seymour v. St. Luke's Hospital, 28 App. Div. 119, 122; Simonsen v. Klusick, 4 Daly, 143, 145; Satterthwaite v. Vreeland, 3 Hun, 152; Kirwin v. Barney, 27 Misc. 181; Baker v. Thomas, 11 Misc. 112, 113; Wylie v. Marine Nat. Bank, 61 N. Y. 415; Roush v. Loeffler, 3 Ohio Dec. 628, 629; Kyle v. Rippey, 20 Or. 447, 453; Cledenon v. Pancoast, 75 Pa. 213; Keys v. Johnson, 68 Pa. 43; Pratt v. Patterson, 112 Pa. 475; Middleton v. Thompson, 163 Pa. 112, 119; Hartley v. Anderson, 150 Pa. 391; Gibson's Estate, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 147, 44 L. R. A.

Neiderlander v. Starr, 50 Kan. 766; Cremier v. Miller, 56 Minn. 52; Tousey v. Etzel, 9 Utah, 329; Barber v. Hildebrand, 42 Neb. 406.

Messrs. D. C. McKillip and Thomas Healey, for defendant in error:

When a real-estate broker is employed to procure a purchaser on terms fixed by the seller, and he produces one ready, able, and willing to buy on the seller's terms, and introduces him to the seller, and the seller then enters into a contract with the proposed buyer himself, without calling on the agent, he cannot escape paying the commission, if the contract so made with the purchaser is so defectively drawn as to be unenforceable.

Crevier v. Stephen, 40 Minn. 258; Potvin v. Curran, 13 Neb. 302; Cassady v. Seeley, 69 Iowa, 509.

All the agent had to do to earn the stipulated commission was to bring to his employ-148; Peckham v. Ashhurst, 18 R. I. 376; McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 1 S. D. 497; Parker v. Walker, 86 Tenn. 566, 568; Cheatham v. Yarbrough, 90 Tenn. 77; Woodall v. Foster, 91 Tenn. 195, 197; Ryan v. Kahler (Tex. Civ. App.) 46 S. W. 71, 72; Tousey v. Etzel, 9 Utah, 329; Halsey v. Montelro, 92 Va. 581, 583; Donohue v. Padden, 93 Wis. 20, 22; McArthur v. Slauson, 53 Wis. 41; McGavock v. Woodlief, 20 Illow. 221, 15 L. ed. 884.

The above principle has been held to imply and involve the agreement of the buyer and seller, a meeting of their minds, and the production of the purchaser by the agency of the broker. Garcelon v. Tibbetts, 84 Me. 148.

So, the above rule holds good in cases in which the broker is merely to find a purchaser, without any authority to execute a contract binding upon his principal. Hamlin v. Schulte, 34 Minn. 534, 536.

This last proposition is upheld by the decisions of all the courts of the Union, and may be said to be so far settled as hardly to require the citation of authorities to support it.

It has been held that there is no meritorious distinction between the case of an agent undertaking to sell and one undertaking to find a purchaser, upon the ground that the agent in undertaking to sell must not alone find a purchaser but must place the parties in such a position that the sale may be enforced between them by law, for the reason that the broker in either case is required to do no more than find a purchaser, and cannot do the selling unless specifically authorized to do so by power of attorney, the undertaking to sell in such cases being no more than an engagement to find a purchaser who is ready and willing to buy. McFarland v. Lillard, 2 Ind. App. 160. To the same effect. Treat v. De Ceila, 41 Cal. 202; Duffy v. Hobson, 40 Cal. 240, 6 Am. Rep. 617; Goss v. Broom, 31 Minn. 484; Reynolds v. Tompkins, 23 W. Va. 229; Lockwood v. Rose, 125 Ind. 588.

And it has been held that all that the broker can do is to find a party who will be acceptable to the owner, and enter into a contract of purchase with him, unless the owner makes him more than a mere broker by giving him a power of attorney to convey the property; but in such a case he ceases to be a broker and becomes an attorney. McConaughy v. Mahannah, 28 Ill. App. 169, 173; Glentworth v. Luther, 21 Barb. 145, 146.

He must, however, find the purchaser. Markus v. Kennesly, 19 Misc. 517; Wylie v. Marine Nat. Bank, 61 N. Y. 416.

In case the terms of the contract are express er a responsible purchaser, willing to buy at the price of $6,400, upon terms satisfactory to his employer.

Gilder v. Davis, 137 N. Y. 504, 20 L. R. A. 398.

If the broker negotiates a contract different from that prescribed by his employer, and the employer subsequently ratifies it, and thus a contract is finally made which is satisfactory to him, then the broker has earned his commission.

Nesbitt v. Helser, 49 Mo. 383; Coleman v. Meade, 13 Bush, 358.

The ability of Stutzman to perform the contract is presumed and proof thereof waived by Lunney's acceptance of Stutzman as a purchaser and entering into contract with him, without calling on the aid or assistance of his agent Healey.

Francis v. Baker, 45 Minn. 83; Rice v. Mayo, 107 Mass. 550; Pearson v. Mason, to sell at a fixed price the broker must find a purchaser at the price for which he has been authorized to sell, before he can lawfully demand his compensation. Satterthwaite v. Vreeland, 3 Hun, 152; Henderson v. Vincent, 84 Ala. 99.

And if he is to sell at an amount which shall be "net" to his principal he must show that he has procured such a purchaser before he can recover his commissions. Antisdel v. Canfield (Mich.) 5 Det. L. N. 777, 77 N. W. 944.

The rule that the right of a real-estate broker, who finds a purchaser able and willing to buy upon the principal's terms, to commissions, is complete, rests upon the general usage of the business, and is liable to be modified or superseded by a special usage in relation to the particular transaction in connection with which the broker was employed, or by a special agreement between the parties. Hinds v. Henry, 36 N. J. L. 328, 332.

But where there is no contract the broker's right to compensation depends upon the fact that the property was sold by him, and this is so without reference to custom. Harrell v. Zimpieman, 66 Tex. 292, 294.

Something more than a mere offer to purchase must be shown by the broker, as an offer to purchase may be made by one without means, and who is in no condition to comply with the terms of the sale, and against whom a claim for damages resulting from the failure to perform the contract of purchase cannot be enforced, and an offer from such an one ought not to be considered as constituting the performance of the broker's undertaking to negotiate a sale of the land. Iselin v. Griffith, 62 Iowa, 668, 670.

The undertaking to procure a purchaser requires of the party no undertaking, not simply to name or introduce a person who may be willing to make any sort of contract in reference to the property, but to produce a party capable, and who ultimately becomes the purchaser. Kimberly v. Henderson, 29 Md. 512, 515; Keener v. Harrod, 2 Md. 63; McGavock v. Woodlief, 20 How. 221, 15 L. ed. 884.

So, where the compensation is to be paid by way of commissions, the whole services or duty must be performed before any right to commissions arises unless the act of the principal has prevented the performance of it; he must complete the thing required of him before he is entitled to charge for it. Hyams v. Miller, 71 Ga. 608, 618; Gottschalk v. Jennings, 1 La. Ann. 5, 7, 45 Am. Dec. 70.

And the whole question turns upon the inquiry whether the things he has done while his 120 Mass. 53; Coleman v. Meade, 13 Bush, 358; Love v. Miller, 53 Ind. 294, 21 Am. Rep. 192; Keys v. Johnson, 68 Pa. 43.

Where the vendor has made a contract of sale, to a person produced by the broker, the solvency and ability of such purchaser to perform the obligations of his contract will be presumed.

Goss v. Broom, 31 Minn. 484; Grosse v. Cooley, 43 Minn. 188; Hart v. Hoffman, 44 How. Pr. 168; Crevier v. Stephen, 40 Minn. 288; Cook v. Kroemeke, 4 Daly, 268; Nicholas v. Jones, 23 Neb. 813; Butler v. Kenard, 23 Neb. 357; Potvin v. Curran, 13 Neb. 302; Blakeslee v. Ervin, 40 Neb. 134; Holden v. Starks, 159 Mass. 503; Heaton v. Edwards, 90 Mich. 500.

Irvine, C., filed the following opinion:

This was an action by Healey against Lunney to recover commissions as a real-estate agency continues have brought forth a purchaser able, willing, and ready to accept the owner's offer of sale. McKnight v. Thayer, 48 N. Y. S. R. 620, 622; Slater v. Hoit, 10 N. Y. S. R. 257, 261, 622.

The broker's commissions on a sale of real estate are earned and due when the terms of the contract of sale are specific and unmistakable, and everything is done that can be done by the purchaser to carry out the contract. Kock v. Emmerling, 22 How. 69, 16 L. ed. 202.

And in order to fulfil his contract undertaking to make a sale of the property for a certain price within a given time, and upon a representation authorized by the principals to the effect that the title is good, it is necessary for the broker to find someone, not only able and willing to purchase upon the terms proposed and within the time limited, but who will also agree to do so. Watson v. Brooks, 8 Sawy. 816, 318.

He must complete the sale; that is to say, he must find a purchaser in a situation ready and willing to complete the purchase according to the terms agreed upon. Kimberly v. Henderson, 29 Md. 512, 515; Hyams v. Miller, 71 Ga. 608, 618.

In Pratt v. Patterson, 7 Phila. 135, it is said that the true meaning of the contract between the principal and the broker is that the former will pay the broker a commission provided he finds a purchaser whom the principal agrees to accept, and to whom an actual sale is made.

The sale must be negotiated and approved before the broker can be said to have fulfilled his contract. Hall v. Gambrill, 92 Fed. Rep. 32, 37.

The broker must prove that he effected either a completed sale to the purchaser, or an agreement to purchase susceptible of enforcement against the purchaser. Hammond v. Crawford, 35 U. S. App. 1, 66 Fed. Rep. 425, 427, 14 C. C. A. 109; Hawkins v. Chandler, 8 Houst. (Del.) 434, 455.

In the absence of fraud on the principal's part he must perform all the conditions of the contract as made with his principal, otherwise he cannot recover. Warren v. Cram, 71 Mo. App. 638, 641; Blackwell v. Adams, 28 Mo. App. 61; Reiger v. Bigger, 29 Mo. App. 421; Stinde v. Blesch, 42 Mo. App. 578; Hackmann v. Gutweller, 66 Mo. App. 244; Mullenhoff v. Gensler, 39 N. Y. S. R. 441; Burns v. Oliphant, 78 Iowa, 456, 459; Zeidler v. Walker, 41 Mo. App. 118, 121; Wilson v. Mason, 57 Ill. App. 325, 330; Hafner v. Herron, 165 Ill. 242, Affirming 60 Ill. App. 592; Eldson v. Saxon (Tex.)

broker. The plaintiff recovered in the district court, and the defendant seeks a reversal of the judgment.

It is suggested that the petition does not state a cause of action, but the supposed defect is not pointed out in the briefs, and we perceive none on examining the petition.

Error is assigned on the admission of certain evidence. The case was tried to the court without a jury, and errors, if any were made, in the admission of evidence, are therefore not a ground of reversal.

The principal controversy concerns the sufficiency of the evidence. The petition alleges a contract between the parties whereby it was agreed that if Healey would find a purchaser for certain land of Lunney's at the price of $6,400, and on such terms of purchase as should be agreed upon between Lunney and the purchaser, Lunney would pay

Healey $200. It is then alleged that Healey produced a purchaser willing and able to pay the price fixed, that terms were agreed upon, and a contract executed for the sale of the land. On analysis it will be seen that the petition does not charge the usual broker's contract to produce a purchaser able and willing to purchase on terms previously fixed by the owner. Here the owner had fixed the price alone, and the other terms were to be arranged with the purchaser. The contract would only be performed by the production of a purchaser with whom the owner should actually make a bargain. The evidence on behalf of the plaintiff strongly tended to establish the averments of his petition. It appears that the purchaser by him produced actually executed a contract to purchase the land; but it also appears that the contract was not performed, and it is inferable that

Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 957; Kelly v. Stone (Iowa) 62 N. W. 842; Fraser v. Wyckoff, 63 N. Y. 445, 448.

The question of fraud on the principal's part will be found discussed in note to Brackenridge v. Claridge (Tex.) 43 L. R. A. 593.

So, if the broker, for a stipulated price, undertakes to find a purchaser of the property, he is not entitled to anything unless he finds a purchaser willing to buy the whole property. Weber v. Clark, 24 Minn. 354; Illingsworth v. Slosson, 19 Ill. App. 612, 614.

Again, he must strictly perform the services required of him, according to the authority conferred upon him. Wilson v. Sturgis, 71 Cal. 226, 229; Buckingham v. Harris, 10 Colo. 455; Nelson v. Lee, 60 Cal. 565, 567; Armes v. Cameron, 8 Mackey, 435, 436; Nesbitt v. Helser, 49 Mo. 383; Hoyt v. Shipherd, 70 Ill. 309, 311; Moses v. Bierling, 31 N. Y. 402; Jacobs v. Shenon, 2 Idaho, 1002.

He must allege and prove, on the clearest grounds, his compliance with the undertaking. Hayden v. Grillo, 26 Mo. App. 289, 293.

If the broker accepts an employment, the import of which makes his title to commissions depend upon his securing a purchaser on terms that are specific, he must perform the undertaking in order to claim his commissions, but the principal must not interfere and prevent such performance. Brigg v. Rowe, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 189, 195.

And in such cases no performance on other terms will suffice unless accepted by the principal. Jacobs v. Shenon, 2 Idaho, 1002; Antisdel v. Canfield (Mich.) 5 Det. L. N. 777, 77 N. W. 944.

The above holdings of the courts are all based upon the principle that the broker's right to commissions depends upon the successful performance of his services, and upon nothing else. Barnard v. Mennot, 33 How. Pr. 440, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 108, 3 Keyes, 203.

In Blanc v. New Orleans Improv. & Bkg. Co. 2 Rob. (La.) 63, 65, it is said that in the contract of brokerage nothing is paid unless a bargain is effected.

But when the sale is made by the broker his work is done, and he is entitled to his compensation. Middleton v. Findla, 25 Cal. 76, 81.

If the broker does not himself effect a sale to the purchaser he must show that he conducted the negotiations of the sale to such a stage as to complete the bargain for the sale, so far as it depended upon his action and efforts to accomplish the sale. Hawkins v. Chandler, 8 Houst. (Del.) 434, 435.

He must have discovered the purchaser and 44 L. R. A.

started the negotiations, and there must be a final closing, through his efforts by or on behalf of his principal with the purchaser in compliance with the authority conferred upon him. Smith v. McGovern, 65 N. Y. 574, 575; Hurd v. Nelson, 100 Iowa, 555, 557; Smith v. Keeler, 51 Ill. App. 267, 268; Carter v. Webster, 79 Ill. 435, 436.

And the commissions of the broker are earned when his client has expressed satisfaction, and has signed an agreement for the future transfer of the property. Lighthall v. Caffrey (Quebec Supr. Ct.) 6 Legal News, 202.

So, if property is put into the real-estate broker's hands for sale, and he effects an exchange of the same which his principal carries out, he will be entitled to his commissions. Redfield v. Tegg, 38 N. Y. 212.

It is not, however, a broker's duty to present a purchaser with a contract ready drawn and executed to tender to his principal, and it is enough that under the terms of his employment with his principal he produces a person able and willing to take the property and pay the price on his principal's terms. Cook v. Kroe-meke, 4 Daly, 268, 269.

But if the sale is unauthorized he cannot recover commissions. Carter v. Webster, 79 Ill. 435, 436; Smith v. Keeler, 51 Ill. App. 267, 268.

So, the mere fact that the broker shows the property to the purchaser, but fails to consummate the sale before the withdrawal of the property from the broker's hands, will not entitle him to commissions. Stedman v. Richardson, 100 Ky. 79.

If the broker does not find a purchaser who will give the price fixed no commissions are earned. Rees v. Spruance, 45 Ill. 308, 310.

The purchaser found must be a person competent to comply with the terms of the contract, or able to respond in damages. Hayden v. Grillo, 26 Mo. App. 289, 293, 42 Mo. App. 1.

So, it is not enough that the broker has devoted his time, labor, or money to the interest of his principal, as unsuccessful efforts, however meritorious, afford no ground of action, and therefore if his acts effect no agreement or contract between his employer and the purchaser the loss must be his own, and he loses his labor and efforts which he staked upon success. His commissions are based upon the contract of sale. Garcelon v. Libbetts, 84 Me. 148; Viaux v. Old South Soc. 133 Mass. 110; Loud v. Hall, 106 Mass. 404, 407; Tombs v. Alexander, 101 Mass. 255, 3 Am. Rep. 349; Kock v. Emmerling, 22 How. 69, 16 L. ed. 292; Glenworth v. Luther, 21 Barb. 147; Drury v. Newman, 99 Mass. 256; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron the default was that of the purchaser. In spite of some authority to the contrary, we are convinced that, under such a contract as is here pleaded, the broker is entitled to his commission when through his instrumentality a purchaser has been produced, able and willing to buy, and with whom the owner actually makes an enforceable contract of sale, even though that contract fails in performance through the default of the purchaser. In such case the vendor may usually enforce the specific performance of the contract, and he may in any case recover damages for the breach. In either way he gets the advantage of his bargain, and the broker has done all required of him. Such is the generally accepted view. Love v. Miller, 53 Ind. 294, 21 Am. Rep. 192; Love v. Owens, 31 Mo. App. 501; Leets v. Norton, 43 Conn. 219; Pear- son v. Mason, 120 Mass. 53; Bach v. Emerish, 3 Jones & S. 548.

It is, however, insisted, that in this case the contract of sale never became operative, because of the vendee's failure to perform a condition precedent, and the case is said to be similar to Barber v. Hildebrand, 42 Neb. 400. There the contract was for an exchange of lands, and the person produced by the broker failed to furnish an abstract showing perfect title in himself to the land which he was to give in exchange. The furnishing of such an abstract was a condition precedent to the exchange. It was as if a purchaser produced had been financially unable to buy, and had been for that reason rejected. Here the contract was that the purchaser should pay "$6,400 in manner following: $300 cash in hand paid, the receipt

Co. 53 N. Y. 378, 22 Am. Rep. 441; Cook v. Welch, 9 Allen, 350; Veazie v. Parker, 72 Me. 443, Rockwell v. Newton, 44 Conn. 337.

And a prospective or contemplative agreement is not sufficient. Montgomery v. Knickerbacker, 27 App. Div. 117.

So, if by the written agreement the brokers are only entitled to their commissions when they sell or trade the principal's property on the terms therein mentioned to a person ready, able, and willing to purchase upon those terms, their commissions will not be due if they fail to sell on such terms. Love v. Owens, 31 Mo. App. 501, 504; Reiger v. Bigger, 29 Mo. App. 421; McArthur v. Slauson, 53 Wis. 43.

In the absence of a special contract the general rule of law is that there can be no recovery on the part of the broker unless he shows to the satisfaction of the jury that he brought the parties together and was the procuring cause of the sale, as his undertaking is to make efforts to secure a purchaser. Carroll v. Pettit, 67 Hun, 418; Sassdorff v. Schmidt, 55 N. Y. 319, 321.

And where the evidence shows that the broker has performed no services in effecting the sale, an instruction to the jury that if it should so find the broker will not be entitled to recover, is based upon the evidence of the case, and is not inconsistent. McMurtry v. Madison, 18 Neb. 291, 293.

It is not sufficient for the broker merely to find a purchaser financially able, and who verbally agrees with him to purchase, makes a deposit, but neither signs a binding agreement to purchase nor is produced as a person ready and willing to enter into such a contract. Gunn v. Bank of California, 99 Cal. 349.

The broker must bring the proposed purchaser and the principal together so that they may enter into a valid and binding contract, and the principal must have an opportunity of obtaining the same, or in other words, mutuality must be established between them, and this is the duty assumed by him. Travis v. Graham, 23 App. Div. 214; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co. 83 N. Y. 382, 22 Am. Rep. 441; McKnight v. Thayer, 48 N. Y. S. R. 620, 622; Forrester v. Price, 6 Misc. 308; Follinsbee v. Sawyer, 8 Misc. 370; Zelmer v. Antisell, 75 Cal. 509, 512; Wyckoff v. Bissell, 24 App. Div. 66, 67; Barnard v. Monnot, 53 How. Pr. 440, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 108, 3 Keyes. 203; Barer v. Thomas, 12 Misc. 432, 433, 11 Misc. 112; Felner v. Kobre, 13 Misc. 409, 500; Bab v. Hirschbain, 33 N. Y. S. R. 423; Bennett v. Egan, 3 Misc. 421, 422; Moses v. Helmke, 18 Misc. 357; Vincent v. Woodland Oil Co. 165 Pa. 402; Leszynsky v. Meyer (Cal.) 53 Pac. 703; Gunn v. Bank of California, 99 44 L. R. A.

Cal. 349; Slevers v. Griffin, 14 Ill. App. 63, 66; Baars v. Hyland, 65 Minn. 150; Duclos v. Cunningham, 102 N. Y. 378; Von Hermann v. Wagner, 51 Hun, 431, 433; Hamilton v. Glander, 26 App. Div. 156; McGavock v. Woodlief, 20 How. 221, 15 L. ed. 884; Gerding v. Haskin, 141 N. Y. 514.

So, the meeting of the minds of the parties must be on every material particular of the transaction. Moses v. Helmke, 18 Misc. 357; Halprin v. Schachne, 21 Misc. 519.

And the contract entered into must be one which can be specifically performed. Norman v. Reuther, 25 Misc. 161; Barnard v. Monnot, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 110, 3 Keyes, 203, 33 How. Pr. 440; Mooney v. Elder, 56 N. Y. 238; Knapp v. Wallace, 41 N. Y. 477; Wright v. Brown, 68 Mo. App. 577; Christensen v. Wooley, 41 Mo. App. 53; Carpenter v. Rynders, 52 Mo. 278; Bailey v. Chapman, 41 Mo. 536; Love v. Owens, 31 Mo. App. 501; Gaty v. Foster, 18 Mo. App. 639; Nesbitt v. Helsar, 40 Mo. 383; Hayden v. Grillo, 35 Mo. App. 653; Stinde v. Schraff, 36 Mo. App. 15, 19; Collins v. Fowler, 8 Mo. App. 688; Clapp v. Hughes, 1 Phila. 382; Hartley v. Anderson, 150 Pa. 391; Gibson's Estate, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 147, 148.

And the most conclusive evidence that the broker has brought the minds of the buyer and seller together is the execution and delivery of a deed of the property by the principal to the purchaser. Travis v. Graham, 23 App. Div. 214.

When the minds of the parties have met upon the contract and the terms upon which it is made, it matters not what those terms are, or whether carried out or not, or whether the failure to finally consummate it is due to the act of the principal or of the purchaser, as the broker has then fulfilled all that his contract of employment calls for. Follinsbee v. Sawyer, 8 Misc. 370; Glider v. Davis, 137 N. Y. 504, 20 L. R. A. 398; Hodgkins v. Mead, 130 N. Y. 676; Martin v. Bliss, 57 Hun, 199.

And whenever the broker's services have resulted in a complete meeting of the minds of both the parties he is, in the absence of an express stipulation of the contract, entitled to the compensation agreed upon, or to the usual commissions. Levy v. Kottman, 11 Misc. 372.

So, when the broker has found a purchaser able and willing to buy, and is the efficient cause of bringing the minds of the parties together, his contract is performed and he has earned his commissions. Birmingham Land & Loan Co. v. Thompson, 86 Ala. 146, 149.

But evidence which merely shows an intention to accept an offer made is not sufficient. Leszynsky v. Meyer (Cal.) 53 Pac. 703.

whereof is hereby acknowledged, and the balance as follows," etc. The evidence was that the $300 was not intended in fact to be paid in cash, but was to be represented in part by the assignment of a land contract at the agreed price of $125. For the remaining $175, the purchaser gave, and the vendor received, a note payable in ten days. There is nothing in this that indicates such payment as a condition precedent to the taking effect of the contract. So far as stated, it is quite evident that Lunney might have sued on the note or recovered damages on the contract. But it is said that the contract was not delivered, but left in escrow for delivery only when the other contract should be assigned and the note paid. While, possibly, the evidence might permit the inference that such was the intention, there is no witness who directly so testifies; and the inference drawn by the trial court that the contract was deemed complete is decidedly the more reasonable. Indeed, the express and implied admissions of Lunney's answer are such that it is doubtful whether his present theory was admissible under the pleadings.

There is a suggestion that the fact that the purchaser failed to assign the contract, and pay his note, shows that he was not financially able to do so. This fact would, at most, be evidence tending to so show, and the purchaser's default was explained in a manner consistent with the theory of his ability to perform. Moreover, all the direct evidence was to that effect.

Affirmed.

In a case in which the broker sought to recover compensation, but in which he failed to show a contract either express or by implication, it was stated that the contract between the broker and the principal was the meeting of the minds of the contracting parties, and that where there was no express contract the parties sought to be charged must have such knowledge, or what is equivalent thereto, before his mind can act on the subject and assent to the terms of the contract. Atwater v. Lockwood, 39 Conn. 47, 49.

If the purchaser has agreed to the principal's terms, and the broker has informed the principal thereof, and he has assented and has agreed to meet at the office of counsel to make out the contract, the case establishes sufficient evidence of the meeting of the minds of the seller and purchaser upon the terms of the sale, to entitle the broker to his commissions as upon a performance of his contract, and the principal cannot then insist upon inserting a forfeiture clause in the agreement not previously proposed or even suggested to the purchaser. Beebe v. Ranger, 3 Jones & S. 452, 453, 455.

To entitle a broker to his commissions under a contract to effect a sale, it must appear that either the property has been actually sold through the agency of the broker, or of some other, or that from like agency a purchaser has been found ready and willing to take the property upon the terms fixed by the principal. Mooney v. Elder, 56 N. Y. 238, 240.

In ordinary cases the broker must prove that the contract was induced by his efforts by competent persons, and that the same was upon terms and conditions carefully expressed, even as to details. Moskowitz v. Hornberger, 20 Misc. 559, 560, Affirming 19 Misc. 429; Woolley v. Lowenstein, 83 Hun, 155; Emens v. St. John, 79 Hun, 99.

The agreement as concluded must be that procured by the broker claiming commissions, and it is for him to show that such is the fact. Baker v. Thomas, 12 Misc. 432, Reversing 11 Misc. 112.

The broker must show performance of the contract on his part, even though his principal refuses to comply with his agreement upon the ground that the name of the purchaser has not been revealed to him, and that he has therefore no means of exercising his judgment as to him. Hayden v. Grillo, 26 Mo. App. 289, 293, 42 Mo. App. 1.

He must show negotiations which result in the sale. Von Hermann v. Wagner, 81 Hun, 431, 433.

And the legal import of his agreement binds him to name a person who ultimately buys the property. Keener v. Harrod, 2 Md. 63, 56 Am. 44 L. R. A.

Rep. 706, 708; Murray v. Currie, 7 Car. & P. 584.

It has been held that a broker is entitled to compensation if he substantially effects a sale, by procuring and introducing a purchaser to whom the principal sells the property, even under an oral agreement between the principal and the broker and that a finding by the jury that it is an ordinary case of an employment of a broker to procure a purchaser may be warranted by the evidence. Desmond v. Stebbins, 140 Mass. 339.

But as long as the principal insists upon something which he has a right to insist upon as a condition of sale, and to which the purchaser refuses to assent, in consequence of which disagreement the purchaser refuses to enter into an enforceable contract, it cannot be held that the broker has procured a complete meeting of the minds of both vendor and vendee. Levy v. Kottman, 11 Misc. 372; Bennett v. Egan, 3 Misc. 421.

When a person representing that he is the owner of property, places it in the hands of an agent to be sold, and the agent makes a sale of it in accordance with the instructions of his principal or in pursuance of the terms of the agreement between them, he is entitled to compensation for his labor. Middleton v. Flindia, 25 Cal. 76, 81.

The question whether the broker is entitled to commissions turns on the inquiry whether the things he has done while his agency continues have brought forth a party able, willing, and ready to accept the owner's offer of sale. Slater v. Holt, 10 N. Y. S. R. 257, 261.

Commissions which are to be due when a purchaser shall be found, are due when the purchase is made. Lawrence v. Atwood, 1 Ill. App. 217, 223.

And under a contract with a broker to find a purchaser at a given price, if the broker finds a purchaser and reports the same to his principal, and the evidence supports the same, the broker will be entitled to recover regardless of whether or not the principal expresses his satisfaction for what he has done, or whether he keeps the property or sells it. Orynski v. Menger, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 448.

If the property is sold at a given price, with the consent of the owner, the broker effecting such sale will be entitled to his commissions although he may not have been requested to make a sale at that price under an agreement to pay commissions. Jones v. Adler, 84 Md. 440, 443.

So, a broker who fully discharges his duty and performs all that he undertakes to do, is entitled to recover for his services without regard to the fact whether such services are beneficial or of value to his employer. Glenn v.

Davidson, 37 Md. 365, 367; Kimberly v. Henderson, 29 Md. 512; Schwartz v. Yearly, 81 Md. 270, 276.

And if it is proved that the purchaser is a man of means and able to pay "ready cash," as called for in the contract when the principal performs a condition precedent required of him by the contract, the broker has fulfilled the contract on his part. Lemon v. Lloyd, 46 Mo. App. 452, 456.

The broker may by special agreement with his principal so contract as to make his compensation dependent upon a contingency which his efforts cannot control, even though it relate to the acts of his principal, and a contract of that character is binding, and no action can be maintained until the contingency has arisen. Hinds v. Henry, 36 N. J. L. 326, 332.

So, if the contract is subject to a condition, such condition must be fulfilled before the broker can be said to have earned his commissions. Block v. Ryan, 4 App. D. C. 283; Kimberly v. Henderson, 29 Md. 512.

And whatever the terms and conditions upon which the broker's right to compensation depends, they must be proved as a condition precedent to his right of action for commissions. Fraser v. Wyckoff, 63 N. Y. 445, 448.

So, if there is a special contract by which the broker is not to receive any compensation unless the property is sold at a stated price, he is not entitled to recover commissions unless the property is sold at that price, or unless he introduces a purchaser who is willing to buy but is prevented from so doing by the fault of the principal. Schwartz v. Yearly, 81 Md. 270.

So, if a broker undertakes to find a purchaser for a given sum this ordinarily means that the amount is to be paid "in cash," or, if so stated by the principal, on terms to be satisfactorily arranged, and if the terms are not definitely prescribed the broker assumes the hazard of being able to find a person whose terms may prove satisfactory to the principal, and with whom a definite arrangement may be made. Forrester v. Price, 6 Misc. 308.

Where real estate is placed in a broker's hands for sale at a specified price, which is reduced by a written option for ten days which is afterwards revived and extended in writing for a period of thirty days, the price for which the broker is employed to sell is in the nature of a condition, on which his right to commission is by the terms of his employment rendered dependent, and if he procured a purchaser for either of such sums during the time he is at liberty to accept the one or the other, his commissions are earned, and his right of action created for their recovery, but until he does that, as long as he is not interfered with during the period fixed during which the sale is to be made for the smaller sum no such right accrues to him. Satterthwaite v. Vreeland, 8 Hun, 152.

And the mere fact that a principal fixes upon a sum as an equivalent for a performance of the contract of sale will not bind him to accept the contract as a performance by the broker of his contract which was to sell, to which contract the principal had a right to hold him. Reiger v. Bigger, 29 Mo. App. 421, 427.

So, the principal may stipulate for payment of commissions only upon a sale being effected through the agency of the broker. Dolan v. Scanlan, 57 Cal. 201, 203.

And if the agreement between the broker and his principal is that he shall receive no compensation unless the principal is paid the amount of the purchase price, he will not be entitled to recover commissions without showing 44 L. R. A.

such payment. Crevler v. Stephen, 40 Minn. 288.

If the broker's contract calls for an actual sale through his agency, it is not enough for him to show a provisional arrangement which has failed by no fault of the principal. Levy v. Kottman, 11 Misc. 372; Condict v. Cowdrey, 139 N. Y. 274.

And when a broker, as a part of his employment, attempts to execute for his principal an executory contract of sale or exchange, he does not become entitled to his commissions unless the other contracting party is able to perform the contract on his part. Kalley v. Baker, 132 N. Y. 1; Barnes v. Roberts, 5 Bosw. 73; McGavock v. Woodlief, 20 How. 221, 15 L. ed. 884.

An agreement between a broker and his principal to wait for the commissions upon an exchange of property, until the title deeds pass under which no brokerage is to be paid unless the principal's title proves unmerchantable, which is executed after the brokerage is earned, is without consideration, and cannot be enforced as against the broker. Moskowitz v. Hornberger, 20 Misc. 558, Affirming 19 Misc. 429.

And even if the broker has no authority to bind his principal, and is intrusted with no discretion in fixing the terms of the exchange or sale of property, and his only service is to bring the parties together, yet he is bound to perform that service in the interest of the party who employs him before he can recover his commissions. Walker v. Osgood, 98 Mass. 848, 98 Am. Dec. 168, 169.

An agreement whereby the person introduced was to be a purchaser has been construed as meaning that the person must at some time, and as a result of the introduction, be ready, willing, and able to buy the property upon the terms acceptable to the owner. Platt v. Johr, 9 Ind. App. 58.

In Hill v. Jebb, 55 Ark. 574, 576, it is said that the employment of a broker to sell a tract of land constitutes a special agency, and when the sale is made the only purpose of the agency is accomplished, whether the sale be due to or independent of the acts of the agent.

Yet if the broker fails to perform the contract he cannot obtain remuneration for anything he has done in trying to perform it, especially where it does not appear that he is prevented from accomplishing what he undertook to do by the act of his principal, as the contract must be taken to be entire, and in such a case there can be no apportionment, and no charge for any part of the consideration until that half for which it was agreed to be paid has been performed. Hillingsworth v. Slosson, 19 Ill. App. 612, 614; Rockwell v. Newton, 44 Conn. 333.

And if the broker has failed in the performance of his contract a jury cannot give a verdict for some compensation to the broker upon the general ground that he ought to have something for what he has done, when a contract is proved between the parties by which they have agreed as to their respective rights and duties, as the parties must be held to their contract, no matter how difficult, harsh, or apparently unjust the operation of the rule may be. Hillingsworth v. Slosson, 19 Ill. App. 612, 614; Bacon v. Cobb, 45 Ill. 47.

And if he fails to bring about an agreement the fact that a sale is subsequently made to the identical individual whom the broker has introduced is not of significance, except in a case where bad faith on the part of the principal may be shown. Baker v. Thomas, 12 Misc. 432, 433, Reversing 11 Misc. 112.

Again, if the evidence shows that the minds of the parties never met, and that there was merely an offer to pay cash which the purchaser did not do, but sought to impose other terms and conditions, there can be no recovery of commission. Morrill v. Davis, 27 Neb. 775.

And a substantial variance from the terms of his contract will defeat his right to compensation, though such variance may have been advantageous to his principal. Gelatt v. Ridge, 117 Mo. 553; Nesbitt v. Heiser, 49 Mo. 383.

The principal may, however, accept a conditional or other contract made by his broker as a complete performance by him of his obligation under his contract, where there is a departure from the terms of such contract; but there must be some evidence of such acceptance, and the mere approval of the contract made by the broker where it is substantially different from the contract he was employed to make cannot of itself be held to be an acceptance by the owner as a performance of the broker's obligation. Relger v. Bigger, 20 Mo. App. 421, 427. In this case the court disapproved of and distinguished Leete v. Norton, 43 Conn. 219.

And although the written contract made by the broker with the purchaser may not be binding upon the principals for want of authority from them in writing, yet if they verbally authorize the making of the contract, and the purchaser is willing to abide by it, the broker's commissions are earned. Ward v. Lawrence, 79 Ill. 295.

Under a contract made with one member of a corporation agreeing to give the broker a certain sum payable within thirty days from the date of the sale provided he sold the property for a given sum, where the broker merely reports the finding of a party ready and willing to purchase, it is essential that before the property can be sold the broker should procure the assent of the company to the sale as well as to the finding of a purchaser, and the mere fact of his finding a purchaser under such contract is not a sufficient performance. Curtis v. Watson, 64 Vt. 549. To the same effect, Kirwin v. Barney, 27 Misc. 181.

The broker must show that his demand is due at the time of the commencement of the action. Mooney v. Elder, 56 N. Y. 238, 240.

And if the services had been rendered as agreed, and the debt has thereby matured, it is the duty of the principal to pay it without a demand, and the doctrine that where a sum is payable on the happening of a certain contingency, and the same has arisen, the debtor must be notified thereof, and the money demanded of him before an action is begun, is not applicable. Clifford v. Meyer, 6 Ind. App. 638.

A broker, who seeks to recover a fixed sum on the ground that he is employed to do a particular thing for a stipulated compensation must allege and prove, if his allegations be denied, what it was that he was employed to do, and that he has done it, as the terms of the agreement between him and his employer required. Barnes v. Roberts, 5 Bosw. 73.

So, a broker, claiming commissions under an agreement providing that the principal offers to sell at a certain price, and to pay a certain amount for services rendered in selling or placing said property upon terms acceptable to him, must allege in direct and positive terms that he did render services which resulted in the sale thereof, or that he produced a party ready, willing, and able to purchase said property upon the terms named; otherwise it is insufficient. Jacobs v. Shearon, 2 Idaho, 1002.

But under a contract empowering him to sell within a given time, and reserving the right to the owner to sell, with a reservation of the broker's right to the same fees as if he sold himself, where a sale is made by the principal within a certain number of days after the contract is made, it is not necessary that the agent should allege performance of the contract on his part. Singleton v. O'Brien, 125 Ind. 151.

If the contract has been fully performed, and nothing remains to be done but making compensation in money, such compensation may be recovered upon the common counts which are founded upon express or implied promises, and the promise depends upon the performance. Menifee v. Higgins, 57 Ill. 50, 52.

When a real-estate broker who undertakes to sell property only succeeds in disposing of a part and leases the remainder upon a reserved ground rent, he is entitled to commissions only on the cash actually received, and not on the value of the whole property unless the owner contracted to pay more either expressly or by implication. Blake v. Stump, 73 Md. 160, 10 L. R. A. 103.

In a case in which the broker had been employed by an assignee to sell upon commission, and had performed the services for which he was employed prior to the issuance of an injunction in the case, he was held entitled to be paid for his services. Gibson v. Gray (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 922, 927.

The broker must also prove that he was the procuring cause of the sale. This question is treated of in a note to Hoadley v. Savings Bank of Danbury (Conn.) ante, 321.

II. Custom as affecting performance.

If the broker seeks to make his right to commissions depend upon usage or custom he must show that the usage or custom is so notorious as to affect his principal with knowledge of it, and raise the presumption that he dealt with reference to it, or he must show that he had actual knowledge of it. Blake v. Stump, 73 Md. 160, 10 L. R. A. 103.

In such a case the general rules of law regarding usages and customs, to the effect that a usage which is to govern a question of right must be so certain, uniform, reasonable, ancient, and notorious, uncontradicted, and distinct as probably to be known to, and understood by, the parties as entering into their contract, and cannot be proved by isolated instances, prevail, and the custom must be clearly proved. Potts v. Aechternacht, 93 Pa. 138, 142; Pratt v. Bank, 12 Phila. 378.

If, however, the broker's evidence fails to establish the same the court will refuse to recognize his claim, as the proper office of a custom or usage in business is to ascertain and explain the intent of the parties; and it cannot be in opposition to any principle of general policy, nor inconsistent with the terms of the agreement between the parties, or against the established principles of law. Calland v. Trapet, 70 Ill. App. 228, 231; Blissell v. Ryan, 23 Ill. 567.

The broker must prove such usage, and it is competent for the principal to introduce any evidence which tends to disprove any fact necessary to bring the case within the usage. Loud v. Hall, 106 Mass. 404, 407.

But if the principal has knowledge of, and consents to, a custom whereby the broker is entitled to claim commissions upon a sale made by the principal during the time in which the broker has the exclusive agency, he will be taken as consenting to be bound by such custom. Harrell v. Zimbleman, 66 Tex. 292, 294.

Yet, even in the absence of a contract making the right to compensation dependent upon the fact that the property should be sold by the agent, the law is to the same effect without reference to custom, as it is understood that one requesting another to perform services for him should agree to pay a reasonable compensation for such services if performed. Ibid.

In this case the court further stated that the office of custom was largely to illustrate the intention of contracting parties in reference to matters on which the contract was not explicit, and, thereby terms not inconsistent with a contract might be held to be a part of it, in view of the presumed intention of the parties that the usual incidents to a relation formed by the contract should exist, but that if the contract between the broker and the principal was clear and explicit custom could not change it.

The fact, however, that a person engaged in buying and selling real estate at times deals through the agency of brokers, is not sufficient of itself to affect the principal with knowledge of the peculiar custom among them as to when their commissions are considered as earned. Blake v. Stump, 73 Md. 160, 10 L. R. A. 103.

Yet a local custom under which, when a piece of property is placed in the hands of one agent if he has no customer, he goes among other real-estate agents and solicits buyers, and when a sale is effected the commissions are divided between them, although not blinding upon the owner, yet may be sufficient to entitle the broker to recover his commissions where he has employed such means for procuring a purchaser for his principal, as it is wholly immaterial to the principal what number of persons his own agent may employ to assist him in finding a purchaser. Carter v. Webster, 79 Ill. 435, 436.

A custom to pay commissions at a given rate upon finding purchasers for real estate cannot be testified to by one who by his own evidence has shown that he has no experience or knowledge of sales or commissions paid on similar sales. Potts v. Aechternacht, 93 Pa. 138, 142.

In a case in which the proofs showed there was no special agreement as claimed by the broker, but that there was a custom among real-estate brokers as to commissions on selling real estate and procuring a purchaser, and the evidence of such custom was not objected to, although a question as to what was the customary commission was objected to, yet as the existence of a custom was shown without objection, it was held competent to ask what was the customary commission, and that if such custom existed it was to be inferred that the principal contracted for the broker's services in view of the custom in the absence of any proof of a different rate being agreed upon. Morgan v. Mason, 4 E. D. Smith, 636, 638.

In Pratt v. The Bank, 12 Phila. 378, the broker was allowed to recover upon proving the existence of a general custom in the city of Philadelphia by which, when property was placed in the real-estate broker's hands for sale, without any special terms, he was entitled to a commission for being present during the continuance of his agency whether the property was sold directly by him or otherwise. Upon appeal, however, the court ordered a new trial, as it did not appear that the custom was clearly proved.

Where the principal refuses to sell, and the broker seeks to recover commission at a certain per cent according to the usage in such cases in a town or city, the implied contract to pay such commission depends upon the consummation of the sale, and it must be shown that the custom was clear and so notorious that it must be presumed that the parties have a knowledge of it, and that the contract was made in reference to it, as without a sale no recovery can be had. Power v. Kane, 5 Wis. 285, 268.

It has been held that a custom for real-estate 44 L. R. A.

brokers to receive commissions on sales made by them for themselves under which they are entitled to recover for their services where no sales are made, cannot be said, as a matter of law, to be unfair, unreasonable, or in violation of any legal right. Green v. Wright, 36 Mo. App. 208.

In Viaux v. Old South Soc. 133 Mass. 1, 10, the broker relied upon a usage to the effect that a broker, whose services were accepted by the seller and who introduced the seller to an ultimate purchaser, was entitled to a commission upon the amount for which the estate was sold, if ultimately purchased by the person so introduced whether or not the sale was finally effected by the same broker or by other parties; and the court stated that under the contract implied by the employment of the broker as broker as modified by this usage, he became entitled to his commissions when he found a purchaser, and brought the parties together, if a sale was made to the purchaser, but he was not entitled to recover unless he found and introduced a person who became a purchaser. Tombs v. Alexander, 101 Mass. 255, 256, 3 Am. Rep. 349, and Loud v. Hall, 106 Mass. 404, followed.

III. The necessity of a written contract.

A real-estate broker may be employed simply to find a purchaser either generally, or upon certain terms of payment, or he may be required by the terms of his employment to go further and procure from the purchaser a contract that is valid and blinding between him and the seller, and in the latter class of cases before he can recover his commission he must procure such a binding contract unless the same is waived by the principal, else he will not be deemed to have completed his undertaking. Platt v. Johr, 9 Ind. App. 58.

The parties have a right to provide in their contract that the broker shall not only find a purchaser, but shall also procure from such purchaser a valid agreement in writing which will take the case out of the statute of frauds, and when this is the arrangement no commissions can be collected until such written agreement to purchase is furnished. McFarland v. Lillard, 2 Ind. App. 160.

It is the general rule under a contract to procure a purchaser that an oral agreement upon the part of the purchaser will not be a valid enforceable agreement, and if he refuses to complete the sale after such oral agreement without failure on the part of the seller, the principal, the obligation of the broker will not be fulfilled and he cannot recover his commissions. Parker v. Walker, 86 Tenn. 568, 569.

If the broker does not produce a purchaser to the owner who is ready, able, and willing to buy if the owner will carry out the sale, he must, in order to fulfil his contract, bring to the owner a valid contract from the purchaser so that the owner may hold the purchaser in damages if he fails to complete the purchase. Huggins v. Hearne, 74 Mo. App. 86, 87; Wright v. Brown, 68 Mo. App. 577.

And if a real-estate broker secures a valid contract of purchase signed by a person who is able specifically to perform it, or is financially able to answer in damages in case he should make default, he has performed his contract and is entitled to his commissions. Chipley v. Leathe, 60 Mo. App. 15, 20.

And the broker's contract to effect a valid sale is complete when he delivers or tenders to the owner a valid written contract containing the terms of the sale agreed upon, signed by the parties. Hayden v. Grillo, 35 Mo. App. 647, 654.

The burden of proof rests with the broker.

prove that he procured a valid contract under which his principal can compel specific performance, as the broker's recovery must be secundum allegata et probata. Norman v. Reuther, 25 Misc. 161.

And this is so for the reason that a written contract is an essential element to his right to commissions. Barnard v. Monnot, 3 Keyes, 203, 34 Barb. 90, 93.

And if an enforceable agreement is not entered into between the principal and the purchaser, and no fault is attached to the principal, the broker cannot recover his commissions. Platt v. Kohler, 65 Hun, 557, 560, Felts v. Butcher, 93 Iowa, 414.

If, however, the principal accepts the purchaser found by the broker either upon the terms previously proposed, or upon modified terms then agreed upon, and a valid contract is entered into between them, the commission is earned. Coleman v. Meade, 13 Bush, 358, 363. To the same effect, Gibson's Estate, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 147, 148.

And if the broker establishes such fact he makes out a prima facie case entitling him to commissions. Lemon v. Lloyd, 46 Mo. App. 452, 456.

But the broker must show that the parties brought together by him have entered into a contract enforceable between them in a court of equity. In other words, there must be an agreement by which the parties are legally bound. Michener v. Belin, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. 637; Haines v. Bequer, 9 Phila. 51; Barnard v. Monnot, 34 Barb. 90, 93, 3 Keyes, 203, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 108.

So, the party secured by the broker must actually contract for the purchase of the property at a price acceptable to the owner. Keys v. Johnson, 68 Pa. 42, 43; Glentworth v. Luther, 21 Barb. 145, Conkling v. Krakauer, 70 Tex. 735; Gross v. Stevens, 32 Minn. 472, 474.

Again the terms of the sale must be reduced to writing and subscribed by the contracting parties. Bab v. Hirschbein, 33 N. Y. S. R. 423.

The doctrine arises from the fact that a contract to procure a purchaser not only implies that the purchaser shall be one able to comply, but also the idea that the seller and the purchaser must be bound to each other in a valid contract. Parker v. Walzer, 86 Tenn. 587, 589; Wilson v. Mason, 155 Ill. 304.

There must also be a subscription to the contract by the party selling or his agent, and it is not sufficient that there be a subscription by the purchaser alone. Haydock v. Stow, 40 N. Y. 363.

And a contract or memorandum in writing binding upon both parties is a sale effected within the meaning of an agreement, to pay commissions on a sale of the land, although a formal deed is not executed and delivered. Rice v. Mayo, 107 Mass. 550, 552.

If the purchaser proves acceptable to the owner, and a written contract is duly executed by the parties the broker can do no more, and his duty is ended. Donchue v. Flanagan, 28 N. Y. S. R. 757.

Yet, if the agreement is signed by some other person not lawfully authorized in writing to do so, it will not be binding upon the purchaser under the statute of frauds, and therefore the broker cannot recover commissions thereunder as upon a performance of his contract. Wilson v. Mason, 155 Ill. 304.

And if the statute of frauds would be a good defense to an action by the principal against the purchaser for the enforcement of a contract, it is not such a contract as will entitle the broker to recover his commissions upon a sale of the property. Ibid.

If the contract provides that the land "must 44 L. R. A.

be sold to a person ready, willing, and able to purchase," it is not enough that there has been a contract of sale made, as there must be a sale before the commission can be said to be earned. Stewart v. Fowler, 37 Kan. 677.

And if the contract, entered into through the broker's agency, is of such a character that the party contracting by the exercise of an option can relieve himself of the obligation to complete the same, and does not in fact become the purchaser, the broker cannot recover his commissions as upon a performance of his contract. Kimberly v. Henderson, 29 Md. 512, 515.

So, if the broker has found a party willing to purchase, and duplicate contracts are entered into which vary in their terms, and are radically different, so that they cannot be reconciled, he cannot recover his commissions, as such services do not produce a purchaser. Pierce v. Truitt (Pa.) 12 Atl. 661.

If the broker produces an informal agreement to be signed by the parties the principal may show that the contract is merely provisional, and does not express all the terms of the contract as understood by the broker, and that the deal is never consummated because no final agreement is ever made by the principal with the party found by the broker. Buxton v. Beal, 49 Minn. 230.

If the broker finds a party who offers a price which his principal agrees to take, but before the agreement becomes obligatory upon both such party refuses to consummate it on the ground of some real or supposed defect in the title, the broker has not performed his contract so as to entitle him to his commissions, especially where such proposed purchaser has not committed himself to a purchase, and his principal is not offering the property free from objections to title. Blankenship v. Ryerson, 50 Ala. 426.

In Glichrist v. Clarke, 86 Tenn. 583, the broker had communicated to the owner the fact that the purchaser had expressed his willingness to purchase at a given sum, and was authorized to close the trade, but as the sale fell through by the fault of the purchaser, and as the broker had neglected to secure a valid written contract of sale signed by the purchaser, his claim for commissions was disallowed, as his principal was without cause of action against the purchaser to compel specific performance and an acceptance of his title, which was good.

If the contract with the broker requires an actual sale to be made through his agency, a mere unfulfilled provisional arrangement, not dependent upon the principal's actions, is not sufficient to entitle him to recover commissions, and he must show a binding contract enforceable as between the parties, and a conveyance of the land pursuant thereto. Condict v. Cowdrey, 139 N. Y. 273, 280.

In Pratt v. Kohler, 65 Hun, 557, 560, the broker had not performed his contract, and his claim for commissions was refused, as the fact that a binding contract was never entered into was not prevented by any act on the part of the principal, but the purchaser objected to the terms of the written contract as more onerous than those of the primary verbal arrangement. No change of mind on the principal's part was shown, neither did it appear that he refused to carry out the contract upon his authorized terms, but he had received no benefit from the contract or from the broker's efforts, and he was not in a position to compel specific performance of the contract or to recover damages.

A mere authority or memorandum authorizing a party to offer a certain sum for the principal's property, signed by the proposed purchaser, er, does not amount to an agreement to purchase whereby the broker can claim commissions, especially where the purchaser subsequently refuses to deal with the party. Montgomery v. Knickerbacker, 27 App. Div. 117.

In the case of an option to the broker which states the price and some of the conditions of sale, and that "the details are to be settled later in conformity with the above understanding" under which the broker gives up the notion of purchase, and assumes the position of broker to procure a purchaser, and introduces purchasers who indorse the option and agree to purchase "at the within mentioned terms and price," but with a reduction in the price, which contract one of the purchasers does not consider binding upon him, as if he made up his mind to carry out the transaction, a proper contract was to be drawn up, such contract is properly submitted to the jury, as it is for them to say whether there is a meeting of the minds of the parties sufficient to constitute a valid contract of sale and purchase upon which the broker can recover his commissions. Folinsbee v. Sawyer, 8 Misc. 370.

And if the quantity of land is not known, the fact that the owner neglected to have it surveyed is no excuse for the broker's not making a binding contract of sale with the purchaser, so as to give him a right to recover damages in lieu of commissions,—especially where the contract gave him the power to have the survey made himself at his principal's expense. Smith v. Tate, 82 Va. 657. In this case the sale made was a mere conditional verbal one not binding upon the purchaser.

In Crombie v. Waldo, 137 N. Y. 129, 133, the court refused to allow the broker's claims for commissions although they drew up what appeared to be the best agreement they could get without any direction or suggestion from the principal, as the agreement was of no avail to the principal, did not bind the other parties, could not be enforced against them, could not be performed by their principal, and was practically a nullity.

Yet, a mere undertaking on the part of the broker to "sell" does not imply that he is to procure a written agreement from the purchaser. McFarland v. Lillard, 2 Ind. App. 160.

And if an agent, employed to sell land, finds a purchaser who is ready, able, and willing to purchase upon the terms given by his principal, the contract of sale need not be in writing as a condition precedent to the agent's right to recover for his services,—especially if the principal is unable or refuses to perform on his part. Vaughan v. McCarthy, 59 Minn. 199; Barnard v. Monnot 33 How. Pr. 440, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 108, 3 Keyes, 203; McFarland v. Lillard, 2 Ind. App. 160; Hildebrand v. Lillis, 10 Colo. App. 522; Buckingham v. Harris, 10 Colo. 459; Finnerty v. Fritz, 5 Colo. 178.

The rule last stated is based upon the fact that the agent who is the procuring cause of the sale is always entitled to his commissions. Scott v. Clark, 3 S. D. 486; Zeimer v. Antisell, 75 Cal. 509.

But where the broker, pursuant to his employment, produces a purchaser who is willing and ready to take the property on the terms acceptable to the principal, and the principal enters into a written contract with him expressing the terms of the sale, and the principal is solvent and able to perform the contract, the broker then becomes entitled to his commissions, although the purchaser may afterwards refuse to perform, without any fault on the part of the principal. Love v. Owens, 31 Mo. App. 501, 510; Gilder v. Davis, 137 N. Y. 504, 20 L. R. A. 398. To the same effect Love v. Miller, 53 44 L. R. A.

Ind. 294, 21 Am. Rep. 192; Burns v. Oliphant, 78 Iowa, 450, 459; Rice v. Mayo, 107 Mass. 550; Veazle v. Parker, 72 Me. 443; Goss v. Stevens, 32 Minn. 472; Coleman v. Meade, 13 Bush. 358; Keys v. Johnson, 68 Pa. 42; Fraser v. Wyckoff, 63 N. Y. 445, 448; Martin v. Silliman, 53 N. Y. 615; Lloyd v. Matthews, 51 N. Y. 124; Duclos v. Cunningham, 102 N. Y. 678; Knapp v. Wallace, 41 N. Y. 477; Gonzales v. Broad, 57 Cal. 224; McCreery v. Green, 38 Mich. 184, 185; Shepherd v. Hedden, 29 N. J. L. 345; Kerfoot v. Steele, 113 Ill. 610; Collins v. Fowler, 8 Mo. App. 588.

But the contract signed must be sufficient to bind the purchaser to specifically perform the same on his part. Simonson v. Kissick, 4 Daly, 143; Crombie v. Waldo, 42 N. Y. S. R. 225.

The above rule is based upon the theory that the failure to carry out such a contract is a matter that concerns only the parties to it, the one in the right having a complete remedy against the other at fault which he may prosecute or not as he pleases. Donohue v. Flanagan, 28 N. Y. S. R. 757.

And when a purchaser enters into a contract a bona fide case is made out by the broker, and the presumption will prevail that such party is able to perform it. Stewart v. Smith, 50 Neb. 631.

So, a binding contract in writing which only passes the equitable title, of which specific performance can be decreed, is sufficient to entitle the broker to recover commissions where his acts have led up to such contract. Ward v. Cobb, 148 Mass. 518.

Where the contract has been reduced to writing with sufficient definiteness to witness the bringing of the minds of the parties together, on the defendant's terms, the fact that the broker subsequently meets the principal and endeavors to procure a new contract, or another contract between the same parties, or one substituted in the place of the purchaser, will not in any way affect the broker's right to commissions. Levy v. Ruff, 4 Misc. 180, Affirming 3 Misc. 147.

If the contract for the sale of real estate as made between the principal and the purchaser is in a certain sense optional and provides for a sum of money as liquidated damages to be paid by the party failing to perform, yet, if the principal signs and approves of it, the broker has earned his commissions, although in the end the purchaser may not take a conveyance, and may prefer to pay the liquidated damages. Gilder v. Davis, 138 N. Y. 504, 20 L. R. A. 398; Leete v. Norton, 43 Conn. 219, 226.

In the latter case the court stated that the principal could not be allowed to deny that such sum of money was an equivalent as between himself and the broker by whose aid he made the contract, and thus avoid payment of commissions, even though the money may not be paid, as the broker has rendered services for him which he agreed were an equivalent to procuring an exchange of the property. Leete v. Norton, 43 Conn. 219, 226.

Where the broker brings the minds of the parties to meet on the terms embraced in an informal agreement, the fact that the parties subsequently agree to modify the terms by requiring all cash, and that the purchaser is not able to fulfil the new conditions, will not affect the broker's right to commissions, as all that is required of the broker is that the purchaser should be ready and willing to enter into the contract on the terms of the informal contract,—especially as the evidence does not show that the purchasers were unwilling or unable to carry out the terms of such informal contract. Levy v. Ruff, 4 Misc. 180, Affirming 3 Misc. 147.

But in Bennett v. Egan, 3 Misc. 421, 424, the broker's claim for commissions was refused, although the contract was signed by both the principal and the purchaser, as the parties subsequently disagreed as to the terms of the purchase-money mortgage and the principal refused to enter into any additional contract. The court in this case found that the contract was not enforceable against the purchaser, and only amounted to an agreement on the purchaser's part to execute a contract to purchase or forfeit a certain amount.

So, in Levy v. Kottman, 11 Misc. 372, the court also refused the broker's claim, as the only evidence of a contract was a receipt given on a Sunday "on account" of the purchase "price" on "the sale of premises," which provided for a contract to be drawn up thereafter, as such receipt only amounted to an option.

The above case is distinguished from that of Simonson v. Klissick, 4 Daly, 143, upon the ground that in that case a consideration had been paid on account of and as part of the purchase money, and the contract was one enforceable in a court of equity, and not a mere option.

In the last-mentioned case the agreement, which was signed by both parties, certified that the principal sold to the purchaser the property in question at a given sum and was accepted by the purchaser, who paid the earnest money mentioned therein. It was contended that it was not sufficient to bind the purchaser, as his name was not mentioned in the body thereof, and that it imposed no obligations upon him and did not bind him to do anything, and that it was a mere option; but the court held there was a sufficient contract shown to enable the broker to recover as upon a performance of his contract.

The case of Bennett v. Egan, 3 Misc. 421, was similar in the circumstances to Levy v. Kottman, 11 Misc. 372, supra, but in that case the written contract or receipt was stronger as it was signed by both parties and not by the seller alone, and in relation to it the court stated that "the question, therefore, arises whether the said written instrument of itself was or was not an enforceable contract for the sale and purchase of the real estate therein referred to," and after a full disclosure of all the authorities concluded that it was not.

Under a contract to pay commissions if the sale is made or closed with a certain purchaser, the broker must prove that the trade was closed, as under such a contract the sale must be closed and consummated and the mere finding of a purchaser ready, able, and willing to take the property is not a sufficient performance of the contract, and the fact that the sale is not made owing to default on the part of either of the parties. Lyle v. University Land & Invest. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 723, 725. In this case the purchaser demanded a deed in a certain form, which was refused, and it did not appear that the principals were bound to give it.

Under a contract to negotiate a sale,—that is to procure a valid contract of purchase enforceable by the vendor if his title is perfect, or if he does not procure such contract, to bring the parties together in order that the principal may secure such a contract, unless he is willing to trust to an oral agreement,—it is not sufficient for the broker to merely find a purchaser financially able, and who verbally agrees to purchase upon the terms of the principal, and makes a deposit, but who neither signs a binding agreement to purchase, nor is produced to the vendor as a person ready and willing to enter into such a contract. Gunn v. Bank of California, 99 Cal. 349.

In Dillon v. Duralde, 2 Rob. (La.) 163, 165, 44 L. R. A.

It is said that no brokerage is due in a case of a sale until it is actually effected, and the broker cannot in such a case claim to be reimbursed his expenses incurred in advertising or procuring certificates from the recorder of mortgages, etc., or in taking a journey,—especially where no evidence is offered of the same.

The Maryland cases assert that it is not sufficient for the agent to procure a purchaser who enters into a written contract to purchase, but the purchaser must actually purchase, by complying with the terms agreed upon, unless his failure to do so is caused by the fault of the principal. Kimberly v. Henderson, 29 Md. 512; Richards v. Jackson, 31 Md. 252, 1 Am. Rep. 49.

In this holding it would seem that the Maryland cases stand alone, as the prevailing rule is, that when the broker has produced a purchaser, willing, able, and ready to purchase upon his principal's terms, and a valid and binding contract is entered into with such purchaser by the principal, the broker has performed his contract, and is entitled to his commissions.

Although the parties may agree that no commission shall be paid or earned unless the broker procures from the purchaser a valid written agreement, yet even in such a case the principal may waive such condition by accepting a purchaser and selling to him. McFarland v. Lillard, 2 Ind. App. 160.

And there are cases which uphold an oral agreement when the same is accepted by the parties and acted upon by them and the purchaser is satisfied to carry out the same.

So, if the agreement to purchase is not reduced to writing, and is therefore not binding, but the parties proceed thereon and complete the transaction by the delivery of the conveyance and the payment of the purchase money, the broker is entitled to his commissions, for the reason that the sale made by him is recognized and acted upon by the parties, and his principal has the benefit of his services in bringing about the sale. Watson v. Brooks, 8 Sawy. 316, 319.

And it is not of the essence of the contract between the principal and the broker that the agreement of sale should be valid and enforceable; it may be verbal or written, plain or obscure in its terms, loaded with conditions or free from any; it may raise a complete barrier to its fulfillment, if objection to some of its provisions were made but all are unavailing to defeat the broker's right where he acts in good faith if the parties have with full knowledge met upon a common ground and accepted what was offered as expressive of their minds. Folinsbee v. Sawyer, 8 Misc. 370.

So, a binding written contract is not required where the principal is in a situation to execute it himself. Gelatt v. Ridge, 117 Mo. 553, 560.

It is not absolutely essential that there should be shown a contract binding on the party produced when the purchaser stands ready to perform his part of the contract. Middleton v. Thompson, 103 Pa. 112, 119; Keys v. Johnson, 68 Pa. 42; Clendenon v. Pancoast, 75 Pa. 213; Sweeney v. Ten Mile Oil & Gas Co. 130 Pa. 193; Reed v. Reed, 82 Pa. 426; Green v. Lucas, 33 L. T. N. S. 584; Levy v. Ruff, 4 Misc. 180, affirming 3 Misc. 147.

And if the purchaser is not only able but willing to complete an oral agreement for sale, and the principal, the vendor, refuses to sell or is unable to fulfil the terms upon his part, or to make a good title, or if the trade falls through by reason of any default on the part of the principal, the commissions will be considered earned. Parker v. Walker, 86 Tenn. 566, 569.

So, the mere fact that the contract of sale is not in writing and signed by the purchaser is not alone sufficient to deprive the broker of his rights if the purchaser does not take advantage of his rights under the statute of frauds. McFarland v. Lillard, 2 Ind. App. 160.

And the necessity of a written contract of sale may be rendered unnecessary if the agent brings the parties together, and the purchaser offers to complete the contract provided the vendor will make the conveyance; and in such a case the agent has done all that he can do. Hayden v. Grillo, 35 Mo. App. 647, 654.

If the case shows a parol contract of sale made before the commencement of the broker's action to recover commissions upon the principal's terms, such fact is prima facie evidence that a purchaser has been found ready to purchase the property, and the mere fact that the principal is unable or refuses to consummate the sale does not affect the broker's right, in the absence of evidence that the contract would not have been consummated had the principal been ready to make the deed and give possession to the purchaser. Mooney v. Elder, 56 N. Y. 238, 240.

And even where there is an intention to reduce an oral agreement to writing, but before the contract is so reduced the owner or principal recedes therefrom, he is nevertheless liable for the broker's commissions. Levy v. Ruff, 4 Misc. 180, Affirming 3 Misc. 147; Barnard v. Monnot, 3 Keyes, 203; Krahner v. Hellman, 16 Daly, 132; Kalley v. Baker, 132 N. Y. 1; Gilder v. Davis, 137 N. Y. 506, 20 L. R. A. 398.

In Clendenon v. Pancoast, 75 Pa. 213, there was no binding contract and so in Sweeney v. Ten Mile Oil & Gas Co. 130 Pa. 103. It affirmatively appeared that no such contract was made, and also in Reed v. Reed, 82 Pa. 426, in which case, while the accepted purchaser was considering the matter on a time option allowed for that purpose the principal sold to another. These cases clearly show that a binding contract of sale is not necessary where the party produced by the broker stands ready to perform his part of the proposal, and the failure to do so occurs through the fault or inability of the principal. They are further supported by the later case of Middleton v. Thompson, 163 Pa. 112, 110, which holds the same doctrine.

And if the principal has acted for himself in concluding the sale to the purchaser found by the broker, and is satisfied with the situation, and the contract with the broker is unconditional, the question of the enforceability of the contract between the principal and the purchaser cannot be considered by the jury, as such question was not contemplated by either the principal or the broker at the time. Balrd v. Flecker (S. D.) 76 N. W. 931.

The doctrine that there need be no written contract of sale shown by the broker as procured by him in the above class of cases is based upon the rule that a broker authorized to effect a sale or to find a purchaser is not authorized to make any contract with the proposed purchaser on behalf of his principal, and even if a sale falls of consummation because there is no binding contract between the principal and the purchaser, it is the principal's fault for which the broker is in no way responsible. Gonzales v. Broad, 57 Cal. 224; Phelan v. Gardner, 43 Cal. 311; Barnard v. Monnot, 3 Keyes, 204; Kock v. Emmerling, 22 How. 69, 16 L. ed. 202.

Under a contract giving the broker power to sell or to find a satisfactory customer within a given time. It is not necessary that the broker should have entered into a valid written agreement binding upon both parties, in order to entitle him to commissions, and a written note or memorandum by the purchaser to the broker, stating in substance that he would take the lands at the principal's price and on the conditions named, is sufficient, and is all that the broker is legally authorized and required to do, and is sufficient evidence of a production of a purchaser, especially when the purchaser is anxious to complete the matter. O'Connor v. Semple, 57 Wis. 243.

And the court will not consider the omission to obtain a written contract material when it does not appear through whose oversight the omission occurred, when the broker has produced a purchaser, and the principal has undertaken to enter into a written contract with him, and has received the earnest money thereon, and the principal has waived his right of objection by accepting and retaining the money paid on the contract. Kyle v. Rippey, 20 Or. 447, 453.

The broker has performed a contract to sell the land or to find a purchaser within a limited period when he makes a verbal sale to a responsible party and gives notice within a reasonable time thereafter and produces the purchaser, and in such a case it is not essential that he should produce the purchaser so that all the necessary papers can be executed by the date given. O'Connor v. Semple, 57 Wis. 243.

In a case where the purchaser had paid earnest money to the broker and the principal brought suit against the broker to recover the same, it was held that it was not material to the determination of the broker's right to recover or deduct his commissions from such amount, whether the contract of sale as made by the broker was binding upon the purchaser or not, and that the principal could not rely upon the validity of such contract for the purpose of enabling him to retain the earnest money and yet deny its validity for the purpose of defeating the broker's right to commissions. Christensen v. Woolley, 41 Mo. App. 53.

IV. Necessity of consummated sale.

In some cases the broker's performance of his contract of sale has been questioned upon the ground that the sale has not been consummated.

Upon this question the general rule is that a broker employed to find a purchaser is entitled to his commissions when he finds one able and willing to consummate the sale. Reeves v. Vette, 62 Mo. App. 440, 443.

And if the principal actually consummates the sale made by the broker he is liable for commissions. Drehsback v. Rollins, 39 Kan. 268; Redfield v. Tegg, 38 N. Y. 212.

If the broker produces a bona fide purchaser,—that is a purchaser who is able, ready, and willing to purchase and to perform the contract upon his principal's terms, or upon modified terms accepted by the principal,—he is entitled to his commissions without reference to the consummation of the sale, unless the failure to consummate it, where the title is good, is chargeable to such purchaser and not to the fault, refusal, or defective title of the principal. Smith v. Schiele, 93 Cal. 144, 149; Middleton v. Findla, 25 Cal. 81; Blood v. Shannon, 29 Cal. 395; Phelan v. Gardner, 43 Cal. 311; Nelson v. Lee, 60 Cal. 555; Phelps v. Prusch, 83 Cal. 628; Vinton v. Baldwin, 88 Ind. 104, 45 Am. Rep. 447, 448; Blodgett v. Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. 63 Iowa, 606, 609; Ford v. Easley, 88 Iowa, 603; Brown v. Wilson, 98 Iowa, 316, 318; Cassaday v. Seeley, 69 Iowa, 509; Vinton v. Baldwin, 88 Ind. 104, 45 Am. Rep. 447, 448; Cook v. Fiske, 12 Gray, 493; Follinsbee v. Sawyer, 8 Misc. 370; Gilder v. Davis, 137 N. Y. 504, 20 L. R. A. 398; Hodgkins v. Mead, 130

N. Y. 676; Martin v. Bliss, 57 Hun, 159; Fraser v. Wyckoff, 63 N. Y. 448; Gilchrist v. Clarke, 86 Tenn. 583, 585; Parker v. Walker, 86 Tenn. 569; Cheatham v. Yarbrough, 90 Tenn. 77, 79; Woodall v. Foster, 91 Tenn. 195, 197; McArthur v. Slauson, 53 Wis. 41; McGavock v. Woodlief, 20 How. 221, 15 L. ed. 884; Kock v. Emmerling, 22 How. 69, 16 L. ed. 292.

Where the agreement of a real-estate broker was to make a sale his commissions were held to be earned when a contract was entered into which was mutually obligatory upon the principal and the purchaser, even though the purchaser afterwards refused to execute his part of the contract of purchase. Wilson v. Mason, 158 Ill. 304. To the same effect, Greene v. Hollingshead, 40 Ill. App. 195; Short v. Millard, 68 Ill. 292; Kerfoot v. Steele, 113 Ill. 610; Love v. Miller, 53 Ind. 294, 21 Am. Rep. 192; Coleman v. Meade, 13 Bush, 358; Veazle v. Parker, 72 Me. 443; Ward v. Cobb, 148 Mass. 518; Rice v. Mayo, 107 Mass. 550; Francis v. Baker, 45 Minn. 83; Love v. Owens, 31 Mo. App. 501; Christensen v. Wooley, 41 Mo. App. 53; Parker v. Walker, 86 Tenn. 566; Willes v. Smith, 77 Wis. 81.

And the fact that the sale is never consummated does not affect the force or application of the above rule. Birmingham Land & Loan Co. v. Thompson, 86 Ala. 146, 150.

But the failure to consummate the sale must not be due to any fault of the broker. Gibson v. Gray (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 922, 925; Conkling v. Krakauer, 70 Tex. 735; Gauthier v. West, 45 Minn. 192; Vinton v. Baldwin, 88 Ind. 104, 45 Am. Rep. 447; Yoder v. White, 75 Mo. App. 155. See also cases supra.

And when the broker has brought the minds of the buyer and seller to an agreement on all the terms of sale, and a purchaser is able, ready, and willing to buy, there is a constructive consummation of the sale so far as the broker is concerned. Sayre v. Wilson, 86 Ala. 151.

When property is placed with the broker for sale, in the absence of a special agreement to the contrary, the broker is not bound to consummate a sale or procure a customer ready and willing to purchase upon the terms agreed upon, but when he does succeed in doing either, his commission is earned and he may maintain an action for the same. Walsh v. Hastings, 20 Colo. 243, 247; Hallack v. Hincley, 19 Colo. 38.

So, a broker is not required to complete a valid contract of sale binding upon both his principal and the purchaser, before he is entitled to a commission. Hildebrand v. Lillis, 10 Colo. App. 522; Buckingham v. Harris, 10 Colo. 459; Finnerty v. Fritz, 5 Colo. 178.

This is so for the reason that the completion of the sale when the broker is only employed to find a purchaser devolves upon the owner. Swigart v. Hawley, 40 Ill. App. 610, 611.

So, the fact that the contract between the principal and the purchaser is not performed will not affect the broker's right to compensation where he has procured a purchaser, brought the parties together, who have agreed between themselves upon the terms, and have signed a valid contract. Bach v. Emerich, 35 Jones & S. 548, 551; Jewett v. Emerson, 2 Robt. 165; Stillman v. Mitchell, 2 Robt. 523; Barnard v. Monnot, 3 Keyes. 203; Smith v. Smith, 1 Sweeney, 552; Gilder v. Davis, 137 N. Y. 504, 20 L. R. A. 398; Burns v. Oliphant, 78 Iowa, 456, 459.

And the mere fact that the purchaser caused the property to be conveyed to another, his father, will not defeat the broker's right to recover commissions. Anderson v. Wedeking, 102 Iowa, 446. To the same effect, Clifford v. 44 L. R. A.

Meyer, 6 Ind. App. 633; Barnett v. Gluting, 3 Ind. App. 415.

So, it cannot be presumed that a purchaser has declined to consummate a trade, even though it may be conceded that he cannot be compelled to do so. Crevier v. Stephen, 40 Minn. 288.

If the purchaser produced is a man of means and abundantly able pecuniarily to carry out the contract, and evidences his readiness and willingness to do so by executing the same, and paying the earnest money, the fact that the contract is never carried out for reasons existing between the parties to it, of which the broker is not responsible, cannot, so far as the merits of the law of the case are concerned, bar his right to commissions. Lang v. Iland, 57 Ill. App. 134. To the same effect, Burns v. Oliphant, 78 Iowa, 456, 459.

In Smith v. Schiele, 93 Cal. 144, 149, a contract which authorized the broker "solely to sell," and agreed to pay certain commissions on the full amount of the sale, was construed as simply intending to confer upon the broker the exclusive right to sell the property, and not as making the payment of the commissions contingent upon the consummation of the sale.

Under a contract that the broker is to receive commissions "upon the consummation of said sale at a sum to be approved and accepted by" his principal, the broker can recover commissions when the principal and purchaser enter into a written agreement for sale at a certain price, part to be paid down in cash, and the balance at a future date, the principal to retain possession of the property until the same is paid for. Micks v. Stevenson (Ind. App.) 1 Repr. 178, 51 N. E. 492.

An instruction to the jury in an action by a real-estate broker to recover commissions for finding a purchaser, which places the right to commissions solely upon the fact whether the broker actually sold the farm himself or not, is erroneous and contrary to the well-established question of law upon the subject. Wetzell v. Wagoner, 41 Mo. App. 509, 516.

And if the sale is actually consummated to a purchaser found by the broker, he is entitled to his commissions even though it afterwards transpires that such purchaser is unable to meet deferred payments as they become due. Wray v. Carpenter, 16 Colo. 271, 273.

In the above case property was placed in the broker's hands for sale at a certain figure upon certain commission if successful. The broker found the alleged purchaser, introduced him to the principal, and negotiations between the parties were carried on. The testimony of the broker and his witnesses showed a completed sale, while that of the principal and the purchaser strongly contradicted it, but the preponderance of evidence was not shown to be in the principal's favor so as to warrant the court in interfering with the broker's verdict; the court therefore refused to disturb such verdict.

Where no commissions were to be paid until the principal received their share of the purchase money, the court held that whatever the meaning of the expression "consummate a sale," standing by itself, was, yet, in order to ascertain the sense in which it was used in the contract, reference must be had to what followed, namely, that the commission was not to be paid until the defendants received their share of the purchase money, and that in such a case it meant that the commission was earned and payable as soon as (and not before) the parties became purchasers of the land by entering into a binding contract to that effect, and that the contract had been so far carried into execution that the defendants had received their full share of the purchase money. Olsen v. Jodon, 38 Minn. 460, 468. In this case the court below, upon the principal's motion, granted a dismissal, and a new trial was refused, but upon appeal the order was reversed.

Where the commissions are payable within a given time from the date of sale, it is the duty of the broker to procure the conveyance to the purchaser in order to avail himself of the commissions, as such undertaking is to pay on a perfected sale. Curtis v. Watson, 64 Vt. 549.

And a consummated sale by the delivery of the deed and the payment of the purchase money is not necessary when the purchaser is solvent and enters into a valid and binding contract. Watson v. Brooks, 8 Sawy. 316, 319.

And the broker's right to the agreed commissions does not depend upon the final acceptance by the purchaser of a conveyance of the property sold. Gunn v. Bank of California, 99 Cal. 340.

So, it makes no difference to whom the conveyance is actually made provided the broker is the procuring cause of the sale, as such conveyance is but an incident to the transaction. Clifford v. Meyer, 6 Ind. App. 633; Barnett v. Glutling, 3 Ind. App. 415.

Under an agreement in writing to find a purchaser, which stipulated that, if the principal himself sells the property within the life of the agreement, the broker is to be allowed a certain percentage, the word "sale" does not necessarily and in all connections mean that a conveyance must be made, or that the title must pass. Shainwald v. Cady, 92 Cal. 83.

In Wilson v. Mason, 158 Ill. 304, the court refused to follow the classes of cases which hold that the broker is not entitled to his commissions unless the sale is actually accomplished by the delivery of the deed of the land from the principal to the purchaser, and the payment of the purchase money by the latter, or unless it is proved that the sale is prevented by the fault of the principal, and also the cases which hold that the broker is entitled to his commission when the minds of the principal and the purchaser meet in a verbal agreement for the sale by the one and the purchase by the other and regarded them as extreme and exceptional. The cases holding this doctrine will be found infra.

In the case of Mooney v. Elder, 56 N. Y. 238, 240, the principal contended that the commissions were not due as no conveyance was made at the time of the action, and relied upon the case of Bull v. Price, 7 Bing. 237, 5 Moore & P. 2, in support of its contention, but the court distinguished the case then before it from that case inasmuch as the true construction of the contract in the latter case showed that the commission was to be paid out of the purchase money received by the principal, and was not therefore due until the actual receipt of the money, or until such time as the principal made default in not receiving it, while in the case then before the court the commissions were not payable out of the purchase money, and were due as soon as the broker had fully and successfully performed his stipulated service.

Some cases, however, hold that the broker's commissions depend upon the entire completion of the sale by the purchaser.

Thus, it has been held that a broker employed to sell real estate must produce a person who ultimately becomes a purchaser before he is entitled to his commissions. Richards v. Jackson, 31 Md. 250, 1 Am. Rep. 49; Kimberly v. Henderson, 29 Md. 512.

So, the courts have held that the right of a broker to his commission on a sale depends entirely upon the completion of the sale. De San- tos v. Taney, 13 La. Ann. 151, 152; Blanc v. New Orleans Improv. Bkg. Co. 2 Rob. (La.) 63; Didion v. Duralde, 2 Rob. (La.) 163.
44 L. R. A.

The holding of the courts in these cases is opposed to the general trend of the decisions, and is distinctly dissented from by the Indiana courts.

In Love v. Miller, 53 Ind. 294, 21 Am. Rep. 192, the court dissented from the doctrine laid down in De Santos v. Taney, 13 La. Ann. 151, 152, and pointed out that even in that case there was an express opinion given by Justice Spofford to the contrary in which he said that it was not necessary that the consideration should have passed, and that he considered brokerage earned as soon as the broker had effected a complete bargain between the parties. See also Wilson v. Masor, 158 Ill. 304, 310, wherein this doctrine is also dissented from.

But where there is a special contract for the payment of the balance of the broker's commissions when the contract with the purchaser is fulfilled and the balance of the purchase money paid, and the bonds and mortgages are received and the deed delivered, and the broker is to waive all further claims in case the transaction falls through, the broker must prove that the contract was carried out, or that it was prevented by his principal, before he can recover the balance of his commissions. Seymour v. St. Luke's Hospital, 28 App. Div. 119, 122.

This principle is upheld by the cases of Hinds v. Henry, 36 N. J. L. 328; Young v. Hunter, 6 N. Y. 203; Walker v. Tirrell, 101 Mass. 257, 3 Am. Rep. 352; and Dorrington v. Powell, 52 Neb. 440,—which show that the terms of a special contract must be fulfilled, and must control the standing of the parties, and that if there is a special contract for payment of commissions or compensation on the making of a sale or disposition of property, the broker cannot recover commissions for merely finding a purchaser if the sale is never consummated. To the same effect, Cremer v. Miller, 56 Minn. 52.

Where the contract requires an actual sale to be effected through the agency, it is not sufficient to show a provisional arrangement which has failed because of the nonfulfilment of a condition, not dependent upon the act of the vendor, to a binding and enforceable agreement, for the sale and conveyance of the land must be proved. Levy v. Kottman, 11 Misc. 372; Condict v. Cowdrey, 130 N. Y. 274.

And under a contract, not only to find a purchaser, but to make an actual sale of the property upon the terms proposed by his principal, where the broker takes the proposition and acceptance of a purchaser to his principal, an acceptance of the same by the principal does not make the latter liable to the broker for commissions, when the sale is not consummated,—especially where the consummation is not in the principal's power. Hyams v. Miller, 71 Ga. 608, 618.

So, a real-estate broker is not entitled to recover commissions for a conditional sale which fails of actual consummation by no fault or authority of the owner of the property. Nelson v. Lee, 60 Cal. 555, 567; Hinds v. Henry, 36 N. J. L. 333; Walker v. Tirrell, 101 Mass. 257, 3 Am. Rep. 352.

In Felts v. Butcher, 93 Iowa, 414, no enforceable contract of sale was shown to have been made between the principal and the purchaser, and as the claim in the petition was for a sale of the land, the compensation of the broker in that case depended upon a consummated sale, and not upon mere negotiations for a sale, and as such a sale was not proved the broker's claim was not allowed.

In the above case, however, the court admitted that the broker would have been entitled to recover if a sale had been made within the prescribed terms which the principal wrongfully refused to execute by making a conveyance.

A contract to the effect that if a sale is made within the time limited in the option, and on terms mentioned, the principal will pay the broker "on the completion of the transfer of said property" a certain commission in cash, "but if for any reason a sale is not consummated there shall be no commission paid or any obligation whatever in the premises," and if there is any unexpected delay, "and a sale should be ultimately consummated" to a customer whom the broker has found and who has come to the principal through his negotiations, the broker is to have a certain commission "when the sale is actually consummated," must be construed as meaning that the broker is only entitled to his commissions when the contract of sale is carried out by transfer of the property and the payment of the purchase money, and under it the broker is not entitled to commissions unless such contract is completed or consummated by the transfer of the property, and the payment or securing of the purchase money in accordance with the terms upon which he is authorized to sell, or which the principal accepts as such. Flower v. Davidson, 44 Minn. 46.

If under a contract for a sale, and not a mere contract to sell, the principal and the purchaser introduced make a contract for the purchaser to pay a certain sum in cash, and a further sum at a future time, and to execute a mortgage for the balance of the purchase price, at which time the principal is to make a deed and give up possession, and upon the purchaser's failure to pay the further sum of money and execute the mortgage the money already paid is to be forfeited to the principal, such an instrument is a contract to sell, and not a sale itself, and the broker's commissions are not earned upon the making of such an instrument until the sale is finally completed. Stewart v. Fowler, 37 Kan. 677.

And if the broker states that he will not charge any commissions unless the trade goes through and is consummated, he is not entitled to commissions where the sale is not consummated owing to the default of the purchaser. Little v. Rees, 34 Minn. 277.

And the broker's commissions were refused under an authority to effect a purchase at a certain price at fixed commissions, where he made a contract to purchase with the agent of a corporation when then occupied the property but had no title to it, a copy of which contract was signed by both agents and sent to his principal, but the trade was never consummated, and the agent of the owner of the property had no authority to make the contract, and the authority given by the party occupying it who represented the owner had expired. Stinde v. Scharff, 36 Mo. App. 15, 19.

V. Time of performance.

Under a contract of employment to sell real estate the broker is entitled, in the absence of a revocation, to a reasonable time in which to find a purchaser. Henderson v. Vincent, 84 Ala. 99, 100; Biddison v. Johnson, 50 Ill. App. 173; Lane v. Albright, 49 Ind. 275, 279; Stedman v. Richardson, 100 K. 79; Carroll v. Pettitt, 67 Hun. 418; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co. 83 N. Y. 384, 22 Am. Rep. 441; Feldman v. O'Brien, 23 Misc. 341, 344; Buehler v. Wolfenbush, 21 Misc. 30; Satterthwaite v. Vreeland, 3 Hun. 152; Shepler v. Scott, 85 Pa. 329; Darrow v. Harlow, 21 Wis. 303, 94 Am. Dec. 541. 44 L. R. A.

The law fixes the time of performance as of the date when the broker produces to his principal a party with whom the owner is satisfied, and who contracts for the purchase at a price acceptable to the owner. McConaughy v. Mahannah, 28 Ill. App. 169, 173; Glentworth v. Luther, 21 Barb. 145.

And a broker may be said to have earned his commissions in finding a purchaser as soon as the purchaser signs the contract with the principal. McConaughy v. Mahannah, 28 Ill. App. 169, 173; Glentworth v. Luther, 21 Barb. 145; Kock v. Emmerling, 22 How. 69, 16 L. ed. 202.

If the employment is to find a purchaser at a stated price and upon given terms, and the broker has expended his time and performed labor in getting parties interested, he will be allowed a reasonable length of time in which to complete his labors, unless a definite time has been agreed upon within which he is to procure a purchaser. Willson v. Dyer, 12 Ind. App. 329.

But in case of the failure of the broker to find a purchaser within a reasonable time, and after a reasonable opportunity to do so, the principal is at liberty to sell the property at less than the fixed price without incurring liability for commissions. Henderson v. Vincent, 84 Ala. 99, 100. As to the effect of a sale by the principal, see note to Hoadley v. Savings Bank of Danbury (Conn.) ante, 321.

If, however, the time of performance is specified the contract must be performed within such time.

Under a contract to negotiate a sale within a certain number of days, the brokers complete their part, and their commissions are earned when they produce a purchaser within the time specified, ready, willing, and able to purchase upon the terms stated in the contract of employment. Oullahan v. Baldwin 100 Cal. 648, 655; Antisdel v. Canfield (Mich.) 5 Det. L. N. 777, 77 N. W. 944; Page v. Griffin, 71 Mo. App. 524, 529; Langhorst v. Coon, 53 Neb. 765; Von Hermann v. Wagner, 81 Hun. 431, 433; Schultz v. Griffin, 5 Misc. 499, 500; Moses v. Bierling, 31 N. Y. 462.

If the time of performance has been extended, the broker must perform his contract within such extension of time as may have been granted by his principal. Zelmer v. Antisell, 75 Cal. 509, 512; Fultz v. Wimer, 34 Kan. 576, 580.

And where a stipulated time is mentioned it becomes the essence of the contract, which must be performed by the broker within the period mentioned. Watson v. Brooks, 11 Or. 271, 273.

So, the nature of property, such as an oil producing property makes it liable to fluctuate in value, and raises the presumption that time is of the essence of the transactions concerning it, and time will therefore be presumed to be the essence of all brokers' contracts in relation to such property. Keliy v. Marshall, 172 Pa. 396, 399; Vincent v. Woodland Oil Co. 165 Pa. 402.

Yet, if the delay in closing the sale within the time specified in the contract between the broker and his principal is caused by any negligence, fault, or fraud on behalf of the principal, the broker will be entitled to his commissions. Fultz v. Wimer, 34 Kan. 576.

So, the mere fact that there is some delay between the time of negotiations of the purchase and the time it is concluded by the principal himself will not of itself affect the broker's right to commission, where such negotiations are commenced by the broker, and have not fallen through, the principal not abandoning his intention. Lynch v. McKenna, 58 How. Pr. 42, 45.

And upon a contract for commissions on a sale "effected in anywise through the broker's influence or instrumentality within a period of sixty days," the broker will be entitled to commissions for inducing a purchaser to begin negotiations within such period upon a sale not effected until after such period. Goffe v. Gibson, 18 Mo. App. 1.

If the broker has an option which expires at a given date and he finds a party ready and willing to buy upon the terms named, of which the principal has notice, and a meeting of the parties is fixed for the day before the option expires, the broker's right cannot be defeated by the principal's default in not closing the bargain within the time specified in the option. Vanderveer v. Suydam, 83 Hun, 116, 118.

Where the broker closed the deal and sent notice thereof by mail to his principal within the prescribed time his right to commissions was not affected by a casualty or failure of the public mails whereby the information miscarried. Gibbons v. Sherwin, 28 Neb. 146, 153.

And the principal will be liable for commissions after the termination of the contract, where the purchaser purchases on the introduction of the broker, and the sale is the result of the services and influence of the broker in defense of the termination of the agency, under a contract that stipulates that if a customer is introduced through the agency of the broker, and if a sale is afterwards consummated with such customer, the principal will pay the commissions whether the time of the agreement has expired meanwhile or not. Leslie v. Boyd, 124 Ind. 320; Williams v. Leslie, 111 Ind. 70, followed.

So, under an agreement stipulating that if the property is withdrawn from the market within twelve months of the date, the principal will pay a certain commission, the principal will be liable for commissions upon a sale made by the broker after that date and before the termination of the agency, as the duration of the contract is not fixed by its terms, and the agency of the broker still continues. Leslie v. Boyd, 124 Ind. 320.

Under a contract which authorizes the broker to place the property in the market "only for a short time," without further limitation for any definite period, where the broker finds a purchaser within two weeks, to whom the principal refuses to convey, on the ground of an increase of value without other notice to the broker, the time, two weeks, may be regarded as fairly coming within the definition of a "short time." Smith v. Fairchild, 7 Colo. 510.

And under a contract giving the broker power to produce a purchaser or sell the lands, the whole to be closed out on or by a given date, the broker has a reasonable time after such date to bring the purchaser and his principal together, and such language does not admit of the construction that the broker is not only bound to make a sale but likewise to produce a purchaser within the time, and its object is to give him power to make or negotiate a sale or produce a satisfactory customer by the time given, and in such a case it is not necessary that all the papers should be ready to complete within the time. O'Connor v. Semple, 57 Wis. 243.

And the clear intention and construction of a contract that the broker is to have an additional compensation if he sells out the lots within one year, that he is to have a year in which to sell out, and even though, under such a contract, the broker does not employ his whole time, yet he cannot be deprived of his right by the revocation of such contract by the principal, provided he proves that he is using diligence in the business. Glover v. Henderson, 120 Mo. 367.

So, the broker can recover under a contract which is not completed for two years after the 44 L. R. A.

time mentioned, where there is no abandonment of the transaction, and the broker retains his relation in the matter, and the delay in the fulfillment of the contract is occasioned by legal proceedings to perfect the title, owing to defects discovered at the time originally fixed to complete the contract. Michaellis v. Gahren, 9 App. Div. 405.

In the above case it was shown that the whole subject was one continuous and connected transaction from the time of the signing of the memorandum between the principal and the purchaser, and the conveyance to the purchaser upon the terms mentioned in the memorandum, which virtually carried out the contract negotiated by the broker in the original memorandum of sale procured by him.

In Metcalf v. Kent, 104 Iowa, 487, a written contract by which the broker had the exclusive right to sell the property upon certain terms and conditions, or on different terms if the parties should take it, on a certain commission in case the property was sold during the pendency of the contract or to a person whom the broker found, showed the property to, or directed to the property, or secured as a customer after the expiration of the contract, or if he secured a purchaser who would purchase on the terms mentioned, which contract was to be good until a given date within which the sale was made, was construed as giving the broker the exclusive right to sell between the dates mentioned, and as entitling him to commission named on any sale which was made between those dates.

Under an agreement naming a certain amount for services in selling or endeavoring to sell in either of two alternatives, first, in case of a sale, whether by the broker or by the principal without his intervention to any person within a year, or second, of a sale at any time afterwards, and before the principal has given the broker thirty days' notice in writing of a revocation of his authority, the provisions for notice cannot be said to apply during the first year, as it will render the distinction of time in the agreement wholly without meaning, and a binding agreement for sale made between the principal and a third person will be a sale within the contemplation of the agreement. Chapin v. Bridges, 116 Mass. 105.

If, however, the broker fails to show that the sale was effected within the time during which he was authorized to make the sale, he fails to make out a case for the recovery of commissions as a broker. Von Hermann v. Wagner, 81 Hun, 431, 433.

If the principal has notified the broker that the sale must be effected by a given date otherwise the authority will be revoked, commissions cannot be claimed on a sale by the principal after that date, even to the purchaser originally found by the broker, as the limitation in respect to time is reasonable and bona fide. Neal v. Lehman, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 461, 462.

The above rule applies even though he may have made efforts to sell the property, and was the first to call the attention of the parties, who subsequently became purchasers, to the property, unless the delay is caused by the negligence, fault, or fraud of the owner. Zelmer v. Antisell, 75 Cal. 509, 512; Fultz v. Welmer, 84 Kan. 570; Wilson v. Sturgis, 71 Cal. 220.

And if the evidence shows that the sale is brought about after the expiration of the time limited by the contract through the interposition of a third person, and with new incidents, the broker cannot claim commissions, and the mere fact that he opened negotiations during the time is not sufficient under such circumstances to entitle him thereto. Beauchamp v. Higgins, 20 Mo. App. 514, 517.

Commissions are not earned under an offer by the owner to sell for a specified price to a certain person, or anyone whom such person might designate, commissions to become payable in case of a sale effected before a date fixed, unless it is proved that a purchaser who is not only willing but also able to comply with the terms of the offer has been found prior to the expiration of the term of the contract. Deschamp v. Goold, 6 Quebec Off. Rep. (Q. B.) 367.

And a reasonable time for the examination of the title of property offered for sale cannot be implied in a case where the limit for acceptance is definitely fixed and settled by the terms of the offer itself, and therefore where the time is fixed within which the broker is to procure the purchaser, he must produce such a person not only able, but willing, to consummate the purchase within the stipulated time, in order to meet his obligation and entitle him to commissions. Watson v. Brooks 11 Or. 271, 273.

Under an agreement to pay commissions on the purchase of property, payable on the delivery of the deed within thirty days from date, the words "within thirty days from date" were construed as specifying the time at which the purchaser is bound to receive the deed under the contract with the seller. Beebe v. Roberts, 3 E. D. Smith, 194.

And in the case of an option to buy or sell real estate on or before certain dates such options will expire at the time mentioned without notice or declaration of forfeiture, and a mere prolongation of negotiations until the evening of the last day will not warrant the holder of the option in believing that no forfeiture exists or will be insisted upon. Cummings v. Town of Lake Realty Co. 86 Wis. 382.

So, if the purchaser produced by the broker does not purchase for cash within the time limited in the agreement between the broker and the principal, but subsequently purchases and pays in instalments at considerable intervals, and the owner does not cause the delay in the sale and is not guilty of negligence, fraud, or fault, the principal incurs no liability for commissions. Fultz v. Wimer, 34 Kan. 576.

Under a contract giving the broker the exclusive privilege of sale for the space of six months, and until the cancelling of the agreement, and which reserved the right to withdraw the sale of the property and to cancel the contract by payment of commissions, the words "and until the cancelling of this agreement" must be construed with reference to the other provision in the contract upon the subject of cancellation, and it manifestly relates to the withdrawal of the property according to the terms agreed upon before the expiration of the time mentioned in the contract, and under such contract the broker's right will cease, at the expiration of the six months, and therefore he cannot recover commission upon a sale of the property made by the principal at a much later date without his assistance. Learned v. McCoy, 4 Ind. App. 238.

And in the case of an exchange of an advowson where the principal agrees to pay the broker a certain sum "on: third down, the remaining two thirds when the abstract or conveyance is drawn out," and in which the one third is paid, and the abstract is delivered by the principal, but none is delivered by the other party, and the negotiations drop, the broker cannot maintain an action for the remaining two thirds of his commissions, as the event upon which the right thereto is to arise has not occurred. Alder v. Boyle, 4 C. B. 635, 16 L. J. C. P. N. S. 232, 11 Jur. 591.

If no time is originally fixed within which the broker is to sell, and the principal subsequently lowers his price and then limits the time within which a sale is to be made, the principal may sell after such period has expired without being liable for commissions. Satterthwaite v. Vreeland, 3 Hun. 152.

Where the broker is authorized to sell within a given time, for a certain commission, and before the expiration of such time the principal demands the delivery of the papers from the broker who states that before he will let the time expire he will purchase himself, which offer is not accepted by the principal and is not within the exercise of the power of sale, the broker is not entitled to his commissions, and all that he can recover under the circumstances is some compensation for his services. Tower v. O'Neil, 66 Pa. 332.

And where after the property is offered at the price named by the principal, but before the property is examined or any offer made for it, the principal raises the price, and afterwards the proposed purchaser examines the property and offers the price given to the broker in the first instance, which offer is declined and the sale is never consummated, an offer without more is an offer in the present to be accepted or refused when made, and there is no time which the jury can consider reasonable or otherwise for the other party to consider it, except by the agreement or concession of the party making it, and until it is accepted it may be withdrawn though that may be at the next instant after it is made, and a subsequent acceptance will be of no avail. Vincent v. Woodland Oil Co. 165 Pa. 402. In this case the court stated that in that instance the principal's offer was not an open or continuing one, and time was not only of the essence of the contract but was intended to be urgent, as the nature of the property was such as to render it liable to fluctuation in value.

Evidence as to the time when by the usage of trade commissions are considered to be earned by parties acting as brokers between parties buying and selling is properly rejected in an action on a contract by the seller to pay commissions where there is also a contract made by the broker with the purchaser,—especially where such party took no part in the actual transaction between the parties. Rupp v. Sampson, 16 Gray, 398, 77 Am. Dec. 416.

So, where the agreement of the agency expired at a given date, a letter written by the principal after he had declined to extend the agency is not admissible in an action by the broker to recover commissions or damages on behalf of the broker, even though in reply to a letter of the broker written during the agency, in which the broker stated that he could have completed the sale but for the principal's delay in having a survey made, and that he could sell it if the agency were extended for a certain time. Smith v. Tate, 82 Va. 657.

And under a contract to give the broker a certain sum if he sells for a sum in cash or approved paper, to be paid the broker within thirty days from the date of the sale, the broker is not entitled to commissions upon finding a purchaser and requesting the principal to convey, as such an act is not a performance of the contract which provides that the payment must be made within thirty days from the date of the sale, which meant thirty days after the sale is perfected, and not that payment is to be made within thirty days after the broker finds a party willing to purchase. Curtis v. Watson, 64 Vt. 549.

But the placing of property by the owner in the hands of brokers for sale for any definite time does not create a lien on the property in favor of the broker for commissions, in case the owner himself sells at some subsequent time. Babcock v. Merritt, 1 Colo. App. 84.

Upon the question of a sale by the principal within the time mentioned in the contract, see note to Hoadley v. Savings Bank of Danbury (Conn.) ante, 321.

VI. In case of a special contract.

The general obligation which a broker assumes or undertakes may be varied by contingencies, and broadened or narrowed by special contract. Parker v. Walker, 86 Tenn. 566, 569.

If a special contract relating to commissions is entered into between the principal and the broker, the broker can only recover upon complying with the terms of such contract. Barber v. Hildebrand, 42 Neb. 400; Fultz v. Wimer, 34 Kan. 576, 580; Pearson v. Mason, 120 Mass. 53, 58.

So, the rights and liabilities of the parties must be determined by the terms of such an agreement exclusively. Hinds v. Henry, 36 N. J. L. 328, 332; Bower v. Jones, 8 Bing. 65, 1 Maule & S. 140; Warde v. Stuart, 1 C. B. N. S. 88; Jacobs v. Kolff, 2 Hilt. 133.

And if an express contract exists no contract will be implied, and the action must be upon the express contract, and the recovery must be under its terms, and not upon a quantum meruit. Illingsworth v. Slosson, 19 Ill. App. 612, 614; Walker v. Brown, 28 Ill. 578, 81 Am. Dec. 287; Ford v. McVay, 55 Ill. 119; Sickels v. Pattison, 14 Wend. 257, 28 Am. Dec. 527; Orynski v. Menger, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 448.

So, the general holding that where brokers are given property for sale, or to find a purchaser, and through their efforts a customer is found, or the seller and buyer are brought together, that the broker is entitled to his commissions according to the customary charge, has no application to a case where there is a special contract, nor is any proof of custom admissible when the parties have covered the points by an express contract. Illingsworth v. Slosson, 19 Ill. App. 612, 614; Collender v. Dinmore, 55 N. Y. 200, 14 Am. Rep. 224; Sanford v. Rawlings, 43 Ill. 92.

And the broker must establish that he performed the special contract in every particular. Bennett v. Egan, 3 Misc. 421, 422.

And this rule holds except where the conditions have not been waived by his principal by an authority to make a new contract. Armes v. Cameron, 8 Mackey, 435, 436.

Under a special contract that the remainder of the commissions is to be paid when the contract with the purchaser is fulfilled, and the remainder of the purchase money, and bonds and mortgages are received and the deed delivered, the broker to waive all claim to further commissions in the event of the transaction not being fulfilled, before the broker can recover the remainder of his commissions he must show that the contract is performed or that performance is prevented by the act of his principal. Seymour v. St. Luke's Hospital, 28 App. Div. 119, 123. To the same effect, Hinds v. Henry, 36 N. J. L. 328; Young v. Hunter, 6 N. Y. 203; Walker v. Tirrell, 101 Mass. 257, 3 Am. Rep. 352.

And where the broker seeks to recover upon such a contract he cannot depart therefrom in evidence upon the trial, and base his right to recover upon evidence of the principal showing a different contract offered by him to contradict the evidence of the broker, and to disprove the alleged contract sued on. Cremer v. Miller, 56 Minn. 52.

In the case of a special contract to negotiate a purchase at a fixed commission, the broker's 44 L. R. A.

services are not ended until he makes all necessary arrangements whereby the principal acquired the title to the property, and it is not enough to procure a contract for the sale from parties who are unable to make a valid conveyance. Kerfoot v. Steele, 113 Ill. 610, 613, 617.

Commissions cannot be recovered for merely finding a purchaser upon a sale never consummated, where there is a special contract for payment of commissions on the making of a sale or disposition of the property. Dorrington v. Powell, 52 Neb. 440.

Under an executory contract, whereby a certain amount is to be secured by a mortgage, with a building loan, and a provision that the title is to pass in ten days after the purchaser has diligently prosecuted the work on the houses, and not later than a certain date; the purchaser to be liable for damages in case of failure to perform the contract; in the absence of an agreement between the parties that the broker is not to be entitled to his commissions until the executory contract of sale is fully performed, he is entitled to commissions. Hodgkins v. Mead, 29 N. Y. S. R. 671.

In a case where a special contract with the defendant's testator was testified to by a single witness, the plaintiff's son, and no other evidence or circumstance proved it, and such testimony, which was not entirely free from improbability, showed that the witness was to be paid extra for the work he did in drawing up the contract and also a fee in case it went through, and that the amount paid by the decedent to the witness's father for commissions on the sale was in excess of the usual commission, the facts should be submitted to a jury, and a direction to find for the plaintiff is error. Kavanagh v. Wilson, 70 N. Y. 177.

Under an express promise to pay one half commissions when the sale is effected, based upon the broker's promise to abstain from further efforts, it is sufficient for the broker to establish the fact that he occupied the relation of broker in respect to the sale; was employed to effect such sale, first called the attention of the purchaser to the property; notified his principal of the fact; and was at the time of the making of the special contract conducting the negotiations and such special contract is based upon a valid consideration as an agreement to pay for services rendered, and the question is one wholly for the jury. Ware v. Kerwin, 24 App. Div. 198.

In case a purchase is effected by means of foreclosure proceedings under a contract to pay a certain amount of commissions whether the property is bought by or for the principal directly or indirectly in the principal's name or that of another, or by one in the interest of the principal, whether through the broker or anyone representing such estate either at public or private sale or otherwise, the purchase to be made in the name of a third person, the broker cannot claim additional compensation for services rendered in carrying out such purchase, performed anterior to the execution of the foreclosure deed, in and about the consummation of the title in his principal, as such services are fairly within the contract as "in connection with said purchase,"—especially as such acts were voluntary and without claim or notice of claim for additional compensation, the broker's services not terminating with the procuring of the agreement to sell in such a case. Kerfoot v. Steele, 113 Ill. 610, 613, 617.

And unpaid commissions were refused on a sale forfeited by reason of nonpayment of the purchase money, under an agreement with a proviso that the price might be payable in instalments, the broker to retain a certain amount from the first two and one half of the subsequent instalments until the commissions were paid, and a supplementary contract that if the purchasers forfeited their contracts, all forfeited instalments paid to the broker should be retained as commissions, and if they effect a resale on credit the future instalments were to be divided until the principal should receive a certain amount per acre. Holbrook v. Investment Co. 30 Or. 259.

VII. In case of an exchange.

In the case of a broker employed to procure an exchange of property the courts have drawn a distinction between an engagement "to effect an exchange" and "to procure the execution of a contract for an exchange."

Upon this subject it has been said that it is one thing to agree with the broker to pay him a stipulated sum to obtain from a third person a valid contract to make a prescribed exchange, and another thing to agree to pay a fixed sum to effect or negotiate an exchange which will vest in the employer or principal a good title to designated lots subject only to specified encumbrances, and in the latter case the commissions are not earned until the broker finds a person able and ready to make the exchange, and convey to his employer the title which, alone, by the terms of his offer and of the broker's employment, the principal of the latter agreed to take and has a right to demand. Barnes v. Roberts, 5 Bosw. 73.

The same distinction is recognized in the case of Kalley v. Baker, 132 N. Y. 1.

And also in Moskowitz v. Hornberger, 20 Misc. 558, Affirming 19 Misc. 429.

In cases where the broker, employed to effect the execution of a contract for an exchange, procures a binding and enforceable contract to be entered into between his principal and the other party to the exchange, he becomes entitled to his commissions unless there is a special agreement to the contrary. Kalley v. Baker, 132 N. Y. 1.

And the rule holds even though the trade is broken off because of the defect in the title to the property to be taken in exchange. Collins v. Fowler, 8 Mo. App. 580.

So, if the minds of the parties have met and they have fully agreed upon the terms of exchange it matters not whether the contract is in writing or not. Moses v. Helmke, 18 Misc. 357.

Where, however, the contract is "to effect an exchange," the rule would seem to be that no commissions are earned until the exchange is made.

The distinction between the two classes of cases is recognized by the cases of Moskowitz v. Hornberger, 20 Misc. 558-560, Affirming 19 Misc. 429; Woolley v. Lowenstein, 83 Hun, 155; Emens v. St. John, 79 Hun, 99,—in which the contract was to make or effect an exchange.

In the first-mentioned case the broker effected the exchange, so far, at least, that through his efforts a valid contract was entered into by competent persons upon terms and conditions agreeable to his principals, even as to details which were carefully expressed which was ordinarily all that the broker could do; yet as he was employed "to effect an exchange" it was necessary for him to prove that the person procured was able, as well as willing, to carry out the contract made, and that the trade fell through by reason of the inability or capriciousness of his employer to consummate it. Moskowitz v. Hornberger, 20 Misc. 558-560, Affirming 19 Misc. 429.

In Woolley v. Lowenstein, 83 Hun, 155, the broker employed to make an exchange of property was required to show that the person whom he introduced to his principal was the owner of the property to be exchanged, or was able to convey it.

And the mere fact that the broker procures a party who signs a contract for the exchange or sale of property will not entitle the broker to commissions when he knows that such party has no interest in the property and does not disclose it to his principal. Norman v. Benthner, 25 Misc. 161.

And if the broker's commissions are contingent upon the title of the property to be taken in exchange by his principal being satisfactory, he cannot recover his commissions where such title is doubtful, and is therefore refused by his principal. Emens v. St. John, 79 Hun, 99.

Yet, although in a limited sense it may be true, in a case of an exchange effected by a broker, that the broker is bound to prove that the person procured by him to make the exchange has a good marketable title to the property he contracted to give his principal in exchange, yet the fact that such person executes a formal contract to convey carries with it the legal presumption (which is proof in the first instance) that he was able to perform his undertaking, and therefore in such a case the onus is upon the principal to prove that the title offered by such contracting party was for some reason defective, as, when a person is in possession of property and is shown to be the beneficial owner thereof, the presumption is that every instrument has been executed, and everything has been done to render his title legal. Moskowitz v. Hornberger, 20 Misc. 558, Affirming 19 Misc. 429.

Although it may be true that a real-estate broker is not entitled to his commission as a matter of law until the trade is completed and the papers passed, and that the mere signing of an agreement to exchange property, which was never carried out, does not entitle him to commissions for introducing the parties, yet such rule will not apply where there is a special contract entered into between the parties on the question of commissions. Pearson v. Mason, 120 Mass. 53, 58.

And no error is committed by the court, in an action by a real-estate broker to recover commissions on an exchange, in ruling out the offer of the principal to show that the title to the property to be taken by him in exchange was in one party, and another party paid the consideration, when it is shown that the party with whom he is dealing in the exchange has a legal title vested in him. Mason v. Hinds, 47 N. Y. S. R. 163, 166.

Under an authority to exchange property free and clear for certain other property subject to certain mortgages for which the principal would pay a certain commission, "if the exchange is made," so far as the broker is concerned, the exchange is made when the contract is signed, in the same way as upon a contract to pay commission if a house is sold, in which case the broker procuring a party ready to sign the contract for the house is entitled to his commissions; and such expression does not mean if the deeds passed commissions would be paid. Kalley v. Baker, 29 N. Y. S. R. 677.

VIII. Negotiations by principal.

In many cases the question has arisen as to whether or not there has been a performance of the contract on the broker's part, where the sale has been negotiated or closed by the principal himself.

The general rule deducible from the decisions upon the question would seem to be that if there is nothing peculiar in the contract of employment it is not necessary that the broker should negotiate the sale when he has found, or procured, or if he has introduced, or given the name of, a purchaser who is able, ready, and willing to purchase the property upon the terms named by the principal, and the principal has entered into negotiations with such purchaser, and concluded a sale with him; and in such cases the broker has performed his contract, and is entitled to his commissions. Scott v. Patterson, 53 Ark. 49, 52; Doan v. Scanlan, 57 Cal. 261, 263; Howe v. Werner, 7 Colo. App. 530, 532; Lincoln v. McClatchie, 36 Conn. 136; Schlegel v. Allerton, 65 Conn. 260; Doonan v. Ives, 73 Ga. 295; McConaughy v. Mahannah, 28 Ill. App. 169, 173; Lawrence v. Atwood, 1 Ill. App. 222; Carter v. Webster, 79 Ill. 435; Pate v. Marsh, 65 Ill. App. 482, 483; Adams v. Decker, 34 Ill. App. 20; Keeler v. Grace, 27 Ill. App. 427, 429; Monroe v. Snow, 131 Ill. 126; Mears v. Stone, 44 Ill. App. 444, 447; Platt v. Johr, 9 Ind. App. 58; Williams v. Leslie, 111 Ind. 70; Hanna v. Collins, 69 Iowa. 51, 52; Blodgett v. Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. 63 Iowa, 606; Kelly v. Stone, 94 Iowa, 316; Dreisback v. Rollins, 39 Kan. 268; Ratts v. Shepherd, 37 Kan. 20; Viley v. Pettit, 96 Ky. 576; Kimberly v. Henderson, 29 Md. 513; Richards v. Jackson, 31 Md. 250. 1 Am. Rep. 40; Chaplin v. Bridges, 116 Mass. 105; Ranson v. Weston, 110 Mich. 240; Putnam v. How, 39 Minn. 363; Crevier v. Stephen, 40 Minn. 288; Armstrong v. Wann, 29 Minn. 126; Hamilton v. Sculte, 34 Minn. 534; Haug v. Haugan, 51 Minn. 558; Stinde v. Blesch, 42 Mo. App. 578, 581; Bell v. Kaiser, 50 Mo. 150; Tyler v. Pari, 52 Mo. 249; Timberman v. Craddock, 70 Mo. 638; Goffe v. Gibson, 18 Mo. App. 1; Gaty v. Foster, 18 Mo. App. 639; Beauchamp v. Higgins, 20 Mo. App. 514; Blackwell v. Adams, 28 Mo. App. 61; Jones v. Berry, 37 Mo. App. 125, 126; Milan v. Porter, 31 Mo. App. 563; Henderson v. Mace, 64 Mo. App. 393, 396; Bass v. Jacobs, 63 Mo. App. 393, 396; Gelatt v. Ridge, 117 Mo. 553; Wetzell v. Wagoner, 41 Mo. App. 500, 516; Brennan v. Roach, 47 Mo. App. 290, 296; Wright v. Brown, 68 Mo. App. 577; Woods v. Stephens, 46 Mo. 555; Gaty v. Sack, 19 Mo. App. 477; Nicholas v. Jones, 23 Neb. 813; Butler v. Kennard, 23 Neb. 357; Shepherd v. Hedden, 29 N. J. L. 334; Bach v. Emerich, 3 Jones & S. 548, 551; Jewett v. Emson, 2 Robt. 165; Bennett v. Egan, 3 Misc. 421, 422; Stillman v. Mitchell, 2 Robt. 523; Barnard v. Monnot, 3 Keyes, 203; Arnold v. Wood, 13 N. Y. Week. Dig. 302; Smith v. Smith, 1 Sweeney, 552; Smith v. McGovern, 65 N. Y. 574, 575; Brundage v. McCormick, 69 Hun, 65, 66; McClave v. Paine, 49 N. Y. 561, 10 Am. Rep. 431, 432; Wyckoff v. Taylor, 13 Daly, 564; Lloyd v. Matthews, 51 N. Y. 124; Gemunderv. Hauser, 6 Misc. 210, 214; Daer v. Koch, 2 Misc. 334, 366; Sussdorf v. Schmidt, 55 N. Y. 319; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co. 83 N. Y. 382, 22 Am. Rep. 441; King v. Bauer, 29 N. Y. S. R. 413; Ames v. McNally, 6 Misc. 93, 94; Gold v. Serrell, 6 Misc. 124, 126; McKnight v. Thayer, 48 N. Y. S. R. 620, 622; Morgan v. Mason, 4 E. D. Smith, 63d, 632; Levy v. Coogan, 16 Daly, 137; Harris v. Burtnett, 2 Daly, 189; Doran v. Bussard, 18 App. Div. 36, 37; Keys v. Johnson, 68 Pa. 43; Scott v. Clark, 3 S. D. 486; Royster v. Mageveney, 9 Lea, 14; Arrington v. Cary, 5 Baxt. 609, 611; Dyrd v. Frost (Tex. Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 46.

The same principles are deducible from the case of Baird v. Glecker (S. D.) 76 N. W. 931, in which the principal was present and acted for himself, and was entirely satisfied with the situation.

And the same is announced in Levistones v. Landreaux, 6 La. Ann. 26, where the negotiations conducted partly by the broker and partly 44 J. R. A.

by the principal resulted in a binding contract being entered into by the principal upon the terms given to the broker.

So, if the principal reserved the right to sell yet the broker will still be entitled to his commissions if he was the procuring cause of the sale made by the principal. Graves v. Bains, 78 Tex. 92, 95.

In Wyckoff v. Bliss, 12 Daly. 324, 327, it is said that there is a difference between the duty of the broker employed to find a purchaser at a fixed price, and that of a broker employed to find a party willing to make a trade of property satisfactory to the employer, and that in the latter case the duty of the broker is often performed where he brings the parties together and leaves them to negotiate and come to an agreement between themselves.

And even where there has been no direct communication between the broker and the principal, it must be taken affirmatively that the latter was induced to enter into the negotiations which resulted in the purchase through the means employed by the broker for that purpose. Gleason v. Nelson, 162 Mass. 245.

So, if the negotiations between the principal and the purchaser are brought about by the broker it matters not when, where, or under what circumstances he found the purchaser, so long as his agency continues and the sale is made, and the question whether he was present at the sale or had no knowledge of it becomes an immaterial fact. McKnight v. Thayer, 48 N. Y. S. R. 620.

And the question whether the final negotiations between the purchaser and the principal's attorney, which resulted in a sale, can be regarded as a continuance of the negotiations which the broker induced the purchaser to enter into with the principal, is in no sense one of law, but one determinable by the evidence, and the court will not entertain the question upon appeal unless the question is certified to in the court below. Hanna v. Collins, 69 Iowa, 51.

So, the doctrine applies even where the principal does not mention the price, and the broker produces a purchaser with whom the principal afterwards negotiates a sale. Buhl v. Noe, 51 Ill. App. 622, 626.

It also applies where the broker's introduction or disclosure of the purchaser to the principal is the foundation on which the negotiations are begun and conducted, and the sale is made. Keener v. Harrod, 2 Md. 63, 56 Am. Rep. 706, 708; Wilkinson v. Martin, 8 Car. & P. 1.

And the fact that other property is subsequently added will not defeat the broker's right where he is the means of the negotiations of the sale. Ranson v. Weston, 110 Mich. 240.

Yet, in order to entitle a broker to commissions where the owner himself makes a sale to the party introduced by the broker, it must appear that the owner assented to the terms upon which the broker could have sold the land; but if the owner refuses to sell at the highest offer produced by the broker, and then proceeds in person, or through another broker, to sell for a better price to another, the rule cannot be applied. Armes v. Cameron, 8 Mackey, 435, 437.

The reason of the rule is that fair dealing between the parties demands the owner to disclose his intention to the broker before concluding the sale to the purchaser found by the broker, and that the owner of property will not be permitted to avail himself of the services of an agent who procures a purchaser, and effect a sale himself to such purchaser through information derived from the broker, and thereby deprive the agent of his commission. Cook v. Forst, 116 Ala. 305; Dreisback v. Rollins, 39 Kan. 268; Redfield v. Tegg, 38 N. Y. 212; Plant

v. Thompson, 42 Kan. 664; Jones v. Adler, 34 Md. 440, 443; Keener v. Harrod, 2 Md. 63, 56 Am. Rep. 706, 708; Beale v. Creswell, 3 Md. 196. See, as to broker's commissions as affected by the negligence, fraud, or default of the principal, note to Brackenridge v. Claridge (Tex.) 43 L. R. A. 593.

So, the rule is founded upon the doctrine that brokers are persons whose business it is to bring buyer and seller together, and they need have nothing to do with the negotiations of the bargain. Keys v. Johnson, 68 Pa. 42, 43; Gibson's Estate, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 147, 148; Hartley v. Anderson, 150 Pa. 391; Inslee v. Jones, Brightly (Pa.) 76; Middleton v. Thompson, 163 Pa. 112, 119; Morris v. Ruddy, 20 N. J. Eq. 236.

And it is also based upon the fact that the making of the contract is a matter for the principal himself. Gonzales v. Broad, 57 Cal. 224; Thelan v. Gardner, 43 Cal. 311; Barnard v. Monnot, 3 Keyes, 204; Kock v. Emmerling, 22 How. 69, 16 L. ed. 202.

It is not necessary that the whole contract should be completed by the broker alone in order to entitle him to commissions. Butler v. Kennard, 23 Neb. 357, 359.

And if, in such a case, the parties think proper to take the matter out of the broker's hands, and carry on the negotiations themselves, the broker earns his commissions if a sale is afterwards effected. Ludlow v. Carman, 2 Hill. 107, 112.

And the same principle also applies in the case of a sale concluded by another agent of the owner and the purchaser. Brennan v. Roach, 47 Mo. App. 294, 296.

But although it is not indispensable that the purchaser should be introduced to the owner by the broker, or that the broker should be personally acquainted with the purchaser, yet in such cases it must affirmatively appear that the purchaser was induced to apply to the owner through the means employed by the broker. Sussdorff v. Schmidt, 55 N. Y. 319.

The purchaser must be produced by the broker, and be found by his efforts and exertions, and be the fruit of his labor. Lloyd v. Matthews, 51 N. Y. 124.

If the broker actually draws the attention of the purchaser to the property, it matters not that the negotiations are carried on and completed by the principal, especially when it is not shown that his agreement with the principal has expired or been revoked. Heffner v. Chambers, 121 Pa. 84.

And, although a purchaser, after being sent to view the property by the broker, does not return, but acts on subsequent and later-acquired information, and goes directly to the principal and negotiates the bargain with him, such fact will not relieve the latter of his obligation to pay the broker's commissions. Hanford v. Shapter, 4 Daly, 243; Chilton v. Butler, 1 E. D. Smith, 150; Ludlow v. Carman, 2 Hill. 107.

So, in the case of an exchange of property it is sufficient if the party desiring to trade his property solicits the services of a broker who finds a person willing and able to make the deal, and brings the parties together, and they enter into negotiations which are ultimately concluded even upon varied terms. Knowles v. Harvey, 10 Colo. App. 9.

And, inasmuch as matters of exchange always proceed by negotiation, and mutual concession, the principal should not be permitted to escape liability to pay for the services which have been rendered him by the broker, where the properties are ultimately exchanged by the consent of the one who employed the broker, and on terms satisfactory to him. Carson v. Baker, 2 Colo. App. 248.

44 L. R. A.

And in such a case the owner and the buyer cannot by any arrangement disappoint the claim of the agent for remuneration. Vreeland v. Vetterlein, 33 N. J. L. 247, 249.

And the fact that the broker subsequently draws the writings and receives the purchase money will strengthen his case. Shepherd v. Hedden, 29 N. J. L. 334, 337.

So, it is sufficient if the purchaser introduced by him, and the principal, enter into a valid, binding, and enforceable contract. Wilson v. Mason, 158 Ill. 304; Lang v. Hand, 57 Ill. App. 134.

And in such cases the broker is entitled to his commissions irrespective of whether the contract is ever carried out by the conveyance of the property and the payment of the purchase money. Flower v. Davidson, 44 Minn. 46.

And the rule has been held to apply where a purchaser is produced by the broker with whom the seller himself negotiates and effects a sale, although the sale itself may be finally abandoned. Potvin v. Curran, 13 Neb. 302, 305.

Again, if the contract negotiated by the principal with the purchaser introduced by the broker provides for the payment of a sum by way of liquidated damages in case of nonperformance by the parties, and such contract is in a sense optional with either party, the broker will be entitled to recover even though the purchaser refuses to make the conveyance and elects to pay the damages. Glider v. Davis, 137 N. Y. 504, 20 L. R. A. 398.

And his right to compensation is complete where the parties are brought together and a sale is made through his instrumentality without reference to whether the owner at the time the sale was effected had knowledge of the fact that he was making the sale through such instrumentality. Butler v. Kennard, 23 Neb. 357; Hartley v. Dorr, 15 Neb. 451; Anderson v. Cox, 16 Neb. 10; Potvin v. Curran, 13 Neb. 303; Goffe v. Gibson, 18 Mo. App. 1.

It is not absolutely necessary that the principal should know that the purchaser is a customer of the broker if he is in fact the broker's production. Lloyd v. Matthews, 51 N. Y. 124; Bryan v. Abert, 3 App. D. C. 180, 186.

The rule especially applies if the broker's acts are not misleading. Hanford v. Shapter, 4 Daly, 243.

And the broker's right will not, in the absence of fraud, be affected by such circumstances, as it is wholly unimportant whether the principal knew that his purchaser was sent by the broker or not, and it is sufficient if that was a fact. Adams v. Decker, 32 Ill. App. 17; Lloyd v. Matthews, 51 N. Y. 124.

This is so for the reason that the right of the broker to recover depends upon the fact that he has procured the purchaser, and not upon the knowledge on the part of the principal of that fact at the time of the sale. Millan v. Porter, 31 Mo. App. 563, 576; Tyler v. Parr, 52 Mo. 249; Goffe v. Gibson, 18 Mo. App. 4.

And ignorance of such fact will be no defense in an action to recover commissions, where the evidence shows that the sale is made through his efforts, and that the principal has expressly promised to pay his commissions after he has seen the purchaser, and has told the broker not to advertise further as he was negotiating with him. Sussdorff v. Schmidt, 55 N. Y. 319, 321.

If the broker does not agree with the purchasers on the terms of sale, and does not assist in the negotiations, and the principal does not know that the broker is concerned in the negotiations until after the sale is effected, and where in sending the purchaser to the principal the broker said, "Don't be too fast to buy, and, in your conversation with him, talk as if you didn't want to buy the farm,"—he will still be entitled to recover when such statements have not injured the principal and have resulted in a sale on terms satisfactory to the principal, although the principal asserts that he did not know of the broker's agency, and that if he had he might have refused to make the sale, as the principal has not terminated the agency, or taken steps to inform himself in regard to his connection with or his influence in effecting the sale, no fraud or mistake existing, the agreement not calling for him to fix the sale, but only to find a purchaser. Kelly v. Stone, 94 Iowa, 316.

It is, however, necessary that the principal should know that the broker was instrumental in making the sale, and when he is told by the purchaser that he has received information of his desire to sell the property, and the price he wants for it, the principal should then inquire from him the source of his information. Lloyd v. Matthews, 51 N. Y. 124.

And in such cases the principal may prove by a purchaser that the broker had no influence on him in the sale made by the principal, as it is necessary that the broker should do something in order to earn his commissions. Doonan v. Ives, 73 Ga. 295, 301.

If the principal does not bar himself from selling, and the broker notifies an intending purchaser, without disclosing his principal's name, and such purchaser subsequently learns from another source who the principal is, and purchases directly from him without the broker's knowledge, and without knowing that the broker has anything to do with the sale, the broker cannot be said to be the means by which the negotiations were effected so as to be entitled to his commissions. Anderson v. Smythe, 1 Colo. App. 253.

And if the evidence adduced by the broker does not sustain his claim that the sale was made with a knowledge of negotiations between the broker and such purchaser, he cannot recover commissions upon a sale made by his principal to such purchaser,—especially where the purchaser testifies that he never agreed to take the property from such broker. Hurd v. Nelson, 100 Iowa, 555, 557.

Where, however, the evidence clearly establishes the fact that the parties are brought together, and negotiations carried on, by and through the agents; that they participated and aided in the transaction at the time of its consummation, and were up to that time recognized and regarded by the principal as his agents, the mere fact that the principal has in his absence, the transfers made and money paid by and through another agent, cannot affect the relation of the parties, nor can the principal by his own act disregard the services performed, and refuse to pay the agreed price; and therefore the broker is entitled to his commissions. Howe v. Werner, 7 Colo. App. 530, 532.

And a broker who shows the property to several parties, and finally calls the attention of the purchaser to several pieces of property including the one in question, names the price, and advises him to buy, and subsequently such purchaser buys directly from the principal, who has no notice of any such previous conversation or negotiation, cannot recover commissions, as the principal is at liberty to sell himself, has no knowledge of the instrumentality of the broker, and deals with the purchaser as an original client in good faith, and makes new terms of sale. Cathcart v. Bacon, 47 Minn. 34.

If the principal expressly agrees to pay the broker a specific sum as commission if the negotiations between himself and the purchaser are successfully carried out, and a sale or exchange is finally consummated on terms agreed upon between the parties, the broker will be entitled to his commissions. Haug v. Haugan, 51 Minn. 558.

Again, mere delay between the time of negotiation of the purchase and the time that it is concluded by the principal in person does not detract from the broker's right to commissions, where it is evident that the negotiation started by the broker has not fallen through, and that the principal has not abandoned his intention of purchasing. Lynch v. McKenna, 58 How. Pr. 42, 45, in which the action was brought for commission for purchasing a house.

Commissions were allowed in a case where after a failure to negotiate a sale with the purchaser introduced by the broker the principal again placed the property in the broker's hands, and the broker again opened negotiations with such purchaser, with whom his principal concluded a sale at a reduced price without taking the property out of the agent's hands or giving him any notice thereof. Schlegel v. Allerton, 65 Conn. 280.

In Lincoln v. McClatchie, 36 Conn. 136, the broker recovered commissions as the sale was not effected by the principal wholly without the broker's assistance, upon facts showing, inter alia, that a party attracted by the broker's advertisement of other houses upon the same street got the reduced price from the broker as the consideration for the premises and reported it to the intending purchaser, who examined the premises, entered into negotiations with the principal personally, which resulted in the sale for the higher price by the principal himself, without any personal interview or dealing with the broker, although the purchaser had notice before purchasing that the property was in the broker's hands for sale.

When the principal takes it out of his power to carry out any contract the broker may make, by executing a lease of the premises and binding himself to sell to such lessee at any time during the lease, the transaction must be considered as to its effect upon the principal's contract with the broker, and not simply as to whether he made the contract of sale enforceable in any event against the purchaser, and therefore under such contract the broker will be entitled to his commissions under a provision contained in the contract with his principal that upon a withdrawal of the property he was to pay the broker the same commission as though he had made a sale to an independent purchaser. Rucker v. Hall, 105 Cal. 425.

But where there was a special contract to sell at a special price and the principal himself conducted the negotiations and made a sale to the purchaser at a reduced price, the broker was not allowed to recover commissions in the absence of proof that the purchaser produced was ready and willing to buy at the price stipulated in the contract, or that the principal prevented his making such sale. Childs v. Ptomey, 17 Mont. 502, 509.

And in the case of real estate listed with a broker to be sold for a certain sum net to the owner, the broker to receive as compensation any sum in excess thereof for which he effected a sale, if the broker informs a party that he can purchase for the net price, and then introduces him to the owner who completes the sale at that price, the broker cannot recover commissions upon the sale so negotiated. Beatty v. Russell, 41 Neb. 321.

Before the broker can recover commissions in a case where he introduces the purchaser and at the same time informs his principal that if such party purchases he claims the usual commission, in which the negotiations by the prinprincipal with such purchaser are not successful, but later the principal sells the property to his brother, who then sells to such purchaser, he must show that the sale to the brother and the subsequent sale to such purchaser are made for the purpose of defrauding him of his commissions, as in the absence of such evidence he cannot recover. Bennett v. Kidder, 5 Daly, 512.

And where a broker who is to sell separate parcels at a specified price brings a party and his principal together, and negotiations are commenced by the principal with the purchaser, which terminate in a valid sale of a parcel for the price specified, upon which the broker receives his commissions, and afterwards the principal informs such purchaser that he has other parcels, and another parcel is then sold by the principal for the price and upon the terms at which it was given to the broker without the latter's knowledge, the broker is not entitled to commissions upon the latter sale, especially as he gave no information in regard to it and took no part in it. McClave v. Paine, 49 N. Y. 561, 10 Am. Rep. 431, 432.

And the broker cannot recover on a special contract to pay a certain sum for a sale for a given amount, where the principal himself sells for a less amount, after the broker has entered upon the contract, and his advertisement is seen by the purchaser, who writes to a third party for a more complete description of the land, which is obtained from the broker and sent him by letter, where the purchaser applies directly to the principal and negotiates with him, even though the broker's efforts are evidently instrumental in enabling the defendant to sell. Charlton v. Wood, 11 Helsk, 19, 24.

In the above case, however, the court did not pass upon the question whether or not the broker would be entitled to recover reasonable compensation for loss and expense incurred by him in advertising the property for sale, as that question was not before the court.

IX. Acceptance of purchaser by principal.

The general rule is that the broker undertakes to furnish a purchaser, and is bound to act in good faith in presenting a person as such, and when one is presented the principal is not bound to accept him, or to pay the commissions, — unless he is ready and able to perform the contract on his part according to the terms proposed. Birmingham Land & Loan Co. v. Thompson, 86 Ala. 146, 149; Coleman v. Meade, 18 Bush, 358, 363; Francis v. Baker, 45 Minn. 83, 84; Conkling v. Krakauer, 70 Tex. 735; Nesbitt v. Heiser, 49 Mo. 383, 385; Woods v. Stephens, 46 Mo. 556, 557; Beauchamp v. Higgins, 20 Mo. App. 514; Hayden v. Grillo, 26 Mo. App. 293; Love v. Owens, 31 Mo. App. 501; Wolff v. Rosenberg, 67 Mo. App. 403.

The purchaser found must be one whom the principal agrees to accept. Pratt v. Patterson, 7 Phila. 135.

So, the principal must be satisfied with the purchaser, who must actually purchase the property at a price satisfactory to the owner. Williams v. Leslie, 111 Ind. 70, 72; Keys v. Johnson, 68 Pa. 42, 43; Glentworth v. Luther, 21 Barb. 145; Conkling v. Krakauer, 70 Tex. 735; Donohue v. Flanagan, 28 N. Y. S. R. 757.

And the principal must have a reasonable opportunity to inquire into and satisfy himself in relation to the purchaser found by the broker. Greene v. Hollingshead, 40 Ill. App. 195, 197.

And the broker's claim to commission upon the price is contingent upon the acceptance by his principal of the offer made, and upon an actual sale effected. And if employed, without any special agreement, to find a purchaser, he is not entitled to claim commissions upon a sale which the owner declines to make, and which fails of actual consummation, as the principal always has a locus poenitentiae until he agrees to an actual sale. Pratt v. Patterson, 7 Phila. 135, 136.

The principal does not part with the control of his property by employing a broker to find a purchaser, nor does he bind himself irrevocably to pay the broker a commission for the sale to a purchaser whom upon inquiry and reflection he refuses to accept. Ibid.

And if an unsatisfactory purchaser is found, the owner may refuse to accept him, and he is under no obligation to pay the broker for his services. Saure v. Wilson, 86 Ala. 151.

When the broker produces a purchaser who is ready and willing to enter into a contract, it is for the principal to decide whether the person presented is acceptable and the broker's position depends upon such acceptance; but if the principal does accept him either upon the original or modified terms, and a valid contract is entered into, he becomes a purchaser within the meaning of the contract of the broker, and the duties of the latter are at an end, and the commissions are earned as soon as an enforceable contract is executed. Birmingham Land & Loan Co. v. Thompson, 86 Ala. 146; Saure v. Wilson, 86 Ala. 151; Henderson v. Vincent, 84 Ala. 99; Coleman v. Meade, 18 Bush, 358, 360; Walker v. Osgood, 98 Mass. 348, 98 Am. Dec. 168; Rice v. Mayo, 107 Mass. 550; Glentworth v. Luther, 21 Barb. 145; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co., 83 N. Y. 378, 22 Am. Rep. 441; Short v. Millard, 68 Ill. 293; Lapsley v. Ho'ridge, 71 Ill. App. 652; Wilson v. Mason, 158 Ill. 304; Pratt v. Hotchkiss, 10 Ill. App. 603; Francis v. Baker, 45 Minn. 83, 84; Hamlin v. Schulte, 34 Minn. 534; Betz v. Williams & W. Land & Loan Co., 46 Kan. 45; Driesback v. Rollins, 39 Kan. 268; Redfield v. Tegg, 88 N. Y. 212; Viley v. Pettit, 96 Ky. 576; Wolff v. Rosenberg, 67 Mo. App. 403; Adams v. Decker, 34 Ill. App. 17, 20; Parker v. Walker, 86 Tenn. 566; Kock v. Emmerling, 22 How. 69, 16 L. ed. 292.

And the rule is the same where the principal accepts the purchaser presented by the broker, although the sale is never actually completed, if the failure of the purchaser to complete the sale results from the inability of the principal to make a good title without any fault on the part of the broker. Wilson v. Mason, 158 Ill. 304.

The question of the broker's right to commissions upon a sale never consummated owing to a defective title will be found fully discussed in note to Brackenridge v. Claridge (Tex.) 43 L. R. A. 593.

So, the rule prevails in such cases, even though the sale is not completed or executed by payment of the consideration to the principal. Francis v. Baker, 45 Minn. 83, 84.

If the acts of the broker are accepted by the principal as a performance of his undertaking, the broker is entitled to his commissions, although an acceptance will not exist, unless the principal has knowledge at the time he is dealing with the purchaser that he is the one produced by the broker. Bidgett v. Sioux City & St. P. R. Co., 63 Iowa, 606, 609. As to the failure of the broker to report the purchaser found by him, see XIV. infra.

And if the sale is actually completed, the principal must be taken to have favorably determined the financial responsibility of the purchaser produced, and the broker is entitled to his commissions, even though it may afterwards transpire that such purchaser is unable to meet deferred payments as they become due. Wray v. Carpenter, 16 Colo. 271.

If the proposed purchaser has been accepted by the principal, the burden is upon him to show that the purchaser was not able to comply with the contract. Davis v. Morgan, 96 Ga. 518, 520.

The principal's acceptance of the purchaser estops him from alleging anything against the claim, except fraud on the part of the broker in inducing the acceptance, or wrong done by him causing failure of the purchaser to perform. Greene v. Hollingshead, 40 Ill. App. 195, 197.

But the principal must knowingly receive or consummate the sale as the result of the broker's labor. Thomas v. Merrifield (Kan. App.) 53 Pac. 891.

The broker must, however, show that his principal accepts the offer as made by the proposed purchaser where it differs from the terms given to the broker by the principal. Forrester v. Price, 6 Misc. 304, 304.

Yet, a broker may enter into a contract with reference to the property, and his principal may accept and approve the contract without thereby accepting it as the performance by the broker of his contract. Reiger v. Bigger, 29 Mo. App. 421, 427.

If the broker has procured a person who is able and willing to purchase upon the principal's terms, the refusal of his principal to accept such person as purchaser will not deprive him of his right to commissions, and a noncompliance by the broker with a condition precedent to his right to recover will not avail the principal upon proof that compliance was prevented by his act. Weinstein v. Golding, 17 Misc. 613, 615, 616; Gaty v. Foster, 18 Mo. App. 639, 644, to the same effect.

So, if the broker's evidence shows that he has bound a purchaser ready, willing, and financially able to make the purchase absolutely on the terms fixed by the principal, and that the principal accepted such purchaser, and entered into a contract with him in respect to the sale and purchase of the property, he establishes a prima facie case entitling him to recover his commission. Lemon v. Lloyd, 46 Mo. App. 452, 456; Zeldier v. Walker, 41 Mo. App. 118; Hayden v. Grillo, 26 Mo. App. 289; Love v. Owens, 31 Mo. App. 501; Millan v. Porter, 31 Mo. App. 563.

But if the proposition is not accepted by the principal, it is incumbent upon the broker to show that the purchaser was willing and able to purchase or exchange upon the terms offered by the owner. Lockwood v. Halsey, 41 Kan. 166.

The fact that a new clause requiring the purchaser to give a satisfactory bond is inserted in a new contract tends to indicate that the principal knew of the actual financial condition of the purchaser, and in such a case the principal cannot free himself from his obligation to pay commission on the ground that during the negotiations the broker unruly and in breach of good faith alleged that the purchaser had a certain amount of money, even if he knew the purchaser had no money and was influenced by such statement, and, with full knowledge of his financial condition, used and accepted the benefit of the services. Irwin v. Mowbray, 24 N. Y. S. R. 751. In this case the court refused to disturb a verdict allowing the broker's commissions, as, in addition to the above, it was also proved that the purchasers informed the principal of their financial condition.

Where a person is found who expresses willingness to take at the price, and the principal after accepting her as a purchaser, declines to execute the contract, in the absence of proof of the pecuniary responsibility of the purchaser 44 L. R. A.

the legal presumption is that such purchaser is solvent and able to perform the contract, and is a purchaser willing to take, and a meeting of the minds of the parties is proved. Krahner v. Heilman, 16 Da'y. 132.

The broker recovered his commissions in a case where the minds of the parties met and were expressed in the payment of money, and the giving of a receipt signed by the principal and his wife as follows: ". . . received from . . . the sum of $10 part of purchase money on sale of my house . . ."—which contract the purchaser subsequently refused to complete, as the broker was not chargeable with any imperfection in the making of such agreement or receipt, and as the purchaser found was accepted by the defendant. Heinrich v. Korn, 4 Da'y. 74.

And where the principal, according to his own evidence, accepted the proposed purchaser without objection, recognized him as answering all the requirements, and there was no suggestion that he was not entirely solvent, and the real cause of the failure to complete the sale was due to the principal's own inability to make a good title, the broker's right to recover does not depend upon the question whether or not he had established the ability of the purchaser to pay, and it is error for the court to so charge the jury. Davis v. Morgan, 96 Ga. 518, 520.

And where the principal accepts a purchaser as able and willing to complete a contract which provides that he shall build when no cash is paid, and the purchaser enters into a bond and deed of trust, and the owner is to furnish the money, evidence of the subsequent insolvency of the purchaser is inadmissible in an action by the broker to recover his commissions, the principal having accepted him as a purchaser, able and willing to complete the contract. Ross v. Fickling, 11 App. D. C. 412.

So, where the principal knows the status of the proposed purchaser, as where she is a married woman, incapable by the state law of binding herself personally for payment of the purchaser's money, and he does not object or decline to consummate the sale on other specified grounds, the objection is to be construed as waived by him. Sayre v. Wilson, 86 Ala. 151.

And it is harmless error to allow the purchaser to state that he has prepared and filed plans and specifications as tending to show his willingness to carry out the agreement, especially when the principal has expressly admitted "that they were able to buy the property, and willing to do it." Landberger v. Murray, 6 Misc. 605.

Yet, in a case in which the proposed purchaser called upon the principal and offered the price named by the broker, provided the principal would accept a certain amount in cash, and take the balance in mortgage payable in a certain number of years, which offer the principal refused, the broker's claim for commissions was disallowed as there was no acceptance or performance. Forrester v. Price, 6 Misc. 308, 309.

X. Broker's presence at sale by principal.

In the absence of a contract to the contrary, the general rule is that if the broker is merely to find or procure a purchaser, it is not necessary that he should be present at the time the negotiations are entered into with the purchaser, or be an active participator in the instrument of sale, provided he can show that the same was effected through his agency, and that the parties were brought together and the sale resulted from his acts as its procuring cause.

The above rule is supported by the following authorities: Henderson v. Vincent, 84 Ala. 99; Driesback v. Rollins, 39 Kan. 268; Hambleton v. Fort (Neb.), 78 N. W. 498; Lloyd v. Matthews, 51 N. Y. 124; Arnold v. Wood, 13 N. Y. Week. Dig. 302; Bickart v. Hoffman, 46 N. Y. S. R. 886; McKnight v. Thayer, 48 N. Y. S. R. 620, 622; Glentworth v. Luther, 21 Barb. 147; Baker v. Thomas, 12 Misc. 432, 433, Reversing on other Grounds 11 Misc. 112, 113; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co. 83 N. Y. 381, 22 Am. Rep. 441; Wyckoff v. Bissell, 24 App. Div. 66, 67; Roush v. Loeffler, 3 Ohio Dec. 628, 629; Douville v. Comstock, 110 Mich. 698, 701; Kelso v. Woodruff, 88 Mich. 303; Wylie v. Marine Nat. Bank, 61 N. Y. 415; Sussdroff v. Schmidt, 55 N. Y. 819; Dreyer v. Rauch, 42 How. Pr. 22; Crevier v. Stephen, 40 Minn. 288.

And it is not absolutely necessary that the broker should have knowledge of the sale made by his principal to the purchaser found by him, at the time of the sale, provided such purchaser is procured by him. McKnight v. Thayer, 48 N. Y. S. R. 620, 622.

XI. Ratification of broker's acts.

In some cases the liability of the principal for commissions has turned upon the question whether the performance of the broker's contract when not strictly within the terms thereof has been ratified by the principal, and has thus become a perfect performance of the contract.

It is a general rule that if a sale is not authorized in the first instance, there can be no recovery of commissions, unless it is ratified by the principal. Forj v. Brown, 120 Cal. 551; Stillman v. Fitzgerald, 37 Minn. 186.

So, if a real-estate broker exhausts his authority, and his acts are not ratified by his principal, the latter is not bound thereby, and the broker is not entitled to his commissions. Harwood v. Triplett, 34 Mo. App. 278, 278.

The unauthorized acts of an agent done on behalf of his principal may be ratified in any manner which expresses the principal's assent thereto, and it is not necessary that such ratification should be in writing. Goss v. Stevens, 32 Minn. 472, 474; Brown v. Eaton, 21 Minn. 409, 410; Smith v. Schiele, 93 Cal. 144, 149.

And a ratification of the broker's act, where the original employment is wanting, may in some circumstances be equivalent to an original retainer, but only when there is a plain intent to ratify. Little Rock v. Barton, 33 Ark. 436, 444; Fierce v. Thomas, 4 E. D. Smith, 354, 355.

But an alleged principal is not bound by an approval of an act already done, made under a misapprehension of the real nature of the facts, as to constitute a ratification the principal must be acquainted with that which has actually been done. Dean v. Bassett, 57 Cal. 640.

And the ratification must be with full knowledge of all the material facts, and if such facts be either suppressed or unknown the ratification is treated as invalid because founded in mistake or fraud. Halsey v. Monteiro, 92 Va. 581, 583; Owings v. Hull, 9 Pet. 307, 9 L. ed. 246; Merrill v. Lathan, 8 Colo. App. 263; Copeland v. Stoneham Tannery Co. 142 Pa. 446; Ford v. Brown, 120 Cal. 551.

It must be shown that the principal was aware of the terms of the sale in order for him to be able to ratify it, and the mere fact that certain letters show that he knew of a sale is not sufficient to prove knowledge of the particular conditions upon which the sale was made. Maze v. Gordon, 96 Cal. 61.

And this is so for the reason that in order to make a valid ratification the principal must not have labored under a mistake or a misapprehension of the real nature of the facts, or have had reasonable grounds for such mistake or misapprehension. Halsey v. Monteiro, 92 Va. 581, 583.

By ratifying the contract made by the broker with an intending purchaser, and accepting such purchaser upon the terms mentioned in such contract, the principal waives any objection that he might take upon the ground of the broker exceeding his authority. Smith v. Schiele, 93 Cal. 144, 149.

The failure of the principal to specifically object to the unauthorized terms of a sale made by a broker is not sufficient to entitle the broker to commissions. Smith v. Keeler, 51 Ill. App. 267, 268.

And a broker who is authorized to sell real estate will be entitled to his commissions on negotiating an exchange of the property, where his acts are not disavowed from, but are adopted by his principal. Redfield v. Tegg, 38 N. Y. 212.

Yet, it is only by an assent to the sale as made by the broker, or by availing himself of what the broker has done, that the principal can become liable to pay commissions. Smith v. Keeler, 51 Ill. App. 267, 268.

And if the broker negotiates a contract different from that prescribed by the principal, and the latter ratifies it, and the contract as finally made is satisfactory to the principal, the broker's claim is complete. Gilder v. Davis, 137 N. Y. 504, 20 L. R. A. 398. To the same effect Keys v. Johnson, 69 Pa. 42, 43; Glentworth v. Luther, 1 Barb. 145.

And if he deviates from the original price and terms, and consents to a modification thereof, and concludes a sale with the person procured by the broker, he ratifies the broker's departure from his instructions, and is liable for commissions. Jones v. Henry, 15 Misc. 151; Levy v. Coogan, 16 Daly, 137; Gold v. Serrell, 6 Misc. 124; Goss v. Stevens, 32 Minn. 472, 473.

So, if after a purchaser is introduced by the broker the principal negotiates with such purchaser and deviates from the terms given by him to his broker, and consents to a sale upon modified terms with the same purchaser, he ratifies the broker's acts, and cannot escape liability for commissions. Levy v. Coogan, 16 Daly, 137.

The ratification by the principal of the unauthorized sale made by a broker will relate back to the acts of the agent or broker, and be equivalent to a prior authority. Goss v. Stevens, 32 Minn. 472, 474; Stewart v. Mather, 32 Wis. 344; Nesbitt v. Helser, 49 Mo. 383.

And in case of a ratification the substituted terms become a part of the original agreement, and can be enforced as such, and the compensation will be measured thereunder. Gelatt v. Ridge, 117 Mo. 563; Woods v. Stephens, 46 Mo. 556; Nesbitt v. Helser, 49 Mo. 383.

And, even if the sale is not made in strict conformity to the original contract, although it may be more advantageous to the principal, still if ratified and approved by the principal, such fact will be equivalent to a prior authority to act, and will be equal to finding that the broker completed his part of the contract. Nesolt v. Helser, 49 Mo. 383.

It is a general rule, founded on common sense and justice, that the law will imply both a request and promise by a principal, who, knowing all the facts, stands by consenting when it is his duty to object to services rendered for his benefit by his agent or broker; but that, in order to create liabilities, in the absence of an express request and promise to pay, the relation of the parties and circumstances under which the services are rendered must be such as to show, not only the services for the benefit of the persons receiving them, but that he knew, or had reasonable grounds to believe the person rendering them expects to be paid therefor. Viley v. Pettit, 36 Ky. 576.

A deed executed by the principal to the purchaser, after the commencement of the suit by a real-estate broker to recover commissions, is good evidence to show a ratification by the principal of the broker's acts. Gelatt v. Eidge, 117 Mo. 553.

The acts of the members of a copartnership in the case of an option to a broker to dispose of real estate, and a sale in accordance therewith upon a consideration satisfactory to the parties as evidenced by their accepting notes and collecting them when due, amount to a ratification of the transaction as entered into by him, the broker. Copp v. Longstreet, 5 Colo. App. 282.

So, the act of the principal, who knew that a written contract of sale had been given the purchaser, in receiving his check in part payment, and retaining the same for about ten days, expressing satisfaction with the sale, until he discovered that he could not buy out a lease that was upon the premises, and that the land had advanced in value, when he returned the check, and sought to avoid the sale, will amount to a ratification of the contract which otherwise was invalid, as the purchaser was ready, able, and willing to pay the price agreed. Lawson v. Thompson, 10 Utah, 462.

In Markham v. Washburn, 45 N. Y. S. R. 683, it was conceded that the sale was made through the broker's instrumentality but the defendants denied the authority of their attorney to employ the broker, and to bind them by an agreement to pay commissions, but as the evidence showed a ratification of the broker's acts the court allowed him compensation for his services,—especially as the intention to ratify their attorney's acts was unequivocally manifested, and was apparent by a promise made by one of the defendants to pay a sum which the attorney had agreed should be paid the broker for his services.

But an authority to sell for $900 in cash, and $1,000 payable in one year, is not complied with by a sale for $100 in cash, $800 in thirty days, and $1,000 in one year, where the sale is repudiated by his principal, as different from that which the broker was authorized to make. Harwood v. Triplett, 34 Mo. App. 273, 278.

And a contract by which a certain amount is to be paid within a given number of days, the balance to be secured by a deed of trust and note, is not a performance of an authority to make a sale upon specific terms of so much cash down, and the balance to be secured upon mortgage for a certain number of years with interest at a given per cent,—especially where the purchaser refuses to carry out such contract, and the principal has not ratified his broker's acts. Hoyt v. Shepherd, 70 Ill. 309, 311.

So, the ratification of a contract to pay commissions upon a sale at a specified sum, or any less sum to be fixed by the principal within a certain time upon his being paid a certain amount of the purchase price when the property is sold, or a purchaser found, under which a purchaser is found at a given sum, is not shown where the principal is informed by the broker that the sale is for a less sum, and so induces her to take a still less sum as net for the purchase money, as the supposed ratification of the sale is made in the absence of material information, and after the time specified in the original contract between the principal and the broker. Ford v. Brown, 120 Cal. 551.

But the conduct of the parties to an exchange may be such as will justify the jury in believing that the exchange of the deeds is an approval of the land received by his principal from the party found by the broker and an actual transfer of the property of both parties, although there may be a conflict in the evidence as to whether or not the principal's contract with the other party was subject to a condition. Quitzow v. Perrin, 120 Cal. 255.

And evidence which shows that the broker failed to procure a valid written contract with the purchaser or to produce him to the principal, and that at the time the principal was notified of the sale the broker offered to bring the purchaser to him for the purpose of reducing the contract to writing, which the principal said was not necessary as he knew the purchaser, such acts will prove a waiver by the principal of the requirements imposed by law upon the broker, and entitle the broker to his commissions as upon a performance of the contract. Gerhart v. Peck, 42 Mo. App. 644, 651; Following Hayden v. Grillo, 35 Mo. App. 647.

XII. Position of purchaser found.

It may be asserted, in connection with the question of the broker's performance of his contract with his principal that the general rule as to the position of the purchaser found by the broker is that the purchaser produced must be of sufficient financial responsibility. Birmingham Land & Loan Co. v. Thompson, 86 Ala. 146, 149; Sayre v. Wilson, 86 Ala. 151, 156; Phelan v. Gardner, 43 Cal. 300; Waterman v. Bothinghouse, 82 Cal. 650; Dolan v. Scanlan, 57 Cal. 261; Anderson v. Smythe, 1 Colo. App. 253; Lawrence v. Weir, 3 Colo. App. 401; Buckingham v. Harris, 10 Colo. 455; Finnerty v. Fritz, 5 Colo. 174; Smith v. Fairchild, 7 Colo. 510; Owl v. Canon Gypsum Co. v. Ferguson, 2 Colo. App. 219, 221; Carson v. Baker, 2 Colo. App. 248; Hildebrand v. Lillis, 10 Colo. App. 522; Schmidt v. Keeler, 63 Ill. App. 487, 489; Swigart v. Hawley, 40 Ill. App. 610, 611; Wilson v. Mason, 158 Ill. 304; Foster v. Wynn, 51 Ill. App. 401, 402; Carter v. Webster, 79 Ill. 435; McConaughy v. Mahannah, 28 Ill. App. 169; Adams v. Decker, 34 Ill. App. 17; Monroe v. Snow, 131 Ill. 126, 130; Pratt v. Hotchkiss, 10 Ill. App. 603; Lawrence v. Atwood, 1 Ill. App. 222; Sievers v. Griffin, 14 Ill. App. 63, 66; Beardon v. Washburn, 59 Ill. App. 161; Barnett v. Gluting, 3 Ind. App. 415; Vinton v. Baldwin, 88 Ind. 104, 45 Am. Rep. 447, 448; Learned v. McCoy, 4 Ind. App. 238; Cox v. Haun, 127 Ind. 325; Fischer v. Bell, 61 Ind. 248; Love v. Miller, 58 Ind. 204, 21 Am. Rep. 192; Greusel v. Dean, 98 Iowa, 405, 407; Cassady v. Seeley, 69 Iowa, 509, 510; Garcelon v. Tibbetts, 84 Me. 148; Jones v. Adler, 84 Md. 440; Kimberly v. Henderson, 29 Md. 512; Melvin v. Aldridge, 81 Md. 650; Rupp v. Sampson, 18 Gray, 398, 77 Am. Dec. 416; Scribner v. Hazeltine, 79 Mich. 370, 371; Cremer v. Miller, 56 Minn. 52; Cullen v. Bell, 43 Minn. 226, 227; Hamilin v. Schulte, 34 Minn. 534; Armstrong v. Wann, 29 Minn. 126; Francis v. Baker, 45 Minn. 83; Grosse v. Conley, 43 Minn. 188; Putnam v. How, 39 Minn. 363; Baars v. Hyland, 65 Minn. 150; Flower v. Davidson, 44 Minn. 46; Gauthier v. West, 45 Minn. 102, 103; Cartheart v. Bacon, 47 Minn. 34; Zeldler v. Walker, 41 Mo. App. 118, 121; Smith v. Smith, 1 Sweeney, 552; Donohue v. Flanagan, 28 N. Y. S. R. 757; Moses v. Bierling, 31 N. Y. 462; Mooney v. Elder, 56 N. Y. 236; Barnard v. Monnot, 3 Keyes, 203; Lynch v. McKenna, 58 How. Pr. 42; Stillman v. Mitchell, 2 Robt. 523, 537; Holly v. Gosling, 3 E. D. Smith, 262; Chilton v. Butler, 1 E. D. Smith, 150; Doty v. Miller, 43 Barb. 529; Glentworth v. Luther, 21 Barb. 145; Gilder v. Davis, 137 N. Y. 504, 20 L. R. A. 398; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co., 83 N. Y. 378, 22 Am. Rep. 41; Condict v. Cowdrey, 46 N. Y. S. R. 896; Duclos v.

Cunningham, 102 N. Y. 678; Diamond v. Hartley, 38 App. Div. 87; Levy v. Ruff, 4 Misc. 180; Mullenhoff v. Gensler, 39 N. Y. S. R. 441, 443; Hay v. Platt, 66 Hun. 488, 490; Felner v. Kobre, 18 Misc. 499, 500; Moses v. Helmke, 18 Misc. 357; Kailey v. Baker, 132 N. Y. 1; Fisk v. Henarie, 13 Or. 156, 161; Kock v. Emmerling, 22 How. 69, 16 L. ed. 292.

Under a contract to produce a purchaser, the broker is bound to show the performance of the contract of sale by the production of a contracting party capable of performing the contract. Phelan v. Gardner, 43 Cal. 300, 311; Davis v. Gassette, 30 Ill. App. 41; Metzen v. Wyatt, 41 Ill. App. 487; Iselin v. Griffith, 62 Iowa, 668, 670; Coleman v. Meade, 13 Bush, 358, 363; Kimberly v. Henderson, 29 Md. 512, 515; Keener v. Harrod, 2 Md. 63; Nesbitt v. Helser, 49 Mo. 383, 385; Hayden v. Grillo, 26 Mo. App. 289, 293, 35 Mo. App. 647, 42 Mo. App. 1; McGavock v. Woodlief, 20 How. 221, 227, 15 L. ed. 884, 886; Kock v. Emmerling, 22 How. 69, 16 L. ed. 292.

So, the purchaser produced must be solvent. Felner v. Kobre, 13 Misc. 499, 500; Christensen v. Wooley, 41 Mo. App. 53; Carpenter v. Rynders, 52 Mo. 278; Bailey v. Chapman, 41 Mo. 536; Love v. Owens, 31 Mo. App. 501; Gaty v. Foster, 18 Mo. App. 639; Nesbitt v. Helser, 49 Mo. 383; Hayden v. Grillo, 26 Mo. App. 289, 293.

The party found by the broker must be one capable of becoming the purchaser. Kimberly v. Henderson, 29 Md. 512, 515; Keener v. Harrod, 2 Md. 63, 56 Am. Dec. 708; McGavock v. Woodlief, 20 How. 221, 15 L. ed. 884.

He must possess the ability, and be in a condition to purchase. Iselin v. Griffith, 62 Iowa, 668, 670.

He must be one who is ready to buy. Knapp v. Wallace, 41 N. Y. 477.

So, the purchaser must be eligible. Coleman v. Meade, 13 Bush, 358, 360; Buckingham v. Harris, 10 Colo. 455; Finnerty v. Fritz, 5 Colo. 174; Smith v. Fairchild, 7 Colo. 510.

The purchaser must be satisfactory to the principal. Glenworth v. Luther, 21 Barb. 145; O'Connor v. Semple, 57 Wis. 243; Sayre v. Wilson, 86 Ala. 151, 156.

He must be one who is able to complete the sale. Greusel v. Dean, 98 Iowa, 405, 407; Wilson v. Mason, 158 Ill. 304.

The purchaser must be acceptable to the principal. Donohue v. Flanagan, 28 N. Y. S. R. 757; Anderson v. Smythe, 1 Colo. App. 253; Francis v. Baker, 45 Minn. 83, 84.

The purchaser must be one who will comply with the conditions fixed by his principal for the property proposed to be sold. Henderson v. Vincent, 84 Ala. 99; Buckingham v. Harris, 10 Colo. 455; Finnerty v. Fritz, 5 Colo. 174; Smith v. Fairchild, 7 Colo. 510.

The person produced must be a qualified purchaser. McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 1 S. D. 497.

The purchaser must be able specifically to perform the contract, or to answer in damages in case of failure. Hayden v. Grillo, 35 Mo. App. 647, 654; Chipley v. Leathe, 60 Mo. App. 15; Wright v. Brown, 68 Mo. App. 577.

If the broker produces a party who in binding form offers to purchase upon the principal's terms he has found a purchaser within the meaning of the agreement. Greene v. Hollingshead, 40 Ill. App. 195, 197.

And such position must exist even with respect to the time of performance of the contract by the purchaser found by the broker. Mullenhoff v. Gensler, 39 N. Y. S. R. 441; Watson v. Brooks, 11 Or. 271, 273.

In Levy v. Kottman, 8 Misc. 504, the plaintiff 44 L. R. A.

proved the finding of a purchaser on the defendant's terms who was willing to purchase, paid a certain amount of the purchase price, and was able to carry out the contract. The broker was therefore allowed his commissions.

And under a contract promising a broker a certain commission if he could get a certain price for the property, it was only necessary for him to show that he found a purchaser ready and willing to purchase upon the terms of the authorization. Martin v. Ede, 103 Cal. 157.

The financial position of the purchaser may become a question of fact for the jury upon the consideration of the question whether or not the broker has fulfilled his agreement so as to entitle him to commission, where the principal's terms are "ready cash" and are accepted by the purchaser who is afterwards unable to meet the same. Lemon v. Lloyd, 46 Mo. App. 452, 456. In that case, however, the undisputed evidence showed the purchaser to be a man of considerable means, abundantly able to pay ready cash as soon as the principal performed the condition precedent required of him by the contract, and that he was accepted by the principal.

The above doctrine is well exemplified by the case of Butle v. Baker, 17 R. I. 582, in which the question was whether it is enough to entitle a broker to his commission that he has produced a person as a purchaser, who is ready and willing to purchase upon the seller's terms, and that a contract has been entered into to that effect between the seller and the person produced, or whether it must also appear that the person produced is of sufficient pecuniary ability to make the purchase. The court stated that the production of a person as a purchaser is an implied representation by the broker to his principal that the party is able financially, as well as ready and willing, to purchase, especially where the case does not show that the principal has any previous knowledge of the purchaser, or exercised any independent judgment of his own concerning his ability to purchase and more so where in signing the receipt and thereby accepting the purchaser he relies, as he has a right to do, upon the implied representations arising out of the broker's duty under his contract. In this case it was contended that the signing of a receipt was a sufficient acceptance of the purchaser without reference to his financial ability.

The above case sustains the principles adopted by the court in Iselin v. Griffin, 62 Iowa, 668, 670, in which it is said: "Something more than a mere offer to purchase should be shown, such an offer might be made by one without means, or in any condition to comply with the terms of the same. An offer from such a one ought not to be considered as constituting the performance of the plaintiff's undertaking to negotiate a sale of land." It is also borne out by McGavock v. Woodlief, 20 How. 221, 15 L. ed. 884; Barnard v. Mounot, 3 Keyes, 203, 33 How. Pr. 440, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 108; Simonsen v. Kissick, 4 Daly, 143; Duclos v. Cunningham, 102 N. Y. 678; Kimberly v. Henderson, 29 Md. 512; Sievers v. Griffin, 14 Ill. App. 63; Leahy v. Hair, 33 Ill. App. 461; Zeldier v. Walker, 41 Mo. App. 118; McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 1 S. D. 497.

This ruling is based upon the theory that the broker's duty to his principal requires him to give to the latter such knowledge as he possesses in relation to the purchaser's financial responsibility, or, if he has no such knowledge, to at least so notify his principal, before the principal enters into the contract of sale with the purchaser, in order that he may have an opportunity to investigate the matter for himself. Butler v. Baker, 17 R. I. 582.

In order to entitle the broker to claim commissions it is enough that the purchaser is the customer of the broker, and it is not absolutely essential that such fact should be known to the principal at the time, provided it absolutely exists as a fact. Lloyd v. Matthews, 51 N. Y. 124.

Yet, to be a producer the party presented must be a client or customer of the broker producing him, and not one then sustaining that relation to another broker under the same employment. Tinsley v. Scott, 69 Ill. App. 352.

It is not necessary, however, that the purchaser should have been previously known to the broker. Gemunder v. Hauser, 6 Misc. 210, 214; Lloyd v. Matthews, 51 N. Y. 124, 133.

And the mere fact that the purchaser produced and procured by the broker was himself acting on behalf of another will not affect the agent's right to commissions where such a party is ready, willing, and able to buy upon the terms prescribed by the principal. Gelatt v. Ridge, 117 Mo. 553.

The evidence, however, must show that the broker procured a buyer who was willing to enter into a definite contract to purchase the land, or was able to complete the purchase. Hammond v. Mitchell, 61 Ill. App. 144, 147.

So, an unqualified acceptance by the purchaser of the terms of sale which the broker was authorized to make by his principal must also be proved. Hannan v. Fisher, 82 Mich. 208, 213.

And the burden of proof unquestionably is upon the broker to prove the performance of the contract by showing that the purchaser whom he produced is not only ready, but also in a condition, to perform the contract on his part or to respond in damages for failing so to do, and if this is not shown the broker cannot recover. Hayden v. Grillo, 26 Mo. App. 289, 293; Zeldier v. Walker, 41 Mo. App. 118, 11; Cook v. Forst, 116 Ala. 395; Railly v. Smith, 103 Ala. 643; Piant v. Thompson, 42 Kan. 664; Walker v. Osgood, 98 Mass. 348, 93 Am. Dec. 168; Hammond v. Mitchell, 61 Ill. App. 144, 147; Leahy v. Hair, 33 Ill. App. 461; Rees v. Spruance, 45 Ill. 808, 310; Iselin v. Griffith, 62 Iowa, 668, 670; Newton v. Ritchie, 75 Iowa, 91, 93; Dent v. Powell, 80 Iowa, 456; Francis v. Eddy, 49 Minn. 447; Satterthwaite v. Vreeland, 8 Hun. 162; Kirwin v. Barney, 27 Misc. 181; Gilder v. Davis, 187 N. Y. 504, 20 L. R. A. 398.

And it rests upon him to establish the fact that he has procured for his principal a valid contract under which the principal can compel performance, and that this naturally implied that the person with whom the principal contracts is one who is able to perform, as his recovery must be secundum allegata et probata. Norman v. Reuther, 25 Misc. 161, 163.

And this upon the ground that it is a part of his undertaking to produce a person of sufficient financial ability. Iselin v. Griffith, 62 Iowa, 668; Coleman v. Meade, 13 Bush, 358; Pratt v. Hotchkiss, 10 Ill. App. 603; Leahy v. Hair, 33 Ill. App. 461; Zeldier v. Walker, 41 Mo. App. 118; Wright v. Brown, 68 Mo. App. 577.

The same principles apply in cases where the contract between the broker and the purchaser is verbal and incapable of being legally performed because it is obnoxious to the statute of frauds and perjuries. Hutten v. Renner, 74 Ill. App. 124; Wilson v. Mason, 158 Ill. 304.

Under an agreement that if the sale goes through and the broker gets the parties then in negotiation to give a certain price, he is to have a certain commission, it is not enough to entitle him to recover that he procures a purchaser who is accepted by the principals with whom they make a verbal agreement for the sale of the land, as the purchaser must not only be accepted and agree to purchase, but must also carry out the agreement unless prevented by the fault of the principal. Pumly v. Head, 33 Ill. App. 134.

And this is said to rest upon the theory that the pecuniary responsibility of the purchaser was or ought to have been known to the broker. Iselin v. Griffith, 62 Iowa, 668, 670, in which case the broker found a purchaser, but his principal had sold the land and was therefore unable to make a conveyance.

And the broker must show, not only that the proposed purchaser was willing to accept the offer, but also that he was ready, and able, on his part to perform all the terms of the purchase, even in a case in which the principal rejects the purchaser introduced by the broker. Pratt v. Hotchkiss, 10 Ill. App. 603; Wilson v. Mason, 158 Ill. 304.

If the broker produces no evidence even tending to show that his proposed purchaser is financially able to make the purchase he cannot recover. Zeldier v. Walker, 41 Mo. App. 118, 121.

And a statement made by the purchaser to the principal, naming persons from whom he might inquire as to his financial standing, is not sufficient to prove that the broker has produced a person of sufficient financial ability to make the purchase where it is the only evidence thereof. Ibid.

Again, evidence which merely shows that the proposed purchaser orally agreed to buy, without proof of his ability to do so, is not sufficient to entitle the broker to recover. Schmidt v. Keeler, 63 Ill. App. 487, 489.

So, the mere fact that neither the readiness nor the ability of the purchaser to buy was disputed at the time, is not sufficient to bind the principal for the payment of commissions, especially where, by his pleading, the principal has denied every element of the broker's case, and there is no evidence that either the readiness or ability of the purchaser was ever admitted. Ibid.

And in such cases it is proper to ask the purchaser questions as to his state of mind, after he left the broker's office, concerning the purchase of the property. McGuire v. Carlson, 61 Ill. App. 295, 297; Mansell v. Clements, L. R. 9 C. P. 139.

Thus, evidence by the purchaser that when he left the broker his mind was not to purchase the property, and that he did not see him again, that he was in a quandary whether to purchase or rent, but practically abandoned the idea of purchasing, and such was the only interview or communication the broker had with such purchaser, is not sufficient to prove that the purchaser was ready and willing to purchase, nor is it strong enough to prove that such purchaser would have purchased had no further effort to sell to him been made by anyone. McGuire v. Carlson, 61 Ill. App. 295.

But where the purchaser testifies that he is ready to carry out the contract, the word "ready" implies that he is able, and willing to do so, especially where no question is made about it in the court below. Smith v. Keeler, 51 Ill. App. 267, 268; Crouse v. Rhodes, 50 Ill. App. 121; Morton v. Lamb, 7 T. R. 125; Rawson v. Johnson, 1 East, 203.

The purchaser may state that he was prepared, and filed plans and specifications, as such facts show a willingness to carry out the agreement,—especially when the principal has admitted that he was able to buy the property and willing to do so. Landsberger v. Murray, 6 Misc. 605.

Where time is made the essence of a contract the broker must procure the contract with the purchaser within such time, and he cannot set up the fact that the purchaser would have completed the bargain if he had had a reasonable time for the examination of the title, as such a condition cannot be implied where the limit is definitely fixed by the term of the contract. Watson v. Brooks, 11 Or. 271, 273.

And where, upon the last day of the period limited for the payment of the residue of the purchase money by the purchaser and the delivery of the deed by the principal, the purchaser was not prepared to pay and take the deed, and asked for additional time in which to obtain the money, and the principal held himself in readiness to complete the sale on his part for four weeks thereafter, but the purchaser did not obtain the money and consummate the sale, the broker's claim for commissions was disallowed as he had not found a purchaser of sufficient pecuniary ability to consummate the sale. Butler v. Baker, 17 R. I. 582.

The same principle was involved in the case of Mullenhoff v. Gensler, 39 N. Y. S. R. 441, where the evidence showed that the principal's offer was to sell if the purchaser produced was ready to pay cash "the next morning," the purchaser found requiring thirty days in which to complete the sale, as the evidence was not sufficient to prove the performance of the contract by the production of a purchaser able to close the trade without delay.

In an action to recover money received by a broker on behalf of his principal, in which the broker made a counterclaim for commissions, evidence was admitted in the court below on behalf of the broker to show transactions and payments made by the purchaser at the time the contract of sale was made, for the purpose of establishing his ability to perform the contract, but upon appeal upon the ground that such evidence was wrongfully admitted, the court did not agree upon its admissibility, and therefore did not rule on the point, as the case was reversed upon another ground. Dent v. Powell, 80 Iowa, 456.

A complaint which fails to aver that the purchaser alleged to have been found by the brokers was ready, able and willing to carry out the alleged sale, or to aver facts showing a waiver by the principal of these requisites, is defective, and a demurrer based on those grounds will be sustained. Sayre v. Wilson, 86 Ala. 151.

And the question of the acceptance by the purchaser in a case where the evidence shows that the broker procured a purchaser, and, inter alia, that on the morning of the day definitely fixed as the limit such purchaser informed the broker that he would take the property, but wished the principal would take a mortgage on account of the purchase money, when the principal declared that such request let him out, and he would not sell, and persisted in his refusal, although the purchaser was willing to take the property anyhow and pay for it, and insisted upon the purchase and declared his willingness and readiness to pay as soon as the papers were prepared, is properly left to the jury, and it is for them to say whether the acceptance is conditional or absolute so as to constitute the finding of a purchaser ready, able, and willing to perform the contract. Clendenon v. Pancoast, 75 Pa. 218.

Other cases hold, however, that the burden of proving the financial ability of the purchaser is on the principal, on the ground that it is to be presumed, unless the contrary appears, that the person procured as a purchaser is solvent, 44 L. R. A.

and pecuniarily able to make the purchase. Among these cases will be found Goss v. Broom, 31 Minn. 494; Hart v. Hoffman, 44 How. Pr. 168; Simonson v. Kissick, 4 Daly, 143; Cook v. Kroemeke, 4 Daly, 268; Buckingham v. Harris, 10 Colo. 455; Grosse v. Cooley, 43 Minn. 188; Crevier v. Stephen, 40 Minn. 288.

In McFarland v. Lillard, 2 Ind. App. 160, 166, it is said that it is not always necessary for the broker to allege and prove the financial condition of the purchaser, as the same will often be presumed.

In most of these cases, however, the decisions are based upon the particular facts and circumstances therein shown, which may be taken as sufficient to relieve or shift the burden of proof from the broker to the principal.

In the case of Hart v. Hoffman, 44 How. Pr. 168, it was held that it was not necessary for the broker to prove that the party produced as a purchaser had the pecuniary ability to conclude the trade, as the purchaser upon being presented to the principal stated that he was ready to buy, and without making any inquiries or objection, the owner absolutely refused to sell, and under such circumstances no proof was offered or called on the subject, and it was presumed that the purchaser was able to close the sale. This case, however, must not be taken as intending to qualify the rule that the broker must produce a purchaser "of sufficient ability," as the broker's case, which involved the necessity of showing the production of a purchaser of pecuniary ability, was made out by a presumption of law in the place of testimony.

And a distinction may be drawn in the case of Mullenhoff v. Gensler, 39 N. Y. S. R. 441, in which the burden of proof was cast upon the broker, and the above case of Hart v. Hoffman, as the purchaser procured by the broker in the former case was not in a financial position to carry out the contract according to the terms given by the principal to the broker.

It may also be stated that in the case of Hart v. Hoffman, 44 How. Pr. 168, the point was not taken on the trial in the court below, nor was there any proof of the purchaser's insolvency, and the solvency or insolvency of the purchaser had nothing to do with the prevention of the sale, and the testimony showed that the broker's right to commission was never disputed, but, on the other hand, was always conceded, and solvency was prima facie established. The court stated that solvency, not insolvency, was presumed in the absence of proof to the contrary.

If the principal seeks to avoid his liability for commissions, upon the ground that the purchaser is not in a financial position to complete the contract, he must plead it specially and assume the burden of proving it, as such financial ability will often be presumed, and this is especially so where the principal has accepted the offer. McFarland v. Lillard, 2 Ind. App. 160; Goss v. Broom, 31 Minn. 484; Cook v. Kroemeke, 4 Daly, 486; Hart v. Hoffman, 44 How. Pr. 168.

In the case of McFarland v. Lillard, 2 Ind. App. 160, 166, it was conclusively shown by a special verdict that the principal repudiated the sale, not on account of the purchaser's financial ability, but because the principal's wife was dissatisfied. He had moreover accepted the purchaser's offer.

In Cook v. Kroemeke, 4 Daly, 486, the broker introduced two parties willing to purchase, with one of whom the principal made an appointment to meet at the broker's office, which he failed to keep and refused to execute a contract and also to sell, and gave no evidence of reason for doing so. The court held that it was for the principal to prove that the persons introduced as purchasers were not able, pecuniarily, to pay the price they agreed, or were willing to contract to give, and that until that was shown they were each presumed to be solvent and able to pay what they expressed a readiness to pay.

So in Goss v. Broom, 31 Minn. 484, it was to be presumed that the purchaser was solvent, and able to perform the obligations assumed by him under the contract, as the conduct of the defendant, disregarding the contract made with the purchaser, did not seem to have been affected by any consideration as to the responsibility of the latter.

Willingness on the part of the proposed purchaser to carry out the contract is evidenced by his executing a binding contract to that effect, and paying the purchase money. Grosse v. Cooley, 43 Minn. 188.

And the presumption of the purchaser's ability is strongest in a case where he enters into a binding contract with the principal, in the absence of evidence to the contrary. Stewart v. Smith, 50 Neb. 631.

So, the fact that the party found by the broker to carry out an exchange executed a formal contract to convey carries with it the legal presumption that he is able to perform his undertaking, and therefore the onus of proving the title offered, to be defective, is thereby shifted upon the principal, as the presumption is that, where one is in possession of property and is shown to be the beneficial owner, every instrument has been executed, and everything has been done to render his title legal. Moskowitz v. Hornberger, 20 Misc. 558, 560, Affirming 19 Misc. 429.

And so long as the purchaser procured by the brokers in a case of an exchange has a good title, they earn their brokerage when they produce him to their principal, and he offers to make a binding contract for the exchange. Moskowitz v. Hornberger, 20 Misc. 558, 563, Affirming 19 Misc. 429.

And upon an exchange of property in which the principal sought to be relieved upon the ground that the broker had misrepresented the amount of taxes payable on the property to be taken in exchange, but the principal had the tax bills before him at the time of the negotiations, and examined, or might have examined, them at that time, had he chosen to do so, the question of the defendant's condition to pay such taxes is immaterial so far as the plaintiff's right to recover commissions is concerned. Mason v. Hinds, 47 N. Y. S. R. 163, 166.

And a tender of the purchase money on the part of the purchaser is not necessary in order to entitle the broker to his commissions, when the principal has refused to recognize the contract made by the broker, and has repudiated the same. Harwood v. Diemer, 41 Mo. App. 49.

The question of the necessity of the tender of the purchase money, and of the pecuniary responsibility of the purchaser, as supporting the broker's claim when the contract is not fulfilled owing to the principal's default, etc., will be found discussed in note to Brackenridge v. Claridge (Tex.) 43 L. R. A. 598.

XIII. Effect of purchaser's default.

An oral agreement on the part of the purchaser of land is not a valid and binding agreement, and if under such a contract the purchaser refuses to complete the sale of the land without fault upon the part of the principal there is no performance of the broker's contract. Smith v. Schiele, 98 Cal. 144, 149; Midleton v. Flindia, 25 Cal. 81; Blood v. Shannon, 29 Cal. 895; Phelan v. Gardner, 43 Cal. 311; Neilson v. Lee, 60 Cal. 555; Phelps v. Prusch, 83 Cal. 628; Wilson v. Mason, 158 Ill. 304; 44 L. R. A.

Whitney v. Cochran, 2 Ill. 209; Hamlin v. Schulte, 34 Minn. 534; Parmy v. Head, 33 Ill. App. 134, 136; Christensen v. Wooley, 41 Mo. App. 53; Yoder v. White, 75 Mo. App. 155; Parker v. Walker, 86 Tenn. 566, 569; Gilchrist v. Clarke, 86 Tenn. 583.

The inability of a party to an exchange to carry out the purchase by reason of a defective title according to the terms specified is a bar to the broker's recovery, as there is no performance of his contract. Slemasen v. Homan, 35 Neb. 802; Zittle v. Schlesinger, 46 Neb. 844; Emens v. St. John, 79 Hun, 99; Norman v. Reuther, 25 Misc. 161; Barber v. Hildebrand, 42 Neb. 400.

The broker's right may be defeated by the arbitrary refusal of the purchaser to comply with the terms, even though he might at one time express himself as able, ready, and willing to purchase. Hildebrand v. Lillis, 10 Colo. App. 522.

The failure of the purchaser to comply with the terms may be evidenced by his not keeping appointments, his departure from the state without notice, and without at any time manifesting any desire or offer to return, or to consummate the sale; and in such cases the broker cannot recover his commissions. Idid.

Where the principal stands ready to perform the contract and to enter into a contract on the conditions authorized, and the party produced by the broker refuses to conform thereto by entering into a binding obligation, the broker has failed to effect the purpose of his employment, and he has not found a purchaser ready and willing to take on the agreed terms, and the principal is not liable for commissions. Platt v. Kohler, 65 Hun, 557, 560; Feiner v. Kobre, 13 Misc. 499, 600.

Under a contract to pay the broker when the purchaser pays the principal a certain amount on account of the price, and executes notes and mortgages for the balance of the purchase money, where the purchaser gives the notes and mortgages, but does not pay the stipulated amount, either at the time of making the deed or upon the giving of the notes, the failure by the purchaser to pay the money bars any claim by the broker for commissions, although the principal may extend the time of payment and use all reasonable means to procure the money. McPhail v. Buell, 87 Cal. 115. In this case the principal was compelled to take back the property.

And if the purchaser is only willing to make an option contract, and prefers under such a contract to forfeit a small sum paid upon the execution of the contract, rather than accept the property, and the contract is thereby made null, the broker cannot recover his commission as if an actual sale had been made or agreed upon. Algier v. Carpenter Place Land Co. 51 Kan. 718.

And the failure of the purchaser to pay ready cash under a contract calling therefor is a proper element of fact for the consideration of the jury upon the question whether or not the broker has so completed his contract as to entitle him to commissions. Lemon v. Lloyd, 46 Mo. App. 452, 456.

And if the person produced is able to purchase only by resort to an unfaithful device the broker has not earned his commissions. Zittle v. Schlesinger, 46 Neb. 844.

So, if the principal insists upon something which he has a right to insist upon as a condition of sale, to which the vendee refuses to assent and in consequence an enforceable contract is not entered into, the broker has not procured a complete meeting of the minds of both parties. Bennett v. Egan, 3 Misc. 421, 423.

Where the purchaser, the broker, and principal met for the purpose of executing a deed and mortgage, but the purchaser refused to take the property unless a deduction in price was made, on the ground of a flaw in the measurement, which the principal refused to do, and returned the earnest money, the broker was not entitled to his commissions as the purchase was not completed owing to the fault of the purchaser, no valid excuse existing for his objection. Sloman v. Bodwell, 24 Neb. 790.

And where nothing was said relative to the kind of deed to be given, and the principal had a good title, but the purchaser refused to complete unless he had a warranty deed, which the principal refused, but offered a quitclaim deed in the usual form with special covenants, and the sale was not executed, the broker was not entitled to his commissions. Garcelon v. Tibbetta, 84 Me. 148.

If preliminary arrangements are made, and the parties agree upon the terms, and both parties are willing to take the property in exchange if the title to the land is valid, the right of the broker to his commissions depends upon the question of the title, and any defect therein warranting a refusal of the title will bar his recovery of commissions. Emens v. St. John, 79 Hun, 99.

And the mere fact that he obtains a party who signs a contract for the exchange or sale of property is not sufficient to support a claim for commissions, where the party so contracting has no interest in the property, which fact is known to the broker, and is not disclosed to his principal; and the fact that such party afterwards signed a contract for the purchase of the property to be given in exchange will not avail the broker. Norman v. Reuther, 25 Misc. 161.

Where there is a condition in the contract made by a broker with his principals on the exchange of land that a perfect title to land acquired must be shown by the abstract to be furnished for that purpose the party must be able to show the title the contract required, as in such a case the contract rested upon the title furnished by the abstracts. Barber v. Hildebrand, 42 Neb. 400.

And a broker is not entitled to recover his commissions in effecting an exchange where his principal has consented to take the property in exchange, and such assent is expressed in a memorandum signed by him, which calls for a formal contract upon a given date at a certain place, where the defendant attended at the agreed time and place, and was ready to execute such formal contract, but the other party did not appear, although the broker claimed that he had power to represent such party, and the defendant declined to consummate the exchange in his absence, in consequence of which the exchange fell through. Feiner v. Kobre, 13 Misc. 499.

But if the broker's right to commissions has already accrued, the fact that the parties have refused to carry out the contract will not affect his right to recover the same, where the purchaser found was of sufficient ability to carry out the transaction upon the terms stated. Seymour v. St. Luke's Hospital, 28 App. Div. 110, 122; Knapp v. Wallace, 41 N. Y. 479; Kalley v. Baker, 132 N. Y. 1.

So, if the principal and the purchaser are equally bound by a valid agreement for the sale and purchase of the property, the subsequent unwillingness to carry out the purchase on the purchaser's part cannot affect the validity of the agreement into which they have entered, and if the same has been brought about by the agent he has performed his undertaking. Parker v. Walker, 86 Tenn. 566, 570; Watson v. 44 L. R. A.

Brooks, 8 Sawy. 316, 319; Rice-Dwyer Real Estate Co. v. Ruhlman, 68 Mo. App. 503.

And the same is the case even though the contract is executory in form, and the principal refuses to complete performance thereof. Wilson v. Mason, 158 Ill. 304.

Upon the question of refusal of the principal to enforce performance of a valid contract, and the consequent release of the purchaser, see note to Brackenridge v. Claridge (Tex.) 43 L. R. A. 593.

And the broker's right to commissions in case of a valid written agreement for sale is not affected by the fact that the purchaser refuses to complete, on the ground that a lease contains certain covenants, as the contract of sale was mutually binding upon the parties. Rosenberg v. Smith, 25 Misc. 774.

If the broker is merely to find a purchaser, the fact that the terms of the contract between the principal and such purchaser include credit to be given the purchaser by the principal at his own risk will not of itself affect the broker's claim, on failure of the purchaser to pay or perform the contract accordingly. Greene v. Hollingshead, 40 Ill. App. 195, 197.

So, where a valid contract of sale is entered into between the principal and the purchaser, the broker's right to commissions is not defeated by reason of the default of such purchaser in making some of the payments on the property, and evidence tending to show such default is properly excluded in an action to recover such commissions. Coles v. Meade, 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 334, 335.

And the mere fact that, upon the purchaser's failure to make payments according to the terms of the contract, he is told by the defendant's attorney that "the matter is at an end" will not excuse the principal from liability for commissions where the plaintiff has effected a sale within the terms of his contract, and the defendant has kept the amount paid by the purchaser, and voluntarily given up the right to sue for the balance of the purchase money or to obtain a decree for specific performance upon a contract mutually binding between them. Ward v. Cobb, 148 Mass. 518.

The test, however, of the broker's right to recover commissions does not depend upon his procuring a contract that can be specifically enforced against the purchaser, but upon the question of his finding a purchaser able, ready, and willing to purchase upon the principal's terms. McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 1 S. D. 497.

Yet, the fact that the purchaser has declined to consummate the sale cannot be presumed, even though it may be conceded that he cannot be compelled to do so. Crevier v. Stephen, 40 Minn. 288.

The question of the effect of the principal's refusal or neglect to enforce a binding and enforceable contract against the purchaser will be found discussed in note to Brackenridge v. Claridge (Tex.) 43 L. R. A. 593, 1. f.

XIV. Failure of broker to report purchaser.

It would seem that in order to bind the principal upon a sale made by him to a purchaser found by the broker, the latter should notify the principal of the fact that the purchaser is a party whom he has found or procured.

The principal is entitled to know who the proposed purchaser is and with whom he is expected to enter into a contract, and so long as there is uncertainty as to the purchaser the broker cannot claim performance of his contract and demand his commissions. Gerding v. Has-kin, 141 N. Y. 514, 519.

Where there is no special authority all that the real-estate broker is justified in doing under his general authority is to find a purchaser, and notify his principal thereof, and he has no authority to conclude a sale in the first instance. Hamilton v. Cutts, 6 Mackey, 208, 219, 220; Ryon v. McGee, 2 Mackey, 17.

When the agent and the purchaser have come to an agreement as to terms and nothing remains to be done except to consummate the transaction, it is the duty of the agent to advise his principal what he has done, as it may be necessary to bring the parties together to complete the sale and effect the transfer. Williams v. Bishop, 11 Colo. App. 378.

If the broker has not the sole agency, there is an implied undertaking that he is to have his commission if the sale is made within a reasonable time and before his principal sells, and in such a case he must notify his principal of the purchaser found by him. Darrow v. Harlow, 21 Wis. 303, 94 Am. Dec. 541.

The broker's claim was refused where he had not the exclusive right to sell, and after he had found a purchaser, but before he had notified the owner thereof, the latter found and closed a sale with another purchaser. Baars v. Hyland, 65 Minn. 150.

And the same result followed in a case where the negotiations were had directly with the owner, who was ignorant of the fact that the purchaser had previously interviewed his agent, as the latter had not disclosed the fact. Sievers v. Griffin, 14 Ill. App. 63, 66.

But where the negotiations which were begun by the broker were concluded by the principal himself, and the broker's services brought about the sale and were the efficient cause thereof, although it was not shown that the purchaser had informed the principal of his previous negotiations with the broker, the broker recovered his commissions, as it was not essential that the prior negotiations should be made known. Graves v. Bains, 78 Tex. 92, 95.

If, however, the broker has made the sale and then the principal repudiates the agent or puts it out of his power to complete the sale by a previous sale, the agent need not produce a purchaser, as the presumption is that the broker has obtained a written contract or can produce the purchaser. Huggins v. Hearne, 74 Mo. App. 66, 87; Hayden v. Grillo, 35 Mo. App. 655.

If, however, the purchaser is not presented by the broker as a customer procured by him, and the principal does not accept the broker's services as the basis of subsequent negotiations, and does not voluntarily modify the terms previously given, and there is no evidence of bad faith or attempt to evade the principal's responsibility to the agent, the broker cannot recover upon a sale subsequently made by his principal. Cathcart v. Bacon, 47 Minn. 34.

And where the broker does not report his conversations and negotiations with the proposed purchaser of the property, and never brings his principal an offer for the property, his right to commission will be denied upon a sale made by the parties themselves some two years afterwards. Hay v. Platt, 66 Hun, 488; White v. Twitchings, 26 Hun, 503.

XV. Acts held sufficient performance.

In Scott v. Patterson, 53 Ark. 49, the sale was effected through the broker's introduction of a purchaser to the principal, and he was entitled to his commissions as upon a performance of the contract.

If the broker has obtained an optional contract sanctioned by his employer he should at least receive his commissions upon the sum paid and forfeited by the purchaser. Gilder v. Davis, 187 N. Y. 504, 20 L. R. A. 398.
44 L. R. A.

And if specific values are put upon separate properties, and a certain amount is paid in cash, such dealing constitutes a sale, and not an exchange, so that the broker can recover his commissions on a contract for a sale effected thereunder. Thornton v. Moody (Tex. Civ. App.) 24 S. W. 331.

The broker performs a contract to pay commissions for a purchaser at a specified price when the purchaser executes a written contract and pays earnest money, and the terms are satisfactory to the principal,—especially where the evidence does not show that such purchaser refused to carry out his bargain or was unable to do so. Grosse v. Cooley, 43 Minn. 188.

And the broker is entitled to his commissions in the absence of evidence showing some culpable act of his defeating his claim, where he obtains a purchaser, and the purchase price is agreed upon between the parties, and the broker draws up a contract at the principal's request which is executed by both parties, and the principal receives a sum on account of the purchase money. Brown v. Helmuth, 50 N. Y. S. R. 524.

In Dexter v. McClellan, 116 Ala. 37, compensation was allowed for services rendered by officers of a private corporation in procuring a sale to it of land, no fraud or other wrongful act being proved.

The broker was entitled to his commissions, which were a share of the profits, where he sold under an agreement that the net proceeds of the sale were to be divided between the principal and himself, and the broker procured a purchaser for the entire tract, who was accepted by the defendant, and satisfactory contracts were made. Coward v. Clanton, 122 Cal. 451.

And if the agreement between the principal and the broker does not prescribe how and when the consideration is to be paid, and the same is not cash, such fact will not defeat the claim of the agent for commission, where he has produced the purchaser to whom the sale is made for the price asked, upon terms acceptable and satisfactory to the principal. Dreisback v. Rollins, 30 Kan. 288.

The broker recovered commissions where the principal gave the broker a description of the property, mentioned the price he would take, and the commission for effecting the sale, and the intending purchaser got the description of the property and the price from the broker, and the purchase was made. Alexander v. Breeden, 14 B. Mon. 154.

If under a contract that the broker is to advertise the property for a year free of charge in case no sale is made, but if a sale is made within a year, either by means of such advertising or otherwise, he is to have a certain commission, the broker performs the contract on his part by advertising as agreed, and the principal disposes of the property within the time without any release by the broker, the broker is entitled to recover. Cook v. Blake, 98 Mich. 389.

In Hipple v. Laird, 189 Pa. 472, the broker's claim was allowed although the purchaser stopped payment of his check upon the principal's refusing to release him from the written agreement entered into between the parties, the principal admitting that the broker procured such purchaser who was at the time willing to proceed, and also the contract entered into.

In Hann v. Weber, 18 Misc. 746, the broker's evidence as to his employment, the procuring of a purchaser, and the principal's consent, was denied by the principal, but as the questions of fact were fairly submitted to the jury, and an error in the admission of certain deeds was cured by the judge's charge upon the principal's request, the court affirmed the plaintiff's judgment.

And commissions are earned in a case where one of several owners of real estate with authority to sell writes the broker requesting him to sell at a stated price, when such broker, without formally accepting the offer, effects a sale, the terms of which are accepted; and in such a case it is sufficient if the letter written to such broker contains a statement implying the terms of sale. Fisk v. Henarie, 13 Or. 156, 164.

Under an agreement for commissions on a sale of all lands sold by the brokers in a given county with the owner's knowledge, and also for commissions on all sales made to persons living in a certain town within such county on account of the broker's influence in the county, commissions are earned, and payable on a sale made to one living in such town, no matter whether the owner has knowledge that he is a customer of the broker or not, and it is immaterial that no time is fixed in the contract, as the same is fixed by presumption of law. Boyd v. Watson, 101 Iowa, 214.

The broker becomes entitled to his commissions under a power of attorney (irrevocable for fifteen days) to sell for a given sum in United States gold coin, upon a certain commission, under which he makes a sale but receives a check in payment, where his principal, without objecting to the mode of payment, refuses to consummate the sale upon the ground of a prior sale by himself, as the principal ought to object to the manner of payment at the time. Blood v. Shannon, 29 Cal. 393.

So, where the principal expressly agreed to pay the broker a specified sum as commissions, if the negotiations between himself and the purchaser found were finally completed, and a sale was finally consummated on terms agreed upon by the parties thereto, the broker recovered the stipulated commissions. Haug v. Haugan, 51 Minn. 558.

The broker was entitled to recover for services rendered, where the principal instructed him to secure an option at once, and before he went home, but fixed no limit, and the broker secured the option accordingly, and a certain person was treated by both parties as the owner, and there was nothing to show that he was not so, or that the principal ever raised an objection upon that ground at the trial. Giles v. Swift, 170 Mass. 461, 462.

If under an agreement that if the broker finds a party to trade for certain land the principal will pay him a certain amount, the broker becomes entitled to his commissions, when he introduces a person with whom his principal makes a written agreement for the sale of the property, upon the execution of such agreement, even though the sale is never completed. Pearson v. Mason, 120 Mass. 53, 58.

The broker also recovered his commissions under a parol agreement that in case he found a market at an aggregate price of not less than a given sum the principal would sell the land for that price, and pay the broker for his services, one half of the excess which he could procure to be given over and above the said aggregate sum, where the broker found a purchaser at a greater price, although the principal refused to convey to the party so found, as he had sufficiently performed the contract to entitle him to recover. Hague v. O'Conner, 41 How. Pr. 287.

And where the broker found a purchaser willing, and ready, and in a situation to take the property on his principal's terms, but the latter had made a sale through another agent, the broker's acts amounted to complete performance 44 L. R. A.

of the contract, as no written contract binding his principal was called for by an authority to find a purchaser who would purchase at a price satisfactory to his principal. Fox v. Rouse, 47 Mich. 558.

Under a contract for commissions if his efforts brought purchasers directly to his principal, the broker became entitled upon evidence showing that he brought the attention of the purchasers to the property who examined the title, and that he urged the sale, and was the cause of his application to the owner, there being no evidence to show that the agreement had expired by its terms or by notice of revocation before the sale was made to such purchaser. Heffner v. Chambers, 121 Pa. 84.

Where the sale or exchange is to be subject to the approval of the principal the broker must show that the contract of sale made by him had the approval of the principal, and an instruction to the jury that if they found from the evidence that the principal agreed with the broker to pay him a certain commission for finding a purchaser at an agreed price, and offered to accept as part payment property of a certain character within a certain radius of a town, and that the property offered in part payment fulfilled the requirements, they should find for the broker notwithstanding the principal refused to consummate the sale, is error. Goin v. Hess, 102 Iowa, 140, 143.

So, where the principal subsequently raised the price and notified the agent thereof, who through a subagent introduced a purchaser at a still higher price, but the principal claimed to have taken the matter out of his hands and to have still further raised the price, of which latter fact the brokers contended they had no notice, the finding of the jury sustaining the broker's right to commissions, as the purchaser found was ready, able, and willing to complete, was upheld. Traynor v. Morse, 55 Neb. 595.

Where, after the broker, employed by one of several co-owners of land, had performed his undertaking, the defendant and his co-owners refused to sign the contract or conclude the sale, and the defendant testified that he was not authorized to sell the property, but the facts showed that he had induced the broker to act in the premises and procure a purchaser upon the specified terms, the court held he was bound to make the agreement good or be responsible for the consequence, and that the broker was entitled to commissions, as the co-owner must be regarded as insuring the broker against the consequence arising from the want of such authority, such as the loss of the commission earned. Oliver v. Morawetz, 97 Wis. 332.

In Thornton v. Moody (Tex. Civ. App.) 24 S. W. 331, the facts showed that the broker could not make a sale for all cash, and that the principal agreed to take part real estate, and the purchaser signed a contract which the principal refused to sign as he had a better offer, and the broker recovered his commissions as the evidence showed that if the original contract was abrogated so far as it demanded a sale for cash alone, there was nothing said or done to set aside the agreement to pay the commission agreed on in the first contract, as the only change was as to the mode of payment, the other stipulation of the contract being the same in both.

Under a contract with the broker to make a sale "for $15,000, about one half cash," which is silent as to a sale for any larger sum, and also as to receiving more than one half of the price in cash, and as to the form in which that half of the price which was not required to be cash should be paid, the authorization to sell for about one half cash, was, as to the remainder, merely a permissive stipulation for the benefit of the purchaser and of the broker, and a sale for "$15,000 cash on delivery of the deed" is within the contract. Witherell v. Murphy, 147 Mass. 417.

And under an original authority to purchase the whole estate, the title to which belonged to different persons or estates and could not be procured all at once, where the evidence showed that the broker obtained an agreement to sell the whole estate and to give a warranty deed and did something in respect to securing a title, got a conveyance of an undivided third which his principal accepted, and finally got the title to the whole estate, the broker is entitled to go to the jury on the question whether his principal did not accept partial performance under such circumstances that he was bound to pay what the broker's services were reasonably worth. Giles v. Swift, 170 Mass. 461, 462.

In the above case it was contended that the proceedings were unavailing to secure the land, as it was not proved that the party owned or was authorized to convey, but as the evidence tended to show that the principal was aware of such person's relation to the property, and instructed his broker to get the best document he could, as he was satisfied that an agreement from him would be carried out, and such contract was sufficient to bind the party, the principal could not contend that such agreement was unavailing.

Again, the broker recovered his commission or compensation in a case where a principal agreed to remunerate the broker for a sale negotiated by his introduction, and the broker procured a purchaser after his principal had altered his position in the matter by becoming an administrator, as the contract was personal in its character, and the recovery depended upon the question whether the broker had established a contract as made, and not upon the question of ownership. Moore v. Daiber, 92 Mich. 402.

In Woods v. Stephens, 46 Mo. 555, upon the purchaser's objecting to the quantity of the land the principal agreed to sell him a portion thereof, and the broker drew up the papers and aided in the sale, which was consummated, and the broker recovered his commissions though the sale was for a part instead of the whole property, as such fact was not a variance sufficient to prevent recovery based upon the amount of the purchase money actually received.

If the broker shows that he advertised and that his agent took several persons to see the property with a view to purchase, talked upon the subject with others, among whom was the purchaser, who testified that he purchased the property from the principal in person, paid him money thereon and took possession, he establishes a case sufficient to warrant the jury in finding that he endeavored to sell, and that the principal made an agreement to sell to the purchaser, sufficient to entitle the broker to commissions under an agreement to pay an agreed sum "if it is sold to any party within a year from this date, or at any time thereafter before I have given you thirty days' notice in writing of my intention to withdraw the property from the market." Chapin v. Bridges, 118 Mass. 105.

The broker's claim was allowed where he called the property to the attention of the defendant with whom he had previously dealt both as broker in selling and buying property, took him to see it and at his request apparently disappeared from all further negotiations upon the defendant's assurance that "he was not buying or selling without him," but he thought he could "do better with the vendor himself," and that when he bought he would "pay the commission in full," in consequence of which statements he refrained from making any other or further efforts or endeavors to earn a commission from the vendor, who upon the concluding of the purchase was told that there was no broker's commission, and that he might fix the purchase price accordingly, as the defendant's promise to pay was supported by a valuable consideration, namely the forbearance of the broker to proceed further in the matter. Abraham v. Goldberg, 6 Misc. 43.

And the broker recovered commissions where he was employed to sell lands which the principal intended to buy at a foreclosure sale for an amount sufficient to pay off the debt, interest, and costs, taxes, and expenses, when the principal purchased, and the broker reported sales of about half the land amounting to less than the amount wanted by the principal, when the best part of the land remained unsold, with which sale the principal expressed his satisfaction and promised to execute the proper deeds. Smith v. Patrick (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 535.

In McAllister v. Welker, 39 Minn. 535, the broker's commissions upon a sale to one ready and willing to purchase on the principal's terms were allowed, although the principal alleged that he relied upon the broker's representations, and signed the contract as a mere memorandum containing only a description of the principal's farm and the price at which he would sell it, and further that the signature was obtained through false and fraudulent misrepresentations made for the purpose of defrauding.

In Dailey v. Young, 37 N. Y. S. R. 903, the broker recovered commissions under a contract that the price was to be a given sum, where after the broker had informed the principal that the purchaser would not pay the price and the principal had refused to take less, but did not terminate the agency, the principal himself sold for a smaller sum to the same purchaser, saying that "as long as he was doing the business himself he would not have to pay any commissions," as the facts put the parties in a position in respect to the subject of the contract the same as if the principal had told the broker to sell to the party at the price he had himself sold, and that such view of the matter was corroborated by the acts of the parties themselves, inasmuch as the principal had subsequently promised to pay, and had offered a sum to the broker after he had sold the premises.

So, in Wasmer v. Lean, 32 Neb. 519, the broker recovered his commissions, as it was shown that the principal stated that unless the property was sold quick he would not stand by his agreement to sell at the price named, which remark was made to one who was acting for the plaintiff and by whom the purchaser was introduced to the principal and the agreement was concluded, and the purchaser's evidence also showed that he first learned of the property through the plaintiff; often had conversations about it with him; that plaintiff recommended it at different times, and that plaintiff was present at the time of the purchase; and that the contract of sale was agreed upon as stated by the other witness, and the sale was really consummated by the plaintiff.

In Gibbons v. Sherwin, 28 Neb. 146, 153, the construction of a receipt given by the broker in the principal's name which named the price; a certain amount which was to constitute the first payment to be made by a given date, or the sum paid and specified therein was to be forfeited; and stated that upon the payment of the first amount certain contracts were to be delivered on which specified payments were to be made, and that upon payment of the whole a warranty deed was to be executed subject to a mortgage, with interest on the whole sum, was held to be a question of law for the court, and not for the jury uninstructed, and was construed as not a mere option to purchase, as its terms throughout were the terms of a purchase and sale subject to forfeiture in case of default, and was therefore evidence of a sale by the broker.

In Hewitt v. Brown, 21 Minn. 163, the broker recovered his commissions upon a written agreement which gave him the right to sell upon a certain price and on certain terms, or any such modified terms as the principal might accept, which was carried out by an exchange in which an estimate of the value of the property was made to which the principal agreed, as the contract might be held to include an exchange as well as a sale of the property, especially if assented to by the principal.

And the broker's commissions were allowed under a written agreement whereby the principal agreed to pay a stipulated commission if a sale was brought about by the influence of the broker within a limited time, or if a purchaser was introduced through his agency within such time, with a stipulation that if a purchaser was introduced through the agency of the broker, and a sale was afterwards consummated with such purchaser, the principal would pay commissions whether the time of the agreement had expired or not, where, during his agency, he introduced a purchaser to whom the principal sold, no matter whether the sale was ultimately consummated through his instrumentality or otherwise. Williams v. Leslie, 111 Ind. 70, 72.

In Journey v. Tallman, 8 Jones & S. 436, evidence which shows that the property was placed in the broker's hands upon commissions if sold with a distinct authority to offer it at a certain price, and that the broker brought his principal and the party who afterwards purchased by an exchange to a difference of $2,000, in cash only, and that the broker and witnesses produced by him were present at the closing up of the agreement, is sufficient to support a verdict in the broker's favor, as the same is not a little in quantity or insignificant in relation to the merits of the issue, and establishes a prima facie case,—especially where the broker also testifies that his principal tells him that the matter was carried through on the basis that he had given the broker, as that fact of itself is sufficient to sustain his recovery, unless it is overthrown by a preponderance of evidence.

And a judgment in the broker's favor will be justified by evidence showing constant inquiries made at his office through his advertising and other efforts, and that by that means information relative to the property reached the purchaser either directly or from some other person who had information directly from the same source, and that the principal retained the broker and agreed to pay the commissions, and did not dissent from them when he was informed what they would be, and made frequent calls at the broker's office, and finally went there with the purchaser and requested the broker to effect an agreement for an exchange. Redfield v. Tegg, 38 N. Y. 212.

In Burke v. Cogswell, 39 Minn. 344, the broker recovered his commission upon evidence which showed the cancellation of the original contract of sale and a release by quitclaim deed by the purchaser and her husband and a later sale to the father of the purchaser through the agency of the husband, who received a less commission than that payable under the broker's contract, and possession of the premises by the purchaser originally proposed by the broker and her husband, as all the facts and circumstances 44 L. R. A.

indicated but one transaction commencing with the broker's efforts and terminating in a deed to the husband's father.

The court refused to disturb a judgment in the broker's favor where the correspondence between the parties established the authority to sell upon deferred payments so that there was enough paid down to guarantee a sale, the deferred payments to carry interest with no material time mentioned except that it should not exceed five years, the details in respect to the times and amounts of payment and the security to be given being left to a considerable extent to the broker's discretion, the only restriction being the cash payment, and the extent of the time five years, the fact that the broker agreed to furnish an abstract of title not affecting such contract. Fuller v. Brady, 22 Ill. App. 174.

In Baird v. Gleckler (S. D.) 76 N. W. 937, the real question for consideration was whether the principal's promise was unconditional or not, and a charge to the jury to the effect that the evidence did not show such a sale as would have bound a purchaser was error, as such question was wholly immaterial, as there was no suggestion of fraud or mistake.

So, where the facts showed, inter alia, that the purchaser was presented to the defendant and at the latter's request the parties were left together to arrange the details of the sale, and a contract was signed and the purchaser paid a sum of money as part payment, but the plaintiff was not present and took no part in the details, nor in the form or contents of the contract between the parties, and his evidence in the main was confirmed by that of the original broker, it was held to be error for the court below to direct the jury to find for the defendant. Crevier v. Stephen, 40 Minn. 288.

And commissions were said to be earned in Harvey v. Hamilton, 155 Ill. 377, Affirming 54 Ill. App. 507, under a contract by the principal to lease a building at a certain rent for the first year with the privilege of buying at a certain price, or, if the building should not be suitable, to donate a certain quantity of land for building purposes, for which the broker was to be allowed a third interest in 5 acres located near the said works, where the broker, with the principal's approval, procured a company to lease the factory for two years from a given date at a certain rental for the first year, and an increased rental for the second year with the privilege of a renewal of the lease for an additional term of three years, under which the company carried on business for five years with indifferent success, and then removed, as the construction of the contract did not lead to the supposition that a permanent location at the place indicated was meant, the word "location" as therein used applying to either of the results which the parties contemplated producing, as a location was secured when an accepted lessee of the factory was procured by the broker.

In Cook v. Blake, 98 Mich. 389, the broker recovered commissions where he was to advertise the property free of charge, provided the same was not sold within one year, but in case of a sale within one year from the date, either by that means or otherwise, the principal was immediately to pay the broker a certain percentage for such advertising, with a certain amount of the purchase price, and the percentage besides, although the defendant testified that before he made the exchange he told the broker he would not exchange if he expected commissions, and the broker stated he would not expect commissions if it was an exchange and no sale, when the broker showed in rebuttal that the principal falsely represented the trade as an even one, and that there was no money consideration in it.

And he also recovered where a contract of sale was subject to a contingency that a certain institution shall consent to release a mortgage note, but there was nothing to indicate that such company was unwilling to give such release, or that the principal's position in relation to the contract was affected by such provision, as such fact did not relieve the principal from liability for the agent's commissions. Ward v. Cobb, 148 Mass. 518.

Where the broker was to be paid in full monthly until his full commissions were paid in proportion to a certain percentage of the gross earnings of the property received by the principal upon the purchase price for a given number of years unless the same was paid in full before such time where the contract between the parties was abrogated and a new one entered into in which the payment of commission was refused, it was held to be error for the court to charge in effect that the broker could not recover unless the jury found that in the usual course of business the purchaser would have fully paid the purchase price, and that the broker would have received the full amount of his commission but for the subsequent contract, as the broker had a right to have the contract continued in force for the full period of time mentioned, and to receive his percentage upon his principal's share. Bishop v. Averill, 17 Wash. 209.

In Washburn v. Bradley, 169 Mass. 86, the broker recovered, as the principal availed himself of his services to relieve him of his tenancy, and found a firm willing to become lessee thereof for a certain number of years at a certain rent, and obtained from the firm a covenant which was verbally accepted by the principal who arranged for his own release by the owner upon payment of a certain sum to which the owner assented to the terms proposed, and prepared a lease accordingly, which was not executed, when owing to difficulties a subtenant took a lease from the owner and the principal was released from his own tenancy upon the payment of the amount arranged, as it was the principal's concern to procure the cancellation of his own lease, and that such evidence justified a finding that the principal agreed to pay a full commission for inducing a satisfactory customer to engage to take the new lease, and also a finding that the broker had performed that service, although there was no evidence that the broker's customer became the tenant or took the lease, or that the owner was ever bound to become a party to such lease.

XVI. Acts held not to constitute performances.

A memorandum made and signed by a real-estate broker to authenticate a contract for the sale of land was held to be insufficient where, though it stated the price "cash," it referred to additional terms agreed on between the contracting parties not evidenced by writing but left in parol. Lester v. Heldt, 86 Ga. 226, 10 L. R. A. 108.

An action on a special contract to pay the broker the usual commissions for services in procuring a purchaser with a count on an account for "commissions for services as broker in getting a customer to purchase," will not lie where there is no proof of the sale of the property, or of an agreement for the sale thereof binding upon the purchaser. Drury v. Newman, 99 Mass. 256.

So, evidence which shows that the sale is a mere pretense, with no legal obligation resting on anyone, and that there is at the most a vague and indefinite understanding, will not 44 L. R. A.

support the broker's claim for commissions. Huggins v. Hearne, 74 Mo. App. 86, 87.

And, under a contract to pay commissions out of the first money received, a broker is not entitled to compensation when he finds a purchaser ready, willing, and able to purchase on the prescribed terms, unless there is a sale and a first payment made. Lindley v. Fay, 119 Cal. 239.

Again, the broker's claim was refused where the contract for an exchange expressly provided that the agreement was to be good "only if counsel approved of the contract," and it was not shown that such approval was ever obtained, and therefore by the terms of the contract it was null and void. Halprin v. Schachne, 21 Misc. 519.

The broker's claim was also refused where his contract with his principal was to procure a purchaser able, ready, and willing to purchase at a given price, and he procured a contract which was not binding by reason of a condition that it was to be void if certain payments mentioned therein were not paid within a given time. Ramsey v. West, 31 Mo. App. 676.

And, where a broker is employed to make an absolute and unconditional sale at a fixed price, a conditional sale relieving the purchaser of the obligation to complete on payment of a portion of the purchase price, although approved by the owner, will not amount to an acceptance by the latter, as a performance by the broker of his undertaking to make an absolute and unconditional sale. Belger v. Bigger, 29 Mo. App. 421, 427.

So, a contract to procure a cash purchaser at not less than a stated price is not performed by the production of a person willing to pay a certain amount for the option to purchase within a given time, which option is never exercised or a binding contract made; and in such a case the broker is not entitled to retain in his hands money paid to him on behalf of his principal for such option as commissions. Gilder v. Davis, 45 N. Y. S. R. 690.

And the performance of a contract to find a purchaser at a given price where no terms are specified, and in which the principal wrote the broker that there was a lease upon the property with seven years to run; "all else can be satisfactorily arranged,"—which contract is subsequently countermanded by the principal, is not shown by an offer from a proposed purchaser to buy upon the terms named by the broker provided the principal "will accept a certain sum down and take a mortgage" for the balance payable in a number of years, as the minds of the parties never met. Forrester v. Price, 6 Misc. 308, 309.

Again, performance is not shown where the purchaser secured is not willing to enter into an unconditional or absolute contract to purchase, and only enters into a mere option contract to be relieved of the engagement by forfeiting a sum of money paid by him. Zeldler v. Walker, 41 Mo. App. 118, 121; Dwyer v. Raborn, 6 Wash. 213; Tousey v. Etzel, 9 Utah, 329.

The same result followed where there was no evidence to present to the jury except proof of the receipt of a contract mailed by the proposed purchaser which did not contain an unqualified agreement to purchase, but one which by its construction only gave him an option to purchase at the price and terms named, after the receipt of which the principal withdrew his offer, as the broker had not brought the parties together in a completed contract of sale and purchase, or produced to his principal a purchaser able and willing to buy at the price and on the terms fixed. Runyon v. Wilkinson, G. & Co. 57 N. J.

L. 420, 424. In this case the purchaser cabled the principal: "Accept 370; half cash, half debentures. Contract mailed,"—and the price and terms described substantially agreed with those named in the offer, but the cablegram was qualified by the connection of the acceptance of the contract therein said to be mailed.

And a contract to pay a certain sum in so many days, the balance to be secured by a deed of trust and note, is a performance of his authority to sell upon specific terms of some cash down, the balance on mortgage for a given term at a certain percentage. Hoyt v. Shipherd, 70 Ill. 309, 311.

A contract to produce a purchaser the next day who has "cash" is not performed by the production of a party who is not able to conclude the sale for thirty days, but who has property enough to raise the amount at any time. Mullenhoff v. Gensler, 39 N. Y. S. R. 441.

Under a contract giving the broker all above a certain price which is net to his principal, the broker is not entitled to commissions upon a sale made at the net price by his principal to a purchaser introduced by the broker, where such broker originally informed the purchaser that he could purchase at the net price. Beatty v. Russell, 41 Neb. 321.

Where the only evidence of performance was that the broker produced a party who offered to take the property on a lease with the privilege of purchasing from the broker's principals, who were executors with no power to lease, provided all the heirs would sign the lease, the broker is not entitled to his commissions for finding a purchaser. Woolley v. Schmal, 5 Ohio C. C. 76.

Commissions were also refused in a case in which a broker made negotiations for a lease which his principal refused on the ground that one of the lessees was an infant and that his guardian could not make the lease. Folsom v. Hesse, 24 Misc. 713.

So, in a case in which the contract showed that the broker was to receive by way of commissions stock in a company to be formed for the purpose of purchasing the land, the broker failed to recover, as his contract was not completed, and the company or association under which he claimed never purchased the land. Bowles v. Allen (Va.) 21 S. E. 665.

In Powell v. Binney, 54 Neb. 690, the broker's claim was disallowed, as the fact that a real-estate broker gave a memorandum in writing to one who thereon claimed rights as a purchaser, which memorandum recited that the proposed sale was subject to the approval of the owner of the property, was not sufficient to entitle him to recover,—especially as the entire evidence adduced in the case showed that there was a prompt disapproval of said terms when submitted to the owner.

And the fact that after the sale made by his principal he rendered some services to him by introducing him to a party to supervise his papers will not entitle him to recover, as such services are not to be "within the encompassment and drift" of his employment as a broker to find a purchaser, as they are not rendered so as to assist in the sale. Dolan v. Scanlan, 57 Cal. 261, 267.

So, where the agreement as admitted by both parties calls for "a sale", and not an exchange, the principal is not liable for the commissions upon an exchange, as the contract has not been fully performed, as the special terms show that a sale, and not an exchange, is to be made. Menfee v. Higgins, 57 Ill. 50, 52.

And the court refused the broker's commissions in a case where, under an authority to sell at a given price upon payment of a specified amount in cash, he found a purchaser who offered to take the property at a large sum, on the terms the broker was authorized to give, except that a smaller amount than that named was paid in cash, and a well was to be put down which furnished a good supply of water, which offer the principal refused, as it was a material departure from the terms authorized sufficient to make the attempted sale of no effect. Smith v. Allen, 101 Iowa, 608.

In this case the mere fact that the broker intended to advance the difference in the cash amount of the offer made by the purchaser if the principal wished him to do so was held not to affect his position,—especially as he made no tender of the amount, and the proposed sale contained provisions which the broker was unauthorized to make.

So, the court refused the broker his commissions where he merely gave the owner the name of a party who had previously made an indefinite statement of his possible willingness to take and failed otherwise to find and produce a purchaser under the terms of his employment, as he was under no obligation to wait longer or indefinitely, and the broker had failed to negotiate a sale or exchange with such party, or even to get an offer from him. Babcock v. Merritt, 1 Colo. App. 84. In this case the owner subsequently sold to such party.

And where the broker did not procure the purchaser, or effect a sale, but only acted as intermediary in carrying propositions from one party to the other, his right to his full commissions was denied. McMurtry v. Madison, 18 Neb. 291, 293. In this case, however, the court intimated that if he rendered some service he might be entitled to some compensation upon a quantum meruit, and an instruction to the jury to that effect might not be improper.

Performance of a contract to procure an agreement for an exchange upon the principal's terms, or others acceptable to him, is not shown where the party introduced refused the offer, and proposed to exchange if the principal would remove an encumbrance, and after several interviews and continued negotiations for months neither would make any concessions, and the principal notified the broker that the effort to effect a trade was abandoned, and withdrew his offer, after which the other party put his property in the hands of other brokers. Uphoff v. Ulrich, 2 Ill. App. 399, 401.

And, a contract which provides that when the principal secures a deed conveying to him a certain interest in real estate he will pay the broker a given sum as commission, under which the principal agrees to purchase, does not provide that the commissions are to be paid pro tanto in proportion to the amount of purchase money paid. Witte v. Taylor, 110 Cal. 224.

And the court reversed a judgment in the broker's favor where he was to negotiate the sale of lots at a stipulated commission on the sale of each lot, and the matter fell through after the broker had sold only two lots, as the principal's wife would not join in the purchase deeds. Hill v. Jones, 152 Pa. 433.

So, the broker does not establish a case for the jury when his evidence does not show that the purchaser procured was able to comply with the terms, or that the principal knew his name until it was disclosed by the witnesses upon the trial. Hayden v. Grillo, 26 Mo. App. 289, 293.

In Alden v. Earle, 121 N. Y. 688, the court affirmed the order of the court below granting a new trial, as the compensation of the broker was contingent upon his effecting the lease, even though it was shown that his negotiations might have contributed to render the agreement actually entered into by his principal easier to consummate, no bad faith existing on his principal's part in making such contract.

And evidence which only shows that he had a purchaser in view to whom he showed the lots which the defendant was willing to take, and that a conference was had with the supposed owner and a price was agreed upon and the amount paid in cash, the title to be clear except as to the result of a pending suit, but the value of the goods to be taken in exchange was not determined by invoice, and the deal was abandoned as the party could make no title to the property and the defendant sold his stock,—does not establish the broker's claim for compensation, as the value of his services is not shown, and there is nothing upon which any compensation can be collected. Freedman v. Gordon, 4 Colo. App. 343.

In Bull v. Price, 7 Bing. 238, the agent as surveyor was to negotiate the sale of a reversionary interest, and the premises were sold to commissioners under the English Improvement acts, and a jury awarded a sum therefor, but the premises were charged with an annuity of which the defendant had not apprised the plaintiff, and the defendant declined to induce the annuitant to be a party to the conveyance to the commissioners, who thereupon paid the money into the bank. It was held that the money being still in the bank the plaintiff could not recover the commissions on a sale.

The broker's claim was refused where the sale fell through owing to a dispute about the description of the land which the principal was willing to convey "as center of a certain part," which description the purchaser refused to take as it made a difference of 2 or 3 acres, as his only authority was to sell according to the description by which it was conveyed to his principals. Ward v. Lawrence, 79 Ill. 295.

So, no performance is shown where there was no written contract to which his principal's assent is shown, nor any agreement for the same accepted by the principal, either verbal or written, or partly verbal and partly written, which the parties carry into effect,—especially where it is shown that such party was not able to perform the contract the principal assented to, and never contracted in a valid and binding form even had the title been in him and the lots been free from encumbrances. Barnes v. Roberts, 5 Bosw. 73.

Again, in Yeager v. Kelsey, 46 Minn. 402, the broker's claim for commissions was disallowed, as the purchaser was not bound by the instrument and assumed no legal obligation to purchase, although he examined the title but refused to accept the deed. The facts showed a negotiation and a payment to the broker as part of the purchase price, and an acceptance by the brokers of an instrument signed by them only with the designation "agents" added to their signature, which embraced a receipt for the money paid by the purchaser as part payment, stated the full price, and when the balance or first payment was to be made.

Under a contract providing to pay the broker a certain sum per acre on the sale of a tract of land whenever a sale of said land should be effected, or the same should be taken by legal proceedings, or the exercise of the right of eminent domain, and if the same should be sold or taken in parcels a proportionate part should be paid to the broker at the time each parcel was taken or sold, a sale of an undivided quarter interest of the premises is not a sale of a parcel of land within the meaning of the contract, which contemplates a joint conveyance of a part or the whole of the land, and a joint payment of commissions, and, in the absence of an express provision, to pay the broker his commissions on the transfer of an undivided quarter, the broker is not entitled to his commissions upon it, the contract plainly meaning that when a joint sale of any portion or of the whole of the premises was made the principals were to pay commissions. Johnson v. Sirret, 153 N. Y. 51, 53, 54, Reversing 83 Hun, 317.

In Bradford v. Menard, 35 Minn. 197, commissions were denied, as, under a contract to sell at a certain price net, one half down and the remainder within one year, for which the broker was to have whatever he could obtain in excess of that amount for his compensation, he procured a purchaser to enter into a written agreement for purchase at a larger sum, a certain amount to be paid down and the balance "paid in cash and mortgage" when the deed should be delivered, under which the purchaser tendered an amount in cash, and his notes for the balance, which together made the sum net to the principal, which agreement was incomplete and unenforceable against the purchaser, and the broker was only entitled to whatever the property should be sold for in excess of the net sum mentioned.

Under a contract which completes a sale, or such a contract as may be fully enforced against the purchaser, an averment that the purchaser produced was willing to take the property on acceptable terms; that the broker brought the parties together; that they entered into a written agreement by the terms of which the purchaser was to pay a certain amount of money and convey real estate, the title to which was to be shown to be clear and free from encumbrances, and to be conveyed by warranty deed, and accompanied by abstract of title showing a clear title, will not support a claim for commissions, under the contract, where the abstracts furnished show no title. Greusel v. Dean, 98 Iowa, 405, 407.

A contract to pay certain amounts on a first and second mortgage then due, and the balance to the principal in cash on a given date, the broker to have the exclusive sale for twenty days, is not performed by procuring a purchaser to pay a certain amount in cash on the signing of the contract, and other amounts by assuming the first and second mortgages, and the balance on the date fixed, which mortgages were accompanied by the defendant's bonds, as the offer is one to sell to a purchaser who will assume the mortgages by absolutely paying and discharging them, although if the mortgages were not due the authority might be construed as authorizing a sale subject to them. Schultz v. Griffin, 121 N. Y. 294, 299.

In Diamond v. Hartley, 38 App. Div. 87, commissions were not allowed, as the proposed contract, although pronounced satisfactory by the purchaser's attorney, was never consummated, as one of the vendors required a clause to be inserted giving the option of allowing a certain portion of the purchase money to remain on mortgage, to which the purchaser's consent was disputed, and the principal refused to make a deduction in the price on account of discrepancy in the quantity of the property.

In a case in which the sale was contingent upon an allowance of a certain pension to the purchaser and his ability to make payments, and to pay the purchase money out of the pension when allowed, the broker's claim was disallowed as the purchaser did not receive the full amount of pension money and only paid a small amount to the defendant, and as the payment of purchase money to the defendant was the ultimate object to be attained, and not so much the sale of the land. Cobb v. Kenner (Tenn. Ch. App.) 42 S. W. 277, 278.

In Moffatt v. Laurie, 15 C. B. 583, 24 L. J.

C. P. N. S. 56, 1 Jur. N. S. 283, the plaintiff was to make no charge for laying out land for building purposes and making all necessary surveys and plans, but in the event of any of the land being disposed of he was to be appointed architect on his principal's behalf to see that the construction of the works were substantial, and the parties building on the land were to pay him a certain percentage on the outlay if they did not employ him as their architect, and if the principal or his executors wished to dispose of his services at any time, he or they were to remunerate him for the time, trouble, and expense he had been put to in making the said preparations. It was averred that the necessary surveys, etc., were made, that he incurred expense, and that the land was not disposed of according to the agreement, although a reasonable time had elapsed, and that after the death of the principal the defendants, who were his executors, dispensed with and wholly released and discharged the plaintiff. The court held the plaintiff could not recover for his trouble in surveying and making the plans, etc., as there was no cause of action, inasmuch as the event, on the happening of which alone he was entitled to recover remuneration for his services, namely the disposing of the land for building purposes, had not happened.

An answer in an action to recover compensation for services by a broker, which avers that the broker was employed to sell at the best price he could obtain, and agreed to make a diligent effort to obtain the best price that could be obtained in the county or in that neighborhood, and that without making such efforts he sold at $60 an acre when the land was really worth $80 an acre, and he could have sold the same for the latter price if he had made an effort to do so, and that he knew the value of the land in that county, whereas the principal who lived in a remote county did not, and was compelled to, and did, rely upon the representations, judgment, and statements of the broker as to its value, constitutes a sufficient defense to the action for commissions. Stuart v. Stumph, 126 Ind. 580.

In Wilson v. Alexander (Tex.) 18 S. W. 1057, the broker's claim was disallowed upon testimony showing, inter alia, that after defendant was introduced to a party he saw another who agreed upon a trade which fell through, when he determined to work up a trade himself, and told another broker to see a party with whom a trade could likely be made, and that after some negotiations he made a trade with such party, and that he refused to pay commissions as the purchaser had paid them, and never admitted owing commissions to anyone; that he made the trade with the purchaser himself and was acting for himself in the trade, and that none of the plaintiffs had anything to do with such purchaser.

E. W.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

GRAHAM PAPER COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

S. J. PEMBROKE et al., Respts.

(.....Cal.....)

An assignment of accounts and other choses in action to a purchaser in good faith, who obtains actual possession of them and immediately notifies the debtors, gives him a perfect legal title thereto as against a prior assignee to whom they were assigned for security, but who, without obtaining possession of them or giving notice to the debtors, left them with the assignor for collection.

(March 25, 1899.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for the City and County of San Francisco in favor of defendants in an action brought to establish title to the book accounts of the defendant corporation under an alleged assignment thereof as security for a debt. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. Gordon & Young, for appellant:

The assignment was executed by the defendant, the Pacific Roll Paper Company, and it was not necessary to show that the board of directors ever authorized Mr. Corwin, as president, to make such assignment.

Bank of Columbia v. Patterson, 7 Cranch. 299, 3 L. ed. 351; Fleckner v. Bank of United NOTE.—As to assignment of future accounts or earnings, see note to Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Robinson (Iowa) 14 L. R. A. 126.

44 L. R. A.

States, 8 Wheat. 338, 5 L. ed. 631; New Athens v. Thomas, 82 Ill. 259; Sheffield School Trp. v. Address, 56 Ind. 157; Crowley v. Genesee Min. Co. 55 Cal. 273; Gillett v. Campbell, 1 Denio, 522.

Usage and custom and the necessities and conveniences of business attach to certain corporate officers certain functions, independent of any express authority from the board of directors.

The president, as the chief executive officer of the corporation, may bind it by all acts, the performance of which is incidental to his office.

Spelling, Priv. Corp. § 193; Castle v. Belfast Foundry Co. 72 Me. 167; Beach, Priv. Corp. pp. 202, 203; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 538.

A general managing agent of a corporation is the representative of the corporation, and may do in the transaction of its ordinary affairs what the corporation itself could do within the scope of its powers; and such general managing agent may assign a chose in action of the corporation.

Greig v. Riordan, 99 Cal. 316; McKiernan v. Lenzen, 56 Cal. 61; Sherman Center Town Co. v. Swigart, 43 Kan. 292; Waterman, Corp. § 30; Siebs v. Hendy Mach. Works, 86 Cal. 390; Tuller v. Arnold, 98 Cal. 522; Pixley v. Western P. R. Co. 33 Cal. 183, 91 Am. Dec. 623.

The authority of Corwin to make the contract is established from his admitted relations to the corporation; his authority may be inferred from the general manner in which he has been permitted to conduct the business.

Crowley v. Genesee Min. Co. 55 Cal. 273;

Martin v. Webb, 110 U. S. 7, 28 L. ed. 49; Bank of Healdsburg v. Bailhache, 65 Cal. 327; Mitchell v. Deeds, 49 Ill. 416, 95 Am. Dec. 621; Scott v. Johnson, 5 Bosw. 213; Merchants' Bank v. McColl, 6 Bosw. 473; Marine Bank v. Butler Colliery Co. 1 Silv. Sup. Ct. 155; Martin v. Niagara Falls Paper Mfg. Co. 44 Hun, 132.

The assignment was a valid and binding transfer of the accounts and bills receivable mentioned in the instrument.

Kirk v. Roberts (Cal.) 31 Pac. 620.

An assignment of a debt is perfect as against subsequent assignees and attaching creditors, though no notice of the assignment has been given to the debtor.

Muir v. Schenck, 3 Hill, 228, 38 Am. Dec. 633; Robinson v. Weeks, 6 How. Pr. 167; Lyman v. Cartwright, 3 E. D. Smith, 118; Bush v. Lathrop, 22 N. Y. 549; Baker v. Kenworthy, 41 N. Y. 216; Richardson v. Ainsworth, 20 How. Pr. 531; Countryman v. Boyer, 3 How. Pr. 390; Greentree v. Rosenstock, 61 N. Y. 593; Freund v. Importers & T. Nat. Bank, 76 N. Y. 356; Fairbanks v. Sargent, 104 N. Y. 108, 56 Am. Rep. 490.

No particular form of words is necessary to create an assignment, so long as the intention to transfer is clearly indicated.

Silvey v. Hodgdon, 52 Cal. 363.

Messrs. John H. Dickinson and Henry E. Monroe, for respondents:

A corporation can only act—can only speak—through the medium prescribed by law, and that is its board of trustees.

Gashwiler v. Willis, 33 Cal. 11, 91 Am. Dec. 607; Titus v. Cairo & F. R. Co. 37 N. J. L. 98; Stokes v. New Jersey Pottery Co. 46 N. J. L. 240.

The president of a private corporation has no authority by virtue merely of his official position to make contracts binding on the corporation, except in relation to matters arising in the ordinary course of business of the corporation.

Blen v. Bear River & A. Water & Min. Co. 20 Cal. 602, 81 Am. Dec. 132; Blood v. Marcuse, 38 Cal. 590, 99 Am. Dec. 435; Bank of Healdsburg v. Bailhache, 65 Cal. 331; Perkins v. Ophir Silver Min. Co. 35 Cal. 11; Mulligan v. Smith, 59 Cal. 225; Bliss v. Kaweah Canal & Irrig. Co. 65 Cal. 502; Asher v. Sutton, 31 Kan. 288; Hoyt v. Thompson, 5 N. Y. 320.

This assignment was not valid although all of the stock of the corporation was owned either by Mrs. Corwin or by Corwin.

Button v. Hoffman, 61 Wis. 20, 50 Am. Rep. 131; Gashwiler v. Willis, 33 Cal. 11, 91 Am. Dec. 607; Stokes v. New Jersey Pottery Co. 46 N. J. L. 238.

Plaintiff took no steps to perfect its title; hence the assignment, if otherwise valid, would not avail against a subsequent assignee who had given notice.

As between different assignees the one who first gives notice to the debtor will have the prior right.

1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 840; Dearle v. Hall, 3 Russ. Ch. 1; note to Kov v. Dawson, 2 White & T. Lead. Cas. *731; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 13th ed. p. 367; Loomis v. Loomis, 28 Vt. 203; Vanduskirk v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 44 L. R. A.

14 Conn. 141, 36 Am. Dec. 473; Bishop v. Holcomb, 10 Conn. 444; Judah v. Judd, 5 Day, 534; Woodbridge v. Perkins, 3 Day, 364; Williams v. Thorp, 2 Sim. 257; Loveridge v. Cooper, 3 Russ. Ch. 30; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 698, 701, 702, 712-714; Spain v. Hamilton, 1 Wall. 604; Spain v. Brent, 17 L. ed. 619; Judson v. Corcoran, 17 How. 614, 15 L. ed. 232; Farmers' & M. Bank v. Farwell, 19 U. S. App. 256, 58 Fed. Rep. 633, 7 C. C. A. 391.

Haynes, C., filed the following opinion:

The plaintiff and the defendant the Pacific Roll-Paper Company are corporations. On December 23, 1893, the Pacific Roll-Paper Company was indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of about $15,000, due on merchandise accounts, and on that day T. J. Corwin, the president of said Pacific Roll-Paper Company, in the name of the corporation, by himself as president, executed to the plaintiff a written assignment of "all its book accounts and bills receivable, including all debts of every kind now due to said Pacific Roll-Paper Company from any person or persons, and the said Pacific Roll-Paper Company hereby agrees and covenants with the said Graham Paper Company to represent it as its agent henceforth in the collection of said bills and book accounts and debts, and reduce the same into cash as speedily as possible." This assignment was to be in satisfaction of the plaintiff's demand only to the extent that collections should be made. No statement of the accounts, bills receivable, or other debts embraced in said assignment accompanied it, nor was any statement thereof afterwards furnished the plaintiff, though demand was made for such statement about January 1, 1894, and afterwards a partial pencil memorandum was shown the plaintiff, but was retained by the assignor to be completed. On January 19, 1894, said Pacific Roll-Paper Company sold its property, assets, and goodwill, including the accounts and other demands so assigned to the plaintiff, to defendant S. J. Pembroke, for the sum of $23,500, part of which was paid in cash ($6,853), and the remainder in notes; and the answer alleged that no part of the purchase price consisted of debts due or owing from or by the vendor, that the purchaser immediately gave notice to all persons whose names appeared upon the books of the vendor as owing said Pacific Roll-Paper Company of the assignment and transfer of said accounts, and that said defendant had no knowledge or notice of said assignment to the plaintiff. The relief demanded by the plaintiff is, in substance, that it be adjudged to be the owner of said accounts and demands, that a receiver be appointed, for an accounting, that plaintiff have access to the books, and that defendants be enjoined from collecting any of the accounts that were in existence and unpaid on December 23, 1893, and for other relief. At the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence in chief the defendants moved for a nonsuit upon the grounds: (1) That it was not shown that the assignment to plaintiff was executed by the corporation, or that the directors ever authorized the president to make it; and (2) that no steps were taken by the plaintiff to perfect the assignment, or to act under it, and that no attempt was made to reduce the accounts to possession. Said motion was granted, and from the judgment entered thereon and an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial this appeal is taken.

The only questions made or discussed by counsel in their briefs are: First, whether Mr. Corwin, the president of the Pacific Roll-Paper Company, had authority to execute the assignment to plaintiff; and, second, if its execution was authorized by the corporation, was it valid as against S. J. Pembroke, the subsequent assignee, who was a purchaser of the same accounts and demands without notice of the prior assignment, and who immediately gave notice to the debtors of the assignment to her, and obtained possession of the books and accounts? If the second of these questions should be resolved against appellant, the first need not be considered. To complete the assignment of an account as against the debtor, it is universally conceded that the debtor must have notice, as otherwise his debt will be discharged by payment to the assignor; but whether the prior assignee must give notice to the debtor in order to protect himself against a subsequent assignee is a question upon which there is a conflict in the authorities. "It is a well-established rule in England that, as between successive assignees of a chose in action, he will have the preference who first gives notice to the debtor, even if he be a subsequent assignee, provided that at the time of taking it he had no notice of the prior assignment." 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1077. The reason of this rule is stated by Sir Thomas Plumer, M. R., in Dearle v. Hall, 3 Russ. Ch. 1, thus: "In Ryall v. Rowles, 1 Ves. Sr. 348, the judges held that in the case of a chose in action you must do everything towards having possession which the subject admits. You must do that which is tantamount to obtaining possession, by placing every person who has an equitable or legal interest in the matter under an obligation to treat it as your property. For this purpose you must give notice to the legal holder of the fund. In the case of a debt, for instance, notice to the debtor is, for many purposes, tantamount to possession. If you omit to give that notice, you are guilty of the same degree and species of neglect as he who leaves a personal chattel, to which he has acquired a title, in the actual possession and under the absolute control of another person." The English rule has been followed by the Federal courts in this country. See Judson v. Corcoran, 17 How. 612, 15 L. ed. 231; Spain v. Hamilton, 1 Wall. 604, 624, Spain v. Brent, 17 L. ed. 619, 625; Laclede Bank v. Schuler, 120 U. S. 511, 30 L. ed. 704. In Methfessel v. Atlantic Trust Co. 35 U. S. App. 67, Methven v. Staten Island Light, H. & Power Co. 66 Fed. Rep. 113, 13 C. C. A. 362, it was held that, where two assignments of a chose in action, for valuable consideration, are made to different persons, the assignee who first gives notice of his claim to the debtor has the prior right, though the assignment to him is later in date than that to the other assignee, if taken without notice. This proposition is also sustained in 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1035a; and in note 4, p. 339, Foster v. Cockerell, 9 Bligh, N. R. 332, 375, 376, is quoted at considerable length, stating what appears to us satisfactory reasons in its support. In 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 695, the same doctrine is stated, and at § 698 the learned author added: "Even where the rule concerning notice to the debtor or trustee has not been adopted, an assignee who had otherwise the priority may lose it through his laches, as against a subsequent purchaser in good faith and for value who has been injured by the negligence. . . . The questions as to priority of right may arise between the assignee and a judgment creditor of the assignor or a subsequent purchaser from the assignor. There is a clear distinction between these two claimants, since a judgment creditor only succeeds to the rights of his debtor, while a purchaser may acquire higher rights." See also Id. § 707. In 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1077, notes 3, 4, Iowa, Missouri, Vermont, and Virginia are mentioned as supporting the English rule, and New Jersey, New York, and Texas as rejecting it. To the former list may be added Connecticut. See Bishop v. Holcomb, 10 Conn. 444, and Foster v. Mix, 20 Conn. 395.

Appellant cites a large number of New York cases in support of its contention, and it must be conceded that they sustain the general proposition that the prior assignee has the better right, though he has not notified the debtor. We think, however, that the doctrine announced by the English courts, and followed by our Federal courts and the state courts above mentioned, is based upon the better reason, and sustained by the weight of authority. Notice to the debtor not only protects the assignee against payment to the assignor, but against payment to the subsequent assignee; since the debtor, with notice of the prior assignment, would be no more protected by a payment to a subsequent assignee than he would by payment to the assignor; and besides, an intending purchaser of the accounts from the assignor would have it in his power to ascertain from the debtors, by inquiry, whether any prior assignment existed, and would thus be furnished with the only reasonable protection possible against fraud on the part of the assignor. There are, however, some special features which strengthen the case of defendant Pembroke, the second assignee. The plaintiff was a creditor of the assignor, endeavoring to obtain some security for its claim against the Pacific Roll-Paper Company. It left the accounts and choses in action in the hands and under the control of the assignor, as its agent, for collection. The defendant, Pembroke, is a purchaser, who not only took an assignment of the accounts and other choses in action, but obtained actual possession of them and immediately notified the debtors, and therefore obtained a perfect legal title, without notice of the prior assignment, and with no means of obtaining information of it otherwise than from the fraudulent assignor, who, by the sale and assignment, represented that it had good right to make the sale and assignment. The case of Kirk v. Roberts (Cal.) 31 Pac. 620, is not in point. There the defendant was the assignee in insolvency, and therefore stood in the shoes of the insolvent; while here the defendant is a purchaser in good faith and for value, without notice, and therefore stands in a better position than her assignor.

In the closing paragraph of appellant's brief it is said that plaintiff had a right of action for an accounting against the Pacific Roll-Paper Company as to what it had collected on the assigned accounts, and against defendant Pembroke for whatever she may have collected since the assignment to her and that it was, therefore, error to grant the motion upon the grounds stated. As to defendant Pembroke there was, as we have seen, no right to an accounting; and as to the Pacific Roll-Paper Company there was no evidence that it had made any collections. The court would certainly not make an order requiring it to account in the absence of some evidence that it had made collections. Plaintiff called and examined Mr. Corwin as a witness, but did not ask for disclosures as to whether collections had been made; and, having rested its case, the court below could not assume that collections had been made, nor can we. Under these circumstances it does not appear that appellant has been prejudiced.

Numerous exceptions were taken to rulings on the admission and rejection of evidence. None of them are discussed in the briefs. Most of them relate to the authority of the president of the defendant corporation to make the assignment to the plaintiff, which assignment, we have assumed for the purposes of the case, was the act of the corporation. None of the other rulings would have changed the result had they conformed to plaintiff's views. I advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: Gray, C.; Britt, C.

Per Curiam:

For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

John D. VAN VLECK, Respt.,

v.

BOARD OF DENTAL EXAMINERS OF CALIFORNIA et al., Appts.

(.....Cal.....)

1. A writ of mandate cannot be issued to compel the board of dental examiners to indorse a diploma on the ground that it was issued by a reputable dental college, when the board has decided to the contrary, under Stat. 1885, p. 110, § 5, requiring

NOTE.—For power to review action of boards of dental examiners, etc., see Iowa Electric Medical College Asso. v. Schrader (Iowa) 20 L. R. A. 355, and note.
44 L. R. A.

ing the board to indorse such diploma "when satisfied of the character of such institution."

2. Allegations that a certain institution was a reputable college, and that sufficient evidence of that fact was at the command of a board of examiners to whom a diploma from that college was presented, and that the petitioner furnished evidence satisfactory to the board, are not sufficient to show that the board found those facts so as to make a petition for mandamus good on demurrer.

(March 29, 1897.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court for Orange County granting a peremptory writ of mandamus to compel defendants to issue to petitioner a certificate entitling him to practise dentistry. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. F. Fitzgerald, Attorney General, W. H. Anderson, and J. W. Ballard for appellants.

Messrs. Knight & Harpham for respondent.

Van Fleet, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a proceeding in mandate, commenced in the superior court, against the board of dental examiners of the state, and the individuals composing said board, to compel the issuance to petitioner of a certificate entitling him to practise dentistry, under the act of the legislature entitled "An Act to Insure the Better Education of Practitioners of Dental Surgery, and to Regulate the Practice of Dentistry in the State of California," approved March 12, 1885. Stat. 1885, p. 110. The court below gave judgment granting a peremptory writ, and defendants appeal therefrom, and from an order denying them a new trial.

Defendants demurred to the complaint or petition, upon the ground, among others, that it did not state facts entitling petitioner to the relief sought. The demurrer was overruled, and this ruling presents the only question which need be considered, since we are of opinion the demurrer should have been sustained. The petition, omitting the formal parts and much immaterial and redundant matter, is, in substance, that petitioner is the holder of a diploma of graduation regularly issued to him on April 2, 1894, by the American College of Dental Surgery of Chicago, Illinois, after a course of study therein and an examination for graduation as prescribed by the regulations thereof: that, desiring to practise his profession in this state, petitioner, on the 10th day of May, 1894, in pursuance of said act, presented to defendants his said diploma, and demanded that they indorse the same, and issue to him a certificate to that effect; that when said diploma was issued, and at the time of the application to defendants, said American College of Dental Surgery "was a reputable college, and there existed and was at the command of defendants sufficient evidence of such fact"; that with his application petitioner furnished "evidence satisfactory to the defendants that he was the person named in said diploma, and that the same had been issued to him as stated in said diploma"; that defendants, "without any lawful right or excuse therefor, refused to indorse plaintiff's said diploma, or to issue to him the certificate provided for in said act." The act referred to, which underlies the proceeding, makes it unlawful for any person who is not at the time of the passage of the act engaged in the practice of dentistry to engage therein, unless he shall have obtained a certificate as hereinafter provided. It authorizes the appointment of a board of examiners, to consist of seven practising dentists, "whose duty it shall be to carry out the purposes and enforce the provisions of this act." After providing for the Constitution and organization of the board and for the registration of all those practising dentistry in the state at the date of its passage, it provides: "Sec. 5. Any and all persons who shall so desire may appear before said board at any of its regular meetings, and be examined with reference to their knowledge and skill in dental surgery, and, if the examination of any such person or persons shall prove satisfactory to said board, the board of examiners shall issue to such persons as they shall find to possess the requisite qualifications a certificate to that effect, in accordance with the provisions of this act. Said board shall also indorse as satisfactory diplomas from any reputable dental college, when satisfied of the character of such institution, upon the holder furnishing evidence satisfactory to the board of his or her right to the same, and shall issue certificates to that effect within ten days thereafter. All certificates issued by said board shall be signed by its officers, and such certificates shall be prima facie evidence of the right of the holder to practise dentistry in the state of California." The further provisions of the act are not involved.

The contention of the attorney general, for appellants, is that the functions of the defendant board under the statute are judicial or quasi judicial, in that they involve the exercise of discretionary power,—the determination of facts from evidence; that the determination of such facts is exclusively and finally vested in said board; and that, therefore, while mandate will lie to require it to act, should it refuse, it will not require it to proceed to a particular conclusion; nor where it appears, as the complaint alleges, that it has acted and reached one result, can it be coerced by this writ to act differently. The correctness of these principles, if such be the proper interpretation of the powers vested in the board, is conceded by respondent, but respondent contends that the act will not bear such construction. His contention, in effect, is that the power vested in the board is largely ministerial, or clerical merely; that, while the board has certain discretionary power to pass upon the facts upon which its action is to be based, its determination of those facts is not final; that if the evidence presented to it is such that, in the judgment of the court, the board should have found in favor of the existence of the facts authorizing it to indorse the certificate, it can be required to so find, and make such indorsement. We are unable to coincide with respondent's construction of the act. The whole theory upon which it proceeds, and the manifest purpose intended to be accomplished thereby, are against such construction. It is very evident, as indicated, not only by the title, but in the body, of the act, that the inducing consideration moving the legislature to its adoption was the protection of the public against the ills suffered at the hands of incompetent quacks, empirics, and other unqualified practitioners in this most important and essential branch of modern surgery and medical science. Until within a comparatively recent period, the practice of dentistry consisted of treatment largely, if not exclusively, of a mere mechanical nature, such as drawing, filling, and cleaning the teeth; and practitioners of the art were neither required nor expected to know anything of the pathological features or surgical necessities of those diseases which rendered their artisanship a necessity to man's relief and comfort. Indeed, the local dentist was frequently the village barber or leech, the watchmaker, or even the blacksmith,—any artisan possessed of a convenient, if not suitable, instrument, and the necessary strength to pull a tooth. In more recent years, however, the necessity for a higher and special education in the art and science of treating the teeth has become widely and generally recognized, and has given rise to a distinct, honorable, and numerous profession. Departments for the teaching of dental science and surgery have been added to the regularly established schools of medicine and surgery, while numerous special colleges of dentistry have sprung up. Many of the latter, unfortunately, as with similar institutions in other branches of learning, are more of a pretense than a fact; mere pseudo establishments, with an outward semblance of educational facilities and forms, but in reality but dishonest shams, gotten up to make money by dispensing, for coin and without requirements of learning, pretended certificates and diplomas of graduation, which give the holder an apparent standing and character in his profession, to which he is not of right entitled. The evil resulting from this abuse has become so pronounced as to have received very general recognition, and there are now to be found in most of the states statutes intended for its correction. The statute under consideration is one of these. As expressed in its title, its purpose is "to insure the better education of practitioners of dental surgery; and to regulate the practice of dentistry." It provides a board composed of expert practitioners, with power to examine and license those who have not graduated elsewhere, and to investigate and pass upon the reputability of schools and colleges issuing certificates or diplomas, and the right of the holders of such diplomas to their possession. The powers thus conferred are broad and comprehensive, and in some respects, at least, must in their nature be final. The judgment of the board, for instance, as to the qualification of an applicant for license by examination, which is largely, if not wholly, discretionary, must of necessity be conclusive. Keller v. Hewitt, 109 Cal. 146. No one would question this. Is the power to pass upon the reputability of a college, or the right of a holder of a diploma, intended to be less discretionary or final? There is nothing in the language of the act in conferring the power to indicate it. The requirement is to "indorse, as satisfactory, diplomas from any reputable dental college, when satisfied of the character of such institution, upon the holder furnishing evidence satisfactory to the board of his or her right to the same." This implies quite as necessarily the exercise of judgment and discretion as in the examination of an applicant as to his fitness. It does not direct the board to act upon the presentation of certain specified evidence prescribed by the statute, but it requires the finding of the facts upon which their action is to be based from evidence which is to be "satisfactory to the board." If the statute required that the applicant make a prescribed showing in a particular manner, and that thereupon the board should indorse his certificate, it might with some reason be said that the act was more ministerial than judicial, and that, upon the prescribed showing being made, the board could not refuse to act. Such a case would be within the doctrine of Wood v. Strother, 76 Cal. 545, and Stockton & V. R. Co. v. Stockton, 51 Cal. 328, relied on by respondent, where the action of the tribunal depended upon a certain event, and, that event being shown to have in fact occurred, the adverse determination of the tribunal whose duty it was to act was held not so far discretionary as to conclude the question; the true test, as held in Wood v. Strother, being whether the determination of the tribunal "is intended by law to be final."

But here the question whether those facts which are to move the action of the board have been shown does not depend upon some specified piece of evidence fixed by the statute, but upon such facts as will satisfy the board. The whole question, in other words, as to the facts, is committed to its discretionary judgment; and that its determination in such a case is conclusive, and not subject to the mandatory control of the courts, there can be no doubt. In People, Sheppard, v. Illinois State Bd. of Dental Examiners, 110 Ill. 180, where the statute made it the duty of the board to issue a license to a "regular graduate of any reputable dental college," having a full course of lectures and instruction in dental surgery, mandamus was sought to compel the issuance of a certificate to one who alleged that he held a diploma from a "reputable dental college," and that there was annually delivered at said college "a full course of lectures." In sustaining a demurrer to the petition, it is said: "Whether a college be reputable or not is not a legal question, but a question of fact. So, also, are the requirements in regard to the annual delivery of a full course of lectures and instruction. These questions of fact are by the act submitted to the decision of the board, not in so many words, but by the plainest and most necessary implication. 44 L. R. A.

Their action is to be predicated upon the existence of the requisite facts, and no other tribunal is authorized to investigate them, and of necessity, therefore, they must do so. The act of ascertaining and determining what are the facts is in its nature judicial. It involves investigation, judgment, and discretion." And it was held that mandamus would not lie to control the discretion thus vested, and that no ground of relief was stated. Under a statute of Missouri providing for the issuance by the state board of health of a certificate to practise medicine to "all who shall furnish satisfactory proof of having received diplomas or licenses from legally chartered medical institutions in good standing," if the diploma be found to be genuine, and the person named therein be the one presenting it, etc., it was held that the board was vested with discretionary powers involving matters of judgment which could not be controlled by mandamus; and that a petition alleging a state of facts which under the act should apparently entitle him to a certificate, but which showed that the application had been acted on by the board and denied, did not state a case for relief. State, Granville, v. Gregory, 83 Mo. 123, 53 Am. Rep. 565. To the same effect are Williams v. State Bd. of Dental Examiners, 93 Tenn. 619, and State, Powell, v. State Medical Examining Board, 32 Minn. 324, 50 Am. Rep. 575. See also Berryman v. Perkins, 55 Cal. 483; Jacobs v. San Francisco City and County Supers. 100 Cal. 121; Fairchild v. Wall, 93 Cal. 401.

The facts alleged do not bring the case within the doctrine of Keller v. Hewitt, 109 Cal. 146, relied on by petitioner. In that case the board of education had examined Keller for a teacher's certificate, and, as alleged in the petition, had found that he was in all respects qualified, and in every way fit and competent, to receive a certificate; but the board had, nevertheless, determined not to issue it. We held that, upon these facts, the writ would lie to compel the issuance of the certificate; that notwithstanding the board's discretionary power in determining the question of fitness, "when under the law and their rules, the question of an applicant's fitness to receive a certificate has been determined in his favor, the limit of the board's discretionary functions in the premises has been reached, and a plain legal duty results." In the present case the tribunal has acted, and has determined against the petitioner. The allegations that the American College of Dental Surgery "was a reputable college; and there existed and was at the command of defendants sufficient evidence of such fact," and that petitioner furnished "evidence satisfactory to defendants that he was the person named in said diploma," are not the legal equivalent of an allegation that the defendant board have so found. In the language of the court in People, Sheppard, v. Illinois State Bd. of Dental Examiners, 110 Ill. 180, on this precise point: "The demurrer here does not admit that the board of dental examiners found that the college at which the relator was graduated was reputable, although it does admit that to be the fact. But, since the board cannot be compelled to decide the question that way, although the evidence might clearly sustain it in doing so, there is no ground for mandamus."

It follows that the petition states no cause of action, and the judgment and order must be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to sustain the demurrer. It is so ordered.

I concur: Harrison, J.

Garoutte, J., concurring:

I entirely agree with Mr. Justice Van Fleet as to the true construction of the legislative act here involved, but am compelled to dissent from the conclusion arrived at, to the effect that the petition does not state sufficient facts to entitle petitioner to the relief sought. At one stage of the proceedings the board of dental examiners has a pure ministerial duty to perform, viz. to indorse the applicant's diploma as satisfactory; and that stage of the proceedings is reached when the board is satisfied that the character of the institution issuing the diploma is that of a reputable dental college, taken in connection with the further condition that the holder of the diploma has also furnished "evidence satisfactory to the board of his or her right to the same." If the holder of the diploma complies with these two demands of the statute, then I say there is nothing remaining for the board of examiners to do but to indorse the diploma as satisfactory,—an act in no sense judicial, and one to compel the performance of which a mandate will issue. Eliminating from the allegations of the petition all immaterial matters, it still fairly shows a compliance with the two foregoing demands of the statute. It is alleged "that, at the time of making such presentation and demand, he (petitioner) furnished to defendants evidence satisfactory to the defendants that he was the person named in said diploma, and that the same had been issued to him as stated in said diploma." We also find the further allegation: "Plaintiff, on his information and belief, alleges that at the time defendants refused to indorse his said diploma and issue said certificate, that the defendants, as such board of dental examiners, were satisfied the said college was a reputable college." The latter allegation is strictly in accordance with the terms of the statute, and the former, by a fair and liberal construction, is also sufficient.

Although holding the petition satisfactory in law, still plaintiff's troubles are by no means over. Allegations of fact are not difficult to make. Proof of the facts alleged is the final test of a meritorious case. And here proof of facts to fill the measure furnished by the aforesaid allegations of the petition is wanting. In the answers to the petition, the board denied that it was satisfied that the college issuing the diploma was a reputable medical college, and also denied that satisfactory evidence was furnished to it that petitioner was entitled to said diploma. Upon these issues evidence was introduced and, although findings of fact thereon were made in favor of petitioner, still in view of the construction of the statute, as declared in the main opinion, and in which construction I heartily concur, those findings of fact, as to one of the allegations at least, are without support in the evidence; and a reversal of the judgment necessarily results. The law delegated to the board of examiners the power to hear and determine certain facts, and its determination as to those facts was beyond review by the superior court. The question for the superior court to decide was not as to the correctness of the board's decision, but, rather, What did the board decide? The vitality of petitioner's case is found in the two allegations I have quoted from his petition; and, under the evidence introduced at the hearing before the trial court, it is a certainty that the petitioner did not furnish the board evidence satisfactory to it of his right to the diploma presented. It therefore follows that, as to one of the imperative demands of the statute, petitioner failed in his proof, and the relief asked for must be denied. For these reasons, I concur in the judgment.

Appeal dismissed by counsel pending application for rehearing.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

PITTSBURG, CINCINNATI, CHICAGO, & ST LOUIS RAILWAY COMPANY,
Appt.,

v.

Anna B. MOORE, Admr., of Henry E.
Moore, Deceased.

(.....Ind.....)

1. Overruling a demurrer to a bad paragraph of a complaint is not available error if the judgment rests on a good paragraph.

2. An insufficient complaint which was tested by demurrer cannot be aided on appeal by reading into it a fundamental fact from the findings of the jury.

3. An averment that a railroad yard and telegraph office were maintained "at" a certain city, in which there was an ordinance in force regulating speed and signals of trains, and that a telegraph operator was killed while passing from his office to deliver an order to a train in consequence of negligence in running a train in violation of the ordinance, sufficiently shows that the place of injury was within the corporate limits of the city.

NOTE.—As to contracts of railroad relief associations, see also Owens v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (C. C. S. D. Ohio) 1 L. R. A. 75, and note; Baltimore & O. Employees' Relief Assn. v. Post (Pa.) 2 L. R. A. 44; Donald v. Chicago, B. & 44 L. R. A.

Q. R. Co. (Iowa) 38 L. R. A. 493; Pittsburg, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Cox (Ohio) 35 L. R. A. 507; Kinney v. Baltimore & O. Employees' Relief Assn. (W. Va.) 15 L. R. A. 144; and Eckman v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (Ill.) 38 L. R. A. 750.

4. The violation of an ordinance regulating speed and signals of trains is not a risk assumed by a railroad employee, but obedience to the ordinance is a duty owing by the railroad company to its employees.
5. A contract that a railroad company shall be relieved of liability for the injury or death of an employee by the acceptance of benefits from a relief fund which the railroad company helps to provide, but leaving the employee or those entitled to maintain an action for his death the option of choosing the benefits of the relief fund or bringing an action against the company, does not violate Acts 1893, chap. 180, p. 294, § 5, prohibiting contracts to relieve railroad companies from liability to employees.
6. A widow's release of a right of action for the death of her husband does not affect her right to maintain an action for her child in her representative capacity, under Burns's Rev. Stat. 1894, § 285 (Horner's Rev. Stat. 1897, § 284).

(March 30, 1899.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Miami County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. N. O. Ross and G. E. Ross, for appellant:

The act of March 4, 1893, regulating the liability of railroad and other corporations other than municipal to their employees in certain cases (Acts 1893, p. 294; Horner's Rev. 1896, §§ 52055-52066; Burns's Rev. 1894, §§ 7063-7087), is unconstitutional and void for the following reasons: (a) It violates § 23, art. 1, of the Constitution of the state of Indiana; (b) it violates § 23, art. 4, of the Constitution of the state of Indiana; (c) it violates the 5th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States; (d) it violates § 1 of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

Cooley, Const. Law, 391, 434; Wally v. Kennedy, 2 Yerg. 554, 24 Am. Dec. 511; Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 32 L. ed. 623; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923; Re Grice, 79 Fed. Rep. 627; Vanzant v. Waddel, 2 Yerg. 270; State, McCue, v. Ramsey County Sheriff, 48 Minn. 236; Lavalley v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 40 Minn. 249; Nichols v. Walter, 37 Minn. 264; Deppe v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 36 Iowa, 52; Johnson v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 43 Minn. 222, 8 L. R. A. 419; Fick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220; Santa Clara County v. Southern P. R. Co. 18 Fed. Rep. 385; Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 31 L. ed. 650, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 24; State, Randolph, v. Wood, 49 N. J. L. 85; Edmonds v. Herbrandson, 2 N. D. 270, 14 L. R. A. 925; Lodi Twp. v. State, 51 N. J. L. 402, 6 L. R. A. 56; United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 23 L. ed. 563; Baldwin v. Franks, 120 U. S. 678, 36 L. ed. 766; State, Richards, v. Hammer, 42 N. J. L. 436; Millett v. People, 117 Ill. 294, 57 Am. Rep. 869; Holden v. James, 11 Mass. 396, 6 Am. Dec. 174; Shaver v. Pennsylvania Co. 71 Fed. Rep. 931; Frorer v. 44 L. R. A.

People, School Fund, 141 Ill. 171, 16 L. R. A. 492; State v. Julow, 129 Mo. 163, 29 L. R. A. 257; Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 515, 30 Am. Rep. 323; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 106, 50 Am. Rep. 636; Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 746, 28 L. ed. 585; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389; State v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 6 L. R. A. 621; People v. Mara, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34; State v. Divine, 98 N. C. 778; People, Manhattan Sav. Inst., v. Otis, 90 N. Y. 48; State v. Fire Creek Coal & C. Co. 33 W. Va. 188, 6 L. R. A. 359; Smith v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 75 Ala. 449; Godcharles v. Wigeman, 113 Pa. 431; State v. Loomis, 115 Mo. 307, 21 L. R. A. 789; Com. v. Perry, 155 Mass. 117, 14 L. R. A. 325; Ramsey v. People, 142 Ill. 380, 17 L. R. A. 853; Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79; Ex parte Kubaack, 85 Cal. 274, 9 L. R. A. 482; Low v. Rees Printing Co. 41 Neb. 127, 24 L. R. A. 702; Tiedeman, Pol. Power, pp. 4, 233; Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 3, 27 L. ed. 836; San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Wilson (Tex. App.) 19 S. W. 910; Harding v. People, 160 Ill. 459, 32 L. R. A. 445; Com v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 1 Ohio N. P. 215; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 660; Warren v. Charlestown, 2 Gray, 84; Allen v. Louisiana, 103 U. S. 80, 26 L. ed. 318; Poindexter v. Greenhow, 114 U. S. 270, 29 L. ed. 185; Com., Fertig, v. Patton, 88 Pa. 258; State, Columbus, v. Mitchell, 31 Ohio St. 592; People, Lee, v. Chautauque County Supers. 43 N. Y. 10; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 28 L. ed. 1145; State, Corwin, v. Indiana & O. Oil Gas & Min. Co. 120 Ind. 575, 6 L. R. A. 579, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 758; Logan v. Stogsdale, 123 Ind. 372, 8 L. R. A. 58; Griffin v. State, Griffiths, 119 Ind. 520; Meshmeier v. State, 11 Ind. 482.

The agreement set up as a defense to the complaint in the second paragraph of answer was not void under § 5 of the above-named act, but was valid and constituted a good defense to the act for the following reasons: (a) It was not prohibited by said section for the reason that it was not a contract between appellant and the decedent, but a contract between the Voluntary Relief Department of the Pennsylvania Lines West of Pittsburgh and the decedent; and the act being in derogation of the common law should be strictly construed; (b) the contract was not an agreement to release appellant from liability for injuries that the decedent might sustain, but it provided a method of compensation otherwise than by suit, which, if accepted should be in full compensation for the damages sustained; (c) because the appellee, after the right of action accrued, had the right to elect which of the two methods of remuneration she would accept, and having accepted one was estopped from seeking further compensation by recourse to the other; (d) that § 5 of the above act contravenes the state and Federal Constitutions and is void.

Graft v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (Pa.) 6 Cent. Rep. 633; Fuller v. Baltimore & O. Employees' Relief Asso. 67 Md. 433; Com. v.

Equitable Beneficial Asso. 137 Pa. 412; Spitze v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 75 Md. 162; Johnson v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 163 Pa. 127; Owens v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 35 Fed. Rep. 715, 1 L. R. A. 75; State, Black, v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 36 Fed. Rep. 655; Martin v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 152; Donald v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 93 Iowa, 284, 33 L. R. A. 492; Vickers v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 71 Fed. Rep. 139; Otis v. Pennsylvania Co. 71 Fed. Rep. 136; Shaver v. Pennsylvania Co. 71 Fed. Rep. 931; Maine v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (Iowa) 70 N. W. 630; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Curtis, 51 Neb. 442; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Bell, 44 Neb. 44; Eckman v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 169 Ill. 312, 38 L. R. A. 750; Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Cow, 55 Ohio St. 499, 35 L. R. A. 507; Ringle v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 164 Pa. 529; Lease v. Pennsylvania Co. 10 Ind. App. 47; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Miller, 40 U. S. App. 448, 76 Fed. Rep. 439, 22 C. C. A. 264.

If appellee was entitled to a judgment at all, she was entitled to recover but $4,000 instead of $8,000 and the judgment should be so modified.

The action was a survival action, and the right to remuneration was fixed on the death of the decedent. He having left a wife and one child at his death, each was entitled to one half of the amount recovered, and the child having died after its father, and before suit, the child's right did not survive but died with her.

Spitze v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 75 Md. 162; Vickers v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 71 Fed. Rep. 139; Seeley v. Citizens' Traction Co. 179 Pa. 334; Morris v. Great Northern R. Co. 67 Minn. 74; Vandervelden v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 61 Fed. Rep. 54; Barker v. Northern P. R. Co. 65 Fed. Rep. 460; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Curtis, 51 Neb. 442; Kreuzen v. Forty-Second Street, M. & St. N. Ave. R. Co. 38 N. Y. S. R. 461; Schmidt v. Menasha Woodenware Co. 99 Wis. 300; Gibson v. Western N. Y. & P. R. Co. 164 Pa. 142; Lovejoy v. Murray, 3 Wall. 1, 18 L. ed. 129; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Wymore, 40 Neb. 645.

Messrs. Charles A. Cole, Nelson & Myers, Michael F. Mahoney, and McConnell & Jenkins, for appellee:

The contract or agreement alleged and set out in the second paragraph of answer is expressly prohibited by § 5 of the act of March 4, 1893.

A railroad company cannot contract in advance with its employees for the waiver and release of statutory liability imposed upon it; and a contract in contravention of such a statute is void.

7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 863; Kansas P. R. Co. v. Peavey, 29 Kan. 172, 44 Am. Rep. 630; Rose v. Des Moines Valley R. Co. 39 Iowa, 246; O'Neil v. Lake Superior Iron Co. 63 Mich. 690; Carlton v. Western & A. R. Co. 81 Ga. 531; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Spangler, 44 Ohio St. 471; Roesner v. Hermann, 8 Fed. Rep. 782.

The true measure of recovery is the pecuniary loss of those entitled to recover.

44 L. R. A.

The loss to his child of the father's care and training is one element of damages.

Howard County Comrs. v. Legg, 93 Ind. 523, 47 Am. Rep. 390.

The loss to the wife of a means of support in the service and assistance of her husband is one element of the measure of damages.

Howard County Comrs. v. Legg, 93 Ind. 523, 47 Am. Rep. 390; Korady v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 131 Ind. 261.

In examining the verdict under a motion for a venire de novo, mere conclusions of law, mere evidence and findings, outside of the issues, will be disregarded; and if, when stripped of such improper matters, the verdict is sufficient to sustain a judgment for either party, a venire de novo will not be granted.

Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Taft, 2 Ind. App. 237.

Moore had the right to assume that appellant, in the operation of any and all trains that might have occasion to pass over its tracks, in front of the office at which he was employed, would observe all the rules of the company, as well as obey and respect the ordinances in force of the city of Logansport, upon the question of the operation of trains, within its corporate limits.

Madison & I. R. Co. v. Taffe, 37 Ind. 376.

A railroad company cannot escape liability for death of an employee killed while working on the track in the private grounds of the company by its train moving at a greater rate of speed within the city limits than allowed by an ordinance of the city, upon the ground that such ordinance was only for the protection of the general public.

East St. Louis Connecting R. Co. v. Eggmann, 170 Ill. 538; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Gilbert, 157 Ill. 354; Bluedorn v. Missouri P. R. Co. 108 Mo. 439; Petty v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 88 Mo. 306; Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. McMullen, 117 Ind. 441.

The intestate's right of action against the appellant for bodily injuries died with him, and is forever extinct. It does not survive to his widow and child. There can be no recovery for their benefit, for the bodily injuries of the intestate. But the statute creates a new right of action founded upon a new grievance, namely, causing the death of the intestate, and it is for the injury sustained thereby, by the widow and child of the intestate.

Jeffersonville R. Co. v. Swayne, 26 Ind. 477; Whitford v. Panama R. Co. 23 N. Y. 465.

Inasmuch as the statute does not transfer the right of action to the party injured to his personal representatives, but gives a new right of action in which the damages are to be assessed only with reference to the injury resulting from the death to the beneficiaries, nothing can be allowed on account of the mental or physical suffering or other injury to the deceased.

Kansas P. R. Co. v. Cutter, 19 Kan. 83; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Barron, 5 Wall. 90, 18 L. ed. 591; Blake v. Midland R. Co. 18 Q. B. 93; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Zebe, 33 Pa. 318; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Henderson, 51 Pa. 315; McKeever v. Market Street R. Co.

59 Cal. 294; Booth, Street Railways, 555; Tiffany, Death by Wrongful Act, § 168; Cherokee & P. Coal & Min. Co. v. Limb, 47 Kan. 469.

Since a new right of action in favor of the widow and child of the intestate is created by the statute, and since his right of action perishes with him, and is forever extinct, he could not make any binding contract respecting such new right of action.

Jeffersonville R. Co. v. Swayne, 26 Ind. 484; Doyle v. Fitchburg R. Co. 162 Mass. 46, 25 L. R. A. 157; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Hinzle, 82 Tex. 623.

Hadley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellee brought this action to recover damages for the death of her husband, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of appellant. The complaint is in three paragraphs, to each of which a demurrer was overruled. The answer was in three paragraphs, a demurrer to the second of which was sustained. The reply to the third paragraph of answer was in three paragraphs, and a demurrer to the third paragraph thereof was overruled. The cause thus at issue was tried by the jury, which returned a special verdict assessing the plaintiff's damages at $8,000. A judgment for $8,000 was rendered in favor of the appellee. The action of the court upon the demurrers, and in overruling appellant's motion for a new trial, for a venire de novo, for judgment on special verdict, in arrest of judgment, and to modify the judgment, is separately assigned as error.

The principal facts covered by the complaint are as follows: On the 5th day of July, 1893, plaintiff's decedent, Henry E. Moore, entered the employ of appellant, as night operator, at its yard office in the city of Logansport, where and in which capacity he continued until February 16, 1894, when he received injuries resulting in his death; that on the fatal night, while engaged in discharging the duties imposed by his said employment, about 8:45 P. M., he had received by wire, and under directions of appellant had delivered, an order to the conductor and engineer of freight train No. 77, while the same was running west through the yards at a rate of 4 or 5 miles an hour; and when decedent turned from delivering said message, to return to his post of duty, and while in the line of duty, and without fault or negligence on his part, one of appellant's locomotive engineers, in the employ of appellant and in charge of appellant's locomotive drawing appellant's wreck train upon appellant's main track, so carelessly and negligently ran said locomotive and wreck train eastward through said yards, with the engine reversed, the tender in front, and so carelessly and negligently managed and operated said locomotive and train, without giving any warning, or displaying any light, or ringing a bell or sounding a whistle, and at a speed of 20 miles an hour, as to, and did, without warning and without notice to plaintiff's decedent, negligently run upon and over the body of plaintiff's decedent, causing his death. In the second paragraph it is further averred that Logansport is a city of 18,000 inhabitants, and at the time of the injury to plaintiff's decedent said city had ordinances in force requiring trains to be run through said city after sunset at a speed not exceeding 6 miles per hour, and that trains and locomotives being run backward, or with tender in front, should carry signal lights in front, and should be announced by ringing the bell and sounding the whistle, and that said engineer so in the employ of appellant, and so in charge of appellant's said locomotive and wreck train, negligently ran said locomotive and tender backward at a speed of 20 miles per hour, within the limits of said town, without ringing the bell or sounding the whistle, or displaying any signal light in front of said tender, in violation of said city ordinance. Appellee concedes that the complaint is grounded upon the first branch of the fourth clause of what is known as the "Coemployees' Liability Act" (Burns's Rev. Stat. 1894, § 7083), which reads as follows: "Where such injury was caused by the negligence of any person in the service of such corporation who has charge of any . . . locomotive engine or train upon a railway."

Appellant's learned counsel first assail the complaint for failure to disclose in either paragraph some duty owing by appellant to the deceased that had not been performed, their contention being that all the perils pleaded were obvious and ordinary risks assumed by the deceased. When it clearly appears from the record that the judgment rests upon a good paragraph of complaint, the overruling of a demurrer to a bad paragraph is not available error on appeal. Therefore, without considering the sufficiency of the first paragraph of complaint, which is urged upon our attention, we pass to the second, which sets out the facts in greater detail, and to which the special verdict seems to have been especially directed.

Appellee insists that, if any fundamental fact is insufficiently alleged, we may read it into the complaint from the findings of the jury. This is not the law. When a pleading is tested by demurrer, it must stand or fall by its own averments. It can find neither weakness nor strength from other parts of the record. American Ins. Co. v. Replogle, 114 Ind. 1-7; Cole v. Gray, 139 Ind. 396-399; Runner v. Scott, 150 Ind. 441. There is no longer any ground for contention over the rule that an employee assumes all the obvious and ordinary perils incident to his employment, and we find nothing in the statute relied upon by appellee to lessen the degree of diligence and responsibility required of the servant for his own protection.

Looking, then, to the facts pleaded in the second paragraph of complaint, for unperformed duty of appellant to the deceased, it is first insisted that it does not sufficiently show that the accident occurred within the corporate limits of the city of Logansport. It is averred that appellant maintained yards, and a telegraph office therein, "at" the city of Logansport; that the deceased was employed as operator in said telegraph office; that it was his duty to receive and deliver orders to train crews passing said office; and in passing from said office to deliver an order to train No. 77, westward bound on the main track, he was required to pass over a number of other tracks, etc., and was killed by the negligent act of the engineer, etc.; that the city of Logansport is an incorporated city of 16,000 inhabitants, and had in force on the fatal night an ordinance, etc. In criminal pleading, in laying the venue, an approved form is to charge that the crime was committed "at Cass county;" and the above averments, we think, sufficiently show that the place of injury was within the corporate limits of the city of Logansport.

While we apply the rule that a servant must look out for his own safety, and heed, at his peril, all open and ordinary dangers, we must also give force to the correlative rule, equally well established, that the servant himself, observing due care, has a right to believe, and to rely upon his belief, that the master has done his duty in the promotion of safety; and in this instance the deceased had a right to believe that appellant would obey the city ordinance which forbade the running of trains through the city at a greater rate of speed than 6 miles an hour, and that required all backing trains, or reversed engines with tenders in front, after night, to carry a light in front, and to sound the whistle and ring the bell. A disregard of the ordinance, under § 7083, supra, will extend to the engineer in the employ of appellant, and in charge and management of its locomotive and train; and if said ordinance was disobeyed by said engineer, as averred, the jury would have the right to impute such disobedience as negligence. Swindell v. State, Mawey, 143 Ind. 153-168, 35 L. R. A. 50; Pennsylvania Co. v. Stegemeier, 118 Ind. 305. It will not do to say, as appellant contends, that the deceased, being in the service of the company, and familiar with the needs of the service, in running trains backward and forward through the yards, and sometimes at a great rate of speed, was not entitled to the protection afforded by the ordinance. The power of a city to pass such an ordinance is conferred as a police power for the protection of the public, and all the public; and because the deceased happened to be in the service of the company, within the inhibited territory, presents no reason for depriving him of its protection. East St. Louis Connecting R. Co. v. Eggmann, 170 Ill. 538; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Gilbert, 157 Ill. 354; Bluedorn v. Missouri P. R. Co. 108 Mo. 439. It follows, therefore, that the jury had the right to find, if the evidence warranted, that obedience to the city ordinances was a duty owing by appellant to the deceased, and its violation was not an assumed risk, but negligence of appellant.

The second paragraph of the complaint is good. The special verdict finds that Logansport is an incorporated city of 18,000 inhabitants; that the deceased was injured within the corporate limits of the city; that at the time of the accident the city had in force ordinances forbidding the running of trains through the city at a greater rate of speed than 6 miles an hour; that all engines running backward, with tender in front, after sunset, should display a bright light in front, and ring the bell continuously, while passing through the city; that these ordinances were being violated at the time of the injury. And in other respects the record affirmatively shows that the judgment rests upon the second paragraph of the complaint. We will, therefore, not consider the sufficiency of the first and third paragraphs of complaint.

The next question arises upon the sustaining of the demurrer to the second paragraph of the answer. This answer is pleaded to the whole complaint. It counts upon a contract of membership held by the deceased in an organization known as the "Voluntary Relief Department of the Pennsylvania Lines West of Pittsburgh," of which appellant was one; "that said department and its funds were managed by said lines without expense to the fund, and that they guaranteed the payment of all its obligations, and made up all deficiencies in the fund to meet the payment of all benefits due its members; that said relief department had a set of rules and regulations by which it and its members were governed, and to which all persons assented, and agreed to be bound by, when they became members thereof, a copy of which was filed with, and made a part of, said answer; that the decedent on the 7th day of October, 1893, made application and became a member on the terms of the regulations by which said department was operated, and continued such member until his death; that his application, made over his own signature, contained this express stipulation and agreement, to wit: 'And I agree that the acceptance of benefits from the said relief fund, for injury or death, shall operate as a release of all claims for damages against said company, arising from such injury or death, which could be made by or through me, and that I or my legal representatives will execute such further instrument as may be necessary formally to evidence such acquittance.'" The Book of Regulations (a part of the contract) contained the following further provision, to wit: "Should a member, or his legal representatives, bring suit against either of the companies now associated in administering the relief department, or that may hereafter be associated, for damages on account of injury or death of such member, payment of benefits from the relief fund on account of the same shall not be made until such suit is discontinued. If prosecuted to judgment or compromise, any payment of judgment or amount in compromise shall preclude any claim upon the relief fund for such injury or death." The answer further alleges that the appellee, Anna B. Moore, his then wife, was made his beneficiary in said fund, and, in event of his death, should receive the death benefit therein provided for, which was $500, and that after his death she did receive from said fund, as such death benefit, said sum of $500, and executed and delivered to the appellant her instrument in writing releasing it from all further liability. The question arises, Did the acceptance by the plaintiff of the death benefit from said relief department release her claim against appellant for the wrongful death of her husband, or does her act come under the protecting provisions of § 5, Acts 1893 (Acts 1893, p. 294, chap. 130; Burns's Rev. Stat. 1894, § 7087)? The language of the statute is, "All contracts made by railroads . . . with their employees, or rules, or regulations adopted by any corporation, releasing or relieving it from liability to any employee having a right of action under the provisions of this act, are hereby declared null and void." Appellant insists that the contract set out in said second answer does not come within the provisions of the statute, while the contrary is maintained by the appellee. It will be noted that the inhibition of the statute is against the making of any contract exonerating a railroad company from a future liability to an employee. The statute attempts only to forbid such contracts as release the company from liability to an action under the provisions of the act, and the act provides, and seeks to regulate, no rights of action except such as spring from the negligence of the company or its employees. The only purpose of the statute, therefore, is to prohibit the making of contracts relieving a railroad from liability for future negligence of itself and certain of its employees. Is the contract pleaded such an one? It shows: That a number of railroads constitute the Relief Department of the Pennsylvania Lines West of Pittsburgh, of which appellant was one. That the associated roads assumed control and administration of the department without cost to the fund. That they contribute largely to the fund. That they guarantee that the benefits stipulated for with employees shall be paid in full. That membership therein is voluntary. That the employee is entitled to his benefits, if disabled from any cause,—from sickness, from accident, from his own fault as well as from the fault of the company. If disabled without fault of the company, the living or death benefit may be drawn from the fund without question. If by the fault of the company, he may, after injury, elect whether he will accept the benefits from the fund, or pursue his remedy at law against the company. And that, when he signs the contract the only obligation assumed is that, if injured by the fault of the company, he will not seek double compensation, by pursuing both the relief fund and the company. It further shows, in effect, that when disability comes, and all the facts and conditions are known to him, he is at perfect liberty to then choose between the relief fund and the treasury of the company,—whether he will accept the sure and immediate benefits from the fund, or take his chances in the courts against the company,—and that an adoption of one course shall be held to be an abandonment of the other. This is the essence of the contract pleaded. It bears no semblance to an absolute contract for the release of the company from liability, under the provisions of the statute.

The question here involved is not a new one to the courts. It has long been the law that a railroad shall not contract against liability for its future negligence, as being against public policy, in that such a right would induce carelessness for the safety of employees; and similar contracts with relief associations have often been before the courts of the country for construction. In Johnson v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 163 Pa. 127, the court, having under review a contract in all material respects like the one here, says: "But, even in cases of injury through the company's negligence, there is no waiver of any right of action that the person injured may thereafter be entitled to. It is not the signing of the contract, but the acceptance of benefits after the accident, that constitutes the release. The injured party, therefore, is not stipulating for the future, but settling for the past. He is not agreeing to exempt the company from liability for negligence, but accepting compensation for an injury already caused thereby." In the case of Ringle v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 164 Pa. 529, in construing a contract the same in terms as this one, the court says: "In the present case there is an additional agreement that the plaintiff shall 'execute such further instrument as may be necessary formally to evidence such acquittance,' and it is argued that no such release has been executed by plaintiff. But it is not necessary that it should be. The acceptance of benefits is the substance of the release, and the agreement for a further instrument is by its express terms a mere formality for convenience of evidence." In the case of Otis v. Pennsylvania Co. 71 Fed. Rep. 136, the contract considered was identical with the one pleaded in this answer; and, concerning it, Baker, J., says: "As a general proposition, it is unquestionably true that a railroad company cannot relieve itself from responsibility to an employee for an injury resulting from its own negligence, by any contract entered into for that purpose before the happening of the injury, and, if the contract under consideration is of that character, it must be held to be invalid. But, upon a careful examination, it will be seen that it contains no stipulation that the plaintiff should not be at liberty to bring an action for damages in case he sustained an injury through the negligence of the defendant. He still had as perfect a right to sue for his injury as though the contract had never been entered into. Before the contract was entered into, his right of action for an injury resulting from the defendant's negligence was limited to a suit against it for the recovery of damages therefor. By the contract he was given an election either to receive the benefits stipulated for, or to waive his rights to the benefits, and pursue his remedy at law. He voluntarily agreed that, when an injury happened to him, he would then determine whether he would accept the benefits secured by the contract, or waive them, and retain his right of action for damages." In Shaver v. Pennsylvania Co. 71 Fed. Rep. 931, Ricks, J., reached the same conclusion from the consideration of a similar contract. Again, in Pittsburg, C. O. & St. L. R. Co. v. Cox, 55 Ohio St. 497, 35 L. R. A. 507, the supreme court of Ohio expressed its view of a similar contract in the following words: "This claim arises, we think, from a misconception of the contract, —in assuming that by the contract the employee releases some future right of action against the company. On a previous page we have undertaken to show that such is not the case; that there is no waiver of any cause of action which the employee may become entitled to, and that it is not the signing of the contract, but the acceptance of benefits after the accident, that constitutes the release. When that occurs, he is not stipulating for the future; he is but settling for the past. He accepts compensation for injury already received." The same view is held by the supreme court of Iowa, announced in Donald v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 93 Iowa, 284, 33 L. R. A. 492; and by the supreme court of Maryland in Fuller v. Baltimore & O. Employees' Relief Asso. 67 Md. 433; and by the supreme court of Nebraska in Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Curtis, 51 Neb. 442; and to the same effect is the case of Maine v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (Iowa) 70 N. W. 630, and that of Lease v. Pennsylvania Co. 10 Ind. App. 47. The contract forbidden by the statute is one relieving the company from liability for the future negligence of itself and employees. The contract pleaded does not provide that the company shall be relieved from liability. It expressly recognizes that enforceable liability may arise, and only stipulates that, if the employee shall prosecute a suit against the company to final judgment, he shall thereby forfeit his right to the relief fund, and, if he accepts compensation from the relief fund, he shall thereby forfeit his right of action against the company. It is nothing more nor less than a contract for a choice between sources of compensation, where but a single one existed, and it is the final choice—the acceptance of one against the other—that gives validity to the transaction.

But appellee contends that some of the cases cited above arose in states having no similar statute, and that the question of the railroad's contractual relief from liability was propounded as being against public policy, and not as in violation of a statute, and hence should not be accepted as authority. The answer to this is that the statute also rests upon public policy, or it has nothing whatever to stand upon. The right to contract upon subjects of themselves lawful, by persons sui juris, is beyond legislative control, so long as the right is exercised without injury to the public. The right to contract is inherent, and is inseparably connected with the right to own and control property, and "is a primary prerogative of freedom." 2 Wharton, Contr. § 1061. Therefore, in construing the act in question, it must be assumed that the legislature intended to prohibit only such contracts as injuriously affected the public; and can it be said that a contract providing that in the future, when an injury may be suffered, the injured party shall then be free to choose which of two remedies will be most useful to him and most to be preferred, is against public policy? We do not see why, and are constrained to hold that the contract pleaded in the second answer is not within the inhibition of § 7087, supra, and that the same may be pleaded as a defense. We are mindful that this court, in the case of Pittsburg, C. O. & St. L. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Ind.) 49 N. E. 582, held a view of this question at variance with the opinion herein expressed, and which, after a more thorough examination of the decided cases, we find to be in conflict with the very decided weight of authority. Indeed, the cases seem now to be in substantial accord. The case of Miller v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 65 Fed. Rep. 305 (the only case relied upon as authority upon this question), was subsequently appealed to the United States circuit court of appeals, eighth district, and the doctrine of the lower court inferentially disapproved, by the court announcing, in substance, that the authorities were all the other way, though the question here was not decided, as not being necessary to a disposition of the case. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Miller, 40 U. S. App. 448, 76 Fed. Rep. 439, 22 C. C. A. 264. So far as the case of Pittsburg, C. O. & St. L. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Ind.) 49 N. E. 582, is in conflict with the opinion herein announced, the same is disapproved.

As before stated, the second answer goes to the whole complaint. The plaintiff, as administratrix, sues for the use of herself, as widow, and for the infant child of the decedent, under Burns's Rev. Stat. 1894, § 285 (Horner's Rev. Stat. 1897, § 284). Under this statute, if the intestate had a cause of action against appellant for his injuries, death ensuing therefrom, a right of action accrued to his personal representative for the use of his next of kin. Whether the right of the administratrix was but a continuation of the intestate's right to sue, as contended by appellant, or whether it was a newly-created right, as our cases hold, is unimportant here. However it may be, the right exists only by virtue of the statute, and exists, not for the benefit of the intestate's estate, but as a source of compensation to those who by the death become the parties injured by the wrongful act of the defendant. Hilliker v. Citizens' Street R. Co. (Ind.) 1 Repr. 529, 52 N. E. 607.

The deceased at the time of his death had not elected whether he would accept compensation from the relief fund, or seek his damages by action at law against the appellant. Subsequent to his death the plaintiff, as widow, and who was named in the contract as the sole beneficiary of the death benefit, accepted the stipulated amount, $500, in full satisfaction, and executed to appellant a release from further liability. Appellant contends that, since the widow was the sole beneficiary named in the contract with the relief department, her acceptance of the full sum extinguished all further claim against the company. We cannot assent to this proposition. Before death came to Moore, he had a cause of action against appellant that he had not released. Upon his death the law conferred a right of action upon his representative for the use of his next of kin, for the use of his child as well as for the use of his widow; and no act of the latter, without the lawful consent of the child, will deprive the child of its benefit. The widow could only release what she was entitled to. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Wymore, 40 Neb. 645. The answer avers that after the death of her husband, and after she had become a beneficiary in a right of action against the company, without fraud she agreed with appellant, and accepted the $500 death benefit in full satisfaction of her claim growing out of the death of her husband; and there is perceived no sufficient reason why she should not be bound by it. But her release in no way affected the rights of the child, and for the use of the child's estate, in her representative capacity, the plaintiff has the right to maintain this action. It follows that as the second answer was pleaded to the whole complaint, and is good only as to a part, the demurrer thereto was properly sustained.

The third paragraph of answer was partial, and was addressed only to so much of the complaint as sought a recovery for the use of the widow. It averred that after the death of her husband, in consideration of $500, she fully released the appellant. The plaintiff replied to the third answer in three paragraphs. In the third paragraph she set up substantially the same facts and exhibits as were set out in the second paragraph of answer, and averred that the $500 was received by her under and in pursuance of her deceased husband's contract with said relief department, and not otherwise, and that said contract was invalid and void. To this paragraph of reply a demurrer was overruled, which forms the basis for appellant's fifth assignment of error. The question presented by this reply is the same as that considered at length as arising upon the second paragraph of answer, and, for the reasons there given, we hold that the court erred in overruling the demurrer thereto. For this error the cause must be reversed.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded, with instructions to sustain appellant's demurrer to the third paragraph of reply to third paragraph of answer, and for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

Willis JOHNSON, Appt.,

v.

CHARLESTON & SAVANNAH RAILWAY COMPANY, Respt.

(55 S. C. 152.)

1. The release of the liability of a railroad company by an employee's election to accept the benefit of a relief fund in lieu of his right of action for damages is not prohibited by Const. 1895, art. 9, § 15, giving such employees the same rights and remedies allowed to persons who are not employees in certain cases, and providing that any waiver of the benefit of that section shall be null and void.
2. A contract by which the acceptance of benefits from a relief organization by a railroad employee who has been injured will operate to release the railroad company from liability to damages, but which gives him the option to accept such benefits or to decline them and retain his right of action against the railroad company, is not against public policy.

On rehearing.

3. A constitutional question is not involved in a case so as to require the calling in of the judges of the circuit courts to assist in its decision upon failure of the judges of the supreme court to agree, under the provisions of Const. art. 5, § 12, where the record does not show that the question was presented to and considered by the trial judge.
4. Although a constitutional question is involved in a case, yet the circuit judges need not be called in to assist in its decision under Const. art. 5, § 12, in case of failure of the judges of the supreme court to agree, if there is another question involved not requiring a construction of the Constitution, which is decisive, and upon which the conclusions reached manifestly turned.

NOTE.—See also Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Moore (Ind.) ante, 638, and footnote thereto.
44 L. R. A.

See also 44 L. R. A. 638.

(Pope and Gary, JJ., dissent from propositions 1 and 2.)

(January 16, 1899.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Charleston County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. St. Julien Jervey, for appellant:

The contract was null and void as against public policy.

1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 296; 1 Fonbl. Eq. Bk. 4, chap. 4, § 4.

If the "contract binds the maker to do something opposed to the public policy of the state, or nation, or conflicts with the wants, interest, or prevailing sentiment of the people, or our obligations to the world, or is repugnant to the morals of the times, it is void, however solemnly the same may be made."

Greenhood, Public Policy, 1.

The general rule undoubtedly is that a contract to do an act which is prohibited by statute, or which is contrary to public policy, is void, and cannot be enforced in a court of justice.

McConnell v. Kitchens, 20 S. C. 438, 47

Am. Rep. 845; Bishop, Contracts, §§ 59-473; Beach, Contracts, §§ 1415, 1502.

A corporation cannot provide by contract against liability for negligence.

Hutchinson, Corporations, §§ 260-262, 584; Bailey, Master & Servant, 475; New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357, 21 L. ed. 627; Stinson v. New York C. R. Co. 32 N. Y. 337, 88 Am. Dec. 332; Swindler v. Hilliard, 2 Rich. L. 286, 45 Am. Dec. 732; Cooley, Torts, 687; Greenwood, Public Policy, 528; Roesner v. Hermann, 8 Fed. Rep. 792; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Spangler, 44 Ohio St. 471, 58 Am. Rep. 833; Johnson v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 86 Va. 975; Hisong v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 91 Ala. 514.

A contract which violates the provisions of a public statute is contrary to public policy and void.

Beach, Contracts, § 1441; Bemis v. Becker, 1 Kan. 226.

Constitution 1895, art. 9, § 15, both declares and extends the common law on the subject.

Kansas P. R. Co. v. Peavey, 29 Kan. 169, 44 Am. Rep. 630; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Spangler, 44 Ohio St. 471, 58 Am. Rep. 833; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Eubanks, 48 Ark. 460.

Contracts to do acts that are illegal, criminal, or contrary to public policy, or to refrain from doing what the law requires, are absolutely void.

28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 477.

This subsequent release cannot be viewed as a new and independent contract, because every part and parcel of it, including the release itself, is stipulated for in the original contract.

A void act is one which is entirely null, not binding on either party, and not susceptible of ratification.

28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 478.

A person who has derived benefit from a contract which is void as against public policy is not estopped thereby to defend against such contract when it is sought to be enforced against him.

Brown v. First Nat. Bank, 137 Ind. 655, 24 L. R. A. 206; Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. 258, 6 L. ed. 468; Root v. Stevenson, 24 Ind. 115; Beach, Contracts, § 1499.

When a contract is declared void as against public policy, it is so declared, not in the interest of either of the parties, but in the interest of the public. The defense is allowed, not for the sake of the defendant, but for the sake of the law itself.

Bailey, Master's Liability, 478.

It cannot be rendered valid by invoking the doctrine of estoppel.

Brown v. First Nat. Bank, 137 Ind. 655, 24 L. R. A. 206; Miller v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 65 Fed. Rep. 307.

Messrs. Mordecai & Gadsden, for respondent:

The courts of this country have always encouraged the settlement of disputes and the compromise of actions, and this is all that membership in this association includes.

In a very large percentage of these cases the injury results from the undisputed carelessness of the employee himself, and no accident L. R. A.

tion against the company results therefrom; but if such an employee is a member of the Relief and Hospital Department he is paid the benefits by that association just the same as if he had an absolute and undisputed right of action against the company.

There is an inherent right of a man to compromise and settle any cause of action which may have accrued to him.

Price v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 33 S. C. 556.

The decisions have sustained the contract now under consideration.

Johnson v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 103 Pa. 127; Graft v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (Pa.) 8 Atl. 206; Fuller v. Baltimore & O. Employees' Relief Assn. 67 Md. 433; Spitze v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 75 Md. 162; Ringle v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 164 Pa. 529; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Wymore, 40 Neb. 645; Donald v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 93 Iowa, 284, 33 L. R. A. 492; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Bell, 44 Neb. 44; Maine v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (Iowa) 70 N. W. 630; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Curtis, 51 Neb. 442; Lease v. Pennsylvania Co. 10 Ind. App. 47; Pittsburg, C. O. & St. L. R. Co. v. Cox, 55 Ohio St. 497, 35 L. R. A. 507; Eckman v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 169 Ill. 312, 38 L. R. A. 750; Owens v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 35 Fed. Rep. 715, 1 L. R. A. 75; State, Black, v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 36 Fed. Rep. 655; Martin v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 125; Vickers v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 71 Fed. Rep. 139; Otis v. Pennsylvania Co. 71 Fed. Rep. 136; Shaver v. Pennsylvania Co. 71 Fed. Rep. 931; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Miller, 40 U. S. App. 448, 76 Fed. Rep. 441, 22 C. C. A. 264.

Pope, J., filed the following opinion:

This action for damages came on for trial before his honor Judge R. C. Watts. The hearing was confined to an oral demurrer to the second affirmative defense set up in the answer, which demurrer was overruled, and from the order of Judge Watts overruling the same an appeal is now presented to this court. It will be proper, therefore, to reproduce the pleadings, to the end that our ruling may be properly understood.

Complaint (caption omitted): "The complaint of Willis Johnson against the Charleston & Savannah Railway Company, defendant herein, respectfully sheweth: (1) That the defendant was, at the time hereinafter mentioned, and now is, a corporation duly created and existing under the laws of the state aforesaid. (2) That the plaintiff was, on or about the 16th day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-six, in the employ of the defendant company as a fireman, and was there actively engaged at work on a train of said defendant company, running between Charleston and Savannah. (3) That while so engaged, at Ridgeland, in the county of Beaufort and state aforesaid, as fireman on train proceeding from Savannah to Charleston, under charge and control of Robert Smart, engineer, it became the plaintiff's duty to stand upon a certain platform, on which wood was piled, and from said platform to load the tender with fuel, by throwing sticks of wood therein. That, after supplying the tender with wood, as aforesaid, on a signal that the engine was about to move, the plaintiff stepped to the edge of the said platform, and thence endeavored to step onto the engine. (4) That, by reason of the broken and unsound condition of the said platform which caused the fall of the plaintiff, and the sills on which it rested, the said platform gave way under the weight of the plaintiff, and forcibly precipitated him upon the iron structure of the engine. (5) That the broken and unsound condition of the said platform which caused the fall of the plaintiff, as aforesaid, was the result of the carelessness and negligence of the defendant in not keeping said platform in good, reasonable, and safe repair. (6) That, by reason of the fall aforesaid, the plaintiff sustained serious wounds and bruises in his arm, side, and leg, and also injuries of an internal nature, causing him severe bodily pain and suffering, so that he is not able to perform his accustomed labor. That he has already expended a considerable amount of money for medicines and medical attendance, and is advised by his physicians that his said injuries will probably disable him permanently from performing such labor as he was heretofore capable of performing, and will continue to cause him pain and require medical attention and medicine for the rest of his life. (7) That, by reason of the carelessness and negligence of the defendant, as hereinbefore set forth, the plaintiff has been damaged ten thousand dollars, wherefore the plaintiff demands judgment against the defendant for the sum of ten thousand dollars, and for the costs and disbursements of this action. Complaint verified. W. St. Julien Jervay, Plaintiff's Attorney."

Answer: "The defendant, the Charleston & Savannah Railway Company, answering the complaint herein, says: (1) This defendant admits the allegations contained in the first paragraph of said complaint. (2) This defendant denies the allegations contained in the second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh paragraphs of said complaint. And, by way of affirmative defense to said action, this defendant says: That the injury alleged in said complaint to have been received by the plaintiff, Willis Johnson, was caused by the contributory negligence of the said plaintiff, in not exercising due care and caution in stepping on said engine from said platform, and that but for said want of care said injury would not have happened, such contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff being the primary cause of said injury. And, by way of affirmative defense to said action, this defendant alleges: That the said plaintiff, at the time he claims to have received the alleged injury, was a member of the Plant System Relief and Hospital Department. The said Relief and Hospital Department is an organization formed by the Charleston & Savannah Railway, Savannah, Florida, & Western Railway, Alabama Midland, Brunswick, & Western, Florida Southern, and other railway companies (which said railway companies comprise the Plant System), for the purpose of establishing and managing a fund for the payment of definite amounts to employees contributing to the fund who, under the regulations, are entitled thereto, when they are disabled by accident or sickness, and to their families in the event of death. The said relief fund is formed from contributions from the employees and the Plant System income derived from investments, and appropriations by the Plant System when necessary to make up a deficit. The regulations governing said Relief and Hospital Department require that those who participate in the benefits of the relief fund must be employees in the service of one of the railroad companies comprising said Plant System. This defendant further says that participation in the benefits of said relief is based upon the application of the beneficiary, and subject to all the rules and regulations of said Relief and Hospital Department. Defendant further says that, on the second day of November, 1896, the plaintiff herein, being in the employ of the defendant company, and said company being a member of the Plant System, applied for membership in the said Plant System Relief and Hospital Department, and in said application agreed to be bound by all the regulations of the Relief and Hospital Department, and in said application further agreed that, in consideration of the contributions of the said companies comprising the Plant System to the Relief and Hospital Department, and of the guaranty by them of the payment of the benefits aforesaid, the acceptance of the benefits from the said Relief and Hospital Department for injury or death should operate as a release of all claims against said companies and each of them for damages by reason of such injury or death. Defendant further says that, when the plaintiff received the alleged injury, he thereupon became entitled to the benefits coming out of his membership in said Relief and Hospital Department, by reason of the injury alleged to have been received by him while in said service. That said plaintiff thereupon immediately applied to said department for such benefits, and received therefrom payments amounting in all to the sum of $66.50, being the amount due for 133 days at the rate of 50 cents per day, which was the rate to which the plaintiff was entitled as a member of said Relief and Hospital Department. This defendant further says that, in accordance with the regulations of said Relief and Hospital Department, said plaintiff received free medical and surgical attendance from the surgeons of said company, and care and treatment in the said company's hospitals free of charge, and the said relief and hospital department did all on its part to be done for and in behalf of the said plaintiff, by virtue of his membership in said department. The said sum of money the said plaintiff duly accepted and receipted for, under the regulations of said Relief and Hospital Department, and in accordance therewith, and the said plaintiff, in consideration of the payment to him of the said sums of money, thereupon duly released and forever discharged said defendant company, and each and every company comprising the Plant System, from all claims and demands for damages, indemnity, or other form of compensation he then had, or might or could thereafter have, against any one of the aforesaid companies, by reason of said injury, which said receipts and releases were severally signed and sealed, and delivered to the said Relief and Hospital Department, by the said plaintiff. Wherefore this defendant alleges that the acceptance of the said benefits from said Relief and Hospital Department for said alleged injury, and the execution of the release aforesaid, operate to release and discharge said defendant company from any and all claims for damages arising in any way out of the injury complained of by said plaintiff in his said complaint."

Oral demurrer (caption omitted): "The plaintiff demurs to the second affirmative defense set up in the answer, and moves that the same be dismissed, for the reason that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense, in this: that in said defense it is alleged that the plaintiff had entered into a contract with the defendant whereby it was agreed, upon certain consideration, that the defendant should be released from all claims of the plaintiff for damages by reason of accidental injury or death; that such contract is contrary to law and against public policy, and a release thereunder cannot, therefore, be pleaded as a defense to an action for damages caused by the defendant's negligence. W. St. Julien Jervey, Plaintiff's Attorney."

This demurrer was overruled; and his honor said: "There is no question in my mind that a contract of that kind, whereby a railroad company attempts to relieve itself of any liability on account of negligence, is contrary to public policy; and, where the party enters into the contract beforehand, he would not be estopped from bringing his action for damages against the railroad company. It seems, in this case, that the plaintiff had entered into that agreement relieving the railroad company before he was injured. After he was injured, he was put to his election as to whether he would sue the railroad company or go ahead and carry out the contract and receive the benefits of that contract. It seems to me that the decision in the case of Price v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 33 S. C. 556, would control this case, and I think the plaintiff is now estopped from bringing his action against the railroad company, having elected to receive the benefits under that contract, and from suing the railroad company here for damages, and I overrule the demurrer." Counsel for the plaintiff excepted to the ruling, and gave notice of intention to appeal.

Exceptions: "(1) Because his honor erred in holding that the said second affirmative defense set up in the answer contained allegations of fact sufficient to constitute a defense. (2) Because his honor erred in not holding that a contract whereby a railroad corporation seeks immunity from damages caused by the negligence of itself or its servants is null and void, under the Constitution of the state. (3) Because his honor erred in not holding that such a contract is null and void, because it is against public policy. (4) Because his honor erred in holding that such a contract may properly be pleaded as a defense in an action brought by an employee against a railroad company for damages caused by said company or its servants. (5) Because his honor erred in holding that, even if such contract were void, the receiving of money or other consideration thereunder, after the receipt of the injury, was such an act as would bar recovery of damages."

It is apparent from the text of Judge Watts's decision that he held that the contract entered into by and between the plaintiff and the defendant, as a member of the Plant System, was void, as against public policy; and from this decision of Judge Watts there is no appeal, and hence it is the law of this case. However, the circuit judge, as he thought, under the decision of this court in the case of Price v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 33 S. C. 556, held that the subsequent receipt of Johnson to the defendant company would estop Johnson from bringing this action. We fear the case of Price v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 33 S. C. 556, has been given a force that it was not intended to possess. In the case cited, Price, while an employee of the railroad company, was injured, in February, 1887, by the alleged negligence of the railroad company, and, on the 5th day of August of the same year (1887), executed a release to said company, for a valuable consideration, whereby he discharged such company from any claim, demand, or liability for payment of any other or further sum or sums of money, for or on account of his injury while in their service. Price died on the — day of November, 1887. His wife, as the administratrix of his estate, brought an action against the railway company for damages, under what is known as the "Lord Campbell Act." On trial, the defendant railway company offered to prove, under the plea in its answer, that Price, the intestate, had in his lifetime released any right of action, for a valuable consideration, for his injury by the railway company. The circuit judge denied the proof, whereupon the railroad company appealed to this court, and it was here decided that the circuit judge was in error, because the right of action under Lord Campbell's act (§§ 2183 to 2186 of General Statutes) was first in the party injured, which right of action survived his death to his administrator, and that, as Price was competent to deal with his right of action in his lifetime, and had settled with the railroad company, therefore such settlement would estop his administratrix, unless the receipt was executed under fraud or duress. There was no allegation there that the contract not to sue was against a sound public policy, or that the receipt Price executed was in accordance with and as a part of such illegal contract. So that we do not think the case of Price v. Richmond & D. R. Co. is decisive of this case. We have never had a case in our courts before, where this question was considered. There have been such in other courts of this country, where the decisions have been different,—some upholding the receipt, and indeed the contract, as binding; as, for example, in the state of Pennsylvania, in the cases of Johnson v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 163 Pa. 127; Graft v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (Pa.) 8 Atl. 206; also in the state of Maryland, see Fuller v. Baltimore & O. Employees' Relief Asso. 67 Md. 433; Spitze v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 75 Md. 162; also in the state of Iowa, see Donald v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 93 Iowa, 284, 33 L. R. A. 492; also, state of Nebraska, see Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Bell, 44 Neb. 44; also in the state of Ohio, see Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Cox, 55 Ohio St. 497, 35 L. R. A. 507; Owens v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 35 Fed. Rep. 715, 1 L. R. A. 75; also in Illinois, Eckman v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 169 Ill. 312, 38 L. R. A. 750; also, the state of West Virginia. The only case where the court has refused to sustain the question is that of Miller v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 65 Fed. Rep. 304; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Miller, 40 U. S. App. 448, 76 Fed. Rep. 441, 22 C. C. A. 264. It seems to us that, when analyzed, the proposition of the defendant railway company is, as to either or both of these matters: First, a party can contract to relieve a railway company from the negligence of such railway company; or, second, a party, not being able to contract with a railway company as against its negligence, yet, by the acceptance of a benefit under such contract, may be estopped thereby from suing the railway company for its negligence. As to the first position, we say unhesitatingly that our decisions uniformly hold that we cannot make a valid contract to free a railway company from negligence. Swindler v. Hilliard, 2 Rich. L. 286, 45 Am. Dec. 732; Baker v. Brinson, 9 Rich. L. 202, 67 Am. Dec. 548; Wallingford v. Columbia & G. R. Co. 26 S. C. 258. But, apart from our decisions, the new Constitution of this state, adopted in the year 1895, in article 9, § 15, provides: "Every employee of any railroad corporation shall have the same rights and remedies for any injury suffered by him from the acts or omissions of said corporation or its employees as are allowed by law to other persons not employees, when the injury results from the negligence of a superior agent or officer or of a person having a right to control or direct the services of a party injured, and also when the injury results from the negligence of a fellow servant engaged in another department of labor from that of the party injured, or of a fellow servant on another train of cars or even engaged about a different piece of work. . . . Any contract or agreement expressed or implied, made by any employee to waive the benefit of this section, shall be null and void; and this section shall not be construed to deprive any employee of a corporation or his legal or personal representative, of any remedy or right that he now has by the law of the land." (Italics ours.) One of the results of this provision of the Constitution is that the employees of a railway corporation are placed upon the same plane with all other persons in any case of injury which results from negligence of such railway company. This being so, no contract by which an employee binds himself to forego an action by reason of negligence as against a railway company is valid. It is not only against public policy, but it is forbidden by the Constitution. Now, as to the second point: It seems to us that the language in the last part of § 15, art. 9, of our Constitution forbids any agreement by an employee to waive the benefits of this section. But, if this were not so, still, as the original contract to release the railway from the liability for its negligence was void, any attempt by this employee to ratify such void contract is a nullity. It is needless to prolong this discussion or to cite the numerous authorities bearing on this matter. 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 478, puts the doctrine thus: "A void act, as defined in the later cases, and by approved authorities, is one which is entirely null, not binding on either party, and not susceptible of ratification." (Italics ours.) We will not undertake to comment upon the plans of the Plant System as to the protective association. It has some admissible points, but is fatally defective in others.

My opinion is that the judgment of this court should be that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed; but, inasmuch as the justices are evenly divided in opinion, under our Constitution the judgment of the circuit court stands affirmed.

Gary, A. J., concurring:

I concur in the conclusion announced in the opinion of Mr. Justice Pope, as it seems to me the allegations of the second or affirmative defense show a scheme on the part of the defendant to avoid its liability for negligence, and that it is therefore against public policy, null, and void. The unlawful scheme even extended to the acceptance of the benefits thereunder, and such acceptance is also against public policy.

McIver, Ch. J., filed the following opinion:

Being unable to concur in the conclusion reached by Mr. Justice Pope, I purpose to state the grounds of my dissent. All the material facts are so fully set forth in the leading opinion that it will be unnecessary to repeat them here in detail. The sole question presented for the decision of the circuit judge was whether the demurrer to the second affirmative defense, based upon the ground that the facts stated therein were not sufficient to constitute a defense, should be sustained; and, he having held that the demurrer could not be sustained, the question presented for the decision of this court is whether such ruling was erroneous in one or more of the several particulars pointed out by the exceptions. The first exception is manifestly too general to require further notice, under the well-settled practice. The third and fourth exceptions are taken under a misconception of the ruling of the circuit judge; for, so far from not holding that a contract whereby a railroad corporation "seeks immunity from damages caused by the negligence of itself or its servants" is null and void because against public policy, he expressly so held, and, so far from holding that "such a contract could be pleaded as a defense to an action brought by an employee against a railroad company for injuries caused by [the negligence of] the said company or its servants" (the words which I have inserted in brackets being obviously inadvertently omitted), he, in terms, so held. This is manifest from the language used in the first sentence of the remarks made by the circuit judge in overruling the demurrer. These two exceptions may therefore be dismissed from further consideration. So, also, the fifth exception does not exactly represent the ruling of the circuit judge; but, by a liberal construction (which I am disposed to give it), this exception may be regarded as sufficient to raise the question whether there was error in ruling that, after the injury was sustained, the plaintiff was put to his election whether he would sue the company for damages, or accept the benefit of the arrangement set forth in the second affirmative defense, and, these having been accepted by the plaintiff, he was estopped from suing the company, and I am quite willing so to consider that exception. So that, according to a strict practice, the only question necessary for this court to consider is whether the second and fifth exceptions can be sustained.

The second exception presents the question whether there is any provision in the present Constitution declaring that "a contract whereby a railroad corporation seeks immunity from damages caused by the negligence of itself or its servants is null and void." Waiving the objection, which might be raised, that there is nothing in the record showing that such question was presented to or considered by the circuit judge, as I prefer to consider the question on its merits, disembarassed by any technical objection or rule of practice, I propose to so consider it. The only provision which is relied upon is that contained in § 15 of article 9 of the present Constitution, which reads as follows: "Every employee of any railroad corporation shall have the same rights and remedies for any injuries suffered by him from the acts or omissions of said corporation, or its employees, as are allowed by law to other persons not employees, when the injury results from the negligence of a superior agent or officer, or of a person having the right to control or direct the services of a party injured, and also when the injury results from the negligence of a fellow servant engaged in another department of labor from that of the party injured, or of a fellow servant on another train of cars, or one engaged about a different piece of work. Knowledge by any employee injured of the defective or unsafe character or condition of any machinery, ways, or appliances, shall be no defense to an action for injury caused thereby, except as to conductors or engineers in charge of dangerous or unsafe cars, or engines, voluntarily operated by them. When death ensues from any injury to employees, the legal or personal representatives of the person injured shall have the same rights and remedies as are allowed by law to such representatives of other persons. Any contract or agreement, expressed or implied, made by any employee to waive the benefit of this section shall be null and void; and this section shall not be construed to deprive any employee of a corporation, or his legal or personal representative, of any remedy or right that he now has by the law of the land. The general assembly may extend the remedies herein provided for, to any other class of employees." It seems to me very obvious that the main purpose of this provision of the Constitution was to make material, and, as I think, wise and proper, changes in the long-established rule whereby an employer, when sued for damages for injuries sustained by one of his employees, could exempt himself from liability by showing that the injuries complained of by the employee resulted from the negligence of one of his fellow servants, and to settle finally the doctrine (as to which there had been some conflict of authority) that the fact that an employee (except a conductor or engineer in charge of dangerous or unsafe cars or engines voluntarily operated by him) knew that the machinery or other appliance by which he was injured was defective or unsafe would constitute no defense to an action for damages brought by such employee, and finally to declare that any contract or agreement, either express or implied, by which any employee undertakes to waive the benefits of this section, shall be null and void. Now, what are the benefits secured by this section to the employee of a railroad corporation? (1) Putting the employee on the same footing as other persons not employees, so far as his rights and remedies for injuries sustained under the circumstances mentioned in the section are concerned. (2) Declaring that the fact that the employee knew of the defective or unsafe condition of the machinery or other appliances which caused the injury should constitute no defense to an action for damages sustained by such injury. (3) Giving to the representatives of any employee killed on the railroad the same rights and remedies as the representatives of any other person, not an employee, who may be killed by the railroad company, would have. (4) Declaring any contract to waive the benefits of this section to be null and void. (5) Declaring that this section shall not be so construed as to deprive any employee of a corporation of any right that he now has by the law of the land. (6) Authorizing the general assembly to extend the remedies therein provided for to any other class of employees. From this analysis of the provisions of the section, it seems to me very clear that it has no application whatever to this case. The affirmative defense here set up is not based upon any contract or agreement to waive any of the benefits secured by the section of the Constitution above analyzed. The constitutional provision now under consideration does not even purport to declare that a railroad corporation cannot, by contract, exempt itself from liabilities for damages sustained by reason of its own negligence or that of its servants or agents, for the very obvious reason that such a declaration would have been wholly unnecessary, as that was the law at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, well settled by authority, and fully sustained by sound reason, and undisputed by anyone. The sole object of the constitutional provision was to confer upon the employees of railroad corporations certain benefits therein specifically stated, which they either had not previously enjoyed, or their right to which was a matter of question; and, to secure to such employees the full enjoyments of such benefits, it was further provided that any contract to waive any of such benefits "shall be null and void." I am therefore unable to perceive that § 15 of article 9 of the present Constitution has any application to this case, and hence I think the second exception should be overruled.

Proceeding, then, to the consideration of the fifth exception: This exception, as it seems to me, is based upon the assumption that the contract or arrangement set out in the second affirmative defense is void because against public policy. Whether this assumption is well founded is an important and interesting inquiry, of novel impression in this state, at least. But, before proceeding to this inquiry, I desire to notice a mistake into which, I submit with deference, Mr. Justice Pope has fallen. He says (and in justice to him I quote his language): "It is apparent from the text of Judge Watts's decision that he held that the contract entered into by and between the plaintiff and the defendant, as a member of the Plant System, was void as against public policy; and from this decision of Judge Watts there is no appeal, and hence it is the law of this case." In the first place, it is at least doubtful whether the circuit judge so construed the contract set up in the affirmative defense. His language, following immediately after the statement of the grounds of the demurrer, should be construed in connection with that statement: "He says there is no question in my mind that a contract of that kind [meaning a contract of the kind mentioned in such statement], whereby a railroad company attempts to relieve itself of any liability on account of negligence, is contrary to public policy; and, where the party enters into the contract beforehand, he would not be estopped from bringing his action for damages against the railroad company." But he nowhere says that he regarded the contract set up in the affirmative defense as void. It is true that he does say, immediately after the language just quoted, that "it seems in this case that the plaintiff had entered into that agreement, relieving the railroad company, before he was injured;" and he then proceeds to hold that after the plaintiff was injured he was put to his election whether he would sue the company, or carry out the contract by receiving the benefits thereof, and that, having elected to receive the benefits of the contract, he was estopped from suing for damages. His idea seems to have been that even if the contract was void, the plaintiff, by receiving its benefits, had estopped himself from suing. This, judging from the language used in the exception, seems to have been the view taken by appellant's counsel, for the error imputed to the circuit judge by the fifth exception is "in holding that 'even if such a contract were void the receiving of money or other consideration thereunder, after the receipt of the injury, was such an act as would bar the recovery of damages.'"

But, in the second place, even if it be assumed that the circuit judge did consider the contract or arrangements set out in the affirmative defense void as against public policy, and gave as his reason for the judgment which he pronounced, that, notwithstanding such contract was void, yet the plaintiff, by accepting its benefits after the injury was sustained, had estopped himself from bringing this action, I do not think this court would be thereby precluded from considering and determining the two questions: (1) Whether the contract or arrangements set up as a bar to the action was in fact contrary to public policy, and therefore void; (2) if so, whether the acceptance of the benefits of such contract or arrangements after the injury was sustained estopped the plaintiff from bringing this action. As I understand it, the appeal is from the judgment rendered by the circuit court, and not from the reasons given by the circuit judge for such judgment. The question, therefore, is whether any error in the judgment has been pointed out by the exceptions, and not whether the reasons given for such judgment are well founded; for, as has been frequently said, a judgment may be affirmed, though the reasons given for it by the circuit judge may not be sound. If, therefore, the circuit judge can properly be regarded as having considered the contract set up in the affirmative defense as contrary to public policy, and therefore void, the defendant could not appeal from that, as the judgment was in its favor; and, the defendant company having obtained the judgment of the circuit court, it matters little to the company what may have been the grounds upon which such judgment was based. It seems to me, therefore, that this court not only may, but should, consider the important and interesting question whether such contract is contrary to public policy. This question, new in this state, has been considered and determined in at least eight of our sister states, and by Federal courts in at least four of the circuits. In every case which has been brought to my attention, except one, contracts similar to that now under consideration have been upheld, as not contrary to public policy and not void. Even in the case mentioned as an exception (Miller v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 65 Fed. Rep. 304), it seems that when the case was carried up by appeal the appellate tribunal, while affirming the judgment, did not do so upon the ground that the contract was contrary to public policy, and therefore void, but upon the ground of defect in the plea setting up the contract as a defense. Indeed, the appellate tribunal seems to have recognized the authority of the numerous cases holding that such contract was not void as against public policy. Many of these cases, having been mentioned in the opinion of Mr. Justice Pope, need not be cited here. While it is quite true that these cases are not binding authority on this court, and are only useful as showing the trend of the judicial mind, and mainly valuable for the strength of the reasoning employed therein, yet, when such unusual and striking unanimity is found in the various courts and various jurisdictions in which this question has been considered, it is well calculated to incite this court, when called upon for the first time to determine this question, to the most careful consideration of the reasoning by which such a practically unanimous result has been reached. I propose, therefore, to consider with care this question, aided largely by the light which has been thrown upon it by the various judges who have been called upon to determine the question.

In the outset, I desire to say (what would seem to be needless, but for the fact that it appears to have been thought necessary to expend much time and labor upon the point) that I do not suppose anyone doubts that a contract whereby a railroad corporation, or any other common carrier, undertakes to secure immunity from liability for damages for injuries resulting from the negligence of the carrier, or any of his servants or agents, is contrary to public policy, and therefore void. But the question here is whether the contract or arrangement set up in the affirmative defense is a contract for immunity from damages. I do not think it can be so regarded; for, on the contrary, the very terms of the contract necessarily assume that the defendant is liable, and the whole scope and effect of the contract are to fix the measure of such liability, and the manner in which such liability shall be satisfied. As is well said in one of the cases cited (Johnson v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 163 Pa. 127), "He [referring to the plaintiff] is not agreeing to exempt the company from liability for negligence, but accepting compensation for an injury already caused thereby." How such a contract can be construed to be a contract whereby the carrier seeks to obtain immunity from liability for damages sustained by reason of its own negligence or that of its servants or agents, it is impossible for me to conceive. Let us examine in detail the terms of the contract or arrangements as set out in the affirmative defense, and see whether such terms do not fully justify what I have said as to its scope and effects. It seems that the defendant company is one of several railroad companies constituting what is called the "Plant System," in which there is an organization called the "Relief and Hospital Department," established for the purpose of raising a fund for the payment of specified amounts to any employee contributing to the fund, when he is disabled by accident or sickness, and to his family in the event of his death. This fund is raised by stated contributions from the employees, from the Plant System, from income that may be derived from investments of the fund, and from appropriations made by the Plant System when necessary to make up a deficit in the fund. It is alleged in the affirmative defense that the plaintiff applied for membership in the said Relief and Hospital Department, and in his application agreed to be bound by all of the regulations of said department, and further agreed that, in consideration of the contributions from the companies composing the Plant System to said funds, and of the guaranty by them of the payments of the benefits aforesaid, the acceptance of such benefits should release the said companies, and each of them, from all claims for damages sustained by reason of any injury that such employee might sustain. It is further alleged that, as soon as the plaintiff sustained the injury complained of in this case, he immediately applied for and obtained from the said Relief and Hospital Department all the benefits to which he was entitled under the regulations of such department, as well in money as in surgical and medical services, care, and treatment in the hospital free of any charge therefor, and that the plaintiff, in consideration therefor, duly executed, under his hand and seal, receipts therefor, and release of all claims for damages or other form of compensation which he might have against the defendant company. From this statement of the nature and terms of the contract or arrangement in question, which substantially covers the allegations made in the second affirmative defense to which alone the demurrer was directed, which allegations must, in considering the demurrer, be accepted as true, I do not see how it is possible to regard such contract as a contract exempting the defendant company from liability for damages, sustained by reason of the negligence of the defendant company, or that of its servants or agents. By entering into this contract evidenced by his becoming a member of the Relief and Hospital Department, the plaintiff did not waive or release any right of action which he might thereafter have against the defendant company, but his contract was that if, after receiving any injury at the hands of the company, he accepted the benefits which he would be entitled to claim by virtue of his membership of such department, such acceptance should operate as a release of any right of action which he might otherwise have against the company. So that by the terms of the arrangement the plaintiff, after he sustained the injury, had his election either to accept the benefits which, as a member of the Relief and Hospital Department, he would be entitled to claim, or to decline to receive such benefits. If he accepted, he was then bound to release the company; but, if he declined, he was not bound to release the company, but retained his right of action, just as if he had never become a member of the Relief and Hospital Department. It may be said that this seems to be a one-sided arrangement, as the plaintiff, if he declined to accept the benefits, would lose the amount which he had contributed to the Relief and Hospital Department fund. But when it is considered that by the terms of the arrangements the plaintiff would be entitled to the benefits of the fund, and to medical or surgical services, and to care and treatment in the hospital, free of any charges therefor, even if his disability arose from sickness from natural causes, or from injuries for which the railroad company could not be held responsible, this seeming one-sidedness disappears. Furthermore, inasmuch as the plaintiff had the right of election, after the injury was sustained, either to sue for damages, or to claim the benefits of the Relief and Hospital Department, he could, if the injury was slight, accept the benefits of the Relief and Hospital Department as satisfactory compensation for the injury, but if the injury was serious, calling for greater compensation than would be afforded by the benefits which he might claim, he could exercise his right to sue for damages; so that it seems to me that the arrangement, properly understood, would be favorable, rather than detrimental, to the interests of the employee. But, however this may be, such an arrangement certainly cannot be regarded as a contract whereby the carrier undertook to secure immunity from liability for injuries sustained by his employee, resulting from his own negligence, or that of his servants or agents. As was well said in the case above cited, and referred to with approval in another subsequent case in Pennsylvania (Ringle v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 164 Pa. 529): "It is not the signing of the contract [or becoming a member of the Relief and Hospital Department], but the acceptance of benefits after the accident, that constitutes the release [of the injured party]. The injured party, therefore, is not stipulating for the future, but settling for the past; he is not agreeing to exempt the company from liability for negligence, but accepting compensation for an injury already caused thereby. . . . The substantial feature of the contract, which distinguished it from those held void as against public policy, is that the party retains whatever right of action he may have until after knowledge of all the facts and an opportunity to make his choice between the sure benefit of the association [department] or the chances of litigation. Having accepted the former, he cannot justly ask the latter in addition."

It was claimed by counsel for appellant, in his argument, that under the rules and regulations of the defendant company the plaintiff was required, when he entered the service of such company, to become a member of the said Relief and Hospital Department; but, as that fact does not appear in the "case" as prepared for argument here, it cannot, under the well-settled rule, be considered. But I may say that, under my view of the case, such fact, even if it did appear, would make no difference. As I understand it, every person who enters the employment of another agrees, either expressly or impliedly, to conform to the regulations of the employer for the control and management of his employees; and, if he is not willing to conform to such regulations, he is at perfect liberty to decline entering the service of such employer. So, here, when the plaintiff entered the service of the defendant company he did so voluntarily, as he was under no compulsion to do so, and might have entered the service of some other company which had no such rules and regulations, or might have engaged in some other employment, but, when he entered the service of the defendant company, he, like all other employees, signified his willingness to conform to its regulations; and he, therefore, cannot properly be said to have been compelled to enter into the contract or arrangements in question.

But even if the contract in question could be regarded as contrary to public policy, and therefore void, then, in the eye of the law, the case stands as if no such contract had ever been executed. If the contract was an absolute nullity, then it is as though no such contract was ever made. If so, then the allegation distinctly made in the second affirmative defense, that the plaintiff, after sustaining the injury complained of, for valuable consideration, under his hand and seal, released the defendant company from all liability for such injury, was certainly sufficient to constitute a defense to the action; and for that reason, if no other, the demurrer was properly overruled. For that would be precisely in accordance with the principle established in the case of Price v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 33 S. C. 556. It seems to be supposed that the case just cited has been misunderstood, and that it has no application to this case. Let us see. That was a case in which Price, a conductor of a freight train, was seriously injured on the 18th of February, 1887, while in the performance of his duties as such, from the effects of which he died in the month of November following. On the 8th of August, 1887, after the injury was sustained, but before his death, he executed a release, for valuable consideration, of his right of action against the railroad company. Subsequently, to wit, in August, 1888, an action was commenced against the railroad company by the administratrix of Price to recover damages under the statute (Lord Campbell's act). On the trial the defendant company offered to put the release in evidence, as a bar to the action, which was ruled inadmissible. Upon appeal it was held that the release was competent, and that its effect was to bar the plaintiff's right of action, unless it was made to appear that such release was obtained by fraud or duress. It is very clear that the court in that case considered and determined the very question presented here, for in the opinion of the court we find this language: "We think the leading and controlling question in the case is as to the admissibility and effect of the release above mentioned." (Italics mine.) And, after showing that the capacity of the deceased to maintain the action is made the test of the right of the administratrix to maintain the action provided for by statute, the court proceeds to use this language: "It cannot be doubted that if the deceased had not died, and such release had been pleaded and proved in an action instituted by him to recover damages for the injury alleged to have been done him by the wrongful act of the defendant, it would have been a bar to such action, unless it had been made to appear that such release was obtained by fraud or duress." That case therefore certainly does decide that such a release, in the absence of fraud or duress,—of which there is not, and cannot be, any pretense in this case, as now presented,—would bar the plaintiff's right of action. It may be that, as in Price's Case, 38 S. C. 199, when this case comes to trial upon its merits the plaintiff will be able to show that the release was obtained by fraud or imposition; but that is a matter which we cannot consider now, when the question is simply as to the sufficiency of the pleading.

It is contended, however, that the release relied on as a bar to the action is but a part of the contract claimed to be void because contrary to public policy, and hence must fall with it. In the first place, as I have endeavored to show, I do not think any part of the contract is contrary to public policy; but conceding, for the sake of argument, that it is, in the second place I do not think the act of giving the release entered into, or formed any part of, the contract. The terms of the contract, as set out in the second affirmative defense, are that the plaintiff "agreed that, in consideration of the contributions of the said companies comprising the Plant System to the Relief and Hospital Department, and of the guaranty by them of the payment of the benefits aforesaid, the acceptance of the benefits from the said Relief and Hospital Department for injury or death shall operate as a release of all claims against said companies and each of them, for damages by reason of such injury or death" (italics mine); and I am unable to discover anything in the contract which contemplates or requires any formal release, such as is alleged to have been executed by the plaintiff. On the contrary, if, as we have seen, by the terms of the contract, the acceptance were to "operate as a release," there would and could be no necessity for the execution of a formal release. Hence, when the plaintiff did, as alleged, execute a formal release, he was not acting in pursuance of the contract, or carrying out any of its terms, but it was his own voluntary act, independent of the alleged void contract, which must operate as a bar to the action, as declared in Price's Case. Besides, I am not now prepared to assent to the proposition that because one of the terms of a contract is contrary to public policy, and therefore void, it necessarily follows that all the other terms must likewise be declared void. But as it would extend this opinion to an unreasonable length to enter into any discussion of that proposition and as I do not deem it necessary to do so in this case, under the views which I have taken, I do not propose to discuss that proposition, or to express any definite opinion with reference to it. It seems to me, therefore, that under any view that may properly be taken of this case, there was no error in the judgment over-ruling the demurrer, and hence such judgment should be affirmed.

Jones, J., concurs.

The judges of the supreme court having been equally divided in opinion, a petition was filed for a hearing before the constitutional court composed of the judges of the supreme and circuit courts, in response to which the following opinion was handed down on May 9, 1899:

Per Curiam:

This case was heard at the April term, 1898, of this court; and, the members of the court being equally divided, as appears by the opinions filed on the 16th of January, 1899 (32 S. E. 2), the judgment of the circuit court stood affirmed, by virtue of the provisions of the Constitution to that effect. On the 1st day of February, 1899, the appellant filed his petition for a rehearing, which is now before us for consideration. The petition is based upon the sole ground that there was a constitutional question involved in the case, and, as the entire court was not agreed as to the proper determination of that question, this court was bound, under the provisions of § 12 of article 5 of the Constitution, to call to its assistance all of the judges of the circuit court, except the judge who presided at the circuit court when the judgment appealed from was rendered; and the rehearing is asked for for the purpose of having the circuit judges called to the assistance of this court, to hear and determine said constitutional question.

In the first place, the "case," as prepared for argument here, does not show that any constitutional question was either presented to or considered by the circuit judge who rendered the judgment appealed from. On the contrary, it does show that the question below arose upon a demurrer to the second affirmative defense set up in the answer, and was based solely upon the ground "that in said defense it is alleged that the plaintiff had entered into a contract with the defendant whereby it was agreed, upon certain consideration, that the defendant should be released from all claims of the plaintiff for damages by reason of accidental injury or death: that such contract is contrary to law and against public policy, and a release thereunder cannot, therefore, be pleaded as a defense to an action for damages caused by the defendant's negligence." And in the order overruling the demurrer the circuit judge held that a contract whereby a railroad company attempts to relieve itself of any liability on account of negligence is contrary to public policy, and where a party enters into such a contract before the injury was sustained he would not be estopped from bringing his action for damages; but where, as in this case, the party injured, after the injury was sustained, elected to receive compensation for such injury as provided for by such contract, he is estopped from bringing his action for damages. He therefore rendered judgment overruling the demurrer. From this judgment plaintiff appealed, and for the first time, so far as the record before us shows, by his second exception, distinctly raised the constitutional question, in these words: "Because his honor erred in not holding that a contract whereby a railroad corporation seeks immunity for damages caused by the negligence of itself or its servants is null and void, under the Constitution of the state." Inasmuch as the supreme court is a tribunal whose duty it is to review the action of the circuit court, and, in a law case, correct any errors of law therein which are pointed out by the exceptions, this court has uniformly held that the appellant has no right to have any question, except a question of jurisdiction, considered by this court, unless it appears by the record, as prepared for argument here, that such question has been presented to or considered by the circuit judge. It is true, as set forth in the petition for a rehearing, that counsel for respondent, in his argument before this court, does say, "Counsel for the plaintiff, in the argument of this case on circuit, cited § 15 of article 9 of the Constitution of 1895, as setting forth the public policy of the state in reference to contracts by employees." But counsel for respondent also says: "A careful consideration of this section will disclose the fact that its sole purpose and effect is to limit the defense of the negligence of a fellow servant"; and he adds, "Counsel for the plaintiff, in his argument, also seemed to admit this to be the proper construction of the section." We also observe that in the printed argument of counsel for appellant, on file in this case, he seems to refer to the constitutional provision above cited only for the purpose of showing that the general and well-settled doctrine that a railroad company cannot, by contract, exempt itself from liability for damages resulting from injuries sustained by reason of its negligence, because such a contract is against public policy, and therefore void, has received the sanction of the organic law of this state. It is easy, therefore, to understand why the circuit judge should not have considered the constitution-

